JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise a decree of the Additional Judge of the Small Cause Court, Rangoon, the facts being as follows: The plaintiff, a compositor in the Hanthawaddy Press employed on a monthly wage having left his employ without notice, sued his employer both for the wages for the broken period of the month during which he had left the service and also for his wages for the prior month which had already accrued due. The defendant by his written statement pleaded that the plaintiff was not entitled to any wages for the broken period of the month during which he had left his master's service without notice and that as he had not given a month's notice he was not entitled to the prior month's wages, and relied apparently both on an alleged express agreement between the parties and also on an alleged custom that a month's notice should be given on either side. But the agreement alleged in the evidence was for a month's notice on either side. The learned Judge held there was no such express agreement proved and gave a decree for the completed month's wages, but refused the claim for the broken period. Defendant applied in revision on the ground that the learned Judge should have held that there was an implied contract by custom that a month's notice should be given on either side and should have held that the defendant was justified in refusing to pay him his wages for the previous month. It seems quite clear on the authority of Taylor v. Laird (1) and Button v. Thompson (2) that, to adopt the language of Smith at page 171 of the sixth edition of his work on Master and Servant, default of a servant after the day on which a periodical payment of wages accrued due would not deprive him of his right to recover such periodical payment and would not divest a vested right. It was also clear that a master was entitled to reasonable notice and to reasonable damages if such notice were not given, but it was also clear that such a plea must be raised by way of set-off if it was raised by way of defence, and not made the subject of a separate suit by the master. It is not quite clear to me whether the defendant wished to allege a custom that he was entitled in the case of a monthly hiring to require a month's notice or to deduct a month's salary, or whether he wished to allege a custom that he was entitled to a month's notice and that a month's pay on breach of such custom was reasonable damages. I incline to think that the latter was his contention. It, however, makes no difference in the result. In the latter case he could not plead a set-off at all, vide Mahomed Nassrouddin v. Oppenheimer & Co. (3), since it would be a plea that sounded in damages and in neither case, since the amendment of the Court-Fees Act, could the plea, being unstamped, be regarded. The application must accordingly be dismissed with costs, two gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) (1856) 1 H. & N. 266; 25 L. J. Ex. 329; 108 R.R. 562.

(2) 4 C. P. 330; 38 L. J. C. P. 225; 20 L. T. 568; 17 W. R. 1069.

(3) 9 Bur. L. R. 285.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2709 OF 1913.

November 6, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Hannay.

LATIFA BIBI, MINOR, BY NEXT FRIEND ANDAR SAYAD ABBAS SAHIB—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

NARAYANACHARI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Tenant, right to cut trees—Lease providing for payment of full value of trees by landlord on resuming—Damages, measure of.

A tenant, even though he holds on a perpetual lease, is prima facie not entitled to cut and carry away timber trees from the holding.

Where, under the terms of a lease, the landlord is entitled to the land only on the payment of the full values of the trees to the tenant, the damages caused to the landlord by the cutting off the trees are only nominal.

Gangamma v. Bommakka, 5 Ind. Cas. 437; 33 M. 253; 7 M. L. T. 231, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 395 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Udipi, in Original Suit No. 416 of 1911.

FACTS.—Plaintiff is the landlord, first defendant is the chalgani tenant, defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are the mulgani tenants, holding under a mulgani lease which prohibits them from cutting the trees on the land and from alienating the same and which gives the tenants a right to claim the value of improvements on the land, who assigned their rights to the first defendant. The first defendant cut certain teak trees growing on the land and he contended that, as they were planted by his ancestors, he was entitled to cut them. The present suit is for the value of the trees so cut and for a permanent injunction from cutting those trees in future. The District Munsif held that the first defendant was not entitled to cut the trees even if they were planted by his ancestors and accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 75 and an order of injunction restraining him from felling the trees in future on the land. On appeal the District Judge held that the trees having been planted by his ancestors, he is entitled to cut them, and accordingly dismissed the suit. The present appeal is against that decree.

Messrs. K. P. Madhava Row and K. P. Lakshmana Row, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—Following Gangamma v. Bommakka (1) we hold that a tenant, even though he holds on a perpetual lease, is prima facie not entitled to cut and carry away timber trees from the holding.

The tenant is, therefore, bound to pay damages on account of his wrongful act complained of in this suit.

Under the lease-deed, Exhibit A, the only substantial right of the landlord (besides the right to rent) is to get possession of the land with the trees thereon whenever the lease is put an end to, which latter event can take place only if the holding is alienated or if the holding is voluntarily given up. Even when the lease is so put an end to and the landlord takes possession of the land and the trees thereon, he has to pay full value to the tenant for the trees. Hence, the damages caused to the landlord by the cutting off the trees can only be nominal.

We allow Rs. 15 for such damages and setting aside the lower Appellate Court's decree, restore that of the District Munsif with this modification, that Rs. 15 shall be substituted for Rs. 75 in that decree. The appellant will get 3/4ths of his costs in all the Courts from the first defendant and the defendants will bear their own costs in the lower Courts.

Appeal allowed ; Decree modified.

(1) 5 Ind. Cas. 437; 33 M. 253; 7 M. L. T. 231.

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 87 OF 1913.

August 24, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Parlett.

VASA NARAYANASWAMY, SON AND LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE OF VASA MATHIA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

ANANTHAYE AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

*Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 39—Cancellation of bond, who can sue for—Hindu law—*Sudras—Inheritance by illegitimate children.

A suit under section 39 of the Specific Relief Act is maintainable only by a person against whom the instrument is void or voidable or to whom it may cause injury.

Under the Hindu Law the illegitimate children of the Sudra caste are heirs.

Inderun Valungypoody Tayer v. Ramaswamy Pandia Talaver, 13 M. I. A. 141; 3 B. L. R. 1; 12 W. R 41 (P. C.); 2 Suth. P. C. J. 267; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 498; 20 Eng. Rep. 504, followed.

Mr. Chari, for the Appellant.

Mr. Harvey, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The District Judge erred in holding that if the bond is void, it does not matter whether plaintiff had any cause of action or not. A suit under section 39, Specific Relief Act, is maintainable only by a person against whom the instrument is void or voidable or to whom it may cause injury. For the appellant it is further urged that the plaintiff, being illegitimate, was barred from inheriting from her father and so her interests were in no way injured by the existence of the bond. Authority for this proposition is not quoted, but in Inderun Valungypoody Tayer v. Ramaswamy Pandia Talaver (1) the Privy Council held that in the Sudra caste, to which plaintiff's family belong, illegitimate children may inherit. This suffices to dispose of the appeal. But it fails on other grounds. It is true that in her plaint plaintiff said she was illegitimate, her mother, 2nd defendant, not being married to her father. The 2nd defendant stated that she was married and the plaintiff did not contest the point. The appellant, who is first defendant, did set up that plaintiff was illegitimate and as the pleadings stood, that plea was raised by him and by no other party to the suit. It was, therefore, for him to prove it; he offered no evidence whatever on the point and, therefore, the issue was decided against him. The appeal is dismissed with costs, Advocates fee two gold mohurs.

(1) 13 M. I. A. 141; 3 B. L. R. 1; 12 W. R. 41 (P.C.); 2 Suth. P. C. J. 267; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 498; 20 Eng. Rep. 504.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER NO. 161 OF 1913.

August 14, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

RAJA OF KALAHASTI—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—APPELLANT

versus

Sri Raja VENKATARAMIAH ROW BAHADUR GARU AND OTHERS—COUNTER-PETITIONERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 69, cls. (1), (3)—Power of Court to adjourn sale after partially holding it—'Debt and costs', meaning of—Judgment-debtor's right to get sale adjourned by tendering balance.

Where properties of the judgment-debtor were sold in three lots and after the sale of two lots, he tendered to the bidding officer that portion of the decree amount which would have remained if the purchasers of the first two lots had paid up the amounts, but the officer proceeded with the sale:

Held, that the sale of the third lot was not vitiated by irregularity or illegality and could not be set aside to the prejudice of a bona fide purchaser at the Court auction.

The words 'the debt and costs' in clause (3) of Order XXI, rule 69, could not be interpreted to mean "the balance of the decree debt and costs which would remain if by a legal fiction the sales of previous lots (not yet completed by the payment of the whole purchase-money) were taken as completed by treating the whole of the purchase-money as actually paid up."

Obiter dictum.—A Court may even without an application from the judgment-debtor adjourn a sale after the sale of some lots under Order XXI, rule 69, clause (1).

Appeal against the order of the District Court of North Arcot, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 759 of 1912 (Execution Petition No. 59 of 1906, in Original Suit No. 15 of 1897).

Mr. L. S. Veeraraghava Iyer, for Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Pandaly, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner (judgment-debtor) never applied to the Court either for adjournment of the sale of the third lot or for stopping that sale. He tendered to the officer conducting the sale that portion of the decree amount which would have remained if the purchasers of the first two lots paid up the whole of the purchase-money due by them within 15 days allowed to them and did not make default. We do not think that the words 'the debt and costs' mentioned in clause (3) of Order XXI, rule 69, could be interpreted to mean "the balance of the decree debt and costs which would remain if by a legal fiction the sales of previous lots (not yet completed by payment of the whole of the purchase-money) were taken as completed by treating the whole of the purchase-money as actually paid up."

We do not say that the Court even without an application from the judgment-debtor had no power to adjourn the sale of the third lot (see clause (1), Order XXI, rule 69), but we do not see our way to holding that because the Court of its own accord did not mercifully take that course, the sale of the third lot is vitiated by irregularity or illegality and could be set aside to the prejudice of the bona fide purchaser in such Court auction.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 135 OF 1913.

August 24, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Parlett.

MAUNG TA TE—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

MAUNG NYIN AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73 (b)—Execution proceedings—Sale-proceeds, distribution of—Mortgagee, whether entitled to share without obtaining decree.

A mortgagee who does not obtain a decree on his mortgage or charge has no right to obtain, by an order in execution or by miscellaneos application, payment of any part of the sale-proceeds of the property over which he claims his mortgage or charge, and a suit lies against him to refund the amount if paid to him.

Narana Chetty v. Sit Kauk, 2 U. B. R. 276, followed.

Mr. Maung Pu, for the Appellant.

Mr. Halkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This case appears to be exactly similar to that of Narana Chetty v. Sit Kauk (1). The appellant, not having obtained a decree on his mortgage or charge, had no right to obtain, by an order in execution or by miscellaneous application, payment of any part of the sale-proceeds of the property over which he claimed his mortgage or charge. The respondents were entitled to maintain a suit against him to compel him to refund the amount paid to him. The judgment in Hla Baw v. S. K. R. Muthia Chetty (2) clearly sets out the duty of a Court in respect of inquiry into mortgages or charges claimed over attached property. Had such inquiry been made, the decree-holders, who were entitled to notice, would have disputed the alleged mortgage and action under section 73(b), Civil Procedure Code, could not properly have been taken.

The appeal is dismissed with costs, Advocate's fees two gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 2 U. B. R. 276.
(2) 3 L. B. R. 275.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL APPEAL No. 204 OF 1912.

November 10, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair and Mr. Justice Spencer.

PONNURANGA MUDALIAR AND ANOTHER —PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

THANDAVARAYA MUDALIAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58—Mortgage, elements of—Adamanakadanpathiram, whether mortgage—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 31.

It is not essential for a mortgage that there should be a formal transfer of interest or that a power of bringing the property to sale should be expressed.

Balasubramania Nadar v. Sivagaru Asari, 11 Ind. Cas. 629; 21 M. L. J. 562; Rama Brahmam v. Venkatnarasu Puntulu, 16 Ind. Cas. 209; 23 M. L. J. 131; (1912) M. W. N. 1124; Venkatarama Aiyar v. Suppa Nadan, 24 Ind. Cas. 24; 27 M. L. J. 58; (1914) M. W. N. 501, followed.

A document which calls itself as an adamanakadanpathiram and gives a sufficiently accurate description of the mortgaged property and recites also the amount due thereunder, is a mortgage within the meaning of section 31 of the Limitation Act, 1908, and not merely a simple money bond.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 32 of 1910.

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. O. Parthasarathy Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—The question we have to decide is whether the instrument upon which this suit was brought is a simple mortgage or a simple debt bond. It is dated September 22nd, 1869, and registered. If it is a mortgage, a suit brought by the mortgagee on August 5th, 1910, for recovery of the debt by sale of the mortgaged property is not barred by limitation (section 31, Act IX of 1908). The District Judge dismissed the suit, holding that this was not a mortgage and that the plaintiffs were not in time.

He relied on the absence of words in the document creating a right to cause any property to be sold and the proceeds to be applied in payment of the debt, also on the failure to make any property security for payment.

The document, however, begins and ends with a description of itself.

It is styled an adamanakadanpathiram which means an instrument of mortgage. It is created by act of parties, is for a debt and contains a covenant to pay. At the beginning there is a full description with boundaries of the executant's house, a description which would be pointless if the parties merely intended to create a personal bond to pay a debt. The amount due on a prior mortgage of this house in 1865, the amount due on a mortgage of the lands in the executant's possession (which are not described), the amounts due on two simple bonds, interest and cash paid on the date of execution, are then consolidated and a covenant to pay the whole sum follows. Next there is a stipulation that the executant will not redeem a certain usufructuary mortgage on his one-fourth share before he pays the debt due under the mortgage of his house with interest.

Now it is clear to us that the intention of the parties was to effect a simple mortgage of the house for the sum of Rs. 805 and odd found to be due on the date of execution, and if the document is lacking in respect of apt words expressing a transfer of interest and giving a power of sale, this defect is only owing to the imperfect expression of their minds. This Court has held in several recent cases that it is not essential for a mortgage that there should be a formal transfer of interest or that a power of bringing the property to sale should be expressed. Vide Balasubramania Nadar v. Sivagaru Asari (1); Rama Brahmam v. Venkatanarasu Puntulu (2) and Venkatarama Aiyar v. Suppa Nadan (3). In the two last-named decisions it has been pointed out that the restricted meaning put on the term 'mortgage' in the Full Bench decision in Rangasami v. Muthukumarapa (4) based on the definition of mortgage in section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act of 1882, which was after the Limitation Act of 1877 and after the execution of the document in suit, received considerable modification in consequence of the Privy Council decision in Vasudeva Mudaliar v. Srinivasa Pillai (5). It seems improbable that the creditors in this case would have accepted a mere personal bond in substitution for two prior mortgages, even though it contained in addition a clause calculated to cause a clog on the redemption of their usufructuary mortgage.

We think that the document before us in this suit is a mortgage within the meaning of section 31 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908. We, therefore, reverse the District Judge's decision on the issue relating to limitation and we remand the suit to his file for disposal of the other questions raised. Costs will be costs in the cause.

The District Judge's attention will be directed to the memorandum of appeal. The appellant claims only Rs. 2,000 in appeal giving up his claim to Rs. 2,756.

SANKARAN NAIR, J.—I agree that the instrument is a mortgage.

Appeal allowed; Suit remanded.

(1) 11 Ind. Cas. 629; 21 M. L. J. 562.

(2) 16 Ind. Cas. 209; 23 M. L. J. 131; (1912) M. W. N. 1124.

(3) 24 Ind. Cas. 24; 27 M. L. J. 58; (1914) M. W. N. 501.

(4) 10 M. 509.

(5) 30 M. 426 (P. C.); 9 Bom. L. R 1104; 2 M. L. T. 333; 6 C. L. J. 379; 4 A. L. J. 625; 11 C. W. N. 1005; 17 M. L. J. 444; 34 I. A. 187.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORDER NO. 49 OF 1914.

March 13, 1914.

Present:—Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, KT., and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

RASHMONI DASI—PETITIONER—APPELLANT

versus

GANADA SUNDARI DASI—OPPOSITE PARTY—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 115, 151—Jurisdiction—Order obtained by suppression or misrepresentation of facts—Appointment of guardian after minor had attained majority—Power of Court to recall order—Appeal—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 39, 47, 48—Revision—Power to investigate facts in revision—Distinction between appellate and revisional jurisdiction—Inherent power of Court.

A District Judge, acting under the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act, appointed a guardian of the person and property of a girl said to be a minor. Subsequently, it was brought to his notice that the girl had attained majority long before he had made the order for the appointment of her guardian. Upon this he revoked his order and removed the guardian. The order of revocation was assailed in the High Court:

Held, (1) that as the order was not made under any of the clauses of section 39 of the Guardians and Wards Act, it could not be questioned by way of appeal under any of the clauses of section 47;

(2) that section 48 of the Act did not preclude the District Judge from re-considering his order and that he had jurisdiction to entertain the application for revocation of his order in the exercise of his inherent powers.

The principle of section 151, Civil Procedure Code, is applicable quite as much to Courts called upon to deal with matters under the Guardians and Wards Act as to ordinary Civil Courts. Therefore a Court which exercises powers under the Guardians and Wards Act has ample inherent jurisdiction to deal with matters brought before it, of which cognizance may be required in the interest of justice.

A Court is competent to recall an order obtained from it by suppression or misrepresentation of facts.

A Court has jurisdiction to determine that it has no jurisdiction to deal with the matter brought before it.

If even after an order has been made the Court is apprised that it has been made to assume jurisdiction in a matter over which it has in reality no jurisdiction, the Court has inherent power to investigate the matter and to recall the previous order if it transpires that it has been made without jurisdiction.

It is competent to the High Court to investigate facts in revision, if the Court is satisfied that such a step is needed in the ends of justice.

Kailash Chandra Haldar v. Bissonath Paramanic, 1 C. W. N. 67, referred to.

A Court, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction investigates the facts and, if necessary, substitutes its own appreciation of the evidence for that of the primary Court. But when the Court, as a Court of revision, looks into the evidence, it does so with a view to determine whether the Subordinate Court has assumed a jurisdiction which it did not possess, or declined a jurisdiction which it did possess, or has in the exercise of its jurisdiction acted illegally or with material irregularity.

RASHMONI DASI v. GANADA SUNDARI DASI.

In other words, a Court of revision cannot, in the name of revisional jurisdiction, exercise appellate powers. That is to say, it may look at the evidence to determine whether the Subordinate Court has acted illegally or irregularly in the exercise of its jurisdiction but it cannot examine the evidence with a view to determine whether the Subordinate Court has correctly appreciated its effect.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge of 24-Perganas, dated the 14th January 1914.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, Babu Provas Chunder Mitter, Dr. Sarat Chunder Basack and Babu Surendra Madhub Mullick, for the Appellant.

Babus Umakali Mukherjee, Biraj Mohan Mojumdar, Girija Prosanna Roy Chowdhry and Dhirendra Krishna Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited to consider the propriety of an order by which the Court below has recalled an order previously made for the appointment of the appellant as guardian of the person and property of her daughter-in-law, the respondent.

On the 20th January 1912 the appellant made an application under the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act. The application was not opposed and on the 15th May a conditional order was made, as a matter of course, in her favour. She was called upon to furnish security and as soon as the order of the Court had been carried out in this respect, a formal order of appointment was drawn up on the 26th November 1912. On the 21st July 1913 the daughter-in-law applied to the District Judge for revocation of the previous order on the ground that she had attained majority before her mother-in-law was appointed guardian of her person and property. The District Judge thereupon took evidence and ultimately came to the conclusion that the daughter-in-law had been born on the 23rd January 1893 and had consequently attained majority on the 23rd January 1911, long before the order for the appointment of her mother-in-law as guardian of her person and property had been made. In this view the District Judge has recalled the orders of the 15th May and the 26th November 1912. The order of revocation has been assailed in this Court on behalf of the mother-in-law, and we have been invited to examine its propriety in the exercise either of our appellate or of our revisional jurisdiction.

A preliminary objection has been taken to the competency of the appeal and it has been argued that as the order was not made under any of the clauses of section 39 of the Guardians and Wards Act, it cannot be questioned by way of appeal under any of the clauses of section 47. This preliminary objection raises a question of considerable importance as to the true nature of the jurisdiction which has been exercised by the District Judge in this matter. On behalf of the appellant, it has been broadly contended that the District Judge had either jurisdiction to take action under section 39 or had no jurisdiction at all to deal with the matter in controversy before him. In support of the former view, it has been argued that section 39 is not exhaustive and the circumstances specified therein, under which the Court is competent to remove a guardian, are merely illustrative. We have in substance been invited to read section 39 as if the Legislature had provided that "the Court may remove a guardian appointed by the Court for the following amongst other reasons." We are not prepared to accept this view as well-founded. If the Legislature had intended to give illustrations merely of the contingencies in which the Court may remove a guardian in the exercise of the power conferred upon it by section 39, the section might have been differently framed. In our opinion, section 39 specifies the circumstances under which the Court may remove a guardian appointed under the Statute. It is worthy of note that each of the circumstances specified in the section is of such a character that if its existence is established, the Court would have no option but to remove the guardian in the interests of the minor. Consequently we must hold that the order in this case was not made under section 39. We may add that the only clause of section 39, which, it was suggested, might possibly cover the case if reliance had to be placed upon a special clause, was clause (j) which provides that the Court may remove the guardian by reason of the guardianship ceasing or being liable to cease under the law to which the minor is subject. But if it be a fact that when the order for appointment of the guardian was made in the present case, there was no infant in respect of whom the Court could exercise jurisdiction, no question clearly arises about the cessation of guardianship. There is no escape consequently from the position that section 39 does not apply, and this necessarily leads to the inference that the order is not appealable under clause (9) of section 47, which provides for an appeal to this Court from an order, made by a Subordinate Court under section 39, for removal of a guardian. The first branch of the contention of the appellant must consequently fail.

As regards the second branch of the contention of the appellant it has been broadly argued that if the District Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain an application under section 39, he had no jurisidiction to deal with the matter at all. The contention in substance is that the Judge invested with authority to deal with matters under the Guardians and Wards Act constitutes a special Court created by the Legislature for specified purposes and that the limits of his jurisdiction must be sought for within the four corners of the Statute. The position taken up by the appellant is that as there is no section of the Guardians and Wards Act applicable in terms to the present matter, the Judge was incompetent to inquire into the allegations of the respondent. In our opinion, this contention is entirely baseless. A Court which exercises powers under the Guardians and Wards Act has ample inherent jurisdiction to deal with matters brought before it, of which cognizance may be required in the interest of justice. Section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, which provides that nothing in the Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court, does not formulate a new doctrine. It merely furnishes Legislative recognition of a well-established principle, which is applicable quite as much to Courts called upon to deal with matters under the Guardians and Wards Act as to ordinary Civil Courts. The futility of the contention of the appellant may be illustrated by an obvious example. Section 10 of the Guardians and Wards Act specifies the contents of the application to the Court; the applicant is required, amongst other matters, to state, so far as can be ascertained by him, the date of birth of the minor. Suppose after the application has been made and before the order of the Court has been passed thereon, it is brought to the notice of the Court, by the person in respect of whom a guardian is proposed to be appointed or by some person on his behalf, that he is not an infant, that he has as a matter of fact attained majority and that consequently the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act cannot be applied to his case. In such an event, it would plainly be competent to the Court to determine whether the alleged infant was in reality an infant. The Court has jurisdiction to determine the question, indeed it is incumbent upon the Court to investigate the matter on the fundamental principle that when the jurisdiction of a Court is invoked in respect of a particular matter and such jurisdiction is challenged, it is the duty of the Court to determine the essential facts on the actual existence of which alone the Court is competent to assume jurisdiction. It is indisputable that the Court is competent to make an inquiry of this description, even though it may ultimately transpire that the Court has no jurisdiction over the matter in controversy, in other words, the Court has jurisdiction to determine that it has no jurisdiction to deal with the matter brought before it [Huree Persad v. Koonjo Behary (1); Hukum Chand v. Kamalanand Singh (2); Budh Singh v. Niradbaran Roy (3); Rowland Hudson v. John Pierpont Morgan (4)]. This view cannot be seriously challenged, and once it is accepted, as it must be, it follows inevitably if that even after the order has been made on the application, the Court is apprised that it has been made to assume jurisdiction in a matter over which it has in reality no jurisdiction, the Court has inherent power to investigate the matter and to recall the previous order if it transpires that it has been made without jurisdiction. It is needless to refer to authorities in support of this proposition, but if authority is required, reference may be made to the classical work on Chancery Practice by Daniell, Volume II,

(1) (1862) Marshall 99; 1 Hay 238; W. R. Sp. 29; 1 Ind. Jur. (o. s.) 20.
(2) 33 C. 927 at p. 941; 3 C. L. J. 67.
(3) 2 C. L. J. 431 at p. 437.
(4) 1 Ind. Cas. 356; 36 C. 713 at p. 721; 9 C. L. J. 563; 13 C. W. N. 654.

page 1303, where the following statement will be found: "If an order has been made as a matter of course and if there is any irregularity in the order or if it has been obtained upon any false suggestion or by the suppression of any material fact, it will be discharged on special application by motion, although on the merits it would have been proper to make the order." There are numerous cases to be found in the reports where this doctrine has been applied in England, and amongst these reference may be made to the cases of Brooks v. Purton (5); St. Victor v. Devereux (6); Marquis of Hertford v. Suisse (7); Holcombe v. Antrobus (8); Wilkin v. Naimby (9); De-Feuchères v. Dawes (10); Wyllie v. Ellice (11); Brignall v. Whitehead(12); Harris v. Start(13); Lewis v. Cooper (14); Bidder v. Bridges (15). But the principle is essentially of much wider scope than is indicated by the passage to which we have just referred. It is not confined in its application to ex parte orders or to orders made as a matter of course. If an order has been obtained from the Court by a suppression of facts, if the Court has been overreached and has been induced to assume jurisdiction over a matter in which, upon a true state of facts, it does not possess jurisdiction, the Court is competent to recall the order obtained from it by suppression or misrepresentation of facts. This view is supported by a long series of decisions, amongst which may be mentioned Hira Lal v. Premamoyee Debi (16); Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrikah Singh (17); Udit Chobey v. Radhika Prasad (18); Nagardas v. Anandrao (19). Much stress, however, was laid upon the provisions of section 48 of the Guardians and Wards Act, where it is stated that save as provided by section 47 (which specifies appealable orders) and by section 622 of the Code of 1882 (which defines the grounds for revision), an order made under the Act shall be final and shall not be liable to be contested by suit or otherwise. The reference to section 47 of the Guardians and Wards Act and to section 622 of the Code of 1882 indicates that the Legislature had in view the question of the liability of an order to be challenged by way of appeal or revision before a superior tribunal. The Legislature did not contemplate, it is said, a re-consideration of the order by the Court itself on the ground that the Court had been induced to assume jurisdiction in a matter in which it had no jurisdiction. But we are clearly of opinion that section 48 is not a bar to the present proceedings and that the District Judge had jurisdiction to entertain the application in the exercise of his inherent powers. Consequently his order is not appealable. The preliminary objection must accordingly be allowed and the appeal dismissed with costs; we assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

As regards the application for revision, it is plain that it can be sustained, on the ground either that the Court had no jurisdiction to deal with the application or that the Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction has acted illegally or with material irregularity. We have already held that the District Judge had jurisdiction to deal with the matter and, therefore, the only point for consideration is whether he acted illegally or with material irregularity. It has been suggested in support of the application that important evidence was improperly excluded and that if such evidence had been admitted, it could have been shown that the application for revocation of guardianship was not bona fide. Reference has also been made in the course of argument to portions of the evidence. We may in this connection observe that it is competent to the Court to investigate the facts in revision, if the Court is satisfied that such a step is needed in the ends of justice, as was done in the case of Kailash Chandra Haldar v. Bissonath Paramanic (20). But we must

(5) (1841) 4 Beav. 494; 11 L. J. Ch 73; 49 E.R. 430.
(6) (1843) 6 Beav. 584; 13 L. J. Ch. 102; 8 Jur. 26; 49 E. R. 952.
(7) (1844) 7 Beav. 160; 49 E. R. 1024; 64 R. R. 47; 8 Jur. 50.
(8) (1845) 8 Beav. 405; 14 L. J. Ch. 378; 50 E.R. 159.
(9) (1845) 8 Beav. 465; 50 E. R. 183.
(10) (1848) 11 Beav. 46; 50 E. R. 733.
(11) (1848) 11 Beav. 99; 17 L. J. Ch. 378; 12 Jur. 711; 50 E. R. 754.
(12) (1861) 30 Beav. 229; 8 Jur. (N. S.) 183; 5 L. T. 301; 10 W. R. 69; 132 R. R. 250; 54 Eng. Rep. 876.
(13) (1838) 4 M. & C. 261; 41 E. R. 102.
(14) (1847) 2 Phil. 178; 16 L.J. Ch. 265; 41 E.R. 909.
(15) (1884) 26 Ch. D. 1 at p. 3; 50 L. T. 287; 32 W. R. 445.
(16) 2 C. L. J. 306.
(17) 1 Ind. Cas. 913; 5 C.L.J. 611 at p. 620; 36 C. 193.
(18) 6 C. L. J. 602; 3 M. L. T. 41.
(19) 31 B. 590; 9 Bom. L. R. 495.
(20) 1 C. W. N. 67.

guard against the possible assumption that the Court may, in a matter like this in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, assume appellate powers. One aspect of the fundamental distinction between the exercise of appellate and revisional powers was explained in the case of Shiva Nathaji v. Joma Kashinath (21). A Court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction investigates the facts and, if necessary, substitutes its own appreciation of the evidence for that of the primary Court. But when the Court as a Court of revision looks into the evidence, it does so with a view to determine whether the subordinate Court has assumed a jurisdiction which it did not possess, or declined a jurisdiction which it did possess or has in the exercise of its jurisdiction acted illegally or with material irregularity. If this distinction were overlooked, the superior Court might, in the name of revisional jurisdiction, exercise appellate powers. Consequently in the case before us, we cannot be rightly invited by the petitioner to examine the evidence with a view to determine whether the District Judge has correctly appreciated its effect. But we may look at the evidence to determine whether he has acted illegally or irregularly in the exercise of his jurisdiction. Upon that point we are satisfied that the ground taken by the petitioner has not been established. There is no indication whatever from the proceedings in the Court below that the District Judge excluded any evidence the true bearing of which was explained to him. The only ground on which the petitioner invites the Court to interfere in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction thus completely fails.

The result is that this Rule is discharged. We make no separate order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed: Rule discharged.

(21) 7 B. 341.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1374 OF 1912.

November 5, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

SUBRAMANIA PETHANNAR BHOOPATHI (DECEASED) AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

MUTHIAN CHETTIAR—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 3 (5)—Landholder—Co-sharers, mortgage by—One co-sharer alone redeeming and taking possession—Recognition as landholder—Rent, suit for—Maintainability.

Though under the first paragraph of section 3, clause 5, of the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908) both a mortgagor and a usufructuary mortgagee are 'landholders', yet under the 2nd paragraph of the said clause the usufructuary mortgagee alone is the 'landholder' for the purposes of the said Act.

When there are a number of joint landholders, the test to be applied for ascertaining which among them is entitled to proceed and be dealt with as a 'landholder' for all or any of the purposes of the Madras Estates Land Act seems to be 'who amongst them is or are entitled to collect the rent of the whole' estate?

The power given to the Collector under paragraph 2 of section 3 (5) does not exclude the power of a Civil Court to recognise that person as landholder who is entitled to collect the whole rents.

Where an estate owned by several joint owners and subject to a usufructuary mortgage was redeemed by the plaintiff, one of such several owners, owning the largest number of shares, and he got possession of the estate with the knowledge and consent of the owners of the remaining shares therein:

Held, that the plaintiff, who redeemed the mortgage and got rightful possession of the whole estate from the usufructuary mortgagee, being the person entitled to collect the whole rents, was also entitled to be recognised as the 'landholder' for all the purposes of the Act, including the right to sue for rent solely.

Ahmed Wali Khan v. Shamsh-ul-Jahan Begam, 28 A. 482; 10 C. W. N. 626; 3 A. L. J. 360; 3 C. L. J. 481; 1 M.L.T. 143; 8 Bom. L.R. 397; 16 M. L. J. 269 (P. C.), referred to.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Ramnad, in Appeal Suit No. 333 of 1911, preferred against that of the Special Deputy Collector of Ramnad, in Summary Suit No. 1904 of 1910.

FACTS.—The estate concerned in the present suit was owned by several joint proprietors, of whom the plaintiff owned the largest number of shares. He alone having redeemed the estate from a usufructuary mortgage to which it was subject and having got into possession, without any objection on the part of the other co-owners sued the defendant, a kudivaram tenant of the village, for rent. The defendant contended that the suit was not maintainable in the absence from record of the owners of the remaining shares in the melvaram. Both the Courts below held that the endorsement of payment on the usufructuary mortgage-deed constituted the plaintiff an assignee of the said mortgage rights, that as such he became invested with all the rights of a "landholder" under the Madras Estates Land Act and that in consequence he was entitled to maintain the suit. The defendant, thereupon, preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Appellant:—The suit is not maintainable, as all the co-sharers are not parties thereto. The plaintiff alone has no right to sue, as the endorsement of payment on the mortgage-deed does not amount to an assignment. The Courts below have erred in holding that the endorsement of payment amounted to an assignment. The plaintiff can at best be only a charge-holder and cannot sue for rent.

Mr. R. Kuppuswamy Iyer, for the Respondent:—In this case the payment of the mortgage amount by the plaintiff, one of the mortgagors, followed by delivery by the mortgagee to the plaintiff of the mortgage document with the payment endorsed thereon not as discharge, which endorsement is also registered, does amount in law to an assignment of the mortgage rights. The plaintiff is, therefore, a 'landholder' within the meaning of section 3, clause 5, of the Madras Estates Land Act. Further the plaintiff owns a part of the estate and is a landholder. None of the other co-sharers object to the plaintiff's collecting the rent. The Collector is empowered by the Act to choose one of several landholders to conduct proceedings under the Act and the Civil Courts have got a similar power. In this case the Collector did recognise the plaintiff as the person entitled to sue and even if the Court were to hold that he has not done so, the Civil Courts are not debarred from doing so even now.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendant is the appellant. We must accept the following findings of the lower Appellate Court, namely, (a) the defendant is the kudivaram tenant of the plaint lands and (b) that the plaintiff owns the greater portion of the melvaram right in the village lands (Exhibit H shows that he owns roughly 22 out of 26 shares) and (c) that he paid up a person, who owned the usufructuary mortgage right on the entire lands, and got possession of the melvaram right from the said usufructuary mortgagee.

The lower Courts no doubt fell into an error in holding that the mere endorsement of the payment of the mortgage amount to the owner of the usufructuary mortgage rights, (which is all that is proved by the registered endorsement on Exhibit A) made the plaintiff the assignee of the said usufructuary mortgage rights, which rights had admittedly invested the usufructuary mortgagee with all the rights of a landholder under the Estates Land Act. The contention of the defendant (the tenant) in second appeal is that the plaintiff, who owns only 22/26th share of the melvaram right, cannot maintain this suit for rent without having made the owners of the remaining four or five shares co-plaintiffs with himself or at least without having made them party defendants.

I think that though the reason given by the lower Courts (namely, that the plaintiff became the assignee of the usufructuary mortgagee) for treating the plaintiff as a landholder may be erroneous, the plaintiff's status as a landholder may be supported on another ground. Under section 3, clause 5, of the Estates Land Act the definition of "landholder" includes every person entitled to collect the rents of the whole estate by virtue of any provision of law. In Ahmed Wali Khan v. Shamsh-ul-Jahan Begam(1) their Lordships of the Privy Council say that possession of property repasses in redemption from a usufructuary mortgagee to the person who redeems the mortgage. Now, in this case, though the plaintiff did not own the whole of the equity of redemption, he was entitled under section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act to redeem the usufructuary mortgage of the entire village and he did so redeem and get possession. In fact his possession was admitted by the other sharers in Exhibit G and was found in the judgment, Exhibit H (para. 39), to which the other sharers were parties.

(1) 28 A. 482 10 C. W. N. 626; 3 A. L. J. 360; 3 C. L. J. 48; 1 M. L. T. 143; 8 Bom. L. R 397; 16 M. L. J. 269 (P. C.).

Now a possession of the melvaram right can mean nothing else than the possession of the right to the receipt of rents. Hence the plaintiff, as the person entitled to collect the entire rents, came under the definition of landholder under section 3, clause 5. Where the melvaram right has been mortgaged under a usufructuary mortgage, the definition of 'landholder', no doubt, will include both the mortgagor and mortgagee, the mortgagor as the person "owning the estate" and the usufructuary mortgagee as the person "entitled to collect the rents." But it is clear that the mortgagor cannot be treated, after he has created the usufructuary mortgage, as the landholder for the purposes of the Estates Land Act, that is so far as exercising the powers of the landholder to grant pattahs and to recover rents, etc., are concerned. Thus though under the first paragraph of section 3, clause 5, both come within the definition of "landholder," for the purpose of the second paragraph only one of them is the "landholder," namely, the usufructuary mortgagee. So also though the plaintiff and the owners of the other shares may be joint landholders, still, when we have to decide which of them is entitled "to proceed and be dealt with" as such landholder or landholders for all or any of the purposes of the Act, the test clearly seems to be, "who amongst them is or are entitled to collect the whole of the rents." The Collector, of course, under the said paragraph 2 can recognise or nominate any of these persons as "landholder" for the purposes of the Act, but that does not mean that one of them, if he is entitled to collect the whole rent, is not also entitled to be recognised by the Civil Courts as the "landholder" for the purposes of the Act. In the present case, the plaintiff who redeemed the usufructuary mortgage and got rightful possession of the whole estate from the said usufructuary mortgagee, being the person entitled to collect the whole rents, is also entitled to be recognised as the "landholder" for all the purposes of the Act, including the right to sue for the rent solely. In the result the contention of the appellant fails and I would dismiss the second appeal with costs.

NAPPIER, J.—I concur.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CIVIL RULE No. 1474 OF 1913.

June 27, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Coxe.

RAJANI KANTA DAS AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—PETITIONERS

versus

KALI PRASANNA MUKHERJEE—AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVII, r. 1—Discovery of new and important matter—Review of order dismissing appeal under O. XLI, r. 11, whether entertainable.

No review lies of an order dismissing an appeal under Order XLI, rule 11, Civil Procedure Code, merely on the ground of an alleged discovery of new and important matter.

Bhyrub Nath Tye v. Kally Chunder Chowdhry, 16 W. R. 112, followed.

Civil Rule against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Khulna, dated December 23rd, 1912.

Babu Jadunath Mandal, for the Petitioners.

Babu Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule on the opposite party to show cause why an appeal should not be re-heard on the ground of the discovery of new and important evidence. A preliminary objection is taken that an application of this kind cannot be made after the disposal of a second appeal. The preliminary objection is supported by the decisions of Bhyrub Nath Tye v. Kally Chunder Chowdhry (1); Raru Kutti v. Mamad (2) and Nandkishore v. Anwar Hussain (3). The first of these rulings is binding upon me and I must, therefore, hold that this application cannot be granted. Reference is made by the other side to the case of Heera Lall Ghose v. Ram Taruck Dey (4). But the observations by the learned Judges in that case do not amount to a decision which can be weighed against the decision of Bhyrub Nath Tye v. Kally Chunder Chowdhry (1), inasmuch as the learned Judges refused the application for review, and their observations, therefore, can only be regarded as obiter dicta.

The Rule is discharged with costs.

Let the documents filed by the petitioners be returned.

Rule discharged.

(1) 16 W. R. 112.
(2) 18 M. 480.
(3) 4 Ind. Cas. 809; 32 A. 71; 6 A. L. J. 979.
(4) 23 W. R. 323

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 307 OF 1914.

October 9, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Rattigan.

JAHANGIR SINGH—PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER

versus

HIRA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 10, inapplicability of.

Section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, does not apply where the previously instituted suit is pending in a Court not competent to try it.

Petition, under section 70 of Act XVIII of 1884, as amended by Act IV of 1912, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 16th February 1914, ordering that the proceedings in the case be stayed till the decision of the other case.

FACTS.—J got possession of a house in execution of a decree obtained by him against H under section 9 of Act I of 1877. A few days after, H again illegally dispossessed J and instituted a regular civil suit to establish his title in the Court of a first Class Munsif. Meanwhile J also brought another suit under section 9 of the said Act in the Court of the District Judge, who stayed the proceedings under section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Act V of 1908, on the ground that a previous suit relating to the same property was pending. The day after the passing of the District Judge's order, the Munsif in turn passed an order to the effect that the suit in his Court comprised property of value beyond his jurisdiction, and directed the plaint to be returned to the plaintiff in order that it might be presented to a competent Court.

s or der was not challenged by H.

Lala Hukam Chand, for Mr. N. C. Mehra, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts as alleged by the parties are set forth in the order of the District Judge. At the time when that order was passed, the regular suit by present respondents had been filed in the Court of Lala Tirath Ram, Munsif, and was pending before that Court. The day after the passing of the District Judge's order the Munsif in turn passed an order to the effect that the suit instituted in his Court comprised property of value beyond his jurisdiction, he accordingly directed the plaint to be returned to the plaintiff in order that it might be presented to a competent Court. This order has not been challenged, and it is admitted that the suit in question is now pending in the Court of a Subordinate Judge. The result then is that at the time when the present petitioner brought his suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, there was no "previously instituted suit" pending in a Court of competent jurisdiction between the same parties and relating to a matter substantially in issue in the petitioner's suit.

I accordingly accept this petition and, setting aside the order of the District Judge, I direct him to proceed with the suit of Jahangir Singh v. Hira and Narain in accordance with law. I make no order as to costs in respect of to-day's hearing.

Petition allowed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER No. 55 OF 1913.

October 20, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

V. R. M. K. M. T. MUTHUKARUPPAN CHETTIAR BY HIS AGENT, MUTHUVIRA PILLAI—CREDITOR—PETITIONER—APPELLANT

versus

MUTHURAMAN CHETTIAR AND ANOTHER—DEBTORS—PETITONERS—RESPONDENTS.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 12 (1), (3), 46 (3)—Creditor's petition—Notice to other creditors, if necessary—Order refusing to add creditor as party—Adjudication—Appealability.

There is nothing in section 12 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, III of 1907, to warrant the contention that in the case of a petition filed by a creditor to adjudge his debtor an insolvent, notice to other creditors is not necessary under section 12 (1) of the said Act.

Bava Jeer Chetty v. Bava Rangasami Chetty, 12 Ind. Cas. 618; 36 M. 402; 22 M. L. J. 52; 10 M. L. T. 433; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 480, referred to.

Under section 46 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, an appeal lies to the High Court at the instance of a creditor against an order of adjudication passed on the petition of another creditor, if the Court declined to add the former as a party.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Coimbatore, in Original Petition No. 4 of 1912, dated 19th December 1912.

MUTHUKARUPPAN CHETTIAR v. MUTHURAMAN CHETTIAR.

FACTS.—The facts of the case are briefly as follows:—One M C, a creditor of C B V, debtor, moved the District Judge of Coimbatore under section 6, clause 4 (a), and section 11, clause (2), of Act III of 1907 in Original Petition No. 4 of 1912 and prayed that the debtor may be adjudged an insolvent. The debtor C B V also filed Original Petition No. 5 of 1912 before the same Judge to be adjudged an insolvent. In Original Petition No. 4 of 1912 the District Judge issued notice under section 12, clause (3), of the Act only to the debtor. The appellant then moved the District Court to be made a party to the proceedings in Original Petition No. 4 of 1912. This was objected to by M C and the Judge finally dismissed the application. The appellant sought by Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 2306 of 1912 for leave to appeal to the High Court, but the said petition was disposed of by the following order of Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—

"I refuse leave to appeal because there is admittedly another petition (Original Petition No. 5 of 1912) put in by the debtor himself in the District Court to be declared an insolvent and the present petition is being posted along with that petition for trial. And if an order is passed on that petition, no separate order will be required on this petition.

If, however, a separate order is passed for any reason, the petitioner can come up on appeal against such an order."

Original Petition No. 4 of 1912 was finally disposed of by the Judge and the debtor was adjudicated an insolvent and it is against the said order that the present appeal is preferred.

Mr. V. C. Seshacharriar, for the Respondent, took the preliminary objection that no appeal could lie, inasmuch as the appellant rightly or wrongly had not been made a party to the proceedings in the lower Court and had, therefore, no locus standi to prefer the appeal. He could not be said to be an aggrieved party because the stage for passing an order of adjudication by the lower Court was intended by the scheme of the Act to be a preliminary stage in which the Court was not bound to consider all possible objections which might be raised by the parties to the proceedings. Ex parte Sidebotham; In re Sidebotham (1) and Bava Jeer Chetty v. Bava Rangasami Chetty (2). The Act required only a notice to the debtor, but not to the other creditors.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, with Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellant:—The appellant, being admittedly a creditor, was entitled to notice, as he would otherwise be aggrieved by an order which might be passed against him and behind his back. He could not take the objection in Original Petition No. 5 as his mortgage would not have been within the period of three months of the petition, vide section 37 of the Act. He as a creditor was entitled to notice and should have had an opportunity to advance his objections. He had the right of appeal as the order in Original Petition No. 4 was passed under section 15 of the Act.

JUDGMENT.—The questions are, first, whether the appellant is entitled to appeal, next, whether he should succeed on the merits.

The District Judge treated it as immaterial whether the appellant, the petitioner before him, should be allowed to take part in the proceedings in the present case, Original Petition No. 4 of 1912, or should be left to his remedy in Original Petition No. 5 which was filed by the debtor later. It was not immaterial, because if appellant had had an opportunity of taking part in Original Petition No. 4, he might have been able to show that there should be no adjudication therein. The adjudication would then have had to be in Original Petition No. 5 and then appellant's mortgage would not have been within the period of three months of the petition referred to in section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Original Petition No. 4 was presented by a creditor. But we cannot find reason for holding, and section 12 (3), on which respondent relies, does not justify the conclusion, that on such a petition only the debtor should have notice and that the general notice to creditors under section 12 (1) is not to issue. If the general notice is to issue, it will be purposeless unless creditors are allowed to take part in the proceedings. That is implied also by the decision in Bava Jeer v. Rangasami Chetti (2). In fact in the present case the

(1) 14 Ch. D. 458; 49 L. J. Bk. 41; 42 L. T. 783; 28 W. R. 715.

(2) 12 Ind. Cas. 618; 36 M. 402; 22 M. L. J. 52; 10 M. L. T. 433; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 480.

District Judge entirely neglected this important part of the necessary procedure, observing that the advertisement in Original Petition No. 5 would be sufficient. We hold that appellant should have been allowed to take part in the proceedings.

The lower Court's order of adjudication in Original Petition No. 4 was passed under section 15. The appellant, therefore, is entitled to appeal against it under section 46 (3).

We must, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the District Judge's order in Original Petition No. 4 and direct him to restore the petition to file and dispose of it according to law in the light of the foregoing and after issuing the necessary general notice under section 12 (2).

Respondents will pay appellant's costs in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2449 OF 1913.

November 5, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

THAMBIKILAN MUTHIRIAN AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS Nos. 1 AND 2—APPELLANTS

versus

MUTHU REDDI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS Nos. 1 TO 4 AND DEFENDANTS Nos. 4 AND 5—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Tenant holding over—Relations, whether regulated by expired lease—Forfeiture of tenancy for non-payment of rent, condition whether incongruous.

The terms of a lease which has terminated, may regulate the relations between the parties to the lease when the tenancy becomes one on sufferance, if they are not incongruous with a tenancy of that description.

Therefore, a condition of forfeiture inserted in such a lease for non-payment of rent holds goods after expiry of the lease under the circumstances.

Thomas v. Packer, 1 H. & N. 669; 26 L. J. Ex. 207; 3 Jur. (N. S.) 143; 28 L. T. (O. S.) 274; 5 W. R. 316; 108 R. R. 776, Kishore Lal Dey v. The Administrator-General of Bengal, 2 C. W. N. 303, followed

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 646 of 1912 (transferred from the District Court), preferred against that of the District Munsif of Kulitalai, in Original Suit No. 336 of 1911.

Mr. S. Krishnamachariar, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question is whether defendants had forfeited their right as plaintiffs' tenants. It is urged that the forfeiture is based on a clause of the lease, Exhibit E, which entitles plaintiffs to immediate possession if there are arrears in any year, and that this clause did not govern the relations between the parties when the lease had terminated and defendants were holding over. We hold that the terms of the lease may regulate the relations between the parties when the tenancy became one on sufferance, if in the particular case they are not incongruous with a tenancy of that description. Vide Thomas v. Packer (1) and Kishore Lal Dey v. The Administrator-General of Bengal (2). The first of these cases, it may be pointed out, particularly resembles the present in respect of the fact that the forfeiture became enforceable (as it would here) after the ensuing year's holding had begun. We have not been shown how the clause in Exhibit E, on which plaintiffs rely, is in any way incongruous with the incidents of a tenancy on sufferance.

It has not been shown that the plaintiffs waived their right to insist on the forfeiture, or that defendants are entitled to relief against it.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 1 H. & N. 669; 26 L. J. Ex. 207; 3 Jur. (N. S.) 143; 28 L. T. (O. S.) 274; 5 W. R. 316; 108 R. R. 776.

(2) 2 C. W. N. 303.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL APPEAL No. 23 OF 1913.

January 30, 1914.

Present:—Sir Lawrence Jenkins, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Woodroffe.

OSMOND BEEBY—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

KHITISH CHANDRA ACHARYA CHAUDHURI AND ANOTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Administrator pendente lite—Commission—Government security pledged to Bank for loan, how far assets of deceased—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Estoppel — Suit to recover excess commission, whether to open settled account—Laches—Acquiescence — Commission once charged on whole, whether allowed on part property sold.

OSMOND BEEBY v. KHITISH CHANDRA.

Government securities, whether endorsed in blank or endorsed to a Bank for a debt, pass a legal and not a mere equitable interest and the Bank is a holder for value to the extent of the sum for which it has a lien.

Therefore, the sale-proceeds of such securities as are applied to the discharge of the debt are not the assets of a deceased that come into the hands of the administrator pendente lite, notwithstanding the fact that the sales are effected through the agent nominated by the administrator, and the administrator pendente lite is not entitled to commission on such amount.

Scott v. Franklin, 15 East 428; 104 E. R. 906, referred to.

The mere fact that the accounts of the administrator pendente lite were passed and the plaintiff with full knowledge of their contents raised no objection and the Solicitor also expressed a favourable opinion, does not operate as an estoppel.

A suit to recover from the administrator the commission retained in excess, of what he was entitled to is not a case of opening a settled account so much as enforcing a claim against a fiduciary agent.

A defence of laches cannot prevail where a statutory period of limitation is prescribed.

Acquiescence cannot be imputed where there is no evidence to show that the plaintiff actually knew the facts as represented in the accounts to be incorrect or that he did not rely on that representation.

Redgrave v. Hurd, (1881) 20 Ch. D. 1; 51 L. J. Ch. 113; 45 L. T. 485; 30 W. R. 251, referred to.

If commission be once taken on the whole property, the administrator pendente lite cannot again charge commission on the sale-proceeds of a part of the property.

Appeal against the decree of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri in Suit No. 882 of 1907 on the Original Side of the High Court.

Mr. E. Norton (with him Mr. Mullick), for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Chakravarti (with him Mr. B. K. Lahiri), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.,—This is an appeal from a judgment of Chaudhuri, J., in a suit brought against Mr. Osmond Beeby, a former administrator pendente lite of the estate of Dakshina Mohan Roy, for a refund of remunerations alleged to have been retained by him in excess of what was his due.

The order appointing the defendant to be administrator pendente lite provided for his remuneration by the allowance of "a commission of 2 per cent. on the assets that will come into his hands."

Dakshina Mohan Roy at the time of his death was indebted to the Bank of Bengal, the National Bank of India and the Comptoir National D'Escompte De Paris. Against this indebtedness each Bank held Government securities, the total value of which was Rs. 6,40,942-8-10. The indebtedness to the several Banks was discharged out of the sale-proceeds of the Government securites, with the result that a balance of Rs. 29,215-4-5 only came to the hands of the administrator pendente lite. He has, however, retained a commission of 2 per cent. on the Rs. 6,40,942-8-10. To this exception is taken by the plaintiffs in this suit.

What we, therefore, have to decide is, whether this sum, representing the full value of the Government securities, can be regarded as assets of the deceased that came into the the hands of the administrator pendente lite. Chaudhuri, J., held that there was a pledge to each of the Banks and that the Banks were entitled to possession of these securities and had possession of them as pledgees. There is no ground of appeal directed against this finding, and I think we ought to accept it as correct.

There is no evidence as to how these securities were endorsed, but this at least is certain that there is no suggestion that they were endorsed by Mr. Beeby.

At the same time we know they were sold and transferred by the Banks, so that it is conceded they must either have been endorsed in blank or endorsed to the several Banks. In either case each Bank, as to the securites held by it, would be a holder for value, at any rate to the extent of the sum for which it had a lien. To borrow the phraseology of English Law, by the delivery of the securities as endorsed there passed a legal and not a mere equitable interest. [See per Lord Ellenborough in Scott v. Franklin (1)]. How then can it be said that these securities to the extent of the amount for which each Bank had a lien, were assets of the deceased which came to the hands of the administrator pendente lite?

For Mr. Beeby it is argued that though his claim could not have been sustained had the securities been mortgaged, still as the Banks were only pledgees the same difficulty does not arise; for that under those sections of the Contract Act which relate to pledges, the property in the securitie did not pass to the Banks. In the circumstances, it is contended, the sales of the securities must be deemed to have been made by the several Banks as agents for Mr. Beeby. But can it be fairly said that the Banks sold as the agents of Mr. Beeby? True it is that the brokers by whom the sales were effected were the firm nominated by Mr. Beeby, and under provisions of the Contract Act the Banks were not entitled to sell at the time when the sales were effected. But I cannot think that the Banks in selling as they did were acting as the agents of the administrator pendente lite.

(1) (1881) 15 East 428; 104 E. R. 906.

Moreover, the Banks were not only pledgees, they were also holders for value of these negotiable instruments with the consequent rights that belong to that position; and in the circumstances I am unable to hold that so much of the sale-proceeds, as the several Banks applied to the discharge of the debts due to them, were within the description of assets that came into the hands of the administrator pendente lite.

But then it is said that the present plaintiffs are estopped. These plaintiffs are a pardanashin lady and a minor. The lady succeeded to a widow's limited interest at the deceased's death, and the minor, by surrender of all previous limited interest to him as the next male reversioner on the 16th August 1905, then became and now is the full owner of the deceased's estate. What is charged against the plaintiffs is that the accounts of the administrator pendente lite were passed, and that the plaintiff, Sreemutty Sindhubala Debi, with full knowledge of their contents, including the charge of this commission, through her agent and attorney, raised no objection, though she had full notice. And in this connection reliance is placed on a conversation alleged to have passed between Mr. Beeby and the attorney in the Bar Library when the attorney expressed an opinion that Mr. Beeby was justified in making this charge. But I fail to see how any estoppel arose. When the procedure followed on the passing of accounts is borne in mind, it would be dangerous to hold that this alone would suffice for the purpose of forming the basis of an estoppel, nor can the plaintiffs be bound by this casual conversation. But apart from that, how can it be said that the conditions prescribed by section 115 of the Evidence Act have been established? Even if it be assumed that the plaintiffs represented that the charge was rightly made, still it had to be observed that the accounts represented the 6 lakhs as having been received by Mr. Beeby. And had that been the fact, then he would have been entitled to the commission shown in the accounts as retained by him.

Nor can I see what act was induced by the plaintiffs: his appropriation of the amount of the commission was before the passing of the accounts, as also was his departure for England.

But if the plaintiffs are not estopped, are they debarred by laches or acquiescence from enforcing their claim? I think, not. This is not a case of opening a settled account so much as enforcing a claim against a fiduciary agent, on the ground that it has been discovered that he has retained more of the estate than he was entitled to under the order authorising his remuneration.

The defence of laches cannot prevail when, as here, a statutory period of limitation is prescribed. Nor can acquiescence be imputed to the plaintiffs, for though Mr. Beeby's accounts as passed showed the retention of the amounts now sought to be recovered, still these accounts represented the 6 lakhs odd, on which the commission was calculated, as received by him.

There is no evidence to show that the plaintiffs actually knew the facts as represented in the accounts to be incorrect or that they did not rely on that representation, and the inference, therefore, is that they did so rely. [Redgrave v. Hurd (2)].

In saying this, I do not forget the alleged conversation with Mr. Bhupendra Nath Bose in the Bar Library.

The broad facts are these, if my view of the extent of Mr. Beeby's right to commission is correct an administrator pendente lite has retained as his remuneration more than he was entitled to claim: his accounts, contrary to the fact, represented receipts by him entitling him to the commission retained by him; and a suit is now brought against him to recover that amount within the time allowed by law.

(2) (1881) 20 Ch. D. 1; 51 L. J. Ch. 113; 45 L. T. 485; 30 W. R. 251.

I hold no answer has been shown, and I, therefore, would not disturb Mr. Justice Chaudhuri's decision on this part of the case.

Then three points have been raised by way of cross-objection. First, it is said that the administrator has charged commission on the basis of the deceased being entitled to a $\frac{1}{4}$th share in the family property, whereas his share was only 1/5th I am not prepared to dissent from the view taken by Chaudhuri, J. The share was originally $\frac{1}{4}$th, and I think it may fairly be said that this share came into Mr. Beeby's hands, though it was liable to be reduced to 1/5th and was in fact so reduced.

The next objection is that Mr. Beeby received commission on the sale-proceeds of a part of the Ghoshal property, though he had previously received commission on the entirety of that property. Chaudhuri, J., has not dealt with this point under the impression that it was not seriously urged. But Mr. Chakravarti assures us that this was not so. If commission was taken on the whole of the property, I do not think commission could be again taken on the sale-proceeds of a part of the property. As this is what happened, the objection must succeed.

The third objection raises the question whether commission is to be charged on the gross or only on the net collections.

The gross collections were made on behalf of those entitled, of whom Mr. Beeby as administrator pendente lite was one. I, therefore, think we ought not to disturb Mr. Justice Chaudhuri's decision on this point.

The result then is that, in my opinion, the decree of the learned Judge should be varied by increasing the sum of Rs. 12,234-8-9 thereby decreed to Rs. 12,763-6-9 by the addition thereto of the sum of Rs. 528-14-1, the commission on the proceeds of sale of a part of the Ghoshal property.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree.

Decree varied.

MADRAS HIGH COURT
FULL BENCH.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 71 OF 1913.
October 6, 1914.

Present:—Sir John Edward Power Wallis, Offg. Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Ayling and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar.

S. VEERARAGHAVA IYER—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

J. D. MUGA SAIT—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 13, 44—Foreign judgment—Decree of Court of Cochin State—Execution in British India—Executing Court, power of, to impeach validity of decree—Jurisdiction—Suit in Cochin State—Temporary injunction pendente lite—Appearance of defendant—Jurisdiction objected to—Written statement also filed—Submission, whether voluntary or under duress—Foreign Courts and Courts of Native States, judgments of—Suit in British India on such judgments, maintainability of.

A British Indian Court, executing a decree passed by a Court in a Native State, in respect of which a notification pursuant to section 44 of the Civil Procedure Code has been issued, is competent to go behind the decree and inquire into the question whether the Court which passed the decree had jurisdiction to do so, as a British Court ought not to execute the decree if passed without jurisdiction.

The question whether submission to jurisdiction is voluntary or under duress is one of fact in each case. If the submission is for saving property, it is not voluntary, even though a written statement is filed objecting to the jurisdiction and raising a defence on the merits.

Boissiere and Co. v. Brockner and Co., 6 T. L. R. 85; Guiard v. De Colermont and Donner, 30 T. L. R. 511; Voinet v. Barrett, 55 L. J. Q. B. 39; 34 W. R. 161; Parry and Co. v. Appasami Pillai, 2 M. 407; 5 Ind. Jur. 188; Sivaraman Chetti v. Iburam Saheb, 18 M. 327; and Harchand v. Gulabchand, 26 Ind. Cas. 265; 16 Bom. L. R. 620, referred to.

The scope and effect of sections 13 and 44 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) and their bearing upon each other considered.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—Quære:—Whether suits upon judgments of Native States, in respect of which a notification pursuant to section 44 of the Civil Procedure Code has been issued, can be instituted in British India?

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar, in Appeal against Appellate Order No. 53 of 1911, reported in 20 Ind. Cas. 704, preferred against that of the Subordinate Judge of Palaghat, in Appeal Suit No. 874 of 1910, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Palaghat, in Execution Petition No. 967 of 1910 (Original Suit No. 82 of 1083 on the file of the Trichur District Court).

FACTS.—The suit out of which the present Letters Patent Appeal arose was instituted by the plaintiff in the District Court of Cochin against the defendant, a resident of British India, for damages for breach of contract entered into in Cochin and to be performed in Cochin. Immediately after the institution of the suit the plaintiff applied for and obtained a temporary injunction to restrain the defendant from disposing of certain logs of timber which were within the jurisdiction of the Court. This order was duly served on the defendant. The latter then applied to the Cochin Court to dissolve the injunction. He also filed a written statement objecting to the jurisdiction of the Cochin Court and pleading non-liability for the claim. The District Judge of Cochin overruled the objections of the defendant and decreed the suit. The plaintiff then had this decree sent to the District Munsif's Court of Palaghat (a British Court) for execution under section 44 of the Civil Procedure Code. The defendant contended before the latter Court that the Cochin decree was a nullity as it was passed without jurisdiction. This plea was upheld and the execution was dismissed. On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed that decision, holding that the District Munsif had no power to go into the question whether the Cochin Court had or had not jurisdiction to pass the decree. The defendant thereupon preferred Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal No. 53 of 1911* to the High Court. It was heard by their Lordships Sundara Aiyar and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ. Sundara Aiyer, J., held that the executing British Court could inquire into want of jurisdiction of the foreign Court which passed the decree. Sadasiva Aiyar, J., held contra. The judgment of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., prevailed and the civil miscellaneous second appeal was dismissed. The defendant then preferred this appeal under section 15 of the Letters Patent.

Mr. K. K. Pandalai, for Dr. S. Swaminathan, for the Appellant:—A British Indian Court executing the decree of a Court of a favoured Native State is competent to question the jurisdiction of the latter to pass the decree. The section of the new Code governing the question is 44. Section 229 B of the Code of 1882 and section 434 of that of 1877 are the corresponding sections. See also Order XXI, rule 7. Foreign Court is defined in section 2 of the present Code.

[SIR JOHN WALLIS, OFFG. C. J.—Section 44 puts the Courts of the selected Native States in the same position as Courts of British India for purposes of jurisdiction.]

The question depends upon the construction of the words "as if they had been passed by the Courts of British India" in section 44 of the Code. It is only in so far as the modes and machinery of execution are concerned that the decrees of the Courts of favoured Native States are placed in the same position as decrees of British Indian Courts. The intention of the section is not to place the decrees of the Courts of Native States in every respect on a par with the decrees of British Indian Courts. If a decree of a Court of a Native State had been passed without jurisdiction, a British Indian Court could not execute it. Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, 4th Edition, pages 122, 130, 131, 136, 139, 166, 218, 222, 223; Cox v. Hakes (1); Darlington Wagon Co. Ltd. v. Harding (2); Ex parte Blain; In re Sawers (3); Cooke v. Charles A. Vogeler Co. (4). The section should be read as being subject to the provisions of section 13 of the Code.

[SESHAGIRI AIYER, J.—In construing the provision as to the recovery of income-tax, it has been held that income-tax is not arrears of revenue so as to entitle Government to a first charge for income-tax due. That case turned upon the meaning of the words "as if."]

[SIR JOHN WALLIS, OFFG. C.J.—The section of the Income-tax Act says "recover as if", showing that the provision relates to the procedure only.]

In section 44 also the words are "execute as if." The case about the Income-tax Act is Kadir Mohideen Marakkayar v. Muthukrishna Aiyar (5). Again, with reference to section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, where also the words "as if" occur, it has been held that they mean that there is no complaint in such a case.

*See 20 Ind. Cas. 704; (1913) M. W. N. 605; 14 M. L. T. 96.—Ed.

(1) 15 A. C. 506 at pp. 517, 523, 528; 60 L. J. Q. B. 89; 63 L. T. 392; 39 W. R. 145; 17 Cox. C. C. 158; 54 J. P. 820.

(2) (1891) 1 Q. B. 245 at p. 247; 60 L. J. Q. B. 110; 64 L. T. 409; 39 W. R. 167.

(3) 12 Ch. D. 522; 41 L. T. 46; 28 W. R. 334.

(4) (1901) A. C. 102; 70 L. J. Q. B. 181; 84 L. T. 10; 17 T. L. R. 153; 8 Manson 113.

(5) 26 M. 230 at p. 232; 12 M. L. J. 368.

[AYLING, J.—The words are "proceed as if," thus showing that the provision relates to procedure only.]

Musa Haji Ahmad v. Purmanund Nursey (6) lays down that the expression in section 44 of the Code refers to procedure only. A judgment of a foreign Court against a non-resident foreigner cannot be enforced in British Indian Courts, Sirdar Gurdyal Singh v. Raja of Faridkot (7).

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—You can bring a suit on a decree of a recognised foreign Court.]

Dicey, page 357, rule 81; Cooke v. Charles A. Vogeler Co. (4). The operation of a Statute is prima facie territorial and it cannot be extended to non-resident foreigners.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondent:—In this case the defendant submitted to the jurisdiction of the Cochin Court. Hence the decree is not bad as being against a non-resident foreigner.

[SIR JOHN WALLIS, OFFG. C. J.—There was a protest against jurisdiction.]

But the defendant pleaded over. He pleaded to the merits also and thereby submitted to jurisdiction. The suit contract was entered into in Cochin and was to be performed in Cochin.

[SIR JOHN WALLIS, OFFG. C. J.—The defendant pleaded to jurisdiction and to the merits. Does that amount to submission?]

Yes. Dicey, page 370, rule 83. In an action in personam a foreign Court has jurisdiction when the defendant has submitted to its jurisdiction by voluntarily appearing without protest. Westlake on International Law, pages 376, 377. Carrick v. Hancock (8). In the latter case the defendant pleaded to jurisdiction and prayed in the alternative for a judgment on the merits.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J., referred to Venkatalutchmi Ammal v. Srirungapatram Srinivasamurthy (9)].

Voinet v. Barrett (10); Voinet v. Barrett (11); Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 6, page 285. An appearance under protest is nonetheless a voluntary appearance. An application for leave to file a defence has been held to be submission; Shaikh Atham Sahib v. Daoud Sahib (12); Schibsby v. Westenholz (13); Harchand v. Gulabchand (14); Parry & Co. v. Appasami Pillai (15); Kandoth Mammi v. Neelancherayil (16); Piggott on International Law, Part I, Volume I, page 352; Foote's Private International Law, page 552; American Cyclopædia, Volume XXI, page 1585; Story, page 764. The defendant has not only appeared but has adduced evidence and taken the chance of a decision in his favour. A suit upon a judgment is a suit upon a contract of which the judgment is evidence.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Can the question of jurisdiction be gone into in a suit upon a judgment?]

Yes, a suit would not lie in case of Native States not notified under section 44 of the Code. Sama Rayar v. Annamalai Chetty (17).

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J., referred to Mayaram v. Ravji (18).]

That case was a case of the Nizam. There was no notification in the case of the Nizam. Musa Haji Ahmad v. Purmanund Nursey (6) proceeds on the view that a British Indian Court executing a decree even of a British Indian Court can go into the question of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree. That view has been dissented from and is no longer law. See Hari Gobind Kulkarni v. Norsingrao Nauherao (19). The effect of accepting the interpretation placed upon section 44 of the Code by the other side will be to render the section completely useless.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff is saved the trouble of producing evidence, the expense of paying additional Court-fee, etc.]

[SIR JOHN WALLIS, OFFG. C. J.—The merits cannot be contested. The procedure enacted by section 44 is an expeditious method of getting the benefit of the decree.]

Chitty's Statutes, Volume 6, 31 and 32 Vict., Ch. 54.

[SIR JOHN WALLIS, OFFG. C. J., pointed out the strong language of the corresponding

(6) 15 B. 216.
(7) 22 C. 222; 21 I. A. 171; 4 M. L. J. 267; (1894) A. C. 670; 11 R. 540.
(8) 12 T. L. R. 59.
(9) 11 M. L. J. 91.
(10) (1886) 55 L. J. Q. B. 39; 34 W. R. 161.
(11) (1885) 54 L. J. Q. B. 521.
(12) 3 Ind. Cas. 190; 32 M. 469; 19 M. L. J. 457.
(13) (1870) 6 Q. B. 155 at p. 161; 40 L. J. Q. B. 73; 24 L. T. 93; 19 W. R. 587.
(14) 26 Ind. Cas. 265; 16 Bom. L. R. 620.
(15) 2 M. 407; 5 Ind. Jur. 188.
(16) 8 M. H. C. R. 14.
(17) 7 M. 164 at p. 165.
(18) 24 B. 86; 1 Bom. L. R. 539.
(19) 23 Ind. Cas. 123; 38 B. 194; 16 Bom. L. R. 30.

provision of that Act and contrasted it with the language of section 44.]

As for the difference between the right to execute and the right to sue, see Dicey, page 422, rule 104. Wherever the Legislature intends to speak of the manner of execution only, it employs different language from that found in section 44. See section 145. The Code makes no difference between the decree of a British Indian Court and the decree of a Court of a favoured Native State. Order XXI, rule 7, throws a flood of light on the subject.

[SIR JOHN WALLIS, OFFG. C. J.—Rule 7 is a purely evidentiary provision.]

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, OFFG. C. J.—The learned Judges have differed on the question whether the District Munsif was right in refusing to execute the decree of the Cochin Court, as to which a notification has been issued pursuant to section 44, Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that it was passed without jurisdiction. It was not disputed that in the circumstances, which were similar to those in the Faridkote case, the Cochin Court must be considered to have had no jurisdiction, but it was contended that a British Court was bound under the terms of the section to execute it as if it had been passed by a Court of British India, and that it would not now be open to a Court in British India to refuse to execute the decree of another Court in British India for want of jurisdiction. I do not think it necessary to consider the 2nd proposition, because I agree generally with the judgment of Sundara Aiyar, J., that section 44 has not the effect contended for and that a British Court ought not to execute a decree of the Cochin Court passed without jurisdiction. That judgment is a judgment of a foreign Court within the meaning of section 13, Civil Procedure Code, and it would, in my opinion, require much plainer words than are to be found in section 44 to show that it was the intention of the Legislature that decrees of foreign Courts to which section 44 applies should be enforced in British Courts without regard to the provisions of that section. Full effect may be given to section 44 by holding that it was merely intended to alter the procedure by which such a foreign judgment can have effect given to it in British India. This was decided by Farran, J., more than 20 years ago in Musa Haji Ahmad v. Purmanund Nursey (6), which apparently has not been questioned in our Courts until the present case and was known to the Legislature when the provision of the last Code were revsied and the present Code was enacted. The suggestion that the Legislature intended all decrees of Courts in the position of the Cochin Court to be executed in British India without any question seems to me altogether inadmissible, having regard to the way in which the question has been dealt with as regards the superior Courts in the United Kingdom. The judgment of a superior Court can only be executed in the superior Court of another part of the United Kingdom under the Judgment Extension Act, 1868, when they are judgments "for any debt, damage or costs." Such judgments are, it is expressly provided, to have the same force and effect after registration in the executing Court as if they were judgments of that Court—words which are not to be found in section 44, Civil Procedure Code. Further section 8 makes a significant exception in the case of decrees of the Court of Session "pronounced in absence in an action proceeding on an arrestment used to found jurisdiction in Scotland." In countries such as Scotland whose jurisprudence is based on the Roman Law, jurisdiction against a foreigner may be founded on seizure of his property within the territorial limits; but the English Law does not recognise such a procedure except in the case of the custom of foreign attachment in the City of London, as to which see Wadsworth v. The Queen of Spain (20), and the Legislature has, therefore, thought proper to except Scotch decrees founded on such an arrestment and obtained in absentia from the operation of the Act. The Inferior Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1882, is also confined to judgments for any debt, damages and costs and only allows execution of judgments obtained in one part of the United Kingdom against defendants domiciled in another part, subject to the restrictions as to cause of action and service contained in section 10 of the Act.

(20) (1851) 17 Q. B. 171; 20 L. J. Q. B. 488; 16 Jur. 164; 85 R. R. 398; 117 E. R. 1246.

It cannot, I think, have been the intention of the Indian Legislature in section 44 to ignore all these restrictions.

The next question is whether the defendant submitted to the jurisdiction of the Cochin Court. The lower Appellate Court returned a finding that he did not, and the respondent filed a memorandum of objections to the finding. Sundara Aiyar, J., observes that no attempt was made to impeach the finding at the hearing, but the learned Vakil who appeared on both occasions assured us that this was a mistake and has addressed us an elaborate argument on the point. The law on this question cannot perhaps be considered to be fully settled. The decision in Parry & Co. v. Appasami Pillai (15), that it is enough merely to object to the jurisdiction, is probably no longer law. See Boissiere and Co. v. Brockner and Co. (21) and Guiard v. De Colermont and Donner (22). There is, however, the high authority of Lord Esher. M. R., and Bowen, L. J., in Voinet v. Barrett (10) that submission is not voluntary, in the language of Bowen, L. J., in a case where goods belonging to the defendant have been seized by a foreign tribunal so that he only appears to get them released. In the recent case of Guiard v. De Colermont and Donner (22) where judgment has been given against the defendants in default of appearance and a small sum about £4 in a Paris Bank has been attached in execution, the defendant sought to set aside the default decree without any reference to the seizure of this comparatively trifling sum and Lawrence, J., held that it was not a submission for the purpose of saving property and held the judgment of the French Court was binding. Whether the submission was for the purpose of saving property or voluntary, is apparently a question of fact in each case. In the present case it is found that the plaintiff, in May 1908, obtained an interim injunction restraining the defendant from disposing of the timber belonging to him in the Cochin State, and that in the following July the defendant filed a counter-petition for the removal of the injunction and a written statement denying the jurisdiction and raising a defence on the merits on the same day. On the above facts I think there was evidence to support the finding and am not prepared to interfere with it in second appeal. This appeal is allowed. The order of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the order of the District Munsif restored with costs throughout.

AYLING, J.—I agree.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I agree. In order to decide the question of law arising in this appeal, it is necessary to set out the facts which have been either found or proved. A suit was instituted in the District Court of the Cochin State against the appellant for damages for breach of contract. On the institution of the suit and before defendant appeared, an application was made for an injunction restraining the defendant from alienating certain logs of timber owned by the appellant and which were within the jurisdiction of the District Court. The order was issued and notice of it was served on the appellant. It is not clear from the records whether this notice and the summons in the suit were served at the same time or on different dates. I find from the printed records that the appellant applied to have this injunction order vacated. There is nothing to show whether this application was prior to the filing of the written statement or after. Unfortunately, the written statement has not been filed in the case. We have to gather its terms from the judgment of the Cochin Court. The summary of it in paragraph 2 of that judgment shows that the appellant took exception to the jurisdiction of the Court on the ground that he was permanently residing in British India and also pleaded that he was not liable to the suit claim. The District Judge of Cochin overruled both the contentions and passed a decree against the appellant. This decree was sent to the District Munsif's Court of Palaghat (in British India) for execution under section 44 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Appellant contended before that Court that the decree of the District Court of Cochin was a nullity, as it was passed without jurisdiction. The District Munsif upheld that plea. On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed this decision, holding that it was not competent to the District Munsif to consider the question of jurisdiction. A civil miscellaneous appeal was perferred against this order and the two learned Judges who heard it have differed.

(21) 6 T. L. R. 85.
(22) 30 T. L. R. 511.

The main contention of the appellant is that the decree of the District Court of Cochin does not by transfer to a British Court become a decree of the latter Court for all purposes. Mr. Pandalai contends that the words, "as if they have been passed by the Courts in British India," relate only to the mode of execution and have not the effect of giving foreign judgments all the incidents of a judgment of a British Court. I agree with this contention. In my opinion section 44 of the Civil Procedure Code is subjected to the same limitations as are contained in section 13 regarding foreign judgments. Under this latter section the recognition of foreign judgments is not absolute but is subject to certain reservations. Section 44 introduces an exception in favour of certain Native States. The Governor-General in Council is empowered by that section to give the privilege of execution to the judgments obtained in these States, without going through the process of instituting suits on them as is required in the case of other foreign judgments. The privilege is not an illusory one, as Mr. Ananthakrishna Iyer suggests. The favoured decree-holder need not pay fresh Court-fees for a suit. He need not go through the process of establishing his claim, provided the conditions mentioned in section 13 are complied with; and he can, on production of the decree, take out execution. These are substantial advantages which the Legislature has secured to the decrees of States which are included in the notification issued under section 44 of the Code. I do not think that the Legislature intended to obliterate the distinction between judgments of Native States and those of British India by the operation of section 44. I think there is force in the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant that the language of section 44 does not primâ facie import equality between the two classes of judgments. As Lord Halsbury points out in Cox v. Hakes (1): "It is impossible to contend that the mere fact of a general word being used in a Statue precludes all the inquiry into the object of the Statute or the mischief which it was intended to remedy." Lord Herschell also says: "that for the purpose of construing any enactment, it is right to look not only at the provision immediately under construction, but at any others found in connection with it, which may throw light upon it, and afford an indication that general words employed in it were not intended to be applied without some limitation." This principle has been accepted and acted upon in Darlington Wagon Co. v. Harding (2) and Ex parte Blain; In re Sawers (3). In the present case, we cannot impute to the Legislature an intention to do away with the distinction between judgments of Native States and those obtained in British India, thereby taking them out of the category of foreign judgments altogether. I have already indicated that substantial advantages would be secured even on the footing that section 44 is controlled by section 13.

It is not necessary for emphasising this position to hold that suits on the judgments of favoured Native States are not permissible under the Code. There have been conflicting views on this question. I am inclined to think that both the remedies are open to persons who have obtained judgments in these States. However, as this question has not been fully argued, I prefer not to express any decided opinion on it. Assuming that only execution is contemplated and not suits, still a judgment from the Native States included in the notification already referred to must be obnoxious to the qualifications contained in section 13.

Another question, which might be more decisive on the matter we have to decide, was not also fully argued, and although I hardly feel any doubt upon it, I shall not base my decision on it. Mr. Ananthakrishna Iyer contended that in regard to decrees obtained within British India, the executing Court will have no power to go into the question whether the Court which passed the decree had jurisdiction to decide it. He relied on the change in the language between section 225 of the old Code and Order XXI, rule 7, of the new Code and quoted the recent decision of the Bombay High Court in Hari Gobind Kulkarni v. Narsingrao Nouherao(19) in support of his contention. I am not satisfied that the change is in favour of depriving the executing Court of the power to inquire into the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree. The words omitted suggest that the Court is not suo motu to require proof of jurisdiction. In my opinion the omission does not lead to the conclusion that it is not open to the contesting party to challenge the jurisdiction of the decree Court. I agree with Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar that this conclusion is not warranted by the change in the language. The learned Judges of Bombay in the recent case do not refer to Bhagwantappa v. Visvanath (23). If jurisdiction can be questioned regarding judgments of British Courts, it would a fortiori follow that judgments of Native States are not exempt from it. However, as I said before, I shall not base my judgment upon this aspect of the case.

I feel no hesitation in holding that the words, "as if they had been passed by the Courts of British India," have not the effect of giving foreign judgments the character of the judgments of our Courts. In Ramachandra v. Pitchaikanni (24) it was held that similar words in the Abkari Act had not the effect of giving arrears due under it the characteristics of arrears of Revenue under Act II of 1864. This was followed in Kadir Mohideen Marakkayar v. Muthukrishna Aiyar (5) regarding income-tax, where the language used is strikingly similar to the words in section 44. The learned Judges held that the words, "as if it were an arrear of revenue," only related to the process of enforcing the income-tax dues. In Musa Ahmad v. Purmanund Nursey (6) the words in question were understood as relating only to the mode of execution. These decisions are directly in point. Mr. Ananthakrishna Iyer drew our attention to the language employed in sections 1 and 2 of 31 and 32 Victoria, Chapter 54 (the Judgments Extension Act of 1868) and contended that the words in section 44 are similar to those words and should be given the same meaning as in that Act. To my mind the language employed appears to be totally different. Section 1 speaks of the registry of Scotch judgments in the English Courts and proceeds to say "that they shall from the date of such registration be of the same force and effect, (the italics are mine) and all proceedings shall and may be had and taken on such certificate, as if the judgment of which it is a certificate had been a judgment originally obtained or entered up on the date of such registration as aforesaid in the Court in which it is so registered." These words are very different from the language employed in section 44 of our Code.

On the other hand, the language of section 5 of 45 and 46 Victoria, Chapter 31, bears a close resemblance to the words used in section 44. The Act is known as the Inferior Courts Judgments Extension Act. Under this Act "process of execution may issue thereon out of the Court in which the same shall have been so registered against any goods or chattels of the person against whom such judgment shall have been obtained, which are within the jurisdiction of such last mentioned Court, in the same or the like manner as if the judgment to be executed had been obtained in the Court in which such certificate shall be so registered as aforesaid." Then follows section 10 which exempts from the operation of section 5 all judgments obtained against persons not domiciled within the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it and against whom the whole cause of action has not arisen within its limits. This Act gives the clue to the meaning to be attributed to section 44 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the limitation of section 10 of that Act must govern our Code also.

Mr. Ananthakrishna Iyer argued a further question, which has not been considered by the learned Judges who heard the civil miscellaneous appeal. The learned Vakil contends that as the appellant voluntarily submitted to the jurisdiction of the Cochin Court, he is estopped from questioning it in execution. The facts necessary for deciding this point have not been clearly elicited. The Subordinate Judge on remand found that there was no voluntary submission and Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar says: "the learned Vakil for the respondent properly abstained from attempting to impeach it." Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar does not refer to the question at all.

I have stated in the opening of my judgment the facts, in so far as they are gatherable from the records. The question for onsideration on these materials is, did the ppellant voluntarily submit himself to the urisdiction of the Cochin Court? It has been held in Madras that where a defendant

(23) 28 B. 378; 6 Bom. L. R. 342.
(24) 7 M. 434.

VEERARAGHAVA IYER v. MUGA SAIT.

demurs to the jurisdiction of a Court and at the same time submits an alternative plea for a judgment on the merits in his favour, he should not be deemed to have voluntarily submittted to jurisdiction. Parry & Co. v. Appasami Pillai (15). This is also implied by the decision in Siraraman Chetti v. Iburam Saheb (25). In a very recent case it was held in Bombay, Harchand v. Gulabchand(14), that if in addition to challenging jurisdiction the defendant takes the chance of judgment being given in his favour, the submission is voluntary. The basis for this pronouncement is the decision of Cave, J., in Boissiere and Co. v. Brockner and Co. (21). The learned Judge says: "Where, however, he appears voluntarily and submits to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court there arises a legal obligation to obey the judgment. The question I have to decide in this case is what is meant by the word 'voluntarily?' For the plaintiffs it is contended that every appearance is voluntary which is not made under duress. For the defendants it is submitted that as the foundation for the legal obligation is consent an appearance under protest affords no indication of consent to the jurisdiction, or, in other words, is not voluntary. Now, no one supposes that when a man appears voluntarily as a defendant in an action before a foreign Court he does so because he likes it; he appears because on the whole he deems it his interest to submit to have the dispute decided by the foreign tribunal and to take his chance of winning the suit; and if he enters into the litigation from those motives, intending to take advantage of the judgment if he wins, there is obviously a moral obligation on him to pay if he loses, and this moral obligation is recognised by our law as sufficient under the circumstances to constitute a legal obligation. If this is the true source of the obligation why should it not extend to the case of a man who appears without duress, and, therefore, voluntarily in one sense, but who accompanies his appearance with a protest and appears, not because he is compelled to do so, but because he judges it to be for his interest to do so? That is, he intends to take all the advantages he hopes to gain by appearing and by a protest to relieve himself from the disadvantage. He wishes to have the benefit without the burden;" and after discussing some of the authorities bearing on the question, comes to the conclusion that the appearance of the defendant was voluntary, notwithstanding the protest. Dicey (Conflict of Laws) accepts this as good law. See case (2) on page 370. See also Foote on Private International Jurisprudence, pages 552 and 553. I am not sure from the remarks of Westlake in his book on "Private International Law" that he is satisfied with the decision of Cave, J. (See remarks at page 378). If the decision of this appeal, however, depended entirely upon this question, I would hesitate to follow the decision in Parry & Co. v. Appasami Pillai (15), although it may not be irrelevant to point out here that the conditions of existence in this country may not justify the application of the principle enunciated by Cave, J. There are circumstances in this case which render it unnecessary to decide which of the two decisions [Parry & Co. v. Appasami Pillai (15) or Boissiere and Co. v. Brockner and Co. (21)] should be followed. There was an order against the appellant prohibiting him from alienating his properties which were within the jurisdiction of the Cochin Court. It was to protect himself from this order that he made his appearance, although he filed a statement on the merits as well. This amounts, according to accepted authorities, to appearing under duress. Lord Esher, referring to the dictum of Blackburn, J., in an earlier judgment, says in Voinet v. Barrett (10): "This sentence clearly means that an appearance which would otherwise be voluntary is not treated as voluntary if it is only made in order to save property which is in the hands of a foreign tribunal; that is to say, if the appearance is made in a case in which property of the party so appearing is already in the foreign country and has been seized by the foreign tribunal before appearance has been entered, so that the party appears in order to save the property so seized, and in order to get it out of the hands of the foreign tribunal. Such an appearance is not treated as voluntary, because it is made in order to save property which is already in jeopardy in the hands of a foreign tribunal; but if a defendant enters an appearance before any property has been seized, such an appearance may be a voluntary appearance." Bowen, L. J., is equally clear on the question: "It is true that a defendant does not do so in a case in which goods belonging to him have already been seized by a foreign tribunal, so that he only appears in order to get them released; but if his appearnce is not a compulsory appearance, but is voluntary, then the matter stands in a different position." Cave, J., in the case already referrred to, makes a reservation in favour of the defendant appearing under duress. Westlake says that this position is unassailable. He pleads for an extension of the doctrine to all cases where the defendant appears to protect his property in a foreign Court, although there is no order for attachment or seizure of the same (see page 377). To the same effect are the opinions of other writers (Foote on Private International Jurisprudence, page 552; Piggott on Foreign Judgments, Volume I, page 349; Dicey on the Conflict of Laws, case 3, on page 372). The facts elicited in this case show that it was in order to protect his property that the appellant appeared before the Court, and the fact that he subsequently invoked the opinion of the Court on the merits should not preclude him from pleading that the Cochin Court had no jurisdiction over him.

(25) 18 M. 327.

I do not consider it necessary to deal with the question, which has been considered by both the learned Judges at some length, whether the use of the word may in section 44 is not equivalent to conferring powers to inquire into the competency of the judgment passed by a Foreign Court. If the British Court have a discretion, what is to be the limit of its exercise? Are these Courts to inquire into the merits to ascertain whether the judgment was a just one? If section 44 is not controlled by section 13, I do not think the use of the word may will give the British Courts power to deal with the jurisdiction of the Courts of Native States. Nor am I prepared to hold that the use of the word may, instead of shall, was intended to subject section 44 to the limitations contained in section 13.

My conclusion is that the Courts in British India are competent to decide before issuing execution, whether the Courts of Native States had jurisdiction to pass the judgment which is sought to be enforced by them. I agree with the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

Appeal allowed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 158 OF 1913.

October 13, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

VENKATA KRISHNA MOORTHI, MINOR, BY HIS NEXT FRIEND AND ADOPTIVE FATHER, RAMAPPA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

BHEEMAKKA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Mortgagee entitled to possession on mortgagor's failure to pay instalment—Legal title, whether in mortgagee—Trespasser, possession of, whether adverse to mortgagee.

Where, under the terms of a mortgage instrument, the mortgagee is entitled to possession only on the mortgagor committing default in payment of any of the instalments, the legal possession is not with the mortgagee, and the possession of a trespasser is not adverse as against him.

Parthasarathi Naicken v Lakshmana Naicken, 9 Ind. Cas. 791; 35 M. 231; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 201; 21 M. L. J. 467; Peria Aiya Ambalam v Shanmugasundaram, 22 Ind. Cas. 615; 26 M. L. J. 140; 15 M. L. T. 112; 1 L. W. 119, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Bellary, in Appeal Suit No. 133 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Bellary, in Original Suit No. 272 of 1910.

Mr. K. Bhashyam Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There is no right of re-entry expressly provided for in Exhibit A in favour of the mortgagee (plaintiff's predecessor-in-title) and it is arguable that on the failure to pay the first instalment due under Exhibit A, the mortgage became a transaction of simple mortgage for all purposes, even assuming that it had the character of a usufructuary mortgage originally.

Under these circumstances it seems difficult to hold that the possession of trespassers (assuming defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 to be trespassers) was necessarily adverse to the mortgagee whose right to obtain possession of the mortgaged property is so problematical [See Parthasarathi Naicken v. Lakshmana Naicken (1) and

(1) 9 Ind. Cas. 791; 35 M. 231; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 201; 21 M. L. J. 467.

Peria Aiya Ambalam v. Shanmugasundaram (2)].

We, therefore, reverse the lower Court's decree based on the view that the possession of defendants Nos. 2 to 4 was necessarily adverse to the mortgagee also, and we remand the suit to the Court of first instance for fresh decision. The District Munsif has not framed some of the necessary issues, namely, issues about the genuineness and validity of the mortgage-bond, Exhibit A, issues as to the title of the plaintiff's mortgagor and as to his possession of the plaint items on the date of the mortgage-deed, Exhibit A, and issues as to the title and possession of the persons (Komati Yellappa and Irappa) through whom the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 claim. These issues must be framed and decided at the re-trial.

Costs hitherto will abide.

Appeal allowed.

(2) 22 Ind. Cas. 615; 26 M. L. J. 140; 15 M. L. T. 112; 1 L. W. 119.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE NO. 242 OF 1912.

June 25, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Fletcher and Mr. Justice Richardson.

MOHINI MOHAN MISSER AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

SURENDRA NARAIN SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 95—Malicious prosecution, suit for damages for, when mantainable—Interlocutory injunction, whether dissolved when perpetual injunction granted—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 42—"Want of reasonable and probable cause", allegation of—Malice—Erroneous decision, procuring of—Damages, liability for.

The bringing of an ordinary action, however maliciously and however great the want of reasonable and probable cause, will not support a subsequent action for malicious prosection, except where the proceedings involve "either scandal to reputation or the possible loss of liberty to the person" or are specially provided by Statute.

Therefore, a suit for damages cannot be maintained against a defendant for obtaining maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause a perpetual injunction, which was dissolved on appeal.

Nanda Kumar Shaha v. Gaur Sankar, 13 W.R. 305; 5 B. L. R. App. 4, questioned.

An interlocutory injunction granted in such a suit is ipso facto dissolved by a decree of the Court granting a perpetual injunction.

Therefore, if a suit for damages for "wrongfully" obtaining such an injunction is maintainable, limitation under Article 42 of tho Limitation Act would begin to run from the date when the interlocutory injunction ceases.

Per Fletcher, J.—An allegation that the defendants were actuated by malice and that the suit for an injunction ultimately proved unsuccessful, when the decree of the High Court was set aside by His Majesty in Council, is not sufficient to show want of reasonable or probable cause.

The want of probable cause is not to be inferred because of mere evidence of malice.

Turner v. Ambler, (1847) 10 Q.B. 252; 16 L. J. Q. B. 158; 6 Jur. 346; 11 E. R. 98; 74 R. R. 278, followed.

Per Richardson, J.—It is doubtful whether a suit as contemplated in section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code to recover compensation in respect of a temporary injunction applied for on insufficient grounds or without reasonable and probable cause, is maintainable in the absence of an undertaking to pay compensation.

Dharmo Narain v. Sreemutty Dassee, 18 W. R. 440, referred to.

A party is not liable in damages for procuring an erroneous decision.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Purnea, dated the 18th of April, 1912.

Mr. S. P. Sinha and Babu Jogendra Nath Mukherjee, for the Appellants.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babu Golap Chandra Sarkar, Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitra and Babu Rishendra Nath Sircar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Purnea, dated the 18th March 1912. The suit was instituted to recover from the defendants Rs. 1,91,932-8-6, as damages for malicious prosecution of a civil suit brought against the plaintiffs. On the 1st of December 1896, the executor of the father of the defendant No. 1 instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Purnea against the present plaintiffs for the purpose of obtaining an injunction restraining the present plaintiffs from erecting an indigo factory on the land let for agricultural purposes, and on the same date an application was made ex parte to the Subordinate Judge from an interlocutory injunction restraining the defendants till the trial of the suit from proceeding with the erection of the buildings. The learned Subordinate Judge on that application granted the interlocutory injunction prayed for. An appeal was preferred against that order to the District Judge who dismissed the appeal.

That suit came on for hearing before the Subordinate Judge on the 30th of September 1899. The learned Judge decreed the suit and granted a perpetual injunction restraining the erection of an indigo factory on the land. The present plaintiffs appealed against that decree to the District Judge who, on the 16th of August 1900, reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit. The present defendants, who were then the plaintiffs in that suit, the original plaintiff having previously died, preferred an appeal to this Court against the decision of the District Judge. On the 1st of June a Division Bench of this Court (Banerjee and Pargiter, JJ.) reversed the decision of the District Judge and restored the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge. The present plaintiffs then appealed to His Majesty in Council and on the 1st of June 1907 the decree passed by this Court was set aside and the judgment of the District Judge restored.

The proceedings in this Court are reported in Surendra Narain Singh v. Hari Mohan Misser (1) and before the Judicial Committee in Hari Mohan v. Surendra Narayan Singh (2). The proceedings having terminated in favour of the present plaintiffs, they have brought this present suit to recover damages for malicious prosecution of the suit for an injunction. The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed this suit on the ground that it is barred by limitation. The first question for our decision is, is such an action as the present maintainable? The rule in England is very clear that a suit such as the present cannot be maintained. As was observed by Bowen, L. J., in the case of the Quartz Hill Gold Mining Co. v. Eyre (3): "In the present day and according to our present law the bringing of an ordinary action, however maliciously, and however great the want of reasonable and probale cause, will not support a subsequent action for malicious prosecution." This general rule is, no doubt, subject to certain exceptions in cases where the proceedings involve "either scandal to reputation or the possible loss of liberty to the person." But the exceptions would not include a suit such as the present. This general rule, I think, must apply to India except in so far as the same has been modified by Statute. Section 95 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, provides: "(1) Where, in any suit in which an arrest or attachment has been effected or a temporary injunction granted under the last preceding section, (a) it appears to the Court that such arrest, attachment or injunction was applied for on insufficient grounds, or (b) the suit of the plaintiff fails and it appears to the Court that there was no reasonable or probable ground for instituting the same, the defendant may apply to the Court, and the Court may, upon such application, award against the plaintiff by its order such amount, not exceeding Rs. 1,000, as it deems a reasonable compensation to the defendant for the expense or injury caused to him." The section also enacts that "an order determining any such application shall bar any suit for compensation in respect of such arrest, attachment or injunction." This section in effect takes the place of the undertaking in damages which is usually required in England from a plaintiff as a condition of a grant of an interlocutory injunction in a pending suit in his favour, except that under section 95 the damages are limited to Rs. 1,000. The history of such undertaking is given by Jessel, M. R., in the case of Smith v. Day (4).

I now come to the case that has been principally relied upon by the plaintiffs in this appeal, namely, the case of Nand Kumar Shaha v. Gaur Sankar (5). That case was a reference by a Small Cause Court Judge. The questions referred for the opinion of this Court were, first, whether a fresh suit for compensation on account of damages incurred in consequence of obtaining improperly an injunc-

(1) 31 C. 174; 9 C. W. N. 87.
(2) 34 C. 718; 11 C. W. N. 794; 6 C. L. J. 19; 9 Bom. L. R. 750; 17 M. L. J. 361; 2 M. L. T. 399; 4 A. L. J. 497; 34 I. A. 133 (P. C.).
(3) (1883) 11 Q. B. D. 674 at p. 690; 52 L. J. Q. B. 488; 49 L. J. 249; 31 W. R. 668.
(4) (1882) 21 Ch. D. 421; 31 W. R. 187; 48 L. T. 54.
(5) 13 W. R. 305; 5 B. L. R App. 4.

tion under section 92 of Act VIII of 1859, can be entertained when the question has been once brought forward for decision before an Appellate Court but rejected on a distinct ground and secondly, if the suit can be admitted on the ground of its not being decided on its merits by the Appellate Court, is the cause of action to be considered as having accrued from the 18th of August 1868, the date of the decision of the Munsif or from the 23rd of November 1869 when the cross-appeal by the plaintiff was dismissed ? The learned Judges (L. S. Jackson and Glover, JJ.) in answering the questions referred to them remarked that section 96 of Act VIII of 1859 (which for the present purpose is the same as section 95 of the present Code) would not debar the Small Cause Court from entertaining the suit. They do not, however, express any opinion on the question whether the cause of action set up by the plaintiff was or was not a good cause of action although, no doubt, their judgment implies that the cause of action was sufficient. No authority is cited in the course of the judgment and the Counsel who argued the case before us were unable to cite to us any other authority either in England or in India in which a plaintiff has recovered damages against a defendant who had obtained maliciously and without probable cause an interlocutory injunction. I must confess that the case of Nand Kumar Shaha v. Gour Sunkur (5) appears to me to be a questionable authority in so far as it decides that a plaintiff can maintain a suit for damages against a defendant for maliciously and without probable cause obtaining an interlocutory injunction. Nand Kumar Shaha v. Gour Shankar (5) was decided by this Court on the March 1870. In the Limitation Act of 1871 first appears Article 86, fixing a period of limitation in which a suit must be brought to recover compensation for damages caused by an injunction wrongfully obtained, the Article in the present Act of 1908 being Article 42. The reason for the insertion of Article 86 in the Act of 1871 was obviously the decision in Nand Kumar Shaha v. Gour Shankar (5). But of course nothing in the Limitation Act can give a party a right of suit unless such a right exists independent of the Limitation Act [Harinath v. Mothur Mohun (6)]. Another case that has been relied upon is the case of Chunder Kant Mookerjee v. Ramcoomar Koondoo (7). But all that case decided was that a suit will lie for bringing a suit in the name of a third party maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause whereby the party against whom the action is brought sustains damage. This had already been decided by the Court of Common Pleas in the case of Cotterell v. Jones (8).

No case has, however, been cited before or authority shown to us to suggest that if a party miliciously and without probable cause brings a suit for a perpetual injunction and succeeds at the trial, but the judgment is reversed on appeal, he is liable in damages for the injury caused by the injunction. Besides, the decision of the Court of first instance granting the injunction would indicate that the suit was instituted under such circumstances as would induce a prudent man to act. The want of probable cause is not to be inferred because of mere evidence of malice [Turner v. Ambler (9)].

The result, therefore, is that there is no case in the books of a suit for damages against a defendant for maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause obtaining a perpetual injunction which was subsequently dissolved on appeal. The only case in which a suit of a similar nature was maintained with reference to an interlocutory injunction is Nand Kumar Shaha v. Gaur Sankar (5), the authority of which, I think, is questionable. But assuming that case to be a binding authority for that proposition, the interlocutory injunction in the present case ceased and came to an end when the Subordinate Judge at the trial on the 30th of September 1899 granted a perpetual injunction. The present suit was not instituted until the 13th of May 1910. Under Article 42 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, time begins to run from the date when the injunction ceases. Any right of suit that the plaintiffs might have with reference to the

(6) 20 I. A. 183; 21 C. 8 (P. C.).
(7) 22 W. R. 138; 13 B. L. R. 530.
(8) (1851) 11 C. B. 713; 138 E. R. 655; 87 R. R. 754; 21 L. J. C. P. 2; 16 Jur. 88.
(9) (1847) 10 Q. B. 252; 16 L. J. Q. B. 158; 6 Jur. 346; 116 E. R. 98; 74 R. R. 278.

obtaining of the interlocutory injunction is, therefore, barred by limitation. It is further to be noticed that nowhere in the plaint in this suit is it stated that the suit for an injunction was instituted or prosecuted without reasonable or probable cause. It would appear, however, that the plaintiffs' allegations in support of want of reasonable and probable cause are that the defendants were actuated by malice and that the suit for an injunction ultimately proved unsuccessful, when the decree of this Court was set aside by His Majesty in Council.

Such an allegation, however, is not a sufficient allegation of want of reasonable or probable cause. The fact that the Subordinate Judge granted the injunction and a similar view was taken by a Division Bench of this Court, although their opinion ultimately proved mistaken, shows that it could not be said that there was a want of reasonable or probable cause in instituting and prosecuting the suit [see the judgment of Couch, C. J., in Chunder Kant Mookerjee v. Ramcoomar Koondoo (7)].

In the result I agree with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge, though for different reasons. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree that if relief is sought by the plaint on the ground that the previous suit, which was a suit for a perpetual injunction, was instituted maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause, that is not a good cause of action. Paragraph 15 of the plaint, however, points rather to the issue of the interlocutory injunction as the cause of action on which the plaintiffs rely. The interlocutory injunction is treated as though it subsisted up to the date of the order of His Majesty in Council. I agree that the interlocutory injunction was ipso facto dissolved by the decree of the first Court granting a perpetual injunction and that assuming that damages may be claimed by suit for "wrongfully" obtaining such an injunction, the present suit as a suit for damages is barred by limitation under Article 42 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act. As to the word "wrongfully," section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 seems to contemplate the possibility of a suit being brought to recover compensation in respect of a temporary injunction applied for on insufficient grounds or in a suit instituted without reasonable and probable cause. It is at the least doubtful whether such a suit is maintainable in the absence of an undertaking to pay compensation [Dhurmo Narain v. Sreemutty Dassee (10)]. But if it be maintainable, it would, no doubt, be governed in regard to limitation by Article 42. The conduct imputed to the defendant in such a suit would be in its nature tortious or wrongful. It is idle to say that the suit could not have been instituted until the determination of the appeal to the Privy Council. The words of Article 42 are clear. Time runs from the date "when the injunction ceases."

In point of substance the damages which the plaintiffs say they have suffered, were due principally to the permanent injunction granted by the Court of first instance and the High Court. In view of the result of the appeal to the Privy Council, those decisions must, no doubt, be regarded as erroneous, but as the learned Subordinate Judge points out, a party is not liable in damages for procuring an erroneous decision. A successful appellant is entitled, under sub-section (1) of section 144 of the Code, to such restitution "as will, so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied" but for the decree which has been varied or reversed. Sub-section (2) lays down that no separate suit shall be instituted for the purpose of obtaining any restitution or other relief which could be obtained by application under sub-section (1). I do not know whether the plaintiffs could have obtained any relief under these provisions I am disposed to think not. The removal of the permanent injunction restored the status quo ante so far as it could be restored. But however that may be, at any rate the plaintiffs cannot obtain by suit any relief which they could have obtained under section 144 by application. They cannot in this suit obtain any relief by way of restitution.

The result is that the plaint, whatever construction be put upon it, discloses no cause of action except possibly a cause of action to which the bar of limitation applies.

(10) 18 W. R. 440.

On the facts, so far as they appear, it would be very difficult to say that the previous suit was instituted without reasonable and probable cause or that the temporary injunction was applied for on improper or insufficient grounds. But as I understand we do not decide the appeal with reference to that consideration.

I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
FIRST CIVIL APPEAL FROM ORDER
No. 20 OF 1913.
February 11, 1914.
Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mukerjee, Kt., and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.
NIRODE BARANI DEBYA AND ANOTHER—APPLICANTS—APPELLANTS
versus
BHOLANATH SARKAR AND ANOTHER—OBJECTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 17—Minor, appointment of guardian for, principle of—Welfare of minor, fundamental principle—Hindu Law,—Discretion of Court in appointing guardian, when interfered by Appellate Court.

Section 17 of the Guardians and Wards Act, which provides for the appointment of a guardian for a minor, does not mean that the welfare of the minor should be subordinated to the requirements of the law to which the minor is subject. It is a well-established principle that the welfare of the child is the paramount consideration in appointing a guardian for him, although regard must be had to the recognized rights of guardianship under the law to which the minor is subject. In other words, in a choice between fitness and propinquity, the former must prevail.

Tota Ram v. Ram Charan, 8 Ind. Cas. 785; 7 A. L. J. 1149; 3 A. 222, Muthuveerappa Chetti v. Pennuswami Chetty, 13 Ind. Cas. 16; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 561; 10 M. L. T. 477: 22 M. L. J. 68; Beattie v. Johnstone, 1 Ph. 17 at p. 34; 10 L. J. Ch 300; 5 Jur. 671; 41 E. R. 537; Johnstone v. Beattie 10 Cl. and Fl. 42 at p. 122; 7 Jur. 1023; 8 E. R. 657; 59 R. R. 23, Akima v. Azeem, 9 W. R 334 Sohna v. Khalak Singh, 13 A. 78; A. W. N. (1891) 1; Mashin v. Maung Chit Pan, 2 U. B. R. 408, followed

Under the Hindu Law, the nearest paternal relatives have no legal right to guardiansh ip on the death of the parent of the child and in the absence of the father or the mother or the guardian appointed by the father, the selection of a guardian for a Hindu minor is to be made by the Court as it represents the Ruling Power subject, no doubt, to the principle that ordinarily the paternal kindreds are entitled to preference over the maternal kindreds. In other words, the fundamental principle to be considered is, what is for the welfare of the particular minor?

Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kadermoye Dossee, 2 C. L. R. 583; Re Gulbai and Lilbai, 32 B. 50; 9 Bom. L. R. 923, followed.

Although a Court of Appeal will not lightly interfere with the discretion of the Court of first instance in the mattar of appointment of a guardian, yet where weighty reasons have been made out, the order of the first Court will be set aside.

In re Kaye, 1 Ch. App. 387 at p. 389; 12 Jur. (N. S.) 350; 14 L. T. 388; 14 W. R. 597, referred to.

In the circumstances of the present case the maternal uncle was preferred to the paternal uncle.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated 22nd November 1912.

Mr. Sinha, with him Babu Hara Prashad Chatterjee, for the Appellants.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakravarti and Sarat Chandra De, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question in controversy in this appeal relates to the appointment of a guardian of the property of an infant, whose father died on the 13th April 1912, leaving behind him, his mother, his widow, two daughters and six brothers. Two months after the death of the father, an application was made by the mother of the infant and his maternal uncle for appointment as joint guardians of his person and property. The application was opposed by the grandmother and by one of the paternal uncles. In so far as the guardianship of the person is concerned, the mother has been appointed and there is no question that she is the proper person to have custody of her infant son. The present dispute relates to the guardianship of the property. The District Judge has decided in favour of the paternal uncle on the ground that under the Hindu Law preference should be given to the paternal kindred and that unless the maternal kindred is proved to be in a substantial degree a more suitable person than the paternal kindred, the latter should be appointed. The District Judge has further stated that, upon the evidence, he was not satisfied that the maternal uncle was pre-eminently more suitable for the office than the paternal uncle and that the ordinary rule should not be broken in favour of the maternal uncle, inasmuch as the paternal uncle was not found unsuitable.

On behalf of the mother and the maternal uncle, this order has been assailed on the ground that the District Judge has not looked at the question from the correct standpoint, that the essential matter for consideration is the welfare of the minor, and that this would be secured by the appointment of the maternal uncle in preference to the paternal uncle. In our opinion, this contention is well-founded and must prevail.

Section 17 of the Guardians and Wards Act provides that in appointing or declaring the guardian of a minor, the Court shall, subject to the provisions of the section, be guided by what, consistently with the law to which the minor is subject, appears in the circumstances to be for the welfare of the minor. This does not mean that the question of welfare of the minor is to be subordinated to the requirements of the law to which the minor is subject. It is, on the other hand, a well-established principle that the welfare of the child is the paramount consideration, although regard must be had to the recognised rights of guardianship under the law [Tota Ram v. Ram Charan(1); Muthuveerappa Chetti v. Ponnuswami Chetty(2); Beattie v. Johnstone (3); Johnstone v. Beattie (4)] or, as it has sometimes been put, in a choice between fitness and propinquity, the former must prevail. [Akima v. Azeem(5); Sohna v. Khalak Singh (6); Mashin v. Maung Chit Pan(7)]. We cannot consequently accept the view that the paternal uncle must be appointed unless the maternal uncle is proved to be pre-eminently more suitable for the office. The real question is, whose appointment is likely to be more beneficial to the infant?

We may further observe, as was pointed out by Sir Richard Garth, C. J., in the case of Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kadermoye Dossee (8), under the Hindu Law, to which the minor in the present case is subject, the claims of relatives to the guardianship of an infant stand upon quite a different footing from those of parents. The nearest paternal relatives have no legal right to the guardianship on the death of the parent of the child, and in the absence of the father or the mother or the guardian appointed by the father, the selection of a guardian for a Hindu minor is to be made by the Court, as it represents the Ruling Power, subject, no doubt, to the principle that ordinarily the paternal kindreds are entitled to preference over the maternal kindreds, in other words, as remarked by Mr. Justice Davar in Re Gulbai and Lilbai (9) the fundamental point to be considered is, what is for the welfare for the particular minor? Let us examine the position in the light of these principles.

In the case before us, it has been incontestably established by the evidence that the paternal uncle of the infant lived separate from the father, that the brothers were not on friendly terms, and that after the death of the father of the infant, the brother did not even attend his sradh ceremony. The paternal uncle did not, during the life-time of the father of the infant, take any interest whatsoever either in the infant or in the estate of the father himself. On the other hand, the evidence indicates that the maternal uncle was on friendly terms with the father and he was also well-disposed to his younger sister, the mother of the infant. As regards solvency, there is not much to choose between the paternal uncle and the maternal uncle. Both of them are in debt, although possibly the maternal uncle is indebted to a larger extent than the paternal uncle, who was constrained to admit that his dwelling-house was subject to a mortgage. It is plain that if the property of the infant is placed in charge of the maternal uncle, the mother who has been appointed guardian of the person of her infant son is likely to have greater facility in receiving the profits and in applying them for the benefit of the minor than if the properties were placed in the hands of the paternal uncle who has never been friendly either to her late husband or to herself. On the

(1) 8 Ind. Cas. 785; 7 A. L. J. 1149; 33 A. 222.
(2) 13 Ind. Cas. 16; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 561; 10 M. L. T. 477; 22 M. L. J. 68.
(3) (1841) 1 Ph. 17 at p. 34; 10 L. J. Ch. 300; 5 Jur. 671; 41 E. R. 537.
(4) (1843) 10 Cl and Fl. 42 at p. 122; 7 Jur. 1023; 8 E. R. 657; 59 R. R. 23.
(5) 9 W. R. 334.
(6) 13 A. 78; A. W. N. (1891) 1.
(7) 2 U. B R. 408.
(8) 2 C. L. R. 583.
(9) 32 B. 50; 9 Bom. L. R. 923.

other hand, there has been considerable estrangement between the mother of the infant and her brother-in-law, as is clear from the fact that he maintained, although unsuccessfully, the position that she was of unsound mind and was not able to take care either of herself or of her child. In these circumstances we are of opinion that, although the discretion of the Court of first instance in the matter of appointment of a guardian will not be lightly interfered with by a Court of Appeal [In re Kaye (10)], weighty reasons have been made out why this appeal should be allowed and the order of the District Judge set aside, in so far as he has appointed the paternal uncle as the guardian of the property of the infant.

We appoint Bhola Nath Banerjee, the maternal uncle, as guardian of the property of the minor, subject to the following conditions. In the first place, the guardian must furnish security as required by the District Judge. In the second place, the guardian must undertake to file accounts every three months in Court, such accounts, when filed, to be open to inspection by the paternal relations. In the third place, if the guardian makes any application to the Judge for alienation of the property of the infant, notice thereof would be given to the paternal relations. In the fourth place, as soon as the outstanding debts due to the father of the infant are realized, the guardian will bring the money into Court to be invested or applied in such manner as the District Judge may from time to time direct. Each party will bear his own costs both here and in the Courts below.

Appeal allowed.

(10) 1 Ch. 387 at p. 389; 12 Jur. (N. S.) 350; 14 L. T. 388; 14 W. R. 597.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

FIRST APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 13 OF 1914.

June 16, 1914.

Present:—Sir Henry Richards, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Tudball.

BENI RAM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

RAM CHANDRA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—Suit brought on hundi executed in consideration of sum due on account—Subsequent suit on account—Cause of action.

A certain sum was due from the defendant to the plaintiff on an account between them. In consideration of the sum so due the plaintiff drew a hundi on the defendant and the latter accepted it. The defendant, however, did not pay the hundi and the plaintiff had to pay it. The plaintiff then brought a suit to recover the sum due on the hundi and the suit was dismissed. The plaintiff then brought a second suit to recover the sum due on account:

Held, that the second suit was not barred by Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as the cause of action of the latter suit was different from that of the former.

Preo Nath Mukerji v. Bishnath Prasad, 29 A. 256; A. W. N. (1907) 41; 4 A. L. J. 85, referred to.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge of Cawnpore, dated 21st November 1913.

FACTS.—There were money dealings between the plaintiffs and the defendants and accounts were settled and balance finally struck on 16th October 1909. There were no more dealings afterwards. It was agreed that the money due would be paid in various ways and some sums were paid and instalments of Rs. 50 a month were promised to be paid. It was also agreed afterwards that the plaintiffs would draw upon the defendants a hundi of Rs. 500 and the defendants would pay the money on due date. Plaintiffs drew a hundi on the defendants, which they accepted but did not pay its money on the due date. Plaintiffs first brought a suit on the basis of the hundi, which was dismissed. They now brought the present suit for recovery of the balance due. The defence was that the suit was barred by Order II, rule 2. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit as barred by Order II, rule 2. On appeal, the District Judge decided that the suit was not so barred and remanded the case for decision on the merits. The defendants appealed to the High Court from the order of remand.

Dr. S. M. Suleman (with him Dr. S. N. Sen), for the Appellants:—When once a debtor acknowledges his liability to pay a fixed sum and promises to pay the same in different ways, and when there is a failure to pay, there is only one cause of action for bringing the suit. Here the amount due under the hundi was really the part of the whole amount due. When the plaintiffs brought the first suit, they ought KOHMI v. EMPEROR.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 203 OF 1914.

May 4, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Scott-Smith and Mr. Justice Shadi Lal.

KOHMI—CONVICT—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 379, 442, 457, 511 —Trespass in cattle enclosure—'Building,' meaning of —Attempt to commit theft.

The mere surrounding of an open space of ground by a wall or a fence of any kind cannot be deemed to convert the open space into a "building" within the meaning of section 442, Indian Penal Code, and a person entering such an enclosure with intent to commit theft of cattle cannot be convicted under section 457 of the Code. But he is guilty of an offence under sections 379/511, as the attempt to commit theft may be said to have begun when he entered the enclosure.

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Gujranwala Division, dated 21st January 1914, convicting the appellant.

Lala Radha Kishen, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Bevan Petman, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Kohmi has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Gujranwala of an offence under section 457, Indian Penal Code, and in view of the fact that he has been convicted three times previously of offences under Chapter XVII of the Indian Penal Code, he has been sentenced to transportation for life.

The allegation of the prosecution is that the appellant committed lurking house-trespass by night by entering the cattle enclosure of Lashkar with the intent to commit theft of his cattle.

The cattle enclosure in question is not attached to any house, but is merely a piece of ground enclosed on one side by a wall and on the other three sides by a thorn-hedge.

The first point raised by the appellant's Counsel is that the cattle enclosure in question is not a building within the meaning of section 442, Indian Penal Code. Prima facie we do not see how the mere surrounding of an open space of ground by a wall or a fence of any kind can be deemed to convert the open space into a building. It is certainly not a building as the term is usually understood, and we are supported by authorities in our view that it is not a building within the meaning of section 442. In Sucha Singh v. Empress (1) it was held that a cattle-fold or pen with a thorn-hedge round it was not a building. This view was re-affirmed in Emperor v. Ramzan (2) in which the accused had entered the complainant's cattle pen to prosecute his intimacy with a young unmarried woman. In Shera v. Empress (3) it was held that a courtyard consisting of a walled enclosure with four kothas or chambers opening into it, and an outer door or a gate leading into a side street, was a building. That case is very clearly distinguishable from the present.

The learned Government Advocate has not been able to quote any authority in support of the proposition that the cattle enclosure in question is a building. We, therefore, agree with the appellant's Counsel that the conviction under section 457, Indian Penal Code, cannot be maintained.

On the merits we see no reason to disagree with the finding of the learned Sessions Judge that the appellant really did make his way into the cattle enclosure, entrance being effected by making a hole in the hedge, and we also have not the least doubt that his intention was to commit theft of the cattle. There are, no doubt, certain discrepancies in the evidence, but these have been discussed by the Sessions Judge and we agree with him that they are not material. The question then remains, of what offence is the appellant guilty?

His Counsel suggests that the only offence of which he can be convicted is that of criminal trespass under section 447, Indian Penal Code. The learned Government Advocate, on the other hand, urges that he should be convicted of the offence of attempting to commit theft under sections 379/511, Indian Penal Code. Appellant's Counsel contends that at most his client had made preparation for committing theft and that he had not as yet made any attempt to commit theft.

The real difficulty in a case of this sort arises in determining, where the act passes from preparation into an indictable attempt.

Sir James Stephen in his Digest of Criminal Law, Article 49, defines an attempt to commit

(1) 57 P. R. 1887 Cr.

(2) 28 P. R. 1905 Cr; 118 P. L. R. 1905; 2 Cr. L. J. 420.

(3) 35 P. R. 1879 Cr. (F. B.).

a crime as "an act done with intent to commit that crime, and forming part of a series of acts which would constitute its actual commission if it were not interrupted. The point at which such a series of acts begins cannot be defined, but depends upon the circumstances of each particular case."

Applying this definition to the present case we have no doubt that the attempt began when entry was effected into the enclosure by making a hole in the hedge. This was the first act which formed part of a series of acts which would have constituted an actual theft if appellant had not been interrupted.

We, therefore, hold that the appellant can be convicted of attempting to commit theft under sections 379/511, Indian Penal Code. We, therefore, accept the appeal and, setting aside the conviction and sentence, convict appellant, instead, of an offence under the aforesaid sections and sentence him to 1½ years' rigorous imprisonment, including two months' solitary confinement.

The fact that he has previously been convicted does not make him liable to enhanced punishment in the present case where he has only been convicted of an attempt to commit theft, and we have sentenced him to the maximum term of imprisonment prescribed for such an offence.

Appeal accepted; Sentence reduced.

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.
CRIMINAL REVISION No. 288-B OF 1914.
November 4, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Robinson.
NGA PAN HLAING AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—APPLICANTS
versus
EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 448, 511—Attempt to commit criminal trespass—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 227—Charge, amendment of.

Entry on a verandah may not amount to house-trespass, but such entry coupled with an attempt to push open the door, does amount to an attempt to commit the offence. Those who accompany the accused but remain looking on without entering on the complainant's property are not guilty of criminal trespass even if they abuse.

When a Magistrate amends the charge, he should not write over the original charge but should leave it on the file for reference, if necessary, and should write the new charge separately and correctly date it.

Review of the order of the Township Magistrate of Henzada, dated the 20th June 1914, passed in Criminal Regular No. 62 of 1914.

Mr. Halkar, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The accused have been convicted of an attempt to commit house-trespass. Complainant's house had been stoned for several nights and she has laid a complaint against several of the accused for it.

The headman, fearing the stoning night again, went with several others and stayed in the house. The accused came up around with sticks and daws. Pan Hlaing and Pan Ngon mounted on the panetchut and the door was closed in their faces. The rest remained on the ground below.

The question argued is that the conduct does not amount to any offence. As regards the two who tried to enter, I can see no reason for interference. Entry on a verandah may not amount to house-trespass, but such entry coupled with an attempt to push open the door does amount to an attempt to commit the offence. In any case it would amount to criminal trespass and I see no reason to interfere.

As regards the rest they, no doubt, came there but remained below looking on. They did nothing more than perhaps abuse. They did not enter on complainant's property and, therefore, are not guilty of criminal trespass.

I reverse the conviction of Ngwe Saing, Ngwe Naing, Ngwe Paing, Lu Ni and Thein Yin. The fines, if paid, must be refunded.

The Magistrate has amended the charge by writing over the original typewritten charge. He should never do this. The original charge must remain on the file for reference, if necessary. He has also most carelessly left the original date 18th May, though the amended charge should be dated 19th June.

Conviction reversed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 183 OF 1914.

August 25, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ayling.

In re KUPPILI PRAKASAROW—PRISONER—APPELLANT.

Post Office Act VI of 1898), s. 52—Misappropriation of Postal money order—Evidence, value of—Mere suspicion, whether sufficient evidence—Oral or documentary evidence to prove statements made in departmental inquiry, whether admissible.

Where the only evidence against the accused, charged with misappropriating a Telegraphic money order, is that the postal account contained entries of delivery on dates different from those on which the actual deliveries were made, that merely creates a suspicion and is not sufficient to prove misappropriation.

Oral or documentary evidence as to the statements made by a Postman in the course of a departmental inquiry are not admissible in evidence in his absence.

Appeal against the order of the Court of Session of the Vizagapatam Division, in Case No. 9 of the Calendar for 1914.

Mr. P. Grant, for the Government.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, a branch Postmaster, has been convicted of secreting a registered letter addressed to one Chodipilli Yerrayya (P. W. No. 5), an offence under section 52 of the Post Office Act.

In my opinion the evidence is not sufficient to justify a conviction. Up to a certain point the evidence is clear enough. I agree with the Sessions Judge in holding that the sum of Rs. 100 due to the P. W. No. 5 under a Telegraphic money order, which is shown in the branch Post Office accounts as disbursed on the 3rd April 1913, was not really paid to P. W. No. 5 till the 22nd April 1913; also that the registered letter in question which was received there on the 12th April 1913 and is shown in the books as delivered on the 17th April 1913, was never delivered at all, and was secreted by somebody. But I find no evidence from which a Criminal Court would be justified in concluding that it is the appellant who secreted it. The only motive for secreting it was to conceal the temporary misappropriation of the Rs. 100 due under the Telegraphic money order. Now there is no evidence to show that this sum was misappropriated by the accused, and not by the Postman K. Appalasawmy. The great defect in the prosecution case is the failure to examine this man as a witness, and in his absence oral or documentary evidence as to the statements made by him in the course of the departmental inquiry are not admissible. The money was ultimately paid to the prosecution witness No. 5 by K. Appalasawmy and by the acting Postman, P. W. No. 6, going together and this man, P. W. No. 6, admittedly signed entries in the Post Office account, recording the delivery of the registered letter on the 17th April 1913. The contradiction between Exhibits A and B is, in my opinion, rather a point in favour of the defence: if the branch Postmaster were the criminal, or cognisant of the offence, one would expect him to see that his accounts tallied.

The case against the appellant does not amount to more than grave suspicion. His conviction and sentence must be set aside.

Conviction set aside.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL RULES NOS. 1226 AND 1227 OF 1914.

September 18, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Teunon and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

THE SUPERINTENDENT AND REMEMBRANCER OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, BENGAL—PETITIONER

versus

MANMOHAN ROY AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 239—Same transaction, determining factor of—Continuity and community of purpose and object.

In deciding whether offences are so connected as to form one and the same transaction, the determining factor is not so much proximity in time as continuity and community of purpose and object.

Section 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code is merely an enabling section and does not in any way trammel the discretion of the Court.

Mr. Norton and Mr. S. P. Sinha, Counsel, and Babu Manindra Nath Banerjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. Chuckerbutty, Counsel, and Babus Monmotho Nath Mukerjee, Jogendra Nath Majumdar and Jitendralal Banerjee, for the Opposite Party.

SUPDT. AND REMEMBRANCER OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, BENGAL v. MANMOHAN ROY.

JUDGMENT.—These two connected Rules have been tried together.

In Rule 1226 we are concerned with three accused persons, Mon Mohan Roy, Deno Nath Pal and Narain Chandra Dutt.

Mon Mohan was a loader in the service of the East Indian Railway at Krishtopur. Deno Nath is a merchant carrying on business in molasses at Kushtia. Narayan is Deno Nath's gomasta.

One of Mon Mohan's duties as a loader was to enter upon what are called consignment notes the true weight of goods despatched, and the case against the accused was that sometime between July 1911 and March 1913 they had entered into a conspiracy to defraud the Railway in respect of the freight payable on such goods. It was further alleged against them that on the 6th March 1913, the accused Mon Mohan accepted from Deno Nath through Narayan a sum of Rs. 8 as an illegal gratification and in consideration of that sum and in pursuance of the aforesaid conspiracy, understated on a consignment note the weight of a certain consignment by some 163 maunds and so joined with his two co-accused in defrauding the Railway of the sum of Rs. 34, being the freight payable on the difference between the true weight and the weight stated.

The charges framed against Mon Mohan were charges of offences under section 120B, section 420, and section 161 of the Indian Penal Code. The charges against the two co-accused were of offences under section 120B, section 420 and section 161 read in each case with section 109. Conviction followed on all the charges.

In Rule 1227, we are concerned with the same Mon Mohan and the same Deno Nath and with a third person named Janoki, who is the son of Deno Nath. In this case the charges framed were in respect of the same or a similar conspiracy and of three similar acts of fraud committed in pursuance of the conspiracy on or about the 1st November, the 7th November 1912 and the 16th day of January 1913. The sum involved on each of these three occasions was a sum of Rs. 17-4. As in the first case there were also charges in respect of two alleged gratifications said to have been paid to Mon Mohan, one sum on or about the 1st and a second sum on or about the 6th November 1912. In this case also on all the charges conviction followed.

On appeal the learned Sessions Judge of Howrah held in each case that the several offences charged under section 120B, section 420 and section 161 and under section 420 and section 161 read with section 109 could not be said to have been committed in the course of one and the same transaction and that the trials were, therefore, vitiated by misjoinder. He, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentences in each case, leaving it open to the Crown to take such further proceedings as it might be advised.

Against these orders of the learned Sessions Judge, the Crown has moved this Court and having had the advantage of hearing learned Counsel or Pleaders on both sides, we are satisfied that in each case the learned Sessions Judge has fallen into error. In deciding whether offences are so connected as to form one and the same transaction the determining factor is not so much proximity in time as continuity and community of purpose and object. In the present case that test, we are of opinion, is clearly satisfied. It has been suggested that this view may lead to the joinder of an embarrasing multiplicity of charges, but we may observe that section 239 is merely an enabling section and does not in any way trammel the discretion of the Court.

As to a further question whether section 239 is controlled by section 234 of the Code we need not in this case, and do not, express any opinion.

For these reasons we set aside the orders of the Sessions Judge now under consideration and in each case direct that the appeals be re-heard and determined on the merits.

Orders set aside.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 618 OF 1914.
CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 524 OF 1914.
October 21, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar.

MUNIAN CHETTY AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED Nos. 1 AND 2—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 256—Conviction for less serious offence when facts disclose more serious offence, whether should be set aside—Failure to question accused if he is willing to cross-examine prosecution witnesses, effect of.

A conviction for a less serious offence need not be set aside merely because the facts disclose a more serious offence, provided the Court has jurisdiction to try the offence of which it has convicted

In re Mohideen Batcha Sahib, 21 Ind. Cas. 688; 14 Cr. L. J. 640; 25 M. L. J. 484, followed.

A failure to ask the accused, after framing the charge, whether he is willing to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses again, is a mere irregularity and the conviction is not thereby vitiated.

Petitions, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tirukoilur, in Criminal Appeal No. 42 of 1914, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Stationary Third Class Magistrate of Kallakunchi, in Calendar Case No. 502 of 1914.

Mr. T. Pattabhirama Aiyar, for the Petitioners.

ORDER.—In In re Mohideen Batcha Sahib (1) Ayling, J., held that "provided the Court had the power to try the offence of which it has convicted the accused, it is not necessary to quash the conviction merely because the facts disclose a more serious offence which the Court was not competent to try, unless the accused was prejudiced or the sentence was inadequate." That case was very similar to the present case, a lower class Magistrate having convicted the accused of theft in that case when the facts disclosed robbery. I fully agree with that decision.

As regards the ground that the trial Magistrate did not ask the accused persons after framing a charge whether they wished to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses again (section 256, Criminal Procedure Code) that is a mere irregularity and I am not satisfied that it has prejudiced the accused who had (as appears from the records) fully cross-examined the prosecution witnesses before the charge was framed. This point, again, seems not to have been pressed or even argued before the Appellate Magistrate.

I, therefore, reject the petition.

Petition rejected.

(1) 21 Ind. Cas. 688; 14 Cr. L. J. 640; 25 M. L. J. 484.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1198 OF 1914.
September 16, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Teunon and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

SREEMANTA CHATTERJEE—PETITIONER

versus

SURENDRA NATH BISWAS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 209—Accused, whether can be committed on evidence to be given in future—Magistrate, when bound to discharge.

A commitment of an accused to the Sessions must depend on evidence actually before the Court and not on evidence that may be given in future.

A Magistrate is bound to discharge an accused under section 209, Criminal Procedure Code, if he believes that he has committed no offence.

Criminal revision from an order of the Magistrate of Khulna committing the accused to the Sessions.

Messrs. Norton and P. L. Roy, Counsel, and Babus Dasarathi Sanyal, Bankim Chandra Sen and Debendra Narayan Bhattacharjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. Chakravarty, Counsel, and Babu Manindra Nath Banerjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was a naib in charge of a Zemindary Cutchery in the District of Khulna in an estate the headquarters of which are in Bhawanipur. He had held this position for some years, but in 1912 his connection with the estate ceased and he was called on to render accounts, which he did in July 1912. A year later charges of criminal breach of trust and falsification of accounts were brought against him by one of the employees of the estate. The complaint was dismissed, but the District Judge ordered further inquiry in respect of two items in the accounts. The petitioner was summoned and after an inquiry lasting for over four months, during which time only six witnesses were examined, the Magistrate discharged the accused declining to commit him to the Sessions. The Sessions Judge was then moved and he ordered the petitioner to be committed to the Sessions on two charges under section 477A, Indian Penal Code, of falsification of accounts. The petitioner then obtained this Rule calling on the District Magistrate to show cause why the order of commitment should not be set aside.

The first of the two items is one of Rs. 158 odd. On the receipt side of the accounts the entry of the sum follows six entries of small sums, which added together amount to Rs. 158 odd. Five entries of small sums amounting to Rs. 89 odd follow. The total of the eleven entries of small sums is Rs. 248 odd. The petitioner says that the item of Rs. 158 merely represents the total of the six small sums which precede it and not a sum separately received. Consequently he made an entry of a similar sum on the other side of the account to balance it. The complainant's case is that the entry of Rs. 158 represented a separate sum received. The Magistrate accepted the version given by the accused, but the learned Judge without expressing any opinion in the matter, but merely remarking that it was for the jury to determine which version was true, has ordered a charge to be framed in respect of this item.

The matter would appear to be concluded by the evidence of the witness Natabar given for the prosecution. He was the Tahsildar who collected money and sent it to the Naib at the Cutchery. He says that during the period covered by the entries referred to above, he did not send more than Rs. 248 odd. There is no other evidence on the record that in fact more than this sum was sent. Mr. Chakravarty argues that evidence will be forthcoming at the Sessions trial that Natabar in fact did send more than Rs. 248 odd. But a commitment must depend on evidence actually before the Court and not on evidence that may be given in future. As the evidence stands—and the prosecution had ample opportunity for producing all available evidence—it is clear that no separate remittance of Rs. 158 was received by the accused. There is, therefore, obviously no evidence that the alleged false entry of Rs. 158 on the expenditure side was in fact a false entry or anything but an entry to balance the mistaken entry of Rs. 158 on the receipt side.

The other alleged false entry is one of Rs. 219. It appears that the office had a running account with a Pleader who submitted bills for services rendered from time to time and was from time to time paid certain sums, though it does not appear that the sums paid corresponded with the amounts of the bills. In this way it appears that Rs. 1,148-12-0 were paid to the Pleader, while his bills were only passed for amounts aggregating Rs. 967. The result of this was the Pleader had been paid Rs. 181-12-0 in excess of the amount due to him. The figure is entered as an item on the credit side. Then comes the entry of Rs. 219 on the debit side. This entry was in respect of a bill submitted by the Pleader in 1904 for work done in that year. The bill was incorrect and one for Rs. 226 was subsequently substituted for it, passed and entered in the accounts in 1904. However, the incorrect bill was in fact passed by the Manager in 1911. The petitioner says that the entry of Rs. 219 was a bona fide mistake and the Magistrate has accepted that view. The learned Judge considers that because the bill for Rs. 226 was paid in 1904, the entry in the accounts of the incorrect bill for the same work must prima facie be a falsification of accounts. He appears entirely to have overlooked the fact that the Manager passed the bill in 1911 and that apart from other considerations, even though the bill might be for work done in 1904, the Naib could hardly be expected to look up the accounts of 1904 to ascertain if the work had been paid for in that year, when he had the Manager's signature seven years later passing the bill. The learned Judge does not, however, express any definite opinion on the alternative theories of the prosecution and the petitioner. He says that is for the jury. The learned Judge appears to be of opinion that the Magistrate exceeded his jurisdiction in expressing an opinion on the merits of the accused's defence and in accepting that defence. It is clear from section 209, Criminal Procedure Code, that a Magistrate is to discharge an accused if he finds there are not sufficient grounds for committing him for trial. Obviously a Magistrate is bound to discharge an accused if he believes that he has committed no offence. That is the case here.

To return to the disputed item. The prosecution relies on the Pleader's statement that this sum of Rs. 219 was not paid to him. It is very difficult to make anything clear out of this part of the case. The system of accounts is most confused and the very lengthy argument which we have had from learned Counsel on both sides has made confusion worse confounded. From their arguments I have had no assistance to enable me to appreciate how the accounts were kept and on examination of the evidence, I have fared no better. But this does appear from the record that entries on the expenditure side do not necessarily mean expenditure in fact. For instance, it appears that entries would be made in respect of the Pleader's bills before they had been passed by the head office, and entries would be made of matters which concerned that circle of the estate though payments were not actually made from that Cutchery. These entries would be balanced by entries on the other side of the account. A system better calculated to lead to confusion and to give opportunity for peculation it would be hard to conceive. But this method of accounts has been going on for years and apparently has been accepted by the estate. The entry of Rs. 219 does not apparently represent a payment, but an entry of something due to the Pleader, against the entry of an over-payment of Rs. 181-12 on the other side of the account. Whatever may be the precise meaning of the entry, it is clear that with so hopelessly confused a system of accounts, no jury would in the circumstances of this case convict on the footing that the entry was a deliberately false one. In fact neither the learned Judge nor learned Counsel has pointed out how it is proposed to support the prosecution as to this item beyond the production of the entry and the Pleader's statement that the sum of Rs. 219 was not paid to him, which is nobody's case.

I think the Rule should be made absolute and the order of the Sessions Judge directing commitment of the petitioner be quashed.

Rule made absolute.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEALS NOS. 549 AND 550 OF 1914.

December 4, 1914.

Present:—Mr Justice Ayling and Mr. Justice Hannay.

EMPEROR—APPELLANT

versus

IN NO. 549 OF 1914

P. R. GANAPATHY IYER—ACCUSED

IN NO. 550 OF 1914.

PERUMAL—ACCUSED.

Madras City Municipal Act (III of 1904), s 409, cl. (19)—By-law framed thereunder—"Food," meaning of —Ærated waters, whether food.

The term "food" does not include "drinks" and, therefore, in the absence of a special inclusion a person exposing for sale ærated waters unwholesome and unfit for human consumption does not commit any offence under by-law 177 framed under section 409 (19) of the Madras City Municipal Act.

Appeal under section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, against the acquittal of the aforesaid accused by the Fourth Presidency Magistrate, Egmore, Madras, in Calendar Cases Nos. 15569 and 15570 of 1914 on his file.

FACTS.—The accused is a coffeehotel-keeper in Madras and was supplying to the public coffee, etc., and also ærated waters such as soda which he purchased from manufacturers.

The Municipal Authorities examined some of the soda water bottles, and found on examination by the Chemical Examiner, that the water used in preparing the soda water was of the most impure kind. They accordingly prosecuted him under the by-law framed under section 409, clause (19), of the Act. The Fourth Presidency Magistrate (Mr. P. Narayana Menon) held that he could not be convicted under that by-law as "soda water" cannot be said to be "food" within the meaning of that by-law, and acquitted him. The Municipal Authorities with a view to obtain a decisive ruling on the point requested Government to file an appeal against the said acquittal to the High Court. The present appeal is against that order of acquittal.

The Crown Prosecutor, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—In these cases the Local Government appeals against an order of acquittal in Calendar Cases Nos. 15569 and 15570 of 1914 on the file of the Presidency

Magistrate. In both cases the charge against the accused was that they had exposed for sale ærated waters unwholesome and unfit for human consumption contrary to by-law 169 framed under section 409 (19) of the Madras Ciy Municipal Act (III of 1904), an offence punishable under by-law 177.

By section 409, clause 19, of the Act the Corporation is authorised to make by-laws to provide "for the prevention of the sale or exposure for sale of unwholesome meat, fish or provisions; and securing the efficient inspection and sanitary regulation of shops in which articles intended for human food, or drugs, are kept or sold." The by-law in question (No. 169) has evidently been framed with reference to the first part of clause 19, as the second part of that clause relates to inspection and the sanitary regulation of shops.

The by-law is as follows :— "No person shall expose for sale or keep for the purposes of sale any article intended for human food which is unwholesome or unfit for human consumption." The decision of the cases before us turns on the question whether the word "food" in the by-law includes drinks or not. The Magistrate has held that it does not. The learned Crown Prosecutor contends that the word "food" does include drinks and in support of his contention refers to the definition of food given in the Standard and Century Dictionaries, in the English Sale of Food and Drugs Acts and in section 251 of the Bengal District Municipalities Act (III of 1884). Admittedly the word "food" in ordinary parlance would not include "drinks" and there is nothing in the dictionaries referred to which would support a contrary view. It is argued, however, that in the law the word "food" does include every article used for food or drink by man other than drugs or water. This, no doubt, is the definition of the term "food" in the English Sale of Food and Drugs Acts (see Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XV, page 5), but it is evident that that definition was made for the purposes of those Acts and it is so stated in the passage in Halsbury's Laws of England which is above referred to. Similarly with regard to section 251 of the Bengal District Municipalities Act. By that section "food" is defined to include every article used by man for food or drink except drugs or water. But there again, the definition was introduced into the Act by an amendment in 1886 and has special reference to that Act alone. The fact that it was found necessary to introduce the definition by a subsequent amendment of the Act is, of course, a point against the contention of the learned Crown Prosecutor. It is also pointed out by the learned Vakil for the accused that the Madras City Municipal Act can hardly be construed by reference to a Mofussil Act of Bengal.

There is no definition of the term "food" either in the Madras City Municipal Act, nor apparently in the corresponding Acts in Calcutta or Bombay. The point which militates most strongly against the meaning which the learned Crown Prosecutor seeks to apply to the term "food," is the fact that in the body of the Madras Act itself in several places the words "food" and "drinks" occur, indicating that it was not intended that the latter term should be included in the former. See sections 357 and 358. It is difficult in the face of these sections to hold that the term "food" in the by-law in question does include drinks. It is immaterial for the purposes of these cases that the Magistrate has held that ærated waters and lemonade are not "provisions" within the meaning of section 409 (19), as the word "provisions" does not occur in the by-law under which the prosecutions were brought. It may be mentioned that in the dictionaries referred to by the learned Crown Prosecutor the word "provisions" is given as synonym of "food."

The Municipal Council has special powers with reference to the manufacture of ærated waters under section 328 of the Act. Possibly this may have been thought a sufficient safeguard by the Legislature for securing the purity of ærated waters. However that may be, as there is nothing in the Act or by-laws to support the view for which the Crown Prosecutor contends, namely that the term "food" includes "drinks" other than drugs or water, the conclusion at which the lower Court has arrived on the point must be upheld. The acquittals are right and these appeals are accordingly dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEALS NOS. 591 AND 592 OF 1914.

November 12, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Fletcher and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

IN CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 591.

HARSHA NATH CHATTERJEE alias MOTI LAL CHATTERJEE—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—

AND

IN CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 592.

KHAGENDRA NATH CHAUDHURI alias SURESH CHANDRA CHAUDHURI —APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Arms Act (XI of 1878), ss. 4, 14, 19 (6), 20—Fire-arms, whether includes parts of fire-arms—Possession of part of fire-arms—Manufacture of fire-arms—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 109, 116, 120*B—Punishment on conviction under section* 120*B — Abetment—Joinder of charges—Transaction—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of* 1898), s. 239.

Unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context, wherever the word "arms" occurs in the Indian Arms Act, it has got to be read as including "parts of arms." By section 4 of the Act the word "arms" also includes "fire-arms." Therefore, the word "fire-arms" as used in section 14 includes "parts of fire-arms."

The word "fire-arms" only means "arms that are fired by means of gun-powder or other explosive."

Possession of parts of fire-arms is prohibited by section 14 read with section 4 of the Indian Arms Act.

Ahmed Hossein v. Queen-Empress, 27 C. 692; 4 C. W. N. 750, and Emperor v. Dhansingh, 5 Cr. L. J. 435; 3 N. L. R. 53, followed.

An offence under section 20 of the Indian Arms Act is different from an offence mentioned in section 19 (6). The only additional element necessary to constitute an offence under section 20 is that the possession should be in such manner as to indicate an intention that such act may not be known to any public servant.

The keeping of arms under section 19 (a) of the Indian Arms Act must be a keeping for sale, not keeping only.

The term "transaction" in section 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not synonymous with the term "offence." A "transaction" cannot be said to be complete as soon as the offence is committed. It is clear that so long as the conspiracy continues, the transaction which began with the forming of the common intention continues.

Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Monmohan Roy, 26 Ind. Cas. 307, followed.

For an offence under section 120B, Indian Penal Code, punishment is provided by section 109 of the Indian Penal Code if an offence has been committed; but if an offence has not been committed, punishment is limited to the extent provided by section 116. Perhaps, strictly speaking, in the former case there should not be a conviction for conspiracy but for abetment of an offence, for conspiracy followed by an act done to carry out the purpose of the conspiracy amounts to abetment.

Appeals against the orders of the Additional Sessions Judge of 24-Parganahs.

IN APPEAL NO. 591 OF 1914.

Messrs. N. Sen & S. C. Roy, Counsel, and Babu Kshitish Chandra Neogi, for the Appellant.

IN APPEAL NO. 592 OF 1914.

Mr. S. C. Roy, Counsel, and Babu Ramani Mohun Chatterjee, for the Appellant.

Hon'ble the Advocate-General and Mr. N. Gupta, Counsel, and Babus Hemendra Nath Mitra and Nirode Chandra Chatterjee, for the Crown in both the appeals.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—These are two appeals by the two accused against their conviction and the sentences passed on them by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of the 24-Parganas.

The two accused were charged before the learned Sessions Judge with having committed offences under the three heads. The first charge against the accused was that they had in their possession or under their control certain arms in contravention of the provisions of section 14 of the Indian Arms Act (XI of 1878.) The second charge was that they had in their possession or control such arms in contravention of section 24 of the Indian Arms Act in such a manner as to indicate the intention that such act might not be known to any public servant. The third charge was that during a period, from the 2nd of December 1913 to the 26th January 1914, they conspired to manufacture or keep fire arms in contravention of the provisions of section 5 of the Indian Arms Act. The two Assessors who assisted the learned Judge at the trial were of opinion that both the accused were guilty of the offences charged against them under the first two charges, but that they were not guilty of the offence charged under the third charge. The learned Judge, however, convicted the two accused under all the three charges and sentenced each of them to undergo the following terms of imprisonment, namely under the first charge one year's rigorous imprisoment and under the second and third charges three years' rigorous imprisonment—the sentences to run concurrently.

HARSHA NATH CHATTERJEE v. EMPEROR.

The facts of the case lie in a narrow compass. On the 25th of January last Mr. Denham, Deputy Commissioner of Police, received certain information. In consequence of this information Mr. Denham, accompanied by the Inspector-General of Police and certain other superior Officers proceeded to a one-storied house in Victoria Road, Baranagore. Early in the morning of the 26th January they arrived at the house. The door of the house having been forced, the party entered. The first accused, Harsha Nath alias Moti Lal, was found in the room that abuts on the road. In a room on the other side of the courtyard portions of firearms and certain tools were found. Two receipts for the rent of the house were also found. The accused Harsha Nath was arrested. He declined to make any statement with reference to the things found in the house. A search list was then drawn up in the presence of witnesses and the party left. Constables in plain clothes were posted at the house with instructions to arrest any one who might come to the house. The first person to do so was the water-carrier Chinibas Neka, who has been called as a witness for the prosecution. About 10 or 10-30 of the same night, the accused Khagendra in his statement fixes the hour as 8 or 8-30, the accused Khagendra arrived at the house and was arrested. The first question that we have to decide is, what was the connexion of the two accused with the house at Baranagore?

That they have some connexion with the house is not denied, nor could it be since both of them were arrested there. The case for the prosecution is that on the 2nd of December last the two accused rented from the witness Bhutnath Sil this house, which is the property of his brother-in-law Nanda Lal De. The accused represented that they were students at the Calcutta Medical College and that owing to the high prices ruling in Calcutta they found it convenient to live at Baranagore. The accused Khagendra gave the name of Khitendra Nath Roy. The rent of the house was fixed at Rs. 11 per mensem and on the 2nd of December Khagendra paid Rs. 7 on account of the rent for that month and received the cutcha receipt, Exhibit II. The balance of rent for that month was subsequently paid and a formal receipt, Exhibit 2, was handed over. Another month's rent was subsequently paid and the receipt, Exhibit 1, was given. The cutcha receipt is said to have been returned by Khagendra when the formal receipt, Exhibit 2, was given to him. The two receipts, Exhibits 1 and 2, were found at the search on the 26th of January. The witnesses who depose to this part of the case are first Bhutnath Sil. He is employed as travelling agent of Messrs. Osler and Co. His pay is Rs. 90 per mensem plus a commission which amounts to Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 1,500 per annum. He is, therefore, apparently a man of respectability. The next witness is Bhutnath's son Bhupendra, a lad of about 14 years of age, and the third witness is Nanda Lal De, a Sub-Engineer employed in the Public Works Department, brother-in-law to Bhutnath Sil. He is also apparently a man of respectability. The house at Baranagore belongs to Nanda Lal De, but is let out and looked after by Bhutnath Sil who or whose family receives rent.

The witness Bhutnath Sil states that on the 2nd of December last two men came to him and after certain negotiations took the house at a rent of Rs. 11 per mensem. A payment of Rs. 7 was made on account of the first month's rent and the cutcha receipt, Exhibit II, was given. The man who carried on the negotiations gave the name of Khitendra Nath Roy. The witness is positive that this man is the accused Khagendra and he believes, although he is not certain, that the man who was with him is the other accused Harsha Nath. On that night Bhutnath left Calcutta for the United Provinces and did not return until the 28th of February on which day he gave his evidence before the Enquiring Magistrate. Counsel has attempted to throw doubt on the evidence of Bhutnath on the ground that before his return to Calcutta he was interviewed by a Police Officer. But in the ordinary course if the Police intended to avail themselves of the evidence of Bhutnath, they would have to interview him before calling him as a witness in order to find out what he would be able to prove. I see no reason to doubt the evidence of Bhutnath.

The boy Bhupendra states that on some date in December Khagendra came and paid to him the balance of the rent for that month. The witness states that he handed to Khagendra Exhibit 2 and received in return the receipt, Exhibit II. Further this witness states that in January the two accused came to him and paid the rent for that month and received the receipt, Exhibit 1. Bhupendra at a subsequent date identified the two accused at the Alipore Jail. This identification took place in the presence of a Magistrate and it is not suggested that the witness did not identify the accused. The witness states that he did not see the accused at the Thana previously. The Sub-Inspector Dwijendra Nath Adhaya says he does not remember whether Bhupendra saw the accused at the Thana. But even if Bhupendra's identification cannot be wholly relied upon, there is a body of evidence that shows conclusively that the house was rented and occupied by both the accused.

Nanda Lal De was called chiefly to prove the receipts for rent. The two receipts, Exbibits 1 and 2, were found at the search. Before the learned Judge a good deal of the cross-examination of some of the witnesses was directed to show that the name Khitendra Nath Roy appearing on these two receipts was written in a different handwriting and with a different ink to the rest of the writing on the receipts. Mr. Denham, however, is positive that these names appeared there when the receipts were found on the search and the search list supports his evidence.

Then the evidence as to the occupation of the house shows clearly that these two accused were in occupation of the same.

The witness Chinibas Neka states that he took water to the house every day at 9 o'clok in the morning. He used to shake the chain and call out, then one of the accused would come and open the door for him. On his leaving the door would be closed again.

The witness Bhagwan Biswal, who is a mali in a garden opposite the house, states that he has seen Khagendra both entering and leaving the house. He further states that the doors and windows of the house were always kept shut. The evidence of Jagabandu, Das which was given before the Committing Magistrate, states that the windows and doors always remained shut. He further states that two men lived in the house in the latter part of Aghram and they did not mix or talk with the neighbours. Jagabandu died before the trial took place, but his deposition before the Committing Magistrate was put in.

As against this body of the evidence showing the taking and occupation of the house by the two accused, there are the statements of the accused. The accused Khagendra in a written statement, that he filed before the learned Judge, stated that one night about 15 or 16 days before his arrest he met one Dinabandu Bhattacharjee, who he says, was with him at the Dacca Imperial Seminary in the Municipal Market. He states he asked Dinabandhu where he lived and that Dinabandhu said be lived at Baranagore where he worked for a contractor. On Dinabandhu asking a similar question of Khagendra the latter stated that he had no fixed place of abode as the Police were trying to connect him with the Barisal conspiracy case. Dinabandhu then asked Khagendra if he would like to come with him for a day or two and he said he would come next day. Next day accompanied by Dinabandhu he went to the house at Baranagore where he saw the other accused. He left after staying there two or three hours. On the 26th of January he returned to Barnagore at 8 or 8-30 A. M. and was arrested and taken to the Police station. This story is wholly improbable and does not cast any doubt on the direct evidence connecting Khagendra with the house. No trace of this Dinabandhu has been found and there can be little doubt that he does not exist. Further the statement of Khagendra that he was in a public place like the Municipal Market when the Police were searching for him, is highly improbable. On the other hand, his statement that the Police were searching for him may furnish a good reason why he should take this house at Barnagore to escape from the Police. The evidence shows that he was successful in so doing between the 2nd of December and the 26th of January.

The statement of the accused Harsha Nath is that he came to Calcutta about the end of December to seek employment. He used to walk near the Goledighi and having a fine voice he used to sing. In this way he made many acquaintances including the aforesaid Dinabandhu. Dinbandhu, hearing of the position of Harsha Nath forthwith invited him to come and stay in his house in Baranagore. Harsha Nath says he went to stay there on the 5th or 6th January. Some two or three days before his arrest, Harsha Nath says, Dinabandhu left for "somewhere" on business expecting to return in three or four days. It is remarkable that Harhsa Nath, who was according to his story on terms of intimacy with Dinabandhu, did not know the "somewhere" to which Dinabandhu had gone on business.

The whole story of this accused, commencing with Dinabandhu, who is alleged to be a resident of and employed at Baranagore, taking his walks in College Square, Calcutta, down to Dinabandhu's departure for "somewhere" two or three days before Harsha Nath's arrest, is manifestly untrue.

The evidence leaves no doubt in my mind that the two accused rented this house on the 2nd of December and they were jointly in possession of it on the day of their arrest viz., the 26th of January last.

It is not open to doubt that the tools and portions of fire-arms were found in the house at the time of the search. But it has been argued that the evidence does not establish in whose possession such articles were. Counsel has argued that there is some rule of law that in circumstances such as the present the Court cannot impute possession to either of the accused. There may, however, be joint possession of the articles and the fact as to whose possession the articles were at the date of the search must be decided on the evidence in the case.

Now the evidence establishes that both the accused were in joint possession and occupation of the house. They took the house falsely representing that they were medical students. The evidence on behalf of the prosecution also proves that during the occupation and possession of the accused the door and windows of the house were always kept closed. Why should the doors and windows of the house be kept closed and can any one doubt that in that state of things both the inmates of the house must have been fully aware of what was going on in the house? The evidence leaves no doubt in my mind that both the accused were in fact in possession of these articles.

I will now proceed to consider the case under the three charges that have been framed against the accused. But before doing so I will dispose of an objection raised by Counsel as to the whole trial. It was argued that the whole trial was illegal owing to misjoinder of charges. That, however, clearly is not so. The offences charged in this case were committed in the same transaction and section 239 of the Code of Criminal Procedure authorises such charges to be tried together. If authority be wanted for the course adopted in the present case, the very recent judgment of this Court in Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Monmohan Roy (1) may be referred to.

Coming then to the particular charges, the first charge against the accused is framed under section 19 (f) of the Indian Arms Act, namely of having in their possession or under their control arms in contravention of the provisions of section 14 of the Act. The arms of which section 14 prohibits the possession without license are "fire-arms". Section 4 of the Act says that the word "arms" as used in the Act shall include "parts of arms." That being so unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context, wherever the word "arms" occurs in the Act it has got to be read as including "parts of arms." Moreover, by section 4 of the Act, the word "arms" also includes "fire-arms." That being so, it seems to me obvious that the word "fire-arms" as used in section 14 includes "parts of fire-arms."

Section 4 clearly means that the whole includes the part and when the Act deals with a particular class of arms, such as fire-arms, the section means that parts of fire-arms are included in the word "fire-arms." The word "fire-arms" only means "arms that are fired by means of gun-powder or other explosive."

If section 14 prohibits the possession of arms that are fired by means of gun-powder or other explosive, then clearly having regard to section 4 the possession of parts of such arms is prohibited. That the possession of parts of fire-arms is prohibited by section 14 was decided by this Court in the case of Ahmed Hossein v. Queen-Empress (2). A similar view was also taken by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner for the Central Provinces in the case of Emperor v. Dhansingh (3). In my opinion the learned Judge rightly convicted both the accused of being in possession of fire-arms in contravention of section 14 of the Act. The second charge against the accused was one of being in possession of fire-arms in contravention of the provisions of section 14 in such manner as to indicate an intention that such act may not be known to any public servant. Under the provisions of section 20 of the Act this constitutes a different offence to that mentioned in section 19 (f). The only additional element necessary to constitute an offence under section 20 is that the possession should be in such manner as to indicate an intention that such act may not be known to any public servant. The evidence of concealment in the present case is clear and conclusive. The evidence proves that the two accused, falsely representing themselves as medical students, took the house at Baranagore and that the accused Khagendra gave a false name. Further the door and windows of the house were kept closed and also—a very important fact—the accused Khagendra was wanted by the Police and, therefore, would wish to conceal himself and what he was doing. On this evidence an offence under section 20 is proved against both the accused. The third charge against the accused was one of conspiring to manufacture or keep fire-arms punishable under section 120B of the Indian Penal Code read with section 19 (a) of the Indian Arms Act. The learned Judge has convicted both the accused of being parties to a conspiracy both to manufacture and keep arms. The learned Judge, however, is clearly wrong in treating the keeping of arms as an offence under section 19 (a) of the Indian Arms Act. The offence is keeping for sale, not keeping only. Does then the evidence prove a conspiracy to manufacture arms? Now in cases of conspiracy the agreement between the conspirators cannot generally be directly proved, but only inferred from other facts proved in the case. The facts proved in this case leave no doubt that such a conspiracy to manufacture arms existed between the two accused. First, there is the taking of the house. Next, the finding of a considerable number of pieces of fire-arms on the premises. To what use were these articles to be put? Then, there is the fact of the finding of the tools at the premises. The evidence also shows that there is reason to believe that work had actually been done to some of the portions of fire-arms found at the search. From these facts the Court can and ought to infer that the two accused had conspired together to manufacture arms. On this charge the learned Judge sentenced each of the accused to undergo three years' rigorous imprisonment. That sentence, however, appears to be illegal. Section 120B of the Indian Penal Code provides that the accused in a case of criminal conspiracy shall be punished in the same manner as if he had abetted such offence. The learned Judge found that there was only a conspiracy to manufacture without an actual manufacture. The learned Judge has, however, sentenced the accused under the third charge on the footing that the punishment was provided for by section 109 of the Indian Penal Code. But in that view the punishment for a conspirator is much more severe than the punishment for an abettor. Section 120B provides that they shall be punished the same. The sentence on the accused on the third charge ought, on the findings made by the learned Judge, to have been imposed under section 120B of the Indian Penal Code read with section 19 (a)of the Indian Arms Act and section 116 of the Indian Penal Code. Under these sections the maximum sentence that can be imposed on the accused under the third charge is one of nine months' rigorous imprisonment. I think we ought, therefore, to reduce the sentence passed on each of the accused under the third charge to one of nine months' rigorous imprisonment. I see no reason to interfere with the sentence passed under the other two charges. The two appeals will, therefore, subject to the reduction of the sentences passed under the third charge, be dismissed.

(1) 26 Ind. Cas. 307.
(2) 27 C. 692; 4 C. W. N. 750.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree. As I was a member of the Bench which decided Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Monmohan Roy (1), it is perhaps sufficient to say that nothing that I hav heard in argument in this case leads me t alter the opinion which I then formed as to the legality of trying together charges of conspiracy and of offences committed in carrying out the objects of the conspiracy. But it will be as well to indicate shortly the line of argument taken and the fallacy which underlies it.

(3) 3 N. L. R. 53; 5 Cr. L. J. 435.

The argument was that the possession of fire-arms is a totally distinct offence from the offence of conspiracy to manufacture arms, and as the offence of conspiracy is complete so soon as the persons conspiring have formed a common intention, the two offences cannot be said to have been committed in the same transaction. The fallacy in this argument is that it assumes that the transaction is complete as soon as an offence is committed, in other words, that the term transaction is synonymous with the term "offence." It is clear that so long as the conspiracy continued, the transaction, which began with the forming of the common intention, continued and the first two offences charged were committed in the course of this transaction.

The punishment that may be awarded on a conviction under section 120B seems to vary according as the offence has or has not been committed in consequence of the conspiracy. If an offence has been committed, the punishment is provided by section 109 of the Indian Penal Code, if an offence has not been committed, punishment is limited to the extent provided by section 116. Perhaps, strictly speaking, in the former case there should not be a conviction for conspiracy, but for abetment of the offence, for conspiracy followed by an act done to carry out the purpose of the conspiracy amounts to abetment. In the present case there has been no finding by the Judge, nor can it on the evidence be found as a act, that the offence was committed. The sentence that can be imposed is, therefore, that provided by section 116.

Sentence reduced.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 594 OF 1914.
CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 503 OF 1914.

December 3, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ayling.

In re PARVATANENI KAMAYYA—PRISONER—ACCUSED.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s 193—Giving false evidence, charge of—Contradictory statements, when can be made basis of conviction.

A charge of perjury based on two mutually contradictory statements can be successful only where the two statements are necessary and irreconcilably contradictory of each other.

Where the accused called a person as his relation at one time, by a term not necessarily implying near relationship, and said subsequently that he was not his relation, there is no necessary contradiction between the statements and no conviction for perjury can be sustained on such statements.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Sessions Court of Guntur, in Criminal Application No. 30 of 1914, preferred against that of the first Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tenali, in Calendar Case No. 22 of 1914.

Mr. J. L. Rosario, for the Hon'ble Mr T. Richmond, and Mr. Vembu Aiyar, for the Accused.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The charge is of making two mutually contradictory statements, Exhibits A and B, of which one or the other must be false. In Exhibit B, dated 1909, petitioner stated that Bhaganiah was the husband of his Mena Kodalu. This phrase means "sister's daughter's husband", but is also used to refer to one's father's brother's daughter's daughter. The latter is the actual relationship which Bhaganiah bears to petitioner.

Exhibit A is a statement recorded more than four years later and runs as follows: "Bhaganiah is no relation of mine. I do not know if he is the husband of my Kodalu. I do not recollect to have formerly stated that he is the husband of my sister's daughter. He is not related to me. I shall file the statement formerly given."

If this statement be carefully considered, there is nothing in it necessarily contradictory of Exhibit B. The statements about relationship are literally true, the words used ("bandutvam") denoting blood relationship. The statement, "I do not know", may be false: but the accused has not been charged with making a specific false statement, and it is difficult to say in which sense he understood the vernacular phrase. His denial of recollection of a statement recorded four years before may very possibly be true.

The practice of charging a man with making two mutually contradictory statements may be convenient, but it can only be successfully used where the two statements are necessarily and irreconcilably contradictory. That is not the case here.

The conviction and sentence are set aside: the fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Conviction set aside; Fine refunded.

SIND JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 45 OF 1913.

June 26, 1913.

Present:—Mr. Pratt, J. C., and Mr. Kemp, A. J. C.

MIR SHAH NAWAZ KHAN AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—APPELLANTS

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 99, 147, 332—Riot to resist illegal search—Beating Police acting in good faith under colour of their office—Right of private defence—Search beyond limits of Police Officer's station—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 165 (1).

Where in the course of a search conducted beyond the limits of a Police Officer's station, a riot broke out with the object of resisting the search and the Police party were beaten:

Held, (1) that the search was illegal;

(2) that the resistence to an illegal search did not constitute an offence under section 332 of the Penal Code;

(3) that the accused had no right of private defence, as the Police were acting in good faith under colour of their office, and even if they had the right, they exceeded it when they beat the Police.

Reg. v. Vyankatrao, 7 B. H. C. R. 50 and Queen-Emperor v. Dalip, 18 A. 246; A. W. N. (1896) 48, referred to.

Mr. Lalchand Hassomal, for the Appellants.

Mr. E. Raymond, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The complainant, Bhiriasing, Head Constable of Railway Police, was sent from Hyderabad to investigate cases of theft from the Railway.

On the 9th and 10th August he was at Mir Hussein's village, where he searched the house of Mohabat and made him join his party as a spy. On the evening of the 10th, he says, the zemindar Mahomed Junejo joined him at Mir Hussein's village.

His party consisted of himself, a Railway Constable Abdulla, a District Constable Sheroo, two paggis Gul Mahomed and Murad, the spy Mohabat and the zemindar Mahomed Junejo.

This party of seven went on the 11th to Ellahi Doro and searched several houses including that of Arab, accused No. 7, where it is said that stolen property was found. The party spent the night of the 10th at the water-wheel of one Sohbat Mari and on the 11th went to Kahi, a village of the Mir accused No. 1. They took with them Arab and the property found in his house.

At Kahi on the 11th they searched the house of Sawan, accused No. 2, attached some property suspected to be stolen and arrested him. They then proceeded to search the house of Khirir, accused No. 16.

In the course of this search a riot took place, the three Policemen were beaten the two arrested persons, Arab and Sawan, escaped and the attached property disappeared.

It is for offences in connection with this riot that the appellants have been convicted under section 395 and section 332 read with section 149, Indian Penal Code, the lower Court finding that the common object of the riot was to steal the attached property and to obstruct the Police in the discharge of their duty.

As to the fact of the riot there is no doubt, The Mir, accused No. 1, does not deny that a riot took place. Khirir admits that a fight occurred when the Police were searching his house. Arab and Sawan admit that their houses were searched.

In spite of this admission the defence have been at great pains to show that Mahomed Junejo was not present. The defence appear to attach an exaggerated importance to his evidence because he is the only eye-witness of any position. The only reason for doubting the presence of Mahomed Junejo is that he was not named in the telegram sent that evening from Tando Adam by Bhiriasing. But this omission is not surprising for Mahomed Junejo fled as soon as the riot occurred. Bhiriasing probably thought it unlikely that he would be a witness and named only those who came with him to Tando Adam. On the other hand Mahomed Junejo is named in the first information said to have been recorded at 4 P.M. the next day at Hyderabad station. It is contended that this was not really recorded till 4 P.M. It is to be regretted that the Sessions Judge did not record the original information. What is on the record is a copy and as this is timed 4 P.M., it may be assumed that it was not recorded till then. But even on this assumption it is incredible that the Police should have invented Mahomed Junejo's name by 4 P.M. the next day for Mahomed Junejo says that he went straight from the scene of the offence to his village and did not see the Police again until the 17th. The defence were alive to the absurdity of this argument and so Gul Mahomed, the paggi, a witness who is hostile to the prosecution so far as the case is against the Mir, says that he and Murad went to Hyderabad the next day and saw Mahomed Junejo in the company of the Sub-Inspector. I believe Gul Mahomed has been won over to say this. Murad contradicts him and so does Mahomed Junejo. The suggestion, of course, is that the Sub-Inspector was coaching Mahomed Junejo before the first information was recorded. This is on a par with the evidence of the defence witnesses, pages 240-243, that while the case was before the Committing Magistrate, Mahomed Junejo was brought by the Police to Kahi to receive a further coaching on the spot. This evidence is so manifestly false that the learned Pleader for the Mir refrained from referring to it. Other points have been made with a view to suggest that Mahomed Junejo was not present. His name appears on the punchnamas but the punchnamas were not given to Mr. Stewart till the 18th and may, it is said, be forgeries. Sohbat Mari leaves him out of the list of persons who stayed at his water-wheel on the night of the 10th. I need not discuss these in detail. It is sufficient to say that the very fact that Mahomed Junejo is a reluctant witness shows that he was not invented by the Police or his signature falsely added to the punchnamas and that Sohbat Mari gave a different account when examined by the Magistrate under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code.

I am satisfied that Mohamed Junejo was present. There are thus seven prosecution eye-witnesses of the riot.

But before discussing their evidence it will be convenient to notice the account given by the accused.

Accused No. 1, while admitting the riot, had not the curiosity to stir from his otak and did not see what happened. Of the other 19 accused before the Sessions Court only two, Khirir accused No. 16, and his son Usif, accused No. 17, give an account of what took place. Usif only says that he saw the Police beating his father. Khirir says he had a fight with the Police, as they insisted in searching his house although his daughter-in-law was in child-bed. This story is not supported except by one defence witness Gian, page 215, who says that the Police got the better of the fight with Khirir. This is absurd, for the beaten Police had to leave the village without making any arrests. Again Gul Mahomed, whom Khirir describes as one of his rescurers and who is to some extent a witness hostile to the prosecution, says that Khirir did not object that there was a woman in his house, page 59.

The truth must, therefore, be extracted from the evidence of the seven eye-witnesses for the prosecution.

Three of these witnesses, the two paggis and the spy, do not admit the presence of the Mir, accused No. 1, but with this exception all the witnesses give the same version of the riot. The story is that while Khirir's house was being searched, a gun shot was heard and that the Mir then appeared carrying a gun and leading a gang of about 40 Mohanas, who beat the Police, rescued Arab and Sawan and carried off the attached property. The Mir then returned to his otak and one of his followers then came and picked up Abdullah and took the Police to the otak where the Mir offered them money in order to persuade them to carry the matter no further.

Now there are many discrepancies and exaggerations in this version, but as to the central fact of the Mir's presence there can, we think, be no doubt. Even the two paggis and the spy admitted his presence when their statements were recorded before a Magistrate on the 18th. He was named in the first telegram sent from Tando Adam station and he was named by the Police on their way to that station to Ismail paggi and to Alibux paggi. It is proved that the riot started with a gun shot and ended with a visit of the beaten Police to the Mir's otak. As to the gun shot a very feeble explanation is suggested by the defence. It is said that the Mir's brother was shooting in the jungle half a mile away and that he did fire the shot. But a shot fired half a mile away would scarcely attract attention and the finding of a fresh cartridge wad near the otak makes it practically certain that the gun was fired at the otak. This must have been fired either by the Mir or at his orders. Again it is incredible that the Police after being beaten by the Mohanas would have had the hardihood to risk another hammering by going to the otak and there attempting to blackmail the Mir. It is far more probable that they went at the invitation of the Mir who had realised the folly of his conduct and wished to hush up the whole affair. The Mir's own account of his conduct points to a guilty conscience. The riot occurred within 400 yards of his otak, yet he says he did not intervene to prevent the riot and he rendered no assistance to the Police after the riot. He remained at Kahi for the next three days and left just three hours before the arrival of the Assistant Superintendent of Police. His motive is clear—for Sawan and Khirir are admittedly his haris and he, no doubt, resented houses near his otak being searched. I have, therefore, no doubt that the Mir was one of the rioters.

As to what happened during the riot the evidence must be treated with great caution. There are more than the usual number of discrepancies and many of these seem to be due to wilful exaggeration. It is evident that the Mir never crossed the karia in front of Khirir's house, but that he encouraged the rioters and showed himself with his gun in order to intimidate the Police. The karia was not easy to jump and it is unlikely that a man carrying a gun would jump across it. All the witnesses told the Deputy Superintendent of Police that the Mir was on the other side of the karia and so did Sheroo constable before the Committing Magistrate. The version now given that the Mir came up within two paces of Khirir's house is pure fiction. So is the ridiculous story of constable Abdullah that Bhiriasing expostulated with the Mir and that he said, "silence, badmash", and that Abdullah then put his turban at the Mir's feet. None of the other witnesses nor even Bhiriasing himself mentioned this incident. I also disbelieve the story that the Mir was shouting all the times "Release the prisoner, get the property. Beat them." This is too obviously intended to supply evidence as to the common object of the riot. The only words attributed to the Mir by Sheroo constable before the Committing Magistrate were, "do not leave them." There was no occasion to use force to release the prisoners, Arab and Sawan. They were not bound or secured and must have joined the rioters at once. There is no evidence that the rioters went at once for the attached property. The Police scarcely refer to the property, although some of it was heavy bags of sugar. There is some evidence that Phul, accused No. 13, was seen later in the day making off with a bundle, and on the 18th he dug up some property and gave it to the Police. This property, it is suggested, was some of the attached property, but it is sufficient to say that it does not tally with the property described in the punchnamas or that said to have been in Khirir's house. It seems to me clear that although the loss of the attached property was one of the results of the riot, yet the taking of that property was not the common object of the riot. Gul Mahomed is in many respects not a reliable witness, but I think he truly states the object of the riot when he says: "they fought with the Police for searching their houses" (page 57).

We are satisfisd that the other six accused convicted by the Sessions Judge were also among the rioters. They were picked out at careful identification tests held before the Assistant Superintendent of Police. Accused Nos. 27 and 16 were admittedly present and accused Nos. 5, 10 and 13 are identified as persons who actually struck the Police.

The question that now remains for consideration is, what offence, if any, have the accused committed?

MIR SHAH NAWAZ KHAN v. EMPEROR.

It is admitted that the original wrong-doers were the Police. Bhiriasing was officer in charge of the Hyderabad Railway Police Station and had no authority to search beyond the limits of that station: section 165 (1), Criminal Procedure Code. He was aware of this and wrote to the officer in charge of the Tando Adam Police station, who sent him Sheru constable. Even if Kahi had been in the limits of the Tando Adam station, Sheru's presence gave Bhiriasing no authority to search. Sheru should then have made the search under a written order of the officer in charge of his station: sections 166 and 165 (3), Criminal Procedure Code. Kahi is, however, in the limits of the Tando Allahyar station. The officer in charge of that station had given no sanction and Bhiriasing had, therefore, no legal authority to search houses in Kahi.

No doubt, in spite of the illegal search, the Police would still be justified in arresting suspected persons under section 54, Criminal Procedure Code, or attaching suspected property under section 550 of the same Code. The maxim that no man can take advantage of his own wrong does not apply, for, as said by Baron Bramwell in Hooper v. Lane (1), it means "that no one shall gain a right by his own wrong and not that if he has a right, he shall lose it or the power of exercising it by a wrong done in connection with it." If, therefore, the object of the riot had been to release the prisoner and the attached property, the accused would have been guilty as found by the Sessions Judge of offence under section 332, for in so arresting and attaching, the Police were acting in the discharge of their duty. But we have found that the object of the riot was to resist the search and, in making the searches, the Police were not acting in discharge of their duty. Section 332 will not, therefore, apply—while on the other hand the accused under section 99, Indian Penal Code, have no right of private defence, for the Police were acting in good faith under colour of their office. Of the many cases on this point it is sufficient to refer to Reg. v. Vyankatrav (2) and Queen-Empress v. Dalip (3) and, even if the accused had the right of private defence, they exceeded it when they beat the Police. The offences of which they are guilty are those of hurt and rioting. It will be sufficient to deal with the case as one of rioting, as the Sessions Judge has only convicted of one offence in respect of the riot and the hurt. The conviction of dacoity cannot stand, for the common object of the rioters was certainly not theft.

We reverse the convictions and sentences of all the appellants under section 395, Indian Penal Code. We alter the convictions of all the appellants under sections 332 and 149, Indian Penal Code, to one under section 147, Indian Penal Code.

We reduce the sentence on appellants Sawan (accused No. 2), Ibrahim (accused No. 5), Arab (accused No. 7), Hussein (accused No. 10), Phul (accused No. 13) and Khirir (accused No. 16) to four months' rigorous imprisonment under section 147, Indian Penal Code.

The Mir, accused No. 1, is the chief offender but after anxious consideration, we have decided to deal more leniently with him. We are influenced partly by the fact that any sentence of imprisonment would be a life-long punishment to him and partly by our conviction that it was merely folly and over-weening conceit that led him to commit this offence. We reduce the sentence on Shah-nawaz, accused No. 1, to a fine of Rs. 1,000 or in default one month's simple imprisonment. We further order under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, that he execute a bond himself in Rs. 5,000 with two sureties in Rs. 2,500 each to keep the peace for three years.

Sentences modified.

(1) (1857) 10 Eng. Rep. 1368; 108 R. R. 186; 6 H. L. Cas. 443; 27 L. J. Q. B. 75; 3 Jur. (N. S.) 1026; 6 W. R. 146.

(2) 7 B. H. C. R. 50 Cr.

(3) 18 A. 246; A. W. N. (1896) 48.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 271 OF 1914.

May 20, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Scott-Smith.

MUHAMMAD SIRDAR—CONVICT—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 24, 464, 477A—Wrong entries in Revenue registers—Fraud or dishonesty, no finding of—Intention—Offence, whether committed

Where the accused, a patwari, made wrong entries in the Revenue registers, but where there was no finding that he did so with intent to defraud or dishonestly, within the meaning of section 24, Indian Penal Code, he did not make a false document as defined in section 464, nor did he fraudulently alter any book or register within the meaning of section 477A of the Penal Code.

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Shahpur Division, at Sargodha, dated the 16th March 1914.

Messrs. Fazl-i-Hussain and Devi Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Bevan Petman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Muhammad Sirdar, a patwari, has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Shahpur of an offence under section 466/477-A, Indian Penal Code, and has been sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment.

The offence of which appellant has been convicted is, to put it briefly, that he made unauthorised entries in the khatauni partal book and jamabandi in regard to the status of certain donees of land at Gunjial, namely, Khan Muhammad and Bahadur 'with intent to damage the donees and cause gain to the proprietors.'

The words in italics are those used by the Sessions Judge in his finding and it will be noticed that no intent to defraud or to cause worngful gain or wrongful loss has been found in express words.

The effect of the entries made by the appellant was to show Khan Muhammad and Bahadur as malikan qabza, i.e., as proprietors of their holding merely without any share in the shamilat, whereas previously they were shown as full proprietors.

The deed under which these persons acquired their rights makes no mention of the shamilat and as the Sessions Judge remarks, " it is a moot point of law as to whether a deed of gift not specifying the shamilat rights as going with the area gifted, does or does not carry with it the rights in the shamilat."

Ordinarily the onus would lie upon a donee to prove that he was entitled to shamilat when the deed of gift is silent on the point, and apparently recognizing the justice of this the Revenue Authorities have directed that in future cases of gift, a gift which does not specify the conveyance of shamilat rights shall be regarded as one without such rights and shall be so entered in the records.

It would, therefore, appear that the proper entry as regards the status of the donees in question should have been that they were malikan qabza. Upon this point Mr. Leigh, Settlement Officer, as P. W. No. 1, stated—

"The entry of malik qabza may be a correct interpretation of the status of the proprietors, there has been no decision on that point. The essence of the accused's offence is that he made an entry in the jamabandi altering the recorded status without any authority to do so."

Ata-ul-Rahman, girdawar, P. W. No. 2, was the principal witness for the prosecution. He was present when the appellant made the entries complained of; his statement that appellant made them surreptitiously without his knowledge has been held by the Sessions Judge, and, in my opinion, rightly, to be untrue.

As to what really took place the learned Judge relied upon the evidence of Fatteh Khan, lambardar, P. W. No. 6, who stated that "while the accused and Ata-ul-Rahman were sitting together, the proprietors (i.e. co-sharers in the holding other than the donees) came to them with the deed of gift, that after accused had read the deed he pointed out to Ata-ul-Rahman that Khan Muhammad and Bahadur should be entered as malikan qabza, that the girdawar refused to make any alteration" and then said to accused in effect, "If you want to make any alteration make it yourself", which accused proceeded to do and then went away.

From this man's evidence and from the report P. K. made by Ata-ul-Rahman to the Naib-Tahsildar, it is clear that there must have been many people present when this took place. There was a dispute as to the status of the donees and the patwari, having regard to the deed of gift and to the Revenue rules, was of opinion that they should be shown as malikan qabza; he wanted the girdawar to make an entry accordingly and when the latter refused to do so, he made it himself.

The above facts appear to me undoubtedly to suggest the inference that appellant made the entries in accordance with what he considered they ought to be and not with any intention to defraud, or to cause wrongful gain or loss to any one. Had his motive been dishonest or fraudulent, he would hardly have made the entries openly and after a discussion with his superior officer as to what they should be.

The chief points relied upon by the Sessions Judge, as indicating a dishonest intention, are—

(1) the writing in the partal book of the words, malik qabza darj hain ;

(2) the making of the entry in the jamabandi in ink instead of pencil ;

(3) the Sessions Judge says the entry of the above words in the partal book was a mis-statement. This is so, if it was meant to refer to the previous entry in the jamabandi, but appellant probably meant it to refer to the entry as corrected by him. As regards the entry in the jamabandi being made in ink. it must be remembered that appellant erased it very shortly afterwards, and his explanation of his conduct is possibly quite true.

He certainly acted in flagrant disregard of the Revenue rules, but I cannot see that these two points override the strong presumption of bona fides which, in my opinion, arises from the circumstances under which the entries were made.

The Settlement Officer thought the punishment of dismissal would suffice for the appellant's infraction of the rules, and did not think it necessary to order a prosecution. It was only when a further charge of making away with the jamabandi was brought against him, a charge which the Sessions Judge finds was manufactured by Ata-ul-Rahman and of which appellant was acquitted, that a prosecution was ordered.

The Assessors were unanimously of opinion that when appellant made the entries he had no intention of causing harm to any one, and I have no hesitation in agreeing with them.

I have shown in the beginning of this judgment that there is no express finding by the Sessions Judge that appellant made the entries with intent to defraud or dishonestly, within the meaning of section 24, Indian Penal Code, in other words, there is no finding that he made a false document as defined in section 464, or that he fraudulently altered any book or register within the meaning of section 477A.

It is not shown that the making of the entries was likely to deprive the donees of any right to which they were entitled: the effect might merely have been to show correctly their status which was previously shown incorrectly. A correction of an entry in a Revenue Record might prevent a person getting a share in the shamilat, but he could not be defrauded of something to which he had no right. A main ingredient of the offence, therefore, is wanting, and even on the Sessions Judge's findings I would hold that the conviction is unsustainable.

I accept the appeal and, setting aside the conviction and sentence, acquit appellant and discharge him from his bail.

Appeal accepted.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 273 OF 1914.
(TAKEN UP No. 12 OF 1914.)
August 18, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield.

In re RASAMMAL—ACCUSED.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302—Murder by grandmother of her grandchild—No justification—Sentence, appropriate—Circumstantial evidence, whether alone sufficient to pass death sentence—Lenity to woman—Rule of practice—Sex of accused, whether determining factor in passing death sentence—Principle to exercise discretion misconceived—Revision—High Court, power of interference.

Where an old woman of 50 years of age, who had long hated her daughter-in-law and resented her intrusion and had worked herself up to a frenzy of hatred against her, taking advantage of her absence from the house, entered it and murdered her five years' old grandchild with horrible cruelty, and nothing was alleged by her or suggested on her behalf which could, if established, have afforded any sort of legal or moral justification, the mere fact that the case rests on circumstantial and not direct evidence should not affect the passing of death sentence.

Per Ayling, J.—Comparative lenity to women is a commonly accepted rule of practice though, needless to say, not of law, but in dealing with an atrocious crime like this the mere sex of the criminal should not bar the imposition of a sentence which would be considered appropriate in the case of a man.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J. (dissenting).—Where a conviction is based purely upon circumstantial evidence, it is an element to be taken into consideration in determining the nature of the sentence. Where, in addition to it, there are the facts that the prisoner is a woman 50 years old and a period of four months has elapsed from the date of her conviction, no case is made out for altering the sentence of transportation for life into one of death.

Per Oldfield, J.—Where the principle on which a Sessions Judge exercises his discretion is misconceived, a High Court can interfere in revision with that exercise of discretion.

The criminal revision case and the appeal (Criminal Appeal No. 269 of 1914) coming on for hearing on the 20th July 1914, upon perusing the appeal petition, the judgment of the lower Court and the records submitted in accordance with the proceedings of this Court, dated 21st April 1914, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. P. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar, Counsel, on behalf of the prisoner appointed under G. O., dated 17th December 1884, No. 3273, Judicial, and of Mr. J. C. Adam, for the Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Government, and the cases having stood over for consideration until the 28th of July 1914, the Court (Ayling and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—The accused in this case, a woman of 50 years of age, has been convicted of the murder of her grandson, a child of five, and sentenced to transportation for life. Against this conviction and sentence she appeals. The case has, at the same time, been taken up in revision under section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, by this Court, and accused has been called upon to show cause why she should not be sentenced to death.

The prosecution evidence shows that for some time prior to the date of the child's death, 1st December 1913, there had been acute ill-feeling in the family. Accused's son, the father of the child, had discarded his wife (Prosecution Witness No. 1) four years ago and had been living with a woman of another caste at Erode. Accused's husband, an old man of 70, taking pity on his destitute daughter-in-law, allowed her and her child to live in the family house and made some provision for her maintenance. This was fiercely resented by the son and by accused: and repeated quarrels ensued, going to the length of personal violence, and a petition by the old man to have his son bound over to keep the peace. Accused lived separately from her husband, for whom Prosecution Witness No. 1 had to cook. In May 1913, accused's husband executed documents alienating the bulk of his property, partly in favour of Prosecution Witness No. 1 and the deceased child and partly in favour of one of his daughters. It was after this that the ill-feeling became so acute that the Prosecution Witness No. 10 petitioned the Deputy Magistrate, and his son was warned by the Police. Matters appear to have got no better.

On the day of offence just before dawn, Prosecution Witness No. 1 went out of the house to get firewood leaving her child asleep on a cot. During her absence, accused entered the compartment of the house occupied by Prosecution Witness No. 1, and bolted herself in with the child. Screams were heard: the mother rushed back, and neighbours assembled. Accused refused to open the door, and forcibly resisted attempts to break in. The door was eventually burst open and the child was found lying dead, with a fractured skull and six stabs on the body penetrating the lung, liver, abdomen and intestines. Accused, and no one else, was in the room. The weapon used appears to have been a large heavy pointed file (M. O. II), which, according to the most credible evidence, was found struck in the earth of the floor.

We have the evidence of nine witnesses (Prosecution Witnesses Nos. 1 to 9) to the effect that accused was found in the room under the above circumstances. The evidence has been very fully and carefully discussed in the judgment of the Additional Sessions Judge, who has accepted, and acted upon it. I see no reason whatever to differ from him, and in fact very little argument on the correctness of the conviction was addressed to us by the learned Counsel who represented accused.

Her defence has been that the child either died a natural death, or was killed by some one else: and that on her return to the village that morning she was seized and tied up and the case concocted against her. No evidence is adduced in support of this story.

I have no hesitation whatever in confirming the conviction.

There remains the more difficult question of whether the sentence imposed is adequate, or whether it imperatively calls for enhancement. The atrocious nature of the crime will be apparent from the facts which I have set forth above. There seems to be no doubt that accused, who had long hated her daughter-in-law and resented her intrusion, had (in the words of the Additional Sessions Judge) worked herself up to a frenzy of hatred against her and, taking advantage of her absence, entered the house and murdered the innocent child with horrible cruelty. I have looked in vain for any extenuating circumstances. Accused has alleged immoral relations between her husband and Prosecution Witness No. 1. How far this, if true, could be taken in extenuation seems to me very doubtful; but there is not a particle of evidence to support the idea, which is most improbable. It is suggested that she may have been instigated by her son who paid her a visit the previous evening. This is pure surmise and, if true, would not materially assist her. It is suggested that she may have been anxious to recover the property alienated by the old man: but the murder would not have this effect, and however far she may have had an eye on this, it seems clear that blind and furious hatred against Prosecution Witness No. 1 and her child was the real dominating motive. There is evidence that she had on a previous occasion nearly suffocated the child: and, as has been seen, from first to last she has exhibited no sign of regret. Pleas of extenuating circumstances have been set up for, and not by, her.

The Additional Sessions Judge has refrained from imposing the extreme sentence on the sole ground that there is no direct evidence of her crime. It should be unnecessary to point out that this is no reason at all. The mere fact that the case rests on circumstantial and not direct evidence should not affect the sentence. If the evidence, whichever it be, leaves a reasonable doubt of the accused's guilt, the accused is entitled to acquittal. If it does not, the accused should receive an appropriate sentence. There are cases in which the absence of direct evidence may leave it open to doubt whether the crime may not have been committed in circumstances which would to some extent extenuate the accused's guilt and the doubt thus engendered may rightly affect the Court in determining the sentence to be imposed. But this is not such a case: the evidence adduced discloses enough of the circumstances of the crime to preclude the possibility of the existence of undisclosed extenuating circumstances.

The sex of the criminal and the lapse of time since the crime and the trial are the other circumstances which have been urged before us on behalf of accused.

Comparative lenity to women is a commonly accepted rule of pratice, though, needlest to say, not of law: but in dealing with an atrocious crime like this, I cannot admit that the mere sex of the criminal should bar the imposition of a sentence which would be considered appropriate in the case of a man.

There only remains the delay. The crime was committed on 1st December 1913. Accused was convicted on 23rd March 1914. The calendar of the case (including a printed copy of the judgment) was received in this Court on 14th April 1914. Three days later, the learned Judge of this Court, who perused the same, ordered the case to be taken up in revision, records to be called for and printed, and the case to be posted after notice to accused and the Public Prosecutor. The vacation began on May 3rd and it was, of course, impracticable to post the case before that. It would, in the ordinary course, have come before my learned brother and myself, sitting on the mid-vacation Bench, but it was apparently postponed in order that it might be dealt with in connection with the appeal which accused had filed, and which was received on 28th May 1914. Both have been heard together within a week of the re-opening of the Court.

It seems to me that there has been no undue delay in disposing of the matter. Sentimental objections may, no doubt, be urged against the substitution of a death sentence for one of transportation for life, which has been imposed by a competent Court in the exercise of its discretion. I fully appreciate these. But section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, specifically empowers this Court to enhance a sentence on revision. If these objections prevailed this power would be rendered nugatory, at any rate so far as murder cases are concerned: logically it is difficult to see why other cases should not stand on the same footing. This Court will, of course, always be reluctant to enhance a sentence particularly when it means imposing the extreme penalty of the law: but I do not think we should shrink from doing so when, as in the present case, the atrocious nature of the crime seems to call for it and where the original Court has been influenced in determining the sentence by a wholly wrong idea.

I have given very careful thought to this case: and it seems to me that if ever there was a case in which a death sentence was imperatively called for, it is this case.

I would, therefore, set aside the sentence of transportation for life and sentence accused to be hanged

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I agree that the conviction is right. It was a cruel murder. The immediate cause of the murder was the transferring to the deceased boy and his mother a good portion of his property by Prosecution Witness No. 10, the husband of the accused. This unnatural murder was, therefore, dictated by motives of spite and revenge. I do not agree with Mr. Adam that the object was to secure property. The appeal must be dismissed. I am of opinion that the case for enhancement of punishment should be dismissed as well. The Sessions Judge has applied his mind to the question of sentence and has come to the conclusion that the extreme penalty of the law should not be imposed. I see no sufficient reason for interfering with his discretion. I am not prepared to say that where a conviction is sustained purely on circumstantial evidence' that is not an element to be taken into account in determining the nature of the sentence, though by itself it may not be a sufficient ground for not passing the sentence of death. There are other considerations in this case. The accused is a woman. She is fifty years of age. It is now four months since she has been convicted. Each one of these circumstances may not by itself justify the reduction of the sentence. Taken together they are sufficient to justify me in holding that there is no ground for interfering with the discretion of the Sessions Judge. I would, therefore, reject the case for enhancement of sentence.

BY THE COURT.—In the result, the appeal is dismissed and the revision case referred for the orders of a third Judge.

This criminal revision case coming on for hearing under the provisions of section 429 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on the 14th August 1914 upon perusing the judgment in Criminal Appeal No. 269 of 1914 and Criminal Revision Case No. 273 of 1914 on the file of the High Court dismissing the criminal appeal and referring the criminal revision case for the orders of a third Judge, the record submitted in accordance with the proceedings of this Court, dated 21st April 1914, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. P. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar, Counsel, on behalf of the prisoner appointed under G. O., dated 17th December 1884, No. 3273 Judicial, and of Mr. J. C. Adam for the Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Government and the case having stood over for consideration till this day, Mr. Justice Oldfield delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The question is whether sentence of death should be passed on accused instead of the sentence of transportation for life, which she has already received. It comes before me in consequence of disagreement between two learned Judges.

The learned Sessions Judge in compliance with section 367 of the Criminal Procedure Code recorded his reason for not passing sentence of death in the words: - "I take into consideration the fact that there is no direct evidence of accused's crime;" that is, as I understand him, no evidence of any eye-witness of the act by which death was caused. It is not contended that this reason corresponds with any general rule, sanctioned by authority. Mr. Justice Ayling has given reasons, which I respectfully adopt, for holding that such a rule could have no sound foundation. I add that it would be useless in many cases, because, if the evidence of an eye-witness is available, it is not necessarily or apart from the indirect evidence, which corroborates it, the sole or chief ground for the Court's conclusion.

No doubt, as the same learned Judge observed, the fact that the evidence is indirect may legitimately affect the sentence in the circumstances of the particular case, as for instance by rendering admissible the possibility of extenuating facts or motives, which the accused cannot be expected to prove strictly. But that is not in question here. The exact motive for accused's act may be uncertain. But nothing has been alleged by her or suggested on her behalf, which could, if established, have afforded any sort of legal or moral justification. When the principle, on which the learned Sessions Judge statedly exercised his discretion, was misconceived, there can be no objection to interference with that exercise in revision.

The other matters relied on by accused's Counsel are the sex and age of accused and the delay of a little over four months between the judgment of the lower Court and the hearing here. Certainly they deserve consideration. But they must be weighed against the circumstances of the case. Mr. Justice Ayling has dealt with them fully, and I need not repeat his observations, in which I concur. The murder was, as both learned Judges held, most cruel and it was committed in Coimbatore, a district in which offences affecting life and against the person are too frequent. The case, therefore, is not one for leniency. After careful consideration I am constrained to agree with Mr. Justice Ayling as to the necessity for revision. The sentence of transportation must, therefore, be set aside. The accused is sentenced to be hanged.

Sentence of death passed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
CRIMINAL RULE No. 1136 OF 1914.
August 12, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Sharfuddin and Mr. Justice Teunon.
Thakur JANAKI NATH CHAKRAVARTI —PETITIONER
versus
JNANENDRA NATH CHAKRAVARTI—RECEIVER—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 188—Verbal order to remove obstruction, whether legal—Disobeying such order, whether offence—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 133, 137.

A verbal order to remove an obstruction has not the effect of a final order under section 137, Criminal Procedure Code, and is not lawful, and a person disobeying such an order is not guilty of an offence under section 188, Indian Penal Code.

Revision against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Gaibandha, dated 18th May 1914.

FACTS.—This was a Rule obtained by the petitioner calling upon the District Magistrate, Rangpur, to show cause why the proceedings taken against the petitioner under section 188, Indian Penal Code, at the instance of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Gaibandha should not be quashed. The proceedings were taken under the following circumstances:—

In 1908 there was a dispute between certain co-sharer zemindars about the levy of tolls at Gaibandha Bazar. A proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, was taken by the Sub-Divisional Officer who subsequently attached the land under section 146, Criminal Procedure Code, and appointed the opposite party a Receiver to levy tolls, although the zemindars continued to collect rent from the shops.

On 8th May 1914 the petitioner, a tenant of the zemindars, raised a hut in the Bazar. On 16th May 1914 the Receiver reported to the Sub-Divisional Officer of the raising of the hut and prayed for demolition thereof. On 18th May 1914, the Sub-Divisional Officer went to the spot and called upon the petitioner to pull down the hut, which the petitioner refused to do. The Sub-Divisional Officer flew into a rage and went away. On the same day the Sub-Divisional Officer issued a notice calling upon the petitioner to appear at 1 P.M. for trial under section 188, Indian Penal Code. The petitioner moved against this order and obtained this Rule.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri, Counsel, and Dr. Naresh Chandra Sen Gupta, in support of the Rule.

Mr. Chaudhuri.—The order which the petitioner disobeyed was not an order duly made and lawfully promulgated by a public servant.

[SHARFUDDIN, J.—The order cannot be justified either under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, as it was not a written order or under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, in a proceeding under Chapter X, as no conditional order seems to have been made.]

JUDGMENT.—In this case the proceedings have been taken against the petitioners under section 188, Indian Penal Code. They have been taken at the instance of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Gaibandha and the order which forms the subject-matter of the proceedings is a verbal order said to have been made by the Sub-Divisional Officer on the 18th May. From the explanation submitted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate he appears to be under the impression that he was acting under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, and that his verbal order had the effect of a final order made under section 137, Criminal Procedure Code. This is clearly erroneous and it, therefore, does not appear that there is in this case any lawful order which may appropriately form the subject-matter of a prosecution under section 188, Indian Penal Code. We, therefore, quash the proceedings and make the Rule absolute.

Rule made absolute.

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEALS NOS. 705 AND 791 OF 1914.

December 1, 1914.

Present:—Sir Charles Fox, KT., Chief Judge, and Mr. Justice Parlett.

NGA PO THEIN AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302—Accused's statement not incriminating himself, whether confession—Identification, when sufficient to convict—Grave suspicion, whether sufficient for conviction.

An accused's statement which does not incriminate himself, is not a confession and cannot be used against his co-accused.

Identification, unless conclusive, cannot be made the basis of a conviction, specially when the identifiers are nervously upset and do not mention the striking features of the accused in their first information.

The gravest suspicion against the accused will not suffice to convict them of a crime unless evidence establishes it beyond all doubt.

Appeal from the order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Toungoo, dated the 8th of September 1914, passed in Sessions Trial No. 68 of 1914.

JUDGMENT.

PARLETT, J.—Nga Po Thein and Nga Tun Tin have been convicted of murder and abetment of murder respectively and have been sentenced, the former, to death and, the latter, to transportation for life. They are relatives. Po Thein is 19 years of age and Tun Tin about 17, as is shown by his appearance, by his statement to the Magistrate the day after his arrest and by the defence evidence. In Court, however, he gave his age as 15.

Between 3 and 4 P.M., on the 14th April 1914, three Karen women were returning to their village, Pyinmanya. They were in single file, Ma Pa Le Bo in front, then Ma The Nu and Ma Dun E behind. At the edge of some jungle they met two men each with a da, who inquired whether they had seen any buffaloes; saying they had not, the women went on.

The plan filed shows that the women were going southwards and the men northwards. When Ma Pa Le Bo and Ma The Nu had gone, according to the plan, about 100 yards, they heard Ma Dun E call for help and turning round, they saw her only eleven yards behind them. The taller of the two men they had previously met was pulling her and cutting her with the da. Ma The Nu says they were struggling over a da and the man cut Ma Dun E over the head with it. The other man was standing close by. The witnesses at once started to run to their village, only some 600 yards away, and Ma Dun E came running after them calling out to wait for her to come up. She had a cut on her head and both her arms were nearly severed and she was unable to go far. Ma The Nu went to the village for help and she was taken in. She died after a few hours. The wound on the head was not of a very serious nature, but in the absence of surgical aid death from either of the severed arms was inevitable. Head constable Mg. Tun Zan from Intagaw Police Station two miles away went to the village and took Ma Pa Le Bo's report which, however, gives few details and does not mention that the men had previously met and accosted them. Tun Zan says both she and Ma The Nu seemed to be in a state of nervous collapse and said they were unable to recognise either of the men. The next day Sub-Inspector Mg. Maw took over the investigation. Upon questioning the two women they said they were completely upset and shaken and asked him to defer his examination of them and, as their faces showed him that they were much upset with fear, he did so.

Inquiry showed that two men had earlier on the afternoon of the crime been seen by some herdsmen on the road on which Ma Dun E was and about half a mile south of the scene of the crime. There is no satisfactory identification by any of them of either of the accused as one of the men they saw. On the 18th February, however, information was obtained from Mg. Po Ko of Kywepia village, about a mile south of the scene of the crime, that on the afternoon when it occurred he saw two men in his village, the taller of whom asked him if he had seen a buffalo. He had seen this man five days earlier at Mg. Twe's house in his own village. Mg. Twe stated that the man in question had given himself out as the son of one San Shun, whom he knew, and that he had come from Damathaik Pagoda festival. San Shun is the father of Nga Po Thein, first accused, and lives at Intagaw, two miles from the scene of crime, and Po Thein was known to Sub-Inspector Mg. Maw as he was formerly in the Police. On the same day Ma Po Le Bo and Ma The Nu were again examined by Mg. Maw and professed their ability to recognise Ma Dun E's assailants and gave some description of them.

On the 19th February it was learnt that Po Thein and 2nd accused, Tun Tin, a relative and close friend of his, had left their village to go and clear taungya. On the 20th Mg. Maw with two constables and several others found them cutting taungya with one Nga Hmat, but as soon as the party appeared the three ran away and escaped. Mg. Maw subsequently learnt that about 7 A. M. on the morning of the crime the two accused and seven other men were given a quart and a half of country spirit by Mg. Po Thaing of Intagaw whom they then assisted in winnowing his paddy, that about noon the two accused left saying they were going to Kywepia. It is not suggested that they were intoxicated and considering the number of men who shared the spirit and the interval that had elapsed since taking it, they can no longer have been appreciably under its influence.

On the 4th March Mg. Maw says he came upon Po Thein asleep in the jungle, but did not recognise him at once and he escaped before he could apprehend him. On the 23rd March Ma The Nyun's house in Intagaw was burnt down and near it was found a letter, Exhibit C, purporting to come from the two accused and to be signed by the first accused and threatening to murder three men in the village in revenge for villagers plotting to catch them. Mg. Myo, 12th P. W., whc professes to know Po Thein's handwriting and to identify it in two other letters, Exhibits D and F, which Po Thein admits that he wrote, says that Exhibit C is not in Po Thein's handwriting. He was not asked on what he based this opinion, nor did he point out how the handwriting in Exhibit C differed from that in Exhibits D and F. In my opinion the internal evidence of the three letters points strongly to their common authorship. If, however, Po Thein did write Exhibit C it only goes to show, as is sufficiently clear on other grounds, that all this time he and Tun Tin were in hiding in the vicinity. On the 5th April information was laid to the Police that the two accused had kidnapped a boy of the village, named San Chi, and had extorted a ransom of Rs. 200 for his release. They then left the neighbourhood. Po Thein's letters, Exhibits D and F, led to Tun Tin's arrest in Hsipaw in the Shan States at 6 P.M. on the 20th June and Po Thein's arrest on the following day. At 11 A.M., on the 21st June, Tun Tin made a long confession, Exhibit A, to a Magistrate. The gist of it, so far as this case is concerned, is that Po Thein accepted the liquor Po Thaing offered him and was drunk. After winnowing Po Thaing's paddy they went to the well in Pyinmangu village to bathe, then to the Damathaik Pagoda and then into the country. Po Thein said he was tired and wanted to sit down, the three Karen women came along Po Thein followed them while Tun Tin remained sitting. In a little while he heard a noise, stood up and saw Po Thein and a Karen woman struggling 50 yards off. Po Thein hit her with a da over the head once and came running towards him and they both ran into the jungle and subsequently went home. He now says that this confession is untrue and was made because Mg. Maw tutored him to do so. As the Sessions Judge points out, it does not incriminate Tun Tin himself and cannot be taken into account against Po Thein. I agree with him that it should be left out of consideration altogether. Both accused say that after finishing work at Po Thaing's threshing floor they returned to their homes in Intagaw and never went near the scene of crime at all. They pretend that they ran away from the taungya, not because they recognised the Police in the party but because they thought they were head-hunters who, they had heard, infested these jungles. Po Thein denies escaping from Mg. Maw a second time. They say they went to the Shan States to get work. Their defence evidence, if believed, only accounts for their presence in their village till 3 to 4 P.M. and is far too indefinite to establish the possibilty of their being at the scene of the crime when it was committed. On the 25th June the accused were brought to Pegu and on the 1st July a parade was held in the lock-up at which Ma Pa Le Bo and Po Ko identified both the accused. A month later Ma The Nu did the same. The convictions have been based upon the identifications by the two Karen women and upon the accused's conduct after the date of the crime. The Judge considered that the parade was fairly held, the Township officer being present, and that the women could not have seen them at any time between the 25th June and the 1st or in the case of Ma The Nu, the 31st of July. But proof of a meeting with the accused is not necessary to throw doubt on the identification. The possibility that they might have received a hint as to the personal appearance of the men arrested has certainly been in no way precluded. The Judge notes that "each accused has a peculiar cast of visage which no one could help remembering. Po Thein's eyes protrude and he has curiously emphasized features. Tun Tin has a very noticeable appearance and shape of head and face." This would lead one to expect that their features would impress themselves on the two women's memories when they first met and asked them about the buffaloes and before anything happened to shake their nerves. This meeting, it must be noted, is not mentioned in Ma Pa Le Bo's first information report made the same evening. Both of them said definitely that they would not remember the men if they saw them again. In Ma Pa Le Bo's case at any rate this cannot be attributed to mere nervousness, as she was then sufficiently collected to make a statement of considerable length to Mg. Tun Zan. The next day they told Mg. Maw that they were still too upset to answer any more questions or even to communicate the simple fact that they thought that they could identify the men.

This was not said till the 18th and the description then given was merely that one was tall and dark without a moustache and the other short. It contained no mention of the striking personality of either accused. It must be borne in mind that it was on this day that Po Ko and Mg. Twe gave their information, and since Mg. Maw as their fellow-villager knew the 1st accused, the son of San Shan, well and doubtless also his relative and close friend, Tun Tin, his suspicions must have been directed towards them at least from that day. The events of the next few days shewed every one who the suspects were. That the two Karen women should not learn their names is hardly to be supposed and it is easy to understand that they may have gathered some hint of what they were like.

Ma Pa Le Bo's conduct at the parade is described as follows: "She walked up and down 5 or 6 times before picking out the two accused. She said, 'These are like the men.'" Ma The Nu, no doubt, picked them out at once, but this was a whole month later. Ma Pa Le Bo's behaviour seems hardly like that of a woman upon whose memory the striking features of the two men had made an indelible impression. The Judge considered that the neurotic and highly strung temperaments of these women sufficiently explained their apparently strange behaviour. In view of Ma Pa Le Bo's first information report I doubt if this view can be accepted in her case. It appears to me, moreover, that if they were in fact so thoroughly scared by the occurrence that it took them four days to recover sufficiently to be able to say that they could recognise the men, they are not persons whose identification of those men made four to five months later can be relied upon.

As to the accused's conduct after the crime, it was, no doubt, such as might be expected from guilty persons; but it cannot be said that it is inconsistent with their innocence of this particular crime. Mg. Maw certainly suspected them from an early date and whether or not their journey to the jungle to cut taungya was induced by their knowledge of such suspicions, it is quite clear that they became cognisant of the fact that he was after them on the 20th February and however foolish it may have been on their part, it is at least intelligible that they should thereafter keep in hiding until suspicion was diverted from them or they could get away. The charge of kidnapping and extortion made against them on the 5th April is sufficient explanation of their absconding to the Shan States.

In my opinion though there may be the gravest suspicion against the two accused of having committed this crime, it cannot be said that the evidence establishes it against them beyond reasonable doubt.

I would reverse the convictions and sentences and acquit both the accused.

FOX, C. J.—I concur.

Conviction reversed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.
CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 493 OF 1914
CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 625 OF 1914.
(TAKEN UP No. 34 OF 1914.)
November 16, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Ayling and
Mr. Justice Kumarasawmy Sastri.
MUNIANDI alias MUNISWAMY NAIDU —APPELLANT
versus
EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302—Murder—Circumstantial evidence—Death sentence—Age of accused, whether to be considered in imposition of death sentence.

Where the appellant was found guilty of having murdered a child of eight years, and the Sessions Judge who tried him imposed a sentence of transportation for life, having regard to his youth and to the fact that the evidence was purely circumstantial:

Held, that in the circumstances of the case the High Court was not prepared to interfere with the sentence.

There is no rule or principle of law which prohibits the imposition of a death sentence in cases where the evidence is purely circumstantial.

Per Ayling, J.—Where the Court is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, the fact that the evidence is circumstantial and not direct, is not a factor which should per se affect the sentence.

Per Kumaraswamy Sastri, J.—A consideration of the species of evidence on which the guilt of an accused is found should not of itself determine the nature of the evidence.

Circumstantial evidence like any other must, in every case, be tested and weighed and prevail or not by its own inherent proving force.

Queen-Empress v. Sami, 13 M. 426; 1 Weir 290, referred to.

Per Ayling and Kumaraswamy Sastri, JJ.—Age of the accused is a factor which ought to be taken into consideration in determining the sentence to be imposed.

Emperor v. Jasha Bewa, 11 C. W. N. 904; 6 Cr. L. J. 154, followed.

Appeal against the order of the Court of Session of the Ramnad Division at Madura in Case No. 21 of the Calendar for 1914.

FACTS.—The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. K. Mahadeva Iyer, for the Appellant:—The evidence is wholly circumstantial and no conviction can be safely based thereon. Further, the sentence cannot be enhanced. See In re Vemulada Janaki (1) and Queen-Empress v. Sami (2). In any event the age of the accused ought to be taken into consideration. Emperor v. Jasha Bewa (3).

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown:—The fact that evidence is circumstantial is no ground for not acting upon it or not awarding the extreme sentence (Wills on Circumstantial Evidence, 6th Edition, page 49). The murder in the present case is a cold-blooded one and deserves the extreme penalty of the law.

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—I have had the advantage of perusing the judgment of my learned brother, and as regards the conviction need only say that I entirely agree with him that accused's guilt has been proved beyond all reasonable doubt and that the conviction must be confirmed.

(1) 2 Weir 736.
(2) 13 M. 426; 1 Weir 290.
(3) 11 C. W. N. 904; 6 Cr. L. J. 154.

It is only as regards the sentence that I feel constrained to add a few words.

The crime in this case was of the most atrocious character. The victim was a little girl of eight who, as the Sessions Judge says, had been a constant visitor to the accused's house and had been made a pet of by accused and his wife. This child was cruelly murdered by accused for the sake of her gold necklace and other ornaments—the most sordid of motives for a most inhuman act. On the face of it, it is difficult to imagine a case calling more imperatively for the extreme penalty allowed by law.

The Sessions Judge has refrained from it for two reasons: (1) the circumstantial nature of the evidence, (2) the youth of the accused who is said to be aged 18.

As regards the first, speaking with all respect to expressions of opinion to the contrary, it seems to me no reason at all. I am aware that eminent Judges of this and other Courts have been averse to imposing or confirming death sentences where the evidence is purely circumstantial, but I have never seen a case in which any Judge has laid down any principle for the guidance of others that such a sentence should not be imposed. The Sessions Judge says: "In Referred Trial 25 of 1886 No. Kernan, J., has laid down the rule that in cases where the evidence is circumstantial, it is not safe to pass the extreme sentence of death." A reference to the report [given in In re Vemulada Janaki (1)] shows that the learned Judge did nothing of the kind. He expressed it as his individual opinion, but was very careful to add that he quite agreed with Brandt, J., that no rule to that effect could be laid down. Brandt, J., in the very same case, has most lucidly set forth what in my humble judgment is the correct view, that where the Court is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, the fact that the evidence is circumstantial and not direct, is not a factor which should per se affect the sentence. I had occasion to consider the same point in a recent case* and am glad to be fortified in my view by the opinion of Oldfield, J.

I do not wish to say anything which might be interpreted as fettering the discretion of Judges of original Courts in deciding which of the sentences allowable under section 302, Indian Penal Code, should be imposed: but I feel bound to express dissent from the view, which seems to be somewhat commonly held, that there is any unwritten rule or principle standing in the way of the imposition of a death sentence in cases where the evidence is purely circumstantial.

The second point, that of age, is undoubtedly one which no Court should leave out of consideration in determining the sentence to be imposed. Whether in the present case accused's youth is such as to outweigh the aggravated circumstances of a crime is a very difficult question. I may go so far as to say that if the Sessions Judge in the exercise of his discretion had imposed a death sentence, I should have been opposed to reducing it. But the substitution of a death sentence for one of transportation is a measure which must always be undertaken with reluctance; and having regard to the view taken by my learned brother I do not feel bound to differ and to necessitate a reference to a third Judge. I would, therefore, confirm both the conviction and sentence in this case.

KUMARASAWMY SASTRI, J.—The appellant has been found guilty of having murdered a girl of eight years for the sake of her jewels and sentenced to transportation for life. Both the assessors found him guilty and the Sessions Judge agreeing with them imposed the lesser penalty on the ground of the youth of the accused (who is about 18 years) and the circumstantial nature of the evidence. The accused appeals against this conviction and he has been called upon to show cause why the sentence should not be altered into one of death.

* Reference appears to be In re Rasammal, 26 Ind. Cas. 324; 16 Cr. L. J. 29—Ed.

There can be little doubt that the girl Pethammal, who was residing with her parents at Virudupatti (where the accused also lives), was murdered and that her dead body was found in a trunk at Madura. The medical evidence shows that death was caused by a wound on the neck and there is absolutely nothing to support the suggestion made at the trial that the wound was caused after death.

The evidence adduced by the prosecution shows (1) that the girl came to the house of the accused on the day she disappeared and was last seen there; (2) that there were blood stains in a room in the house; (3) that the accused went to Madura with the trunk M. O. and was arrested at Madura Railway Station that night; (4) that while in Madura the accused sold a gold saradu belonging to the deceased girl; (5) that the body of the murdered girl was found in Madura inside the trunk M. O.; (6) that the trunk in which the body of the girl was found and the blood-stained knife and veshti belonged to the accused.

I agree with the Sessions Judge in holding that there is absolutely no ground for disbelieving the evidence given by the wife of the accused, who is a girl 14 years old. Her evidence puts it beyond doubt that the accused and the deceased girl were in the room shortly before the accused left the house with the trunk in which the body of the girl was found. The accused himself took the Police to the person to whom he had disposed of the jewel worn by the girl. On this part of the case there is no explanation why the accused went to Madura or how he came by the jewel of the deceased girl. I have gone through the evidence carefully and am unable to come to any other conclusion than that the accused was rightly convicted.

The question as to the sentence to be passed is one that presents considerable difficulty. The learned Sessions Judge who has written a very careful and considered judgment has, after taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration, sentenced the accused to transportation for life. The accused is only 18 years old and the evidence is mainly circumstantial.

These facts have often been taken into consideration in passing sentences for murder and cases have occurred where the High Court has refrained from passing the death sentence even in cases of deliberate murder. In Queen-Empress v. Sami (2) Justices Shephard and Muthusami Iyer were of opinion that the fact that the evidence of guilt was wholly circumstantial, justified them in sentencing the accused to transportation for life. A similar view was taken by Justice Kernan in In re Vemulada Janaki (1). Mr. Justice Brandt, however, rightly points out in the above case that a consideration of the species of evidence on which the guilt of an accused is found should not of itself determine the nature of the sentence.

I do not desire it to be understood that the Court is bound in every case to pass the lesser sentence when the evidence is circumstantial. The following passage in Wills on Circumstantial Evidence (page 49 of the 6th edition by Justice Wills) is in point " * * * * For sometime back it has been the fashion with a great many people to treat 'purely circumstantial evidence' as implying an inherent weakness and as necessarily more or less unsatisfactory. There is hardly a case of murder in which a reprieve is sought or a conviction appealed against in which something of the kind is not urged. Fortunately there has been no recent judicial utterance countenancing such a general proposition, and the Judges have been fully alive to the fact that circumstantial evidence, like any other, must in every case be tested and weighed, and prevail or not by its own inherent proving force."

If the case rested only on the circumstantial nature of the evidence I would in the present case enhance the sentence. I am, however, of opinion that the age of the accused is a fact that might well be taken into consideration in determining what sentence is to be passed in cases of murder. In Emperor v. Jasha Bewa (3) age was held to be a sufficient ground for passing the lesser sentence even when the accused is guilty of a deliberate and heinous murder. I do not think that in the present case any exceptional circumstances exist which make it desirable that I should in the exercise of the revisional powers of the High Court interfere with the discretion exercised by the Sessions Judge.

I confirm the conviction and sentence and dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
CRIMINAL RULE No. 1701 OF 1914.
November 20, 1914.
Present:—Sir Lawrence Jenkins, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Teunon.
GULLI SAHU—PETITIONER
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Extradition Act (XV of 1903), ss. 7 (2), 15—Execution of warrant by District Magistrate—Revisional power of High Court—Habeas Corpus—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 491.

Where a warrant is issued by a Political Agent under section 7 of the Indian Extradition Act, its execution by a District Magistrate in accordance with the Act is an executive act and the High Court has no power to interfere in the exercise of its revisional powers. There is nothing in this view which in any way conflicts with the power of the High Court to interfere otherwise than by way of revision. Thus, the power of the Court to interfere under section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code is untouched by this decision.

If a fugitive criminal arrested under section 7 of the Indian Extradition Act considers himself aggrieved, he can invoke the action of the Government under section 5 of the same Act.

Messrs. B. Chakravarti, K. N. Chaudhuri, Counsel, and Babu Rajendra Prasad, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sultan Ahmed, Counsel, (Deputy Legal Remembrancer), and Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterjee, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, Gulli Sahu, has obtained a Rule calling in question the legality of his arrest under the Indian Extradition Act of 1903. The Rule was granted with some hesitation, for great doubt was felt as to the Court's jurisdiction to interfere in the exercise of its revisional powers. This doubt was well-founded. The powers of the Act were set in motion by the Political Agent in and for the State of Nepal who issued a warrant addressed to the District Magistrate of Darbhanga for the arrest of the applicant, Gulli Sahu, and his delivery as in the warrant described.

The applicant is a Nepalese subject who had fled from Nepal to British territory. The case against him is that he has committed or is supposed to have committed murder and that is an extradition offence. The proceedings thus fell within section 7 of the Act. Sub-section 1 empowers a Political Agent to issue a warrant addressed to a District Magistrate for the arrest of a person by whom an offence has been committed or is supposed to have been committed. Sub-section 2 provides that the warrant so issued shall be executed in the manner provided by the law for the time being in force with reference to the execution of warrants.

It has not been suggested that we should or could revise what was done by the Political Agent; but we have been asked to interfere with the proceedings of the District Magistrate in British India. But the District Magistrate's sole function was to execute the warrant, and notwithstanding his eccentric procedure and pronouncement, this in effect is what he has done. And as in so doing he performed in accordance with his legal duty an executive act, we have no power to interfere in the exercise of our revisional powers. That this is the true effect of the Indian Extradition Act, 1903, is, we think, apparent from an examination of its scheme. Chapter II of the Act deals with the surrender of fugitive criminals in the case of Foreign States, and where a requisition is made for such surrender the Government may issue an order to a Magistrate to inquire into the crime. The method of inquiry is described, and a power to commit the fugitive criminal to prison to await the orders of the Government or to release him on bail is vested in the Magistrate.

Then it is enacted that the Magistrate shall report the result of his inquiry to the Government, and a power is given to the Government to refer to the High Court any important question of law. But it rests with the Government to decide as to the surrender of the fugitive criminal, and section 15 empowers the Government to stay proceedings under the Chapter and to direct any warrant issued under it to be cancelled and the person for whose arrest a warrant has been issued to be discharged.

KANAKUYYA v. EMPEROR.

Chapter III, on the other hand, deals with the surrender of fugitive criminals in case of States other than Foreign States. Nepal is such a State, so that it is with this Chapter that we are concerned. In cases falling under this Chapter a similar procedure is prescribed where proceedings are initiated by a Political Agent. In that case no inquiry is directed and the determination of the Political Agent is regarded as sufficient, subject to the Government's power of interference under section 15.

Where, however, a State, not being a Foreign State, itself makes a requisition for the surrender of an accused person, then the procedure of section 3, which is in Chapter II, is prescribed. including the inquiry and report by the Magistrate. An examination of the whole Act and a comparison of its provisions confirm the view that where a warrant is issued by a Political Agent under section 7, its execution by the District Magistrate in accordance with the Act is an executive act and the Court cannot interfere in revision with such execution. There is nothing in this view which in any way conflicts with the power of the Court to interfere otherwise than by way of revision. Thus the power of the Court to interfere under section 491 is untouched by this decision, for that is a power not created by the Extradition Act or exercisable by way of revision but vested in Presidency Courts to protect the liberty of the subject in appropriate cases, whatever may be the occasion of deprivation of which complaint is made.

If a fugitive criminal arrested under section 7 of the Indian Extradition Act considers himself aggrieved, he can invoke the action of the Government under section 15. This Court, however, has no power of revision and so the Rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 639 OF 1914.
CASE REFERRED No. 63 OF 1914.
October 30, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield.

KANUKAYYA AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED
versus
EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR.

Reformatory Schools Act (VIII of 1897), s. 9 (1) (2)—Magistrate not empowered under s. 8 of Act—Procedure—Case to be submitted to District Magistrate and not to his immediate Appellate Magistrate.

A second class Magistrate, not empowered to act under section 8 of the Reformatory Schools Act (VIII of 1897), should after convicting the accused, submit the case to the District Magistrate for passing sentence under section 9 (2) of the Act, and not to the joint Magistrate to whom the second class Magistrate may be immediately subordinate.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the District Magistrate of Kistna, in his letter dated 1st September 1914.

ORDER.—The procedure in the lower Courts was clearly wrong. The joint Magistrate's order under section 9 (2), Act VII of 1897, must be set aside.

The case is remanded to the second class Sub-Magistrate of Bezwada, in order that he may convict first and third accused and either sentence them or submit their case under section 9 (1) to the District Magistrate with a record of his opinion that they are proper persons to be inmates of a reformatory school. If he takes the latter course, the District Magistrate will then, after sentencing them, pass an order under section 9 (2), if so advised.

Case remanded.

AZHIMANILA VEETTIL KANNU PILLAI v. KAYINARI GOPALAN NAIR.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 3 OF 1913.

October 23, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

AZHIMANILA VEETTIL KANNU PILLAI—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANT

versus

KAYINARI GOPALAN NAIR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, rr. 2, 5—Pleading—Construction—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 58—Malabar Law—Chetties, whether governed by Malabar Law.

Per Tyabji, J.—Whether or not a matter is open upon the proceedings sufficiently to give the Court the right to form a judgment upon it, must be dependent upon the particular facts and upon the allegations in, and form of, the pleadings.

Pleadings should be regarded with the following considerations:

(1) Allowance must be made for a very inaccurate mode of setting forth the claims of persons and the answers or defences to them.

(2) The responsibility of clearly perceiving and raising points, which arise upon the pleadings and the evidence and the proper adjudication of which is essential for the ends of justice, rests on the Court as much as on the parties or their Pleaders.

(3) The Court must look, not to the mere wording of the plaint, but to the issue which was settled for trial and to the manner in which the case was treated in the lower Courts.

(4) Courts do not exist for the sake of discipline, but for the sake of deciding matters in controversy.

Sayad Muhammad v. Fatteh Muhammad, 22 C. 324 at p. 331; 22 I. A 4; H. H. The Nawab Nazim of Bengal v. Amrao Begum, 21 W. R. 59 at p. 60; Natha Singh v. Jodha Singh, 6 A. 406; A. W. N. (1884) 140; Kunj Behari v. Keshav Lal, 28 B. 567 at p. 572; 6 Bom. L. R. 475; Ganoo v. Sidheshwar, 26 B. 360; 4 Bom. L. R. 58; Apaya v. Rama, 3 B. 210 at p. 213; Chowdhri Murtaza Hussein v. Bechunnissa, 3 I. A. 209 at p. 215; 26 W. R. 10; Nathu Bhai v. Mulchand, 3 Bom. L. R. 535; Rajah Rup Singh v. Rani Baisni, 7 A. 1 at 11; 11 I. A. 149; Cropper v. Smith, (1884) 26 Ch. D. 710; 53 L. J. Ch. 891; 51 L. T. 733; 33 W. R. 60; Dhani Ram v. Bhagirath, 22 C. 692 at p. 712; Madhopersad v. Gajadhar, 11 C. 111; 11 I. A. 186 (P. C.); 8 Jur. 694; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 574; Rafique and Jackson's P. C. No. 85, referred to.

Per Oldfield, J.—Where the parties are Chetties residing in Malabar, the Malabar Law is not applicable to them in the absence of a special allegation that it is so.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Calicut, in Appeal Suit No. 170 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Calicut, in Original Suit No. 54 of 1911.

Mr. T. R Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—This second appeal turns primarily on whether the learned Subordinate Judge was entitled to deal with it on the basis that 3rd defendant was entitled to half the plaint property or the equity of redemption over it, as transferee from one Thangamma. That is whether plaintiff's transferor Ammu Amma, widow of Ayyavu Chetty, and Thangamma, widow of Ayyavu's brother, Kutty Chetty, were entitled to it jointly, Ayyavu having admittedly died last.

As my learned brother proposes to confirm the Subordinate Judge's decision on this point, I deal only shortly with the argument addressed to us that the parties went to trial on the basis of Ayyavu's sole ownership of the property at his death and that the decision was to be given in accordance with the ordinary Hindu Law. If these two contentions are correct, Thangamma, widow of a deceased co-pareener, could have had no right to the property, whatever the method by which Ayyavu acquired it, and no interest in it after her husband's death except by way of maintenance. The position with reference to them is to be gathered from the issues and 3rd defendant's written statement. The former do not in any degree support the 3rd defendant. The latter contains no suggestion that the property was acquired by Kutty Chetty, Thangamma herself or any one except Ayyavu. It further contains no suggestion that the ordinary Hindu Law is inapplicable to the parties. They are Chetties and though they reside in Malabar, I have been shown no authority for an assumption that the Malabar Law is applicable to them in the absence of a special allegation that it is so. An attempt has been made to supply the place of such an assumption by reference solely to the use of an expression in the Malayalam written statement, which can, we are informed, be translated either "heir" or "representative" of Ayyavu. But I cannot see my way to treat this as equivalent to the putting foward of a plea which should have been advanced in explicit terms. That plea was no doubt put forward before the District Munsif, but only in argument and in consequence of certain loose and evidently worthless statements in the cross-examination of one of plaintiff's witnesses. Of this surprise plaintiff has every right to complain. The case is, in my opinion, simply one of a title alleged, intentionally and owing to uncertainty regarding its nature, in indefinite and ineffective language, and I think that the District Munsif was right in treating the attempt to particularise it after plaintiff's first witness's very questionable evidence, as an afterthought. I would, therefore, allow the appeal.

As my learned brother's judgment confirming the lower Appellate Court's decision on this point must prevail, I have no objection to the modification he proposes in the decree. In supersession of the lower Appellate Court's decree plaintiff must be given a decree for the redemption of a half share of the property. Time will be three months. He will, of course, have to obtain actual possession by means of a partition suit. Proportionate costs throughout will be allowed.

TYABJI, J.—The plaintiff sues to redeem a kanom mortgage, which was assigned to the 2nd defendant and by him to the 3rd defendant. The contest is between the plaintiff and the third defendant. The latter claims to be an assignee also of the equity of redemption of a moiety of the property. The plaintiff resists the 3rd defendant's claim to a moiety of the equity of redemption on the ground that the 3rd defendant's predecessor-in-title, one Thangamma, had no interest in the property. Thangamma (the predecessor-in-title of the 3rd defendant, and Ammu Amma (the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff) were widows of two brothers, Kutty Chetty and Ayyavu Chetty, respectively. Kutty Chetti predeceased his brother Ayyavu.

The question, therefore, is whether the plaintiff is entitled to the whole property subject to the mortgage and as such entitled to redeem the whole of it, or whether the 3rd defendant is entitled to a moiety of the property and to resist the plaintiff's suit to that extent. This depends upon Thangamma's title to a moiety of the property and that again upon whether Ayyavu Chetty, was sole owner of the property (as the Munsif held) or whether (as the Subordinate Judge held) Ayyavu Chetti and his brother's widow, Thangamma, were each interested in the jenm title of the property as members of a tarwad. According to the Munsif, Thangamma as the widow of a deceased co-parcener was entitled only to maintenance as against Ayyavu Chetty or his widow.

The point on which the two lower Courts in fact differ is as regards the weight to be given to the evidence tending to show either that Ayyavu Chetty was a follower of the Marumakatayam System, or that he followed the ordinary Hindu Law. This evidence is referred to in paragraph 7 of the Munsif's judgment and paragraphs 9 and 10 of the Subordinate Judge's judgment.

It is argued before us that the Subordinate Judge's finding in favour of the 3rd defendant is opposed to his written statement in which it is alleged that Thangamma "was an heir of the deceased Ayyavu Chetty." The expression "heir" is a translation, I am informed, of the Malayalam word which (as appears from the dictionary) is not of very precise significance and does not necessarily preclude the idea of Thangamma having been entitled to the property jointly with Ayyavu in his life-time. The other paragraphs of the written statement, however, seem to me to make it sufficiently clear that Thangamma and Ammu were alleged by the written statement to stand on a footing of equality, which could not be if one was the widow of the last male owner and the other of a person whose interest in the property had devolved upon a co-parcener. The sixth paragraph of the written statement refers to the "conduct of the plaintiff," which is evidenced by the documents referred to in the said paragraphs of the Subordinate Judge's judgment.

What has, therefore, to be decided by us may be thus formulated—adapting the words of Lord Halsbury:—Whether the question that Ayyavu Chetty was not the sole owner of the property, "was open upon the proceedings sufficiently to give each Court below the right to form a judgment upon the matter." Sayad Muhammad v. Fatteh Muhammad (1). In that case their Lordships' answer was in the affirmative, though the contention taken before them (viz. "the question of the capacity of the Diwan") "was not prominently raised, at all events in the first instance."

(1) 22 C. 324 at p. 331; 22 I. A. 4. (P. C.).

Whether or not a matter is "open upon the proceedings sufficiently to give the Court the right to form a judgment upon it" must, it is evident, be dependant upon the particular facts and upon the allegations in, and form of, the pleadings. As my learned brother takes a view different from mine, it is necessary to refer to the authorities by which I am bound to guide myself.

In a case already cited, Lord Halsbury delivering the opinion of the Privy Council says: "Whatever system of pleading may exist, the sole object of it is that each side may be fully alive to the questions that are about to be argued, in order that they may have an opportunity of bringing forward such evidence as may be appropriate to the issues."

This being the object of pleadings, I must allude to four considerations which are beyond controversy: (1) "Allowance must be made for, what our experience tells us exists here, a very inaccurate mode of setting forth the claims of persons and the answers or defences to them. It would be quite incorrect to look at a plaint in these Courts in the same manner as a declaration in an English Court." H. H. The Nawab Nazim of Bengal v. Amrao Begum (2). These words of Sir Richard Couch, C. J., were cited and followed in Natha Singh v. Jodha Singh (3). See also Kunj Behari v. Keshav Lal (4) (Jenkins, C. J., and Betty, J.), Ganoo v. Sidheshwar (5).

(2) "The responsibility of clearly perceiving and raising points, which arise upon the pleadings and the evidence and the proper adjudication of which is essential for the ends of justice, rests on the Court as much as on the parties or their Pleaders." See the observations of Westropp, C. J., in Apaya v. Rama (6) and of the Privy Council in Chowdhri Murtaza Hussein v. Bechunnissa (7); Sayad Muhammad v. Fatteh Muhammad (1); per Chandavarkar, J., delivering the judgment of himself and Jenkins, C.J., in Nathu Bhai v. Mulchand (8). See also Ganoo v. Sidheshwar (5).

(3) It would seem to follow, therefore, that in regard to the construction of pleadings the primary (though not the only) consideration is, not so much what a careful draftsman would intend to express if he had used the words in question, nor what meaning the Court or the opposite party ought to have put on these words, but in what sense, as a matter of fact, the words were understood. The Court "must look not to the mere wording of the plaint, but to the issue which was settled for trial, and to the manner in which the case was treated in the lower Courts:" Rajah Rup Singh v. Rani Baisni (9). See also Chowdhri Murtaza Hussien v. Bechunnissa (7).

(4) "Courts do not exist," said Bowen, L. J., "for the sake of discipline, but for the sake of deciding matters in controversy: Cropper v. Smith (10). This was cited and followed by Bannerji, J., in Dhani Ram v. Bhagirath (11) and Norris, J., "entirely concurred with his observations" (page 706). Bowen, L. J., in Cropper v. Smith (10) was dissenting from his colleagues. But the difference in the views of the learned Judges does not seem to have been based on any difference as to the principle in question.

The principles of decision that are applicable cannot indeed be disputed. The difficulty lies in applying them. I will for this purpose refer to Sayad Muhammad v. Fateh Muhammad (1) and Chowdhri Murtaza Hussein v. Bechunnissa (7), which I have already cited, and to a third Privy Council decision, Madhopersad v. Gajadhar (12).

In the case last cited, the plaintiff could not obtain proprietary possession as claimed by him, unless he proved (1) consideration, (2) notice of foreclosure. The District Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit. In appeal the Judicial Commissioner decided both points against the plaintiff. The Privy Council did not accept the Judicial Commissioner's

(2) 21 W. R 59 at p. 60.
(3) 6 A. 406; A. W. N. (1884) 140.
(4) 28 B. 567 at p. 572; 6 Bom. L. R. 475.
(5) 26 B 360; 4 Bom L. R. 58.
(6) 3 B. 210 at p. 213.
(7) 3 I. A. 209 at p. 215; 26 W. R. 10.
(8) 3 Bom. L R 535.
(9) 7 A. 1 at p 11; 11 I A 149.
(10) (1884) 26 Ch D 700; 53 L. J. Ch. 891; 51 L. T. 733; 33 W. R 60.
(11) 22 C. 692 at p. 712
(12) 11 C. 111; 11 I. A. 186 (P. C); 8 Ind. Jur. 694; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 574; Rafique and Jackson's P. C. No. 85.

finding as to the absence of consideration (page 116): "It was contended on the part of the appellant that, inasmuch as the defendants had in the Court below rested their case solely on the absence of consideration for the mortgage and had admitted in their written statement that they received some notice of foreclosure, and no issue as to the validity of the foreclosure had been raised in the Court of the District Judge, the defendants were precluded from questioning the regularity of the foreclosure proceedings before the Judicial Commissioner, although they took the point in their grounds of appeal; and that the Commissioner had no power to inquire into those proceedings:" pages 116 and 117. Their Lordships held that section 8 of Regulation VII of 1806 imperatively required notice, and then said at page 118: "To construe the pleadings in the District Court, as a binding admission that the respondents had received due notice, according to the Regulation of 1806, in the foreclosure proceedings, would be to apply to pleadings in India a stricter construction than is usual. The Judicial Commissioner had the subject brought before him by the grounds of appeal; he had power to take additional evidence, or to frame a new issue, which it is to be presumed that he would have done had it been necessary, and had the parties desired it. In their Lordships' judgment he had, at the least, a discretion to inquire into the subject if he thought fit, and they are not prepared to say that he exercised that discretion so wrongly that his judgment ought to be reversed. Although the Vakil for the mortgagors appeared before the Judicial Commissioner, argued the question of foreclosure, and adduced evidence upon it, it does not appear that any application was made for the settlement of an issue on this question, nor was it suggested, nor is it now suggested, that further evidence of the regularity of the foreclosure proceedings was obtainable."

On such a point as I am considering, no two cases can be on all fours. I note, for instance, that in the case last cited the fact which the plaintiff had to prove was, by the Regulation, "imperatively prescribed as a condition precedent" to the plaintiff's suit. In the present case it was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's success to show that Ayyavu Chetty, his predecessor-in-title, was sole owner of the property. There is no doubt a distinction between the two cases and Order VII, rule 5, was not a part of the Civil Procedure Code when the case of Madhopersad v. Gajadhar (12) was being considered by the Privy Council. But the question is, how the written statement should be construed for the purpose of Order VIII, rules 2—5, and section 58 of the Indian Evidence Act. On this question it seems to me that the cases I have cited are a sufficient guidance.

In this particular case I find nothing to indicate that the plaintiff was in any way taken by surprise: Order VIII, rule 2. No objection is shown to us as having been taken to evidence being adduced on the point. Both the lower Courts considered it, and the District Munsif decided it in favour of the plaintiff, the Subordinate Judge against him. The grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court fully and explicitly cover it. Had the objection been taken to its being raised in the first Court or had either of the lower Courts itself drawn the attention of the parties to the statement in question [See Nathu Bhai v. Mulchand (8) and the cases above cited], such amendment as might have been "necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties," might have been allowed or ordered: Order VI, rule 17.

It seems to me for these reasons that the appellant cannot succeed on the contention that the question of whether Ayyavu Chetty was sole owner could not have been considered by the lower Appellate Court.

The only other question argued before us was that assuming that the point was open for consideration, Exhibits I, II and III are of no avail to the defendant, because they are consistent with the plaintiff's case, Thangammal having been made to join in them for greater caution. The point is one for the consideration of a Court adjudicating upon facts. It cannot be said that there was no evidence on which the Subordinate Judge could have found as he did; and I do not understand the appellant to contend before us that there was no evidence for the finding.

While, however, the lower Appellate Court's findings of fact must, in my opinion, prevail, I do not think that the dismissal of the suit was the proper decree to make. The 3rd defendant "offered to partition and surrender one-half of the lands on receipt of the half of the kanom amount" (paragraph 5 of his written statement). The decree should, therefore, in my opinion, have provided for redemption on those terms and ought to be amended to that effect. The plaintiff will have three months for payment. The parties will have their proportionate costs throughout.

Decree modified.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1100 OF 1909.

May 2, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shah Din.

AMAR SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

BHOLA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Adverse possession -Title, proof of—Burden of proof—Revenue Records, entry in—Boundary dispute, proceedings in—Title, test of.

In a suit for possession it is for the party who comes into Court to oust the other party to establish the alleged superior title.

The proceedings of a Revenue Court demarcating the boundary lines of villages are not the only test of title to any land included in a village.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Jullundur Division, dated the 19th July 1909, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Jullundur, dated the 31st March 1909, dismissing plaintiffs' claim.

Mr. Santanam, for the Appellants.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and it is unnecessary to repeat them here. The Counsel for the appellants has contended that the Divisional Judge is wrong in stating that the plots in dispute, 41 kanals 4 marlas and 67 kanals 8 marlas, had gone over to the Domeli side as the result of avulsion, and I find that there is no satisfactory evidence on the record in support of the Divisional Judge's view on this point. The Subordinate Judge says that the land on both sides of the nala is subject to the action of the water and used to disappear from one side and re-appear on the other by a gradual and imperceptible process, but that in no case did the land ever go from one side to the other by avulsion in the shape of a gatti. Counsel for the repondents has been unable to show that the Divisional Judge has stated the facts correctly on this point.

It has been further urged by the appellants' Counsel that the Divisional Judge has misunderstood his clients' position and the decision of the Subordinate Judge when he says that the principal plea advanced by the defendants is one of adverse possession and that the Subordinate Judge seems to have dismissed the suit mainly on this ground.

What the appellants substantially pleaded in the first Court was that the land in suit had for the last 50 years formed part of their village Domeli and been in their possession as owners, though they also pleaded that if the respondents were proved to have been the owners of the land, they had lost their ownership by reason of adverse possession on the part of the appellants.

The record shows that the appellants have been in possession of the land in suit ever since it has been brought under cultivation, i.e., for a period of between 20 to 30 years, and in the Settlement Records of the Kapurthala State of the years 1872-73 and 1891-92, the appellants have been recorded as owners of the land. So far as the Settlement Records of the Jullundur District are concerned, although both the plots in suit were apparently entered as part of the Musapur Estate in the first Settlement of 1850-51, in the revised Settlement of 1884-85 the plot of 67 kanals and 8 marlas was not so shown. Of the plot of 41 kanals 4 marlas, one-half was shown as banjar in the Settlement of 1884-85 and belonging to the proprietors of Musapur, but the possession of the cultivated portion has always remained with the appellants.

The appellants having been in possession of the whole land for a long series of years, it is for the respondents, who have come into Court as plaintiffs and who want to oust the appellants from their possession, to establish their alleged superior title. They rely in support of their title upon the demarcation of the boundary line between the two villages by the Revenue Officers of the Jullundur District and of the Kapurthala State in 1905, but the boundary line as fixed by those officers was not accepted as correct by the appellants, and it is not the only test of title to the land in dispute, as held by the Divisional Judge. It is not even the best test of title, because it is not quite clear from the proceedings of the Revenue Officers of the Jullundur District and the Kapurthala State on what data their decision was based and what authority they had for coming to a decision so as to settle the question of title to the land, which had been debatable ground between the two villages for a long series of years, but of which the possession had all along remained with the appellants.

SHUJA-UD-DIN v. AISHABI.

I hold that the plaintiffs have failed to prove their title to the land in dispute, and I accordingly accept this appeal and reversing the decree of the Divisional Judge, restore that of the first Court with costs.

Appeal accepted.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1096 OF 1910.

July 14, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Johnstone and Mr. Justice Scott-Smith.

SHUJA-UD-DIN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

Musammat AISHABI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (f)—Suit for administration of estate—Suit for accounts—Valuation for jurisdiction and Court-fees identical

No doubt a suit for administration of an intestate estate is in some respects a suit of a unique kind, but after all it has many features in common with a suit for winding-up an insolvent estate, or a suit for dissolution of partnership with taking of accounts and allotment to each partner, after all debts, etc., are settled up, of his net share. In all of these suits the taking of accounts is a prominent and necessary feature and the mere fact that, after accounts have been taken, the Court, ex necessitate rei, acts in winding-up on rather different lines in the different classes of cases, does not take any of them out of the purview of the 'suit for accounts.'

A suit 'for an account of any property and for its due administration' falls within the purview of section 7 (iv) (f), Court Fees Act. The valuation of such a suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and Court-fees is the same.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 29th August 1910, appointing a Receiver and granting a preliminary decree.

Mr. Santanam, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., and Mr. Abdul Rashid, for Mr. Shah Nawaz, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Shahab-ud-Din died intestate on 1st December 1909. On 16th December his eldest son, Shuja-ud-Din (present defendant No. 1), applied to the District Court, Simla, for Letters of Administration, and on the following day that Court appointed him ad interim Receiver. On 18th February 1910 his widow, present plaintiff, entered a caveat and nine days later she filed the present suit in the Court of the District Judge, Delhi, asking the Court to administer the estate of the late Shahab-ud-Din and, inter alia, to give her her $\frac{1}{8}$th share in it. In different parts of her plaint she valued at Rs. 2,80,000 the property left by deceased, and at Rs. 15,000 the suit "for purposes of jurisdiction" and at Rs. 130 for purposes of Court-fee; and on her plaint she affixed a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10. Apart from their pleas on the merits and on other points, defendants urged that Court-fee should be ad valorem on Rs. 15,000, the value placed by plaintiff herself on her suit for jurisdiction purposes; and the Court below overruled the plea. It did not hold that Rs. 10 was the proper ultimate Court-fee; but in a way, not easy to follow, while applying Article 17 (vi), Schedule II, Court Fees Act, which prescribes a fixed fee of Rs. 10, it went on to say that, as parties admitted, "Court-fees will have to be paid in full from the estate or otherwise, after the estate has been ascertained." The Court then proceeded with the case on the merits and having appointed Lala Mohan Lal, Pleader of Simla, Receiver, gave plaintiff "the usual preliminary decree." This was on 28th August 1910, sixteen days before which date the Simla Court had stayed proceedings in defendant No. 1's case before it.

In appealing here defendants Nos. 1 and 2 again raise the question of Court-fee, and after hearing arguments we are constrained to allow their contention. We are unable to see any reason why such a suit as this should not be taken to be a suit "for accounts" within the meaning of the phrase in section 7 (iv) (f), Court Fees Act. The phrase is quite general ; and, though the most common and familiar suits for accounts are suits for taking of partnership accounts and by principals against agents, we fail to see why a suit of the kind dealt with in Order XX, rule 13 (1), Civil Procedure Code, which is exactly the suit we have here—i. e., "for an account of any property and for its due administration,"—does not fall within the purview of section 7 (iv) (f), Court Fees Act, aforesaid. The distinction the lower Court and Mr. Shafi (for plaintiff-respondent) seek to draw between a "suit for accounts" and a suit "for an account of any property" seems to us sophistical ; and it follows that, inasmuch as the suit falls under the section and clause of the Court Fees Act just quoted, it cannot be governed by Article 17 (vi), Schedule II, of that Act, which runs: "Every other suit, where it is not possible to estimate at a money-value the subject-matter in dispute, and which is not otherwise provided for by this Act." Then looking at section 7 (iv), aforesaid, we see that stamp is to be paid ad valorem on "the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint or memorandum of appeal." Here plaintiff herself valued the suit for jurisdiction at Rs. 15,000, and, if we turn to section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, 1887, we see that her valuation for Court-fee at Rs. 130 must be ignored. The valuation for both purposes must be the same, and clearly the valuation for jurisdiction, which led the lower Court to take the case on its own file and resulted in a first appeal to this Court, holds the field. Our finding is that for all purposes this suit must be taken as one of Rs. 15,000 value, and plaintiff should have paid Court-fee of Rs. 625 on that amount. Similarly, defendants-appellants, who were quite justified in the circumstances in appealing on a Rs. 10 stamp, will have to increase their Court-fee also to Rs. 625.

The above is the way we look at the case. We have looked at rulings quoted by Mr. Shafi, but they do not constrain us to change our opinion in any way. We are well aware of the views expressed in Sardar Dial Singh v. Beli Ram(1); Anonymous Case (2) and so forth, and we have no quarrel with the proposition that fiscal enactments should, where ambiguous, be construed in favour of the subject ; but here we see no ambiguity or difficulty. We are also aware that in Musammat Rukman v. Brij Mohan Lal (3) an administration case suit and appeal alike were apparently heard on a Rs. 10 stamp without demur on the part of defendants or Courts ; but the question agitated before us was not there raised and the ruling, therefore, is no authority.

No doubt a suit for administration of an intestate estate is in some respects a suit of a unique kind, but after all it has many features in common with a suit for winding-up an insolvent estate, or a suit for dissolution of partnership with taking of accounts and allotment to each partner, after all debts, etc., are settled up, of his net share. In this connection we would refer to Civil Procedure Code, first Schedule, Appendix A, Pleadings; (3) Plaints, Forms 41, 42, 43 and 49; (4) Written Statements, Form 14; Appendix D, Decree, Forms 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22 (Final decree in partnership case). In all of these the taking of accounts is a prominent and necessary feature ; and the mere fact that, after accounts have been taken, the Court, ex necessitate rei, acts in winding-up on rather different lines in the different classes of cases, does not take any of them out of the purview of the aforesaid phrase, suit "for accounts."

Plaintiff is said to be poor. Her learned Counsel asks for three months' time for payment and we grant this prayer. Within three months from to-day plaintiff must make up the Court-fee on the plaint to Rs. 625. If she does so, defendants-appellants

(1) 51 P. R. 1897.
(2) 10 C. 272 at p. 282.
(3) 68 P. R. 1881.

must be prepared on or before next date of hearing to make up their Court-fee to a similar figure, if he wishes his appeal to be heard further. If plaintiff fails, no doubt, her suit will have to stand dismissed. If she pays and defendants-appellants fail to pay, their appeal will stand dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS APPEAL No. 118 OF 1913.

November 10, 1913.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Spencer.

PACHI—APPELLANT

versus

CHARNI AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Lunatic—Person of weak memory or weak mental strength, whether of unsound mind.

A man of weak memory or of only ordinary mental capacity or even mere weak mental strength cannot be called an idiot or a man of unsound mind.

Dost Muhammad Khan v. Ashraf Ali, A. W. N. (1905) 8; Rameshwar Tewari v. Nageshwar Tewari, A. W. N. (1905) 43; 2 A. L. J. 154; Mazharuddin Khan v. Serajuddin Khan, 4 C. L. J. 115, referred to.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of South Malabar, dated the 30th of January 1913, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 475 of 1912.

Mr. K. R. Subramania Sastri, for the Appellant.

Messrs. C. Madhavan Nair and K. Govinda Marar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the District Judge was justified on the evidence in coming to the conclusion that the adjudged lunatic has become capable of managing not only himself but also his affairs. No doubt the burden of proof lies heavily on the person who alleges that a person who had been adjudged a lunatic has recovered from his unsoundness of mind, but the evidence in this case is practically all one way, that is, to the effect that there has been a recovery of soundness of mind.

There are, no doubt, congenital idiots as also idiots who have become such through senile decay and idiots who have become such through grief, etc. Such idiots are sometimes capable of managing themselves and are harmless, but are unable to manage any affairs. The medical witness in the case merely says that old age has enfeebled the mind of the 1st respondent and he is not capable of managing "big affairs," but a man of weak memory or of only ordinary mental capacity or even mere weak mental strength cannot be called an idiot or a man of unsound mind [see the cases in Dost Muhammad Khan v. Ashraf Ali (1) and Rameshwar Tewari v. Nageshwar Tewari (2). The latter case is reported also in 2 A. L. J. 154. See also Mazharuddin Khan v. Serajuddin Khan (3)].

An objection not taken in the memorandum of appeal was argued by the appellant's learned Vakil before us. That objection is that the application to the lower Court was made under section 21 of the repealed Act XXXV of 1858, instead of under section 62 of the new Act IV of 1912 which had come into force in March 1912 before the application was filed in October 1912.

It is, however, a well-understood legal rule that all references in documents to provisions in repealed Acts provided those provisions have been re-enacted in the repealing Act, might be construed as references to the corresponding re-enacted provisions. (See analogous rules in section 8 of the General Clauses Act, X of 1897, and section 18 of the Madras General Clauses Act, I of 1891.) The technical objection again merely requires a formal amendment of the petition, and we think it equitable to deal with the case on the footing that such amendment has been made.

No other ground has been argued and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) A. W. N. (1905) 8.
(2) A. W. N. (1905) 43; 2 A. L. J. 154.
(3) 4 C. L. J. 115.

PREM SINGH v. MOKAND SINGH.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 700 OF 1911.

April 11, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chevis.

PREM SINGH AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—PETITIONERS

versus

MOKAND SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Adverse possession—Dharmsala—Mahant leaving no legal representative—Founder's right to oust trespasser—Mahant's possession, when becomes adverse to its founder.

In the absence of a duly appointed Mahant of a dharmsala, its founder is entitled to oust a trespasser.

The mere long possession by a Mahant of a dharmsala does never become adverse to its founder, unless the former does some overt act repudiating the latter's title for over 12 years.

Petition, under section 70 (1) (a) and (b) of Act XVIII of 1884, as amended by Act XXV of 1899, for revision of the decree of the Divisional Judge, Amritsar Division, dated the 24th February 1911, affirming that of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 30th May 1910, decreeing plaintiff's claim.

Mr. Pestonji Dadabhai, for the Petitioners.

Mehta Bahadur Chand and Lala Hukam Chand and Bhagat Govind Das (for Rai Bahadur Mr. Sukh Dial), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A return has now been made to my order of remand dated 30th November 1911 *. The lower Courts find that the plaintiff's claim to be regarded as the Mahant is not made out, but that in the absence of a Mahant the plaintiff as owner is entitled to oust a trespasser.

That plaintiff's claim to be regarded as Mahant must fail seems to me quite clear. The death of Rangi Ram Singh was the first occasion on which a Mahant of this particular dharmsala died without leaving a chela to succeed him, so there is obviously no custom applicable to this particular dharmsala to govern the case, and in the absence of any appointment of the plaintiff as Mahant by the bhek, I am not prepared to recognize the plaintiff as Mahant simply on his own assertions that he can make himself or any one else the Mahant.

The next question is whether plaintiff can take possession as owner of the dharmsala. There seems to me good evidence that Guru Bhag Singh owned the dharmsala. Not only did Rangi Ram Singh clearly own this in the document which he executed on 20th Baisak, Sambat 1917, but the award filed by the arbitrators in the civil suit between Rangi Ram Singh and the sister (Guru bahan) of Guru Jaswant Singh points to Guru Bhag Singh having performed the funeral ceremonies of Guru Jaswant Singh, and installed Rangi Ram Singh as the new Mahant. In the above suit Rangi Ram Singh made a statement on 6th June 1859 in which he said Man Singh was son of Bhag Singh. And at the former hearing in this Court it was admitted before me by Counsel for the defendant that plaintiff was the natural son of Man Singh, though it was denied that he was his chela. The plaintiff has, therefore, proved his natural descent from Guru Bhag Singh, and even though he has not proved his spiritual descent I think that in the absence of proof that Guru Bhag Singh has left any other spiritual descendants, plaintiff has a right to oust a trespasser. The first Court speaks of the property as waqf. It may be waqf to a certain extent, but I do not think there are any sufficient grounds for considering that the rights of ownership have entirely ceased to exist.

Then it is urged that Rangi Ram Singh's possession should be regarded as adverse from the date of Guru Bhag Singh's death. But Rangi Ram Singh clearly recognized Guru Bhag Singh as the owner, and himself as holding as Mahant only. His possession was not adverse to Guru Bhag Singh and I see no reason to suppose that his possession was adverse to Man Singh on Bhag Singh's death ; I think Rangi Ram Singh's possession was never adverse, and as this suit has been brought within 12 years of Rangi Ram Singh's death I do not regard it as time-barred.

Lastly, it is urged on defendant's behalf that he is not liable to be ousted except by a Mahant, and that no Mahant has yet been appointed. But though I doubt whether the plaintiff as owner could turn out a Mahant, I see no reason whatever to doubt that the plaintiff can, in the absence of a Mahant, oust the defendant who is a mere trespasser.

[* See Prem Singh v. Mokand Singh, 13 Ind. Cas. 62; 30 P. W. R. 1912; 22 P. L. R. 1912 -Ed.]

PONNUSAWMY IYER v. PERMAYE.

The applicantion for revision is dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2199 OF 1912.

October 15, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

PONNUSAWMY IYER AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

PERMAYE (DIED) AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Adverse possession—Possession of co-heir—How far adverse to his co-heirs—Possession when referrable to lawful title, whether can be treated as of trespasser.

Where one of several heirs takes possession of an inheritance, his possession is not adverse to his co-heirs.

Khadersa Hajee Pappu v. Puthen Veettil Ayissa Ummah, 6 Ind Cas 50; 20 M. L. J. 288; 8 M. L. T. 4; (1910) M. W. N. 447; 34 M. 511, followed.

If the possession of a person can be traced to a lawful title, possession will be referred to such title and would not be treated as the possession of a trespasser.

Where a widow alienated by a deed of gift the property she had got by inheritance shortly before her death in 1895 to M, one of four presumptive reversioners who were entitled to succeed to the said property after her death, and he alienated the same to the 1st defendant in 1899 and the suit was brought in 1909 by an alienee from the other reversioners, who sold their shares to him, to recover possession of the said shares:

Held, that the possession of M from the death of the widow to 1899 was not adverse to the other reversioners and that, therefore, the 1st defendant was not entitled to tack on M's possession to his own.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Negapatam, in Appeal Suit No. 770 of 1910, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Tiruvalur, in Original Suit No. 338 of 1909.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. They are the purchasers of $\frac{3}{4}$ths share of certain lands which belonged to Arumuga Padayachi. Arumuga Padayachi's widow Anjalai died in 1895, leaving four grandsons by her two daughters. One of the daughters had only one son Manikam and the other daughter had three sons. Prima facie all the four grandsons inherited equal shares as the reversioners in Arumuga Padayachi's properties, i.e., each $\frac{1}{4}$th share. One of three sons by one daughter died and his share survived to his two brothers. They sold their $\frac{3}{4}$ths share in 1899 to the plaintiff. Manikam, the other grandson, however, claimed the whole property under a deed of gift from his grandmother Anjalai executed in 1895 shortly before Anjalai's death, and he sold it in 1899 to the first defendant's son, who is now dead and whose rights have now vested in the first defendant. Anjalai had no right to make a gift in 1895 to one of her four grandsons and her gift is clearly invalid. It also appears that Anjalai inherited the property, not as heir of her husband, Arumuga Padayachi, but of her son, Govindan, who survived her husband but predeceased her. Whether Anjalai took the property as mother of Govindan or as widow of Arumuga Padayachi, she was equally incapacitated for making a valid gift beyond her life-time. The lower Courts have dismissed the plaintiffs' suit brought in 1909 as barred by limitation, because Manikam enjoyed the property from 1895 as donee from Anjalai till 1899 when he sold it to the first defendant's son, and the first defendant and the first defendant's son (before her) have been enjoying it from 1899 (from 10 years before suit) and the two periods together make up more than 12 years. It has been held in Khadersa Hajee Pappu v. Puthen Veettil Ayissa Ummah (1) that when one of several heirs takes possession of an inheritance, his possession is not adverse to his co-heirs. It is also an elementary principle of law that if the possession of a person can be traced to a lawful title, possession will be referred to such title and would not be treated as the possession of a trespasser. As Manikam's possession on Anjalai's death could be traced to his lawful title as one of the reversioners after Anjalai's death (assuming, of course, that Anjalai's son's heirs after Anjalai's death were his sister's sons), Manikam's possession on

(1) 6 Ind. Cas. 50; 20 M. L. J. 288; 8 M. L. T. 4; (1910) M. W. N. 447; 34 M. 511.

Anjalai's death should be treated as the possession of one of the lawful heirs and not as that of a person who holds under the title created by Anjalai's gift-deed, which was invalid beyond her life-time. In this view, Manikam's possession between 1895 and 1899 was not adverse to the plaintiff's vendors. Hence the period of his possession between Anjalai's death and the sale-deed to the first defendant's son cannot be tacked on to the possession of the first defendant's son and of the first defendant after 1899.

The lower Courts' decrees are reversed and the suit is remanded to the Court of first instance for re-trial. If the District Munsif finds that the plaintiffs have made a bona fide mistake in believing that Govindan did not survive Arumuga Padayachi, he will allow them to amend the plaint by alleging (in the alternative) that the plaintiffs' vendors and their brother Swaminadhan were reversionary heirs of Govindan if Govindan survived Arumugam. If the defendants deny that the plaintiffs' vendors are the heirs of Govindan, the necessary issue or issues will be raised and decided. The appellants' Vakil admits before us on behalf of his clients that Govindan was the last male owner and was not disqualified from inheriting his father's estate and that the mesne profits are only one rupee per year. The costs hitherto incurred by the defendants must in any event be paid by the plaintiffs and they must themselves bear the costs incurred by them in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court. Costs of plaintiffs in the first Court and the costs (if any) hereafter incurred by the defendants will abide.

Decrees reversed; Case remanded.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 130 OF 1912.

November 9, 1914.

Present—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Hannay.

SOMAI AMMAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

VELLAYYA SETHURANGAM (DIED) AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 TO 3—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Lease subsisting—Suit by lessor against trespasser, maintainability of.

A landlord, though he has given a lease to a third person, is entitled for the purpose of putting his lessee in possession, to maintain a suit to eject a trespasser.

Ramanadan Chetti v. Pulikutti Servai, 21 M. 288; 8 M. L. J. 121, distinguished.

Zamindar of Vizianagaram v. Behara Suryanarayana Patrulu, 25 M. 587 at p. 597; 12 M. L. J. 249; Ambalavana Chetty v. Singaravelu Mudaliar, 15 Ind. Cas. 146; (1912) M. W. N. 669 at p. 680, Narainsawmy Naidu Garu v. Yeeramali Ram Krishnayya, 5 Ind. Cas. 479; 7 M. L. T. 119; (1910) M. W. N. 221 and 280; 33 M. 499 at p. 501, Bissessur Dabeea v. Baroda Kanta Roy Chowdhry, 10 C. 1076, Sarat Chandra Sinha v. Nritya Gopal Biswas, 8 Ind. Cas. 47; 13 C. L. J. 284, referred to.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 85 of 1911, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Dindigul, in Original Suit No. 666 of 1908.

Messrs. T. R. Krishnaswami Aiyar and K B. Ranganatha Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

HANNAY, J.—The plaintiff sued for a declaration that the suit lands belonged to her and for recovery of possession from the defendants. The District Munsif gave plaintiff a decree as prayed, but on appeal by the 1st defendant the District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that at the date of suit the plaintiff was not entitled to possession, as there was at that time a lease admittedly outstanding in favour of plaintiff's second witness. The District Judge relied upon the decision in Ramanadan Chetty v. Pulikutti Servai (1). In appeal before us it is urged that the plaintiff has not admitted that there was an outstanding lease at the date of suit, that the lower Appellate Court ought not to have dismissed the suit on a point not raised by the defendants either in the written statement or at the trial and that even if there was an outstanding lease in favour of plaintiff's second witness, plaintiff was still entitled to recover possession.

There is in fact no admission by the plaintiff in this case that the lease, which she says, she granted to her second witness was subsisting at the date of suit. We agree with the contention that the 1st defendant ought not to have been allowed to rely in appeal for the first time on a point not raised before the District Munsif which required an investigation into facts, but which plaintiff had not an opportunity of meeting by adducing evidence.

(1) 21 M. 288; 8 M. L. J. 121.

With reference to the 3rd ground above mentioned, the decision in Ramanadan Chetti v. Pulikutti Serrai (1) was relied upon by the lower Appellate Court. That decision may be distinguished from the facts of the present case, on the ground that it was a case where the tenant had been ousted by a trespasser after having been placed in possession and was apparently unwilling that the landlord should recover possession as he was colluding with the trespasser, whereas in the present case (assuming for the purpose of the argument that the lease to plaintiff's second witness was subsisting at the time of suit) the tenant had not been put in possession at all but was anxious to obtain possession. The evidence of plaintiff's second witness, Parameswara Iyer, is clear on that matter. In these circumstances, the plaintiff's tenant was entitled to require the plaintiff to place him in possession by virtue of section 108 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act and the case of Zamindar of Vizianagaram v. Behara Suryanarayana Patrulu (2) is authority for the proposition that a registered lease, like that in the present case (Exhibit B), operates in the absence of a contract to the contrary as an executory contract to deliver to the lessee such possession as the nature of the property admits, for breach of which contract the plaintiff would be liable in damages to the lessee. In these circumstances, I think that it was open to the landlord (plaintiff) to sue the trespassers in this case to recover possession, notwithstanding the existence of the lease Exhibit B, if for no other reason than to escape liability for such damages. The observations of Sundara Aiyar, J., in the case of Ambalavana Chetty v. Singaravelu Odayar (3) and of Abdur Rahim, J., in the case of Narainsawmy Naidu Garu v. Veeramali Ram Krishnaya (4) support generally the view that such a suit as the present is maintainable. In the former case Sundara Aiyar J., after citing Bissessuri Dabea v. Baroda Kanta Roy Chowdry (5) and Sarat Chandra Sinha v. Nritya Gopal Biswas (6) as authorities for the view that a landlord can claim against a trespasser that possession should be given to his tenant, observed that there is no inflexible rule of law that a trespasser can refuse to give up possession to a plaintiff simply because a third party may be entitled to possession as against him (the plaintiff). In the later case Abdur Rahim, J., was inclined to the view that if the land is already in the possession of a third person to the knowledge of the lessor and lessee, it would be the duty of the lessor to make it possible for the lessee to take possession by removing the third party from possession thereof, even though no express request is made by the lessee. In these views I concur.

On all the three grounds, therefore, I think this appeal must be allowed. I would set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the appeal for disposal upon the issues already framed. I would order costs to abide the result.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I agree that this case should be remanded to the lower Appellate Court for the reasons given by my learned brother for holding that a landlord, though he has given a lease to a third person, is entitled for the purpose of putting his lessee in possession to maintain a suit to eject a trespasser. I have nothing to add to those reasons. The plaintiff's right to eject the defendant cannot, in my opinion, be defeated simply because the plaintiff does not disclose in his plaint the fact that a lessee from him is entitled to get possession from him or the fact that the purpose of his suit is to put such lessee in possession. The defendant can succeed only if he shows that the plaintiff or his lessee has no right to possession, because the defendant is himself entitled to posession either through a title paramount to the plaintiff or derived from the plaintiff or his lessee or that the lessee is unwilling that the plaintiff should get possession during the term of the lease. I do not think that the general expressions in some of the cases quoted by the re-

(2) 25 M. 587 at p. 597; 12 M. L. J. 249.
(3) 15 Ind. Cas. 146; (1912) M. W. N. 669 at p. 680.
(4) 5 Ind. Cas. 479; 33 M. 499 at p. 501; 7 M. L. T. 119; (1910) M. W. N 221 and 280.
(5) 10 C. 1076.
(6) 8 Ind. Cas. 47; 13 C. L. J. 284.

pondents' Vakil to the effect that the plaintiff to succeed in a suit in ejectment must show his present right to possession on the date of suit, are inconsistent with the above views when read in the light of the facts of those particular cases.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 1597 TO 1599 AND 2246 AND 2247 OF 1912.

October 28, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

PUSARALA SANYASI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

THE GUNTUR COTTON, JUTE AND PAPER MILLS COMPANY, LIMITED, BY ITS JOINT SECRETARIES AND TREASURERS AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Company—Articles of Association—Allotment of shares—Allotment by Secretary and Treasurer, validity of—Acceptance of share certificate—Right to impeach—Shares subscribed to owing to fraud and misrepresentation—Right of rescission, when to be exercised.

Where the Articles of an Association do not specifically provide that the allotment of shares should be made by the Directors but, on the other hand, they provide that the general management of the Association shall be by the Secretaries and Treasurers subject to the supervision of the Directors, and that the Directors may from time to time entrust and confer upon them such of the powers, exercisable under the Articles by the Directors, as they may think fit, and the forms of application for the shares put forward the Secretaries and Treasurers as the persons to whom applications were to be made:

Held, that the allotment of shares by the Secretaries and Treasurers was valid.

Allotment is a duty primarily falling on the Directors and if the Directors have no right under the Articles to delegate this duty, then a purely ministerial officer such as the Secretary cannot allot.

Where the judgment of individual Directors is required for allotments by reason of special features, they cannot delegate.

A person to whom shares have been irregularly allotted has the right to apply to have his name taken off the register, but he cannot do so after he has accepted his share certificate.

The contract made by allotment is a contract to issue shares and when the shares have been issued and accepted, the title of the allotee becomes complete and he is in an entirely different position to that occupied by him before allotment.

The right to rescind an allotment of shares on the ground of fraud and misrepresentation must be exercised at the earliest possible moment when the allotee becomes aware of it.

As between private persons the right to rescind a contract on the ground of fraud may actually be lost by the conduct of the persons entitled to apply even within the period provided by the Statute of Limitation for the enforcement of such a right, so in the case of shareholders want of promptitude in repudiating will by reason of its far-reaching consequences always be held fatal to the claim.

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court of Guntur, in Appeals Nos. 359, 360, 361, 278 and 277 of 1910, preferred against that of the Principal District Munsif of Guntur, in Original Suits Nos. 356, 383, 423, 361 and 359 of 1908.

Messrs. P. Narayanamurthi and M. V. Krishnasawmy Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Srinivasa Iyengar and T. Ramachandra Row, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are appeals in five cases out of 555 which were all tried together by consent by the District Munsif of Guntur. They were Original Suits Nos. 356 383, 423, 361 and 359 of 1908 in that Court. All the suits were by the respondents herein, the Guntur Cotton, Jute and Paper Mills Company, Ltd., against persons alleged to be shareholders to recover the amounts of calls due on their shares. Various pleas were raised by the defendants, but the only questions argued here are those raised by the 3rd, 4th and 5th issues which are re-stated by the lower Appellate Court in the 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th points for decision.

The first point is whether the defendants have been legally constituted shareholders in the plaintiff Company. It was contended on behalf of the appellants that the allotments were void by reason of their not having been made by the Directors of the Company but by the Secretaries and Treasurers, and that in consequence they were not shareholders. This argument is based on Articles 11 and 12 of the Articles of Association which have been adopted in the place of the statutory articles. Neither of these articles specifically says that the allotment must be made by the Directors. Undoubtedly allotment is a duty primarily falling on the Directors (vide Palmer's Company Law, 9th Edition, page 104) and if Directors have no duty under the articles to delegate this duty, then a purely ministerial officer such as the Secretary could not allot. There is, however, no statutory provision to this effect nor is it to be found in the statutory articles. It may well be that in cases where the judgment of the individual Directors is required for the allotment by reason of special features, they could not delegate. Vide Howard Ex parte, Leeds Banking Co., In re (1) a case where under the deed of settlement of the Company the Directors were authorised to dispose of undistributed shares in such manner as in their opinion would best promote the interests of the Company. The Directors passed a resolution that the shares should be allotted according to the discretion of the Manager and two Directors who in fact made the allotment. This was held invalid. But the case before us is of an entirely different nature. First, Article 12 does not in terms provide that the allotment shall be by the Directors. It provides that the money which the Directors shall, on the allotment of any shares being made by them, require to be paid, shall become a debt due etc. At the highest it assumes that the allotment will be made by the Directors. Articles 114 and 115 provide that the general management of the Company shall be carried on, subject to the control and supervision of the Directors, by the Secretaries and Treasurers; while Article 116 provides that the Directors may from time to time entrust and confer upon the Secretaries and Treasurers such of the powers exercisable under the articles by the Directors as they may think fit. The form of application for the shares issued by the Company puts forward the Secretaries and Treasurers as the persons to whom applications are to be made, and not the Directors. It is in these words: "Gentlemen, I beg to inform you that I have sent the sum of Rs. I request that you would be good enough to credit the sum to my account and allot the said number of shares to me. I authorize you to place my name in the register of the members of the Company in respect of the shares which may be allotted to me." It is contended on behalf of the respondents that this is a notice to intending applicants that the Directors had delegated their powers of allotment to the Secretaries and Treasurers, and that, therefore, the applications should be sent to them and not to the Directors. Bearing in mind that all these shares were in fact allotted by the Secretaries and Treasurers, we can come to no other conclusion than that this contention is correct; and we hold that the allotment was in fact regularly made.

(1) 1 Ch. App. 561; 36 L. J. Ch. 42; 14 L. T. 747; 14 W. R. 942.

There is another answer also to the defendants' contention, namely, that they have received and retained certificates of the shares. It may be that a person to whom shares have been irregulary allotted has the right to apply to have his name taken off the register; but we have been referred to no case where this right has been allowed after acceptance of the share certificate. The contract made by allotment is a contract to issue shares and when the shares have been issued and accepted, the title of the allottee becomes complete and he is in an entirely different position to that occupied by him before allotment. Vide Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 5, "Companies," paragraph 291. In view of this finding we do not think it necessary to deal with the question whether there had been a valid ratification of an irregular allotment or whether there had been a condonation of the irregularity by the applicants, both of which points were found by the lower Appellate Court and which being findings of fact would prima facie be binding on us.

The next point is whether the defendants were induced to apply for shares by misrepresentation and fraud practised on them by the Company. With regard to Second Appeal No. 2246, the application was sent in as late as the 12th November 1906 and the applicant has not gone into the box to state that he applied for the shares on the faith of the prospectus; and seeing that the prospectus had been issued two years before that, we cannot assume that he did so and on our finding on the first point, this appeal must fail.

It is conceded that the other four appellants applied very soon after the issue of the prospectus, and although they themselves have not gone into the box to prove that they were misled by the prospectus, a large number of applicants of the same date did prove it and the District Munsif did not require any further evidence on the point. There being a finding of fact that they were so influenced, we could not reverse this without sending the case back for re-trial on this issue so as to give these appellants an opportunity of making that statement good. Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar who appeared for the respondents did not ask us to take this course and we, therefore, accept the finding against the Company by both the District Munsif and the District Judge. The District Judge has not dealt with this question himself in detail, but states in paragraph 12 that he agrees with the lower Court's finding on the point. We think it necessary to ascertain what was the exact fraud and misrepresentation found, for reasons which will appear later. Several allegations were made, some of which were negatived by the District Munsif. But he found that false statements were orally put forward on behalf of the Company, that more than half the shares had been subscribed for and that the prospectus contained the false statement that most of the shares had been sold: vide paragraphs Nos. 63 to 65 of the District Munsif's judgment. On these findings he holds that the Company have circulated the above falsehood deliberately to make wrongful gain to themselves and wrongful loss to intending subscribers and that the representations were made with dishonest intention. There is no evidence that they were made to make wrongful gain to themselves or wrongful loss to subscribers. But it is contended that, on the definition of fraud in the Indian Contract Act, section 17, clause (1), this is a fraud, the existence of which makes the contract voidable at the option of the other party.

This is undoubtedly so; and the appellants would prima facie have a right to apply to rescind the contract and have their names removed from the register. But the nature of the fraud proved has an important bearing on the question now to be considered, namely, whether their conduct after the knowledge of this fraud had been brought home to them, is such as to disentitle them to the above relief. It is abundantly clear that these appellants received a circular, Exhibit 26-A, from certain Directors of the Company dated the 21st June 1905. This circular specifically contradicted the fraudulent misrepresentation above referred to, made various other charges against the Secretaries and Treasurers and invited the shareholders not to pay any further calls. It was followed by another similar circular from four other shareholders dated the 1st October 1906. So that it is clear that all these parties were put on notice of the fraud in the middle of the year 1905. On the 14th of September 1906, the Directors passed a resolution that share certificates should be sent to all the shareholders, and the plaintiff's first witness deposes that certificates were so sent. It is clear, therefore, that after being put on notice of the frauds, they accepted the share certificates and made no effort to repudiate the contract. Further, the appellant in Second Appeal No. 2246 wrote a letter on the 27th December 1906, Exhibit Z16, in which he asked to be made a Director; while the appellant in Second Appeal No. 1597 wrote to the Company on 6th April 1908 promising to honour a hundi to be drawn against him for the amount of the expected call. None of the appellants brought any action to rescind the contract and it was not until all the calls had become due and the respondents filed these suits to recover those amounts that the appellants repudiated their liability as shareholders. These suits were brought in 1907, about three years after the date when they applied for shares and two years after the date when they became aware of the fraudulent misrepresentation as to the number of shares taken up. On these facts both the lower Courts have found that the appellants are debarred from setting up a right to have the contract rescinded as a defence to the suit.

It is urged that this finding cannot be supported in law. Reliance is placed on Article 114 of the Limitation Act for the rescission of a contract, which gives three years from the date when the facts entitling the plaintiff to have the contract rescinded first became known to him, and it is urged that the fact had not become known until 1906, which is less than three years from the date of suit; and it is further contended that the appellants can set up this plea in defence to a suit. Assuming the last proposition to be correct there are, however, other considerations. Even as between ordinary persons there is a limit to the doctrine. Vide Athikarath Nanu Menon v. Erathanikat Komu Nayar (2), where this Court held that mere delay within the period will not disentitle a person from claiming relief under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, but there must be waiver or such conduct or neglect as would justify the Court in refusing the declaration. But when the cases dealing with such claims as between shareholders and Companies are examined, it becomes apparent that a very strict rule has uniformly been applied, even where there was fraud and misrepresentation by the Company such as would prima facie entitle a shareholder to rescission, as was decided in Reese River Silver Mining Co. v. Smith (3). The proposition was stated in In re Estates Investment Co.; Ashley's case (4) by Lord Romilly as follows:—"The leading principle in all these cases is this: a man must not play fast and loose; he must not say: 'I will abide by the Company, if successful, and I will leave the Company if it fails;' and, therefore, whenever a misrepresentation is made of which any one of the shareholders has notice, and can take advantage to avoid his contract with the Company, it is his duty to determine at once whether he will depart from the Company, or whether he will remain a member." This is the case relied upon by the District Judge.

(2) 21 M. 42.

The question came up for decision before the House of Lords in Aaron's Reefs Limited v. Twiss (5). There the defendant was induced to enter into a contract to take shares by fraudulent misrepresentations made in the prospectus. An action was brought against him for calls and he pleaded simply that the contract was obtained by fraud. The answer of the Company to this plea was that, even if there was fraud, he could have ascertained the true facts by using due diligence. Lord Halsbury adopted the language of Sir George Jessel in Redgrave v. Hurd (6), laying down that this plea was no answer and that the Company could not be heard to say, after it has made a fraudulent statement in a prospectus, "we indicated to you the source from which you could find the truth and as you have not availed yourself of this information we are relieved from liability." On facts of this nature, this case would be binding on us. But these are not the circumstances. Here the actual fraudulent misrepresentation was in fact brought to the notice of the shareholders and in dealing with circumstances of this class, Lord Davey in his judgment in the same case lays down the law very clearly. It is not the ground of decision in the case, but as the opinion of a very eminent Equity Judge, who was himself a member of the Privy Council, it is, in our opinion, binding on us. On page 294 he adopts the language of Mr. Justice Mellor in delivering the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber in Clough v. London and North Western Railway Company (7): "The question is, has the person on whom the fraud was practised, having notice of the fraud, elected not to avoid the contract? or has he elected to avoid it? or has he made no election? Lapse of time without rescinding will furnish evidence of an intention to affirm the contract.....Where a person has contracted to take shares in a Company and his name has been placed on the register, it has always been held that he must exercise his right of repudiation with extreme promptness after the discovery of the fraud or misrepresentation for this reason: the presence of his name on the register may have induced other persons to give credit to the Company or to become members of it." The learned Lord also quotes the language of Baggallay, L. J., in In re Scottish Petroliem Company (8), expressing a doubt whether the delay of even a fortnight in repudiating the shares after the shareholder is duly informed of all the circumstances and no further investigation is necessary, would not be fatal. It appears, therefore, that on the evidence the Court may come to the conclusion that the shareholder has elected to affirm the contract or may hold that even if he has not definitely made such an election, he has lost his right to repudiate by reason of the delay, the basis of the ruling in the latter case being that it is impossible to say what effect may have been caused by reason of the shareholder allowing his name to remain on the register. It is clear, therefore, that a much stricter rule is applied to shareholders and Companies than is applicable between private parties. Applying this ruling to these facts it may

(3) 4 H. L. 54; 17 W. R. 1024; 39 L. J. Ch. 849.

(4) 9 Eq. 263; 39 L. J. Ch. 354; 22 L. T. 83; 18 W. R. 395.

(5) (1896) A. C. 273; 65 L. J. P. C. 54; 74 L. T. 794.

(6) 20 Ch. D. 1; 51 L. J. Ch. 113; 45 L. T. 485; 30 W. R. 251.

(7) 7 Ex. 26; 41 L. J. Ex. 17; 25 L. T. 708; 20 W. R. 189.

(8) 23 Ch. D. 413; 49 L. T. 348; 31 W. R. 846.

well be, that the frandulent representation being only as to the number of shares taken up and not affecting the value of the undertaking, the appellants may have elected not to avoid the contract, and even if that inference does not follow, they obviously come within the mischief of the latter rule which equally prevents their relying on the fraud two years after they had notice of it. The law can, therefore, be stated as follows:—That as between two private persons the right to rescind may actually be lost by the conduct of the person entitled to apply, even within the period of the Statute and in the case of shareholders want of promptitude in repudiating will, by reason of its far-reaching consequences, be always held fatal to the claim. In this view we must hold that the appellants have lost their right to repudiate and are, therefore, liable to pay the calls.

The result will be that all the appeals will be dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1174 OF 1913.

October 12, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

LANKA GOPALAM—DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

versus

LANKA RATNAMMA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANTS Nos. 2 TO 5—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882*), s.* 316—*Auction-purchaser, title of—Date of sale, title complete from—Suit for maintenance filed between date of sale and confirmation of sale—Property, whether charged—*Lis pendens—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882*), s.* 52.

An auction-purchaser's title even as regards strangers arises on, and in case the sale is confirmed becomes complete with effect from, the date of sale.

Where, therefore, a female institutes a suit for maintenance subsequent to the sale but prior to the date of the grant of the certificate of sale, the sale is not vitiated by the doctrine of lis pendens, and the purchaser takes the property free from any charge of maintenance.

Prem Chand Pal v. Purnima Dasi, 15 C. 546; Adhur Chunder Banerjee v. Aghore Nath Aroo, 2 C. W. N. 589; Dagdu v. Panchamsing Gangaram, 17 B. 375; Amir Kazim v. Darbari Mal, 24 A. 475; A. W. N. (1902) 145; Shiam Lal v. Nathe Lal, 7 Ind. Cas. 65; 33 A. 63, distinguished from.

Krishnaji Ravji Godbole v. Ganesh Bapuji Patvardhan, 6 B. 139, Yeshwant Baburav v. Govind Shankar, 10 B. 453, Chintaman Rao Natu v. Vithabai, 11 B. 588, Raj Kishen Mookerjee v. Radha Madhub, 21 W. R. 351, Dagdu v. Panchamsing Gangaram, 17 B. 375, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam, in Appeal Suit No. 56 of 1912 (Appeal Suit No. 454 of 1910 on the file of the Sub-Court, Ellore), preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Tanuku, in Original Suit No. 458 of 1908.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for Mr. P. Narayana Murthi, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. Venkatramiah, N. S. Narasimhachari and V. Ramadoss, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The appeal has been argued only on the question whether the 5th defendant's purchase was invalid because it was made pendente lite and whether the property in his hands could, therefore, still be made liable for the plaintiff's maintenance at the date of suit.

The law applicable, section 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure then in force, provides generally that, so far as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them, the title to property sold, as this was, at Court-sale shall vest in the purchaser from the date of sale certificate. The lower Appellate Court has, however, held that, though the date of the 5th defendant's certificate is subsequent to the date of plaint, that fact is not decisive against him, because (1) the question is not between parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them and (2) the section does not deprive the purchaser of an equitable title, incomplete until the sale is confirmed, but on confirmation dating back to the date of sale.

As regards (1) the dispute is now between the plaintiff, who is claiming maintenance and a charge in order to its enforcement, and the 5th defendant, purchaser from the 2nd defendant in Court-sale. The plaintiff's claim to maintenance was at the date of the institution of the present proceedings unsecured; in fact it is only through them that she can, if successful, obtain the property sold to the 5th defendant as security. The decisions shown us and to be referred to apply section 316, not to the case of a person who had still to establish a claim against the property in dispute and who could do so only on the assumption that the section was applicable, but to cases in which his interest has already been constituted independently.

LANKA GOPALAM v. LANKA RATNAMMA.

If, however, the plaintiff is a stranger and her position is not directly covered by section 316, the question remains as to the date on which the sale became final against her. In Prem Chand Pal v. Purnima Dasi (1) it was held that as regards third parties also the title of the auction-purchaser did not become complete in any sense before the date of confirmation of the sale. This, however, is inconsistent with the later decisions of the same Court, Adhur Chunder Banerjee v. Aghore Nath Aroo (2) and is doubted in Dagdu v. Pancham-sing Gangaram (3). These apparently conflicting cases, however, I think, are reconciled with reference to the conclusion regarding the nature of the auction-purchaser's interest at different stages, reached in the two last-mentioned and other cases, on which the lower Appellate Court's second ground of decision is based.

That interest, as described in Adhur Chunder Banerjee v. Aghore Nath Aroo (2), is "an equitable or inchoate title, which the grant of certificate made absolute and made to relate back to the date of sale;" and the description in Dagdu v. Pancham Singh Gangaram (3) is similar. The existence of a title of that contingent nature, which could be relied on only after confirmation of the sale had taken place, would not have been material in Prem Chand Pal v. Purnima Dasi (1) where the question was of the stranger's right or duty to discharge a mortgage before the date of confirmation. It would have been immaterial also in Amir Kazim v. Darbari Mal (4) where the question was of mesne profits, which the plaintiff could not claim from an earlier date than that on which he might (after confirmation of the sale) have obtained possession. It no doubt has not been shown that another later case, Shiam Lal v. Nathe Lal (5), can be similarly distinguished, but none of the authorities decided differently. Prem Chand Pal v. Purnima Dasi (1) seems to have been brought to the Court's notice. Following these cases I agree with the lower Appellate Court that the auction-purchaser's title arises on and, in case the sale is confirmed, becomes complete with effect from the date of sale; and that for the purpose of cases such as the present, this principle is applicable against strangers such as the plaintiff.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court must, therefore, be confirmed, the second appeal being dismissed with costs.

TYABJI, J.—The question on which the appeal depends is whether or not the interest of the 5th defendant in the property, which he claims, was created during the active prosecution of the suit out of which the appeal arises. If so, then it will not affect the plaintiff's rights under the decree, section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act.

That question depends upon the date on which the 5th defendant's interest arose. The appeal has been argued before us, solely with reference to the interpretation of section 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. Though the title under that section is made to date from the certificate and not before, it has been held that the express reference to "the parties to the suit" is intended to restrict the operation of the section so as not to affect strangers, Adhur Chunder Banerjee v. Aghor Nath Arroo (2). A different view has, however, been expressed in Prem Chand Pal. v. Purnima Dasi (1) and Amir Kazim v. Darbari Mal (4) and Shiam Lal v. Nathe Lal (5).

The decision in Prem Chand Pal v. Purnima Dasi (1) was that the mortgage-debt therein referred to was not merged in the decree for sale from the date of the sale, but only from the confirmation, and in Amir Kazim v. Darbari Mal (4) and Shiam Lal v. Nathe Lal (5) the decision was that the date from which the purchaser was entitled to mesne profits and rent respectively was the date of the con-

(1) 15 C. 546.
(2) 2 C. W. N. 589.
(3) 17 B. 375.
(4) 24 A. 475; (1902) A. W. N. 145.
(5) 7 Ind. Cas. 65; 33 A. 63.

firmation. For these decisions, it was necessary to decide when the title vested completely in the purchaser. They do not derogate from the proposition, expressly left untouched in Amir Kazim v. Darbari Mal (4), that the purchaser acquires an equitable interest from the date of the sale even prior to the confirmation. On this point there is no conflict of authorities. Krishnaji Ravji Godbole v. Ganesh Bapuji Patvardhan (6); Yeshwant Baburav v. Gobind Shankar (7); Chintaman Rao Natu v. Vithabai (8); Raj Kishen Mookerjee v. Radha Madhub (9) referred to in Yeshwant Baburav v. Govind Shankar (7), Dagdu v. Panchamsing Gangaram(3). The second and third cases above mentioned have been referred to by the High Courts other than that at Bombay without dissent. It seems to me, therefore, that as the equitable interest of the 5th defendant was created prior to the institution of the plaintiff's suit, the decision under appeal was right in holding that the doctrine of lis pendens did not apply to that interest. I would accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(6) 6 B. 139.
(7) 10 B. 453.
(8) 11 B. 588.
(9) 21 W. R. 349.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 46 OF 1914.

October 2, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar.

In re NIMMAGADDA PEDA NAGANNA —PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT—PETITIONER.

Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), s. 521—Court appointed arbitrator, whether should pass separate award—Aggrieved party, remedy of—Agreement not to appeal, whether binding.

An agreement not to appeal is binding as between the parties, the consideration being their mutual consent to refer the matter in dispute to the Court as an arbitrator.

Where the Court itself is appointed to act as an arbitrator, no separate award need be passed inviting parties to put in objections before passing a decree. Such an award is itself a decree and objections to the award can be raised only by way of appeal against the decree to the Appellate Court, and not by means of applications to the Court itself.

Nidamarthi Mukkanti v. Thammana Ramayya, 26 M. 76, at p. 77, Sita Nath Goswami v. Baikuntha Nath Goswami, 9 Ind. Cas. 296; 38 C. 421, referred to

The application to the Court to act as an arbitrator is not an application to make a reference.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the decree and judgment of the District Court of Kistna at Masulipatam, in Appeal Suit No. 159 of 1913, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Bezwada, in Original Suit No. 356 of 1911.

Mr. B. Narasimha Row, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—An agreement not to appeal is binding on the parties, the consideration being their mutual consent to refer the matter in dispute to the Court as an arbitrator.

The application to the Court itself to act as arbitrator is not an application coming under the Civil Procedure Code, Schedule II, paragraphs 1 and 2, which paragraphs clearly contemplate the passing of an order of reference under Schedule II, parapraph 3, the fixing of a time by the Court in that order for the making of the award by the arbitrator (other than the Court) and the Court's not acting further in the matter till the time expires. They all clearly contemplate a reference to a third person or third persons (other than the Court) as arbitrator or arbitrators.

When an award is made by the Court itself acting as arbitrator, there is no separate judgment to be passed as distinguished from the award itself. As said in Nidamarthi Mukkanti v. Thammana Ramayya (1), the decision of the Court "must be looked on as an award." The Code nowhere contemplates that when the Court itself is the arbitrator, it must first give a separate award, then wait for objections to the award made by itself, hear such objections as a Court to its own award as arbitrator and lastly pronounce judgment on the award if it does not set it aside. The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, which are naturally applicable and were clearly intended by the Legislature to apply only to awards made by an arbitrator other than the Court and which are clearly inapplicable and would be almost grotesque when applied to an award made by the Court itself acting as an arbitrator, cannot be invoked in the latter class of awards. The objections to an award permitted under section 521, old Civil Procedure Code, (Schedule II, paragraph 15 of the new Code) and section 522 (last sentence of paragraph 16) can all be taken on an appeal from the decision of the District Munsif acting as arbitrator (which decision is an award in one aspect and which is the decree in the suit in the other aspect) as grounds of appeal in the appeal memorandum, but (as it seems to me) they cannot be taken by way of an application made to the District Munsif himself under the Schedule II.

(1) 26 M. 76 at p. 77.

Even supposing that the District Munsif ought to have first passed an award as arbitrator, and then waited for the parties to file applications before him as a Court to set aside the award made by himself and then heard the objections mentioned in the application and passed a separate judgment and decree confirming the award, it is clear from the grounds of appeal to the Appellate Court that none of the objections mentioned in section 521 (Schedule II, paragraph 15) were urged before the District Court as grounds vitiating the award. Under these circumstances, the irregularity on the part of the District Munsif (assuming it is an irregularity) in not waiting for applications to be filed to set aside his award before treating his award as the judgment in the case, has not affected the merits in any degree and I must decline to interfere in revision under section 115. I do not consider it necessary in this view to deal in detail with some of the observations in Nidamarthi Mukkanti v. Thammana Ramayya (1) and Sita Nath Goswami v. Baikuntha Nath Goswami (2), on which Mr. Narasimha Row strenuously relied as containing implications supporting his contention that every one of the provisions in the Arbitration section of the Civil Procedure Code applies even where the Court itself is the arbitrator.

Petition rejected.

(2) 9 Ind. Cas. 296; 38 C. 421.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL APPEAL No. 256 OF 1912.

November 9, 1914.

Present:—Sir John Edward Power Wallis, Offg Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar.

KASIVASI SOMASUNDARA THAMBIRAN AVERGAL—APPELLANT

versus

A. T. VENKATANARAYANA PILLAI—RESPONDENT.

Promissory note, suit on—Head of mutt executing promissory note, whether personally liable.

The head of a mutt is personally liable on promissory notes executed by him, unless he has contracted himself out of such liability.

Edabitter v. Farraw, 5 M. & S. 345, 17 R. R. 345; 105 E. R. 1077, followed.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in Original Suit No. 43 of 1911.

FACTS.—The plaintiff is a money-lender. The defendant is the head of Therupanandal mutt in the Tanjore District. On 19th November 1905 the defendant executed in favour of the plaintiff a promissory note for Rs. 13,000 with interest in the following terms:

"Promissory note executed on 19th November 1905, by Kasivasi Somasundara Thambiran Avergal, Therupanandal Adhinamkarta, Kumbakonam Taluk, to A. T. Venkata Narayana Pillai Avergal, son of A. Thiruvengada Pillai Avergal, Banadara Vadaka Veedi, Kumbakonam Cusba, on demand, I promise to you or order Rs. 13,000, (thirteen thousand) with interest at 14 per cent. per annum from this date, and get back this promissory note, the amount being made up as follows:—'On.....'

(Signed) in Tamil, one anna label affixed.

Kasivasi Somasumdara Thambiran.

Witness, etc....."

Upon this promissory note, the plaintiff brought a suit. The defence was that the defendant executed the promissory note in his capacity as the Adhinamkarta of the mutt and as such is not personally liable on the note, but that a decree could be passed only against the mutt properties.

The Sub-Judge held that the fact that the defendant executed the note in his capacity of head of mutt, does not exclude his personal liability on the note and accordingly passed a personal decree against the defendant. The present appeal is by the defendant against the said decree, the chief contention being that the defendant having described himself as the Therupanandal Adhinamkarta, excludes his personal liability on the note.

Mr. S. Sreenivasa Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Rangachariar (with him Mr. S. Muthiah Mudaliar), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—There is no question here of the defendant having executed the suit promissory note on behalf of other persons. He is the Adhinamkarta or head of the mutt and is so described in the document, but there is nothing in this to suggest that he is not personally liable, and the rule is that the maker of such a note as this is personally liable unless he has contracted himself out of personal liability [Leadbitter v. Farrow (1)].

No authority has been cited to show that the head of a mutt is not personally liable on promissory notes executed by him as such, and suits on such notes have been very numerous.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) (1816) 5 M. & S. 345; 17 R. R. 345; 105 E. R. 1077.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 223 OF 1913.

October 30, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Kumaraswamy Sastri.

RAMALA VENKATASWAMI—DEFENDANT No. 1—PETITIONER

versus

KANUMALLA NARASIMHAYYA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS Nos. 1 AND 10 AND DEFENDANTS Nos. 2 AND 9—RESPONDENTS.

Jurisdiction—Burden of proof—Agraharam grant—Grantee owner of kudivaram—Presumption.

It is for the party who wants to oust the jurisdiction of Civil Courts to prove the existence of facts which oust jurisdiction.

No presumption arises that the person to whom the agraharam had been granted was not the owner of the kudivaram at the time of the grant.

Adusumilli Suryanarayana v. Achhutta Pottanna, 22 Ind. Cas. 339; 15 M. L. T. 268, 26 M. L. J. 99; Kidambi Jagannathacharyulu v. Pudipiti Kutumbarayudu, 25 Ind Cas 891; 27 M. L. J. 233, distinguished from.

Indety China Nagada v. Potu Kanchi Venkatasubbayya, 8 Ind. Cas. 365; 8 M. L. T. 376; (1910) M. W. N. 639; Todikonda Buchi Veerabhadrayya v. Sonti Venkanna, 20 Ind. Cas. 769; (1913) M. W. N. 782; 24 M. L. J. 659 followed.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Kanigiri, in Small Cause Suit No. 141 of 1912.

Mr. P. M. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. L. A. Gorindaraghava Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There is a conflict of decisions as to the burden of proof in cases where the jurisdiction of a Civil Court is sought to be ousted on the ground that the claim relates to an "estate," as defined in the Madras Estates Land Act. In Adusumilli Suryanarayana v. Achhutta Potanna (1) it was held that the presumption that the grant was only of the melvaram, applied to all cases irrespective of whether the suit was to eject a tenant ort claim rent and that where a defendant raises the question of jurisdiction, the onus is on the plaintiff to show that both the varams were granted so as to take the case out of the definition of an estate as given in the Estates Land Act.

The opposite view was taken in Kidambi Jagannathcharyulu v. Pudipiti Kutumbarayudu (2), where it was held that it lay on the party seeking to oust the jurisdiction of a Civil Court to prove the necessary facts and that there was no presumption that a person to whom the agraharam had been granted was not the owner of the kudivaram at the time of the grant.

I prefer to follow the decision in Kidambi Jagannathacharyulu v. Kutumbarayudu(2). The balance of authority is in favour of the view that it is for the defendant who seeks to oust the jurisdiction of a Civil Court to show the existence of facts which oust jurisdiction and that no presumption arises in the case of agraharam. In Indety China Nagadu v. Potu Kanchi Venkata Subbayya (3), it was held that the onus was on the defendant to show that the village came within the definition of an estate and that there was no presumption that an inam was granted to a person not owning the kudivaram.

(1) 22 Ind Cas. 339; 26 M. L. J. 99; 15 M. L. T. 268

(2) 25 Ind. Cas 891; 27 M. L. J. 233.

(3) 8 Ind. Cas. 365; (1910) M. W. N. 639; 8 M. L. T. 376.

This decision was followed in Tadikonda Buchi Veerabhadrayya v. Sonti Venkanna (4). The case was of agraharam and it was held that the onus of proving that the grantee was not the owner of the kudivaram at the date of the grant, was on the tenants who sought to oust the jurisdiction of Civil Courts.

I am of opinion that the District Munsif rightly threw the onus on the defendants and that they have not proved that the grant was of the melvaram only.

The agreements sued on have been proved by plaintiffs' 2nd witness and the defendants have not ventured to deny the genuineness in the witness-box.

The petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

(4) 20 Ind. Cas. 769; 24 M. L. J. 659; (1913) M. W. N. 782.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1140 OF 1912.

June 10, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee and Mr. Justice Walmsley.

LATIFUNNISSA BIBI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

MAJIDUNNISSA BIBI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Wakf property—Charge, validity of—Sanction of Cazee—Ex post facto approval, whether valid—Deed named as tamleek and tawliatnama, whether contemplates absolute endowment of entire property.

A charge created for the purpose of saving a wakf property with the sanction of the Cazee is binding on the wakf property, but in case the sanction is not obtained at the time of creating the charge, an ex post facto approval is equally effective and the Court in which the matter comes in for consideration may validate the charge by holding that the required necessity existed.

Nemai Chand Adhya v. Golam Hossein, 3 Ind. Cas. 353; 37 C. 179; 14 C. W. N. 535; 11 C. L. J. 317, referred to.

A deed named as a tamleek as well as a tawliatnama does not contemplate an absolute endowment of the entire property.

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Rangpur, dated 22nd January 1912, affirming that of the Munsif, second Court of that place, dated 31st March 1911.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chakravarti, for the Appellant.

Moulvi A. K. Fazl-ul-Huq, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Mohamed Tuquee executed a document called a tamleek and tawliatnama (a deed of gift and endowment), and provided that the expenses of a certain mosque in Rangpur were to be paid out of the profits of certain properties named therein and the surplus was to be divided in certain shares between his wives, one of whom was made the mutwalli with power to nominate a Receiver. The properties came to be held by Akramunnissa and Sarwarunnissa, who were dispossessed by one Mirza Huzurali and had to sue him for recovery of the same. Golam Mustafa and Abu Syed sold their own properties to supply them with the costs of the litigation which terminated in favour of the said ladies and in consideration of this benefaction without which the wakf properties would have been lost, they in 1265 executed an ikrarnama in favour of the said Golam Mustafa and Abu Syed and agreed to pay them from generation to generation a certain allowance which was made a charge on the said properties. The plaintiffs are assignees of a part of the said allowance from the heirs of the grantees and their suit is for the recovery of certain arrears. Both the lower Courts have decreed the suit with some modification and the defendants appeal.

It has been contended on their behalf that the entire properties were dedicated as wakf and the maintenance charge was incompetent as an alienation of wakf property. It is said that the surplus proceeds after defraying the costs of the mosque were given to the wives of the grantor by name and on their demise reverted to the wakf.

There are two answers to this argument. One is that the charge was created for the purpose of saving the wakf properties and was binding on the wakf. This would certainly be so if the charge was created under the sanction of the Cazee, but no such sanction has been proved in this case. It has, however, been held in the case of Nemai Chand Adhya v. Mir Golam Hossein(1), that an ex post facto approval is equally effective and the Court in which the matter comes in for consideration may validate the charge by holding that the required necessity existed, and in this case the Courts below have so held. The soundness of this view has been questioned by Ameer Ali in the 4th edition of his book on Muhammadan Law (See Ameer Ali, Volume 1, page 489). It is, however, not necessary to pursue this matter further, as the second answer is sufficient for the disposal of the appeal. That answer is that the grantor did not contemplate an absolute endowment of the entire property, as the very name of the deed executed by him implies. It was a tamleek as well as a tawliatnama, a deed of gift as well as a deed of endowment. It was an endowment to the extent of the costs necessary for the purposes of the mosque and a gift of the surplus; this view of the disposition is supported by the successive dealings with the property for more than half a century at least. In this view of the case, we think the Courts below are right and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

(1) 3 Ind. Cas. 353; 37 C. 179; 14 C. W. N. 535; 11 C. L. J. 317.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 10 OF 1913.

November 6, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Kumaraswamy Sastri.

KARUMURU VENKATESWAMI—PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER

versus

LANKA TRIPURIAH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 7 (b), 104—"Injunction and interlocutory orders" in s. 7, meaning of—Provincial Small Cause Court—Compensation for attachment before judgment, order of—Appeal.

The words "injunction and interlocutory orders" in section 7 of the Civil Procedure Code can only refer to the orders contemplated in Order XXXIX, and those words read together can only mean applications for an injunction and interlocutory orders on such applications.

A Small Cause Court has power to award compensation when it issues an interim attachment and dismisses it after the other side is heard and such an order cannot be questioned in appeal.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated the 14th October 1912, of the Court of the District Munsif of Ellore, in Miscellaneous Petition No. 2146 of 1912.

Mr. P. Chenchiah, for Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. S. Narasimha Chari, for Mr. V Ramadoss, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act to revise the order of the District Munsif, awarding defendants Rs. 50 compensation for plaintiff having applied for and obtained an order attaching before judgment in Small Cause Suit No. 672 of 1912.

The order sought to be revised is an order under section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code and is appealable under section 104. I do not think that the fact that the order was passed in a Small Cause suit makes any difference; while admitting the petition, the Hon'able Mr. Justice Miller made a note to the effect that he would be prepared to treat this petition as an appeal against the order. Having regard to the fact that there has been a bona fide error, I treat this petition as an appeal.

It is argued by the appellant that the District Munsif had no power to entertain the application for compensation, as there was only an interim order directing attachment pending notice and section 7, clause (b), of the Civil Procedure Code provides that sections 94 and 95 are not applicable to Small Cause Courts in so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders. The contention is that where interim attachment is ordered pending the return of notice, it is an interlocutory order within the meaning of section 7, clause (b).

I am unable to accede to the contention that though a Small Cause Court is empowered to award compensation if it ordered an attachment before judgment after hearing both parties, it cannot do so when it issues an interim attachment and dismisses it after the other side is heard. The words "injunctions and interlocutory orders" in section 7, clause (b), can only refer to the orders contemplated in Order XXXIX.

Rules 1 to 5 relate to "injunction" and rules 6 to 10 are under the heading "interlocutory orders." The words "injunctions and interlocutary orders" in section 7 should be read together and can only mean applications for an injunction and interlocutory orders on such applications.

There is nothing in the merits that calls for interference.

The petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2021 OF 1913.

November 11, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Hannay.

DUPAGUNTLA SUBBA RAO AND OTHERS —PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

GOLLAPUDI ETHIRAJULU—DEFENDANTS —RESPONDENTS.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (c)—Receipt extinguishing mortgage, whether requires registration—Evidence, admissibility in.

A receipt which evidences not merely a payment of money but also extinguishes the mortgage in virtue of a fresh agreement entered into on the date of its execution, requires registration under section 17 of the Registration Act and is inadmissible in evidence without it.

Venkayya v. Venkatasubbayar, 3 M. 53 at p. 56, distinguished from.

Mahomed Kasam v. Ranu Yesji Naik, 9 Bom. L. R. 254, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam, in Appeal Suit No. 10 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Bezwada, in Original Suit No. 574 of 1911.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. Govindarajulu Naidu, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—While "a receipt which barely acknowledges payment and refers to the payment as a naked fact, does not fall under clause (c), section 17, of the Registration Act," [see Venkayya v. Venkatasubbayar (1)] a receipt, which indicates not merely the payment of the mortgage-money according to the tenor of the mortgage-deed but mentions the fact of a new agreement, the result of a fresh act of the parties, (wholly different from the tenor of the provisions of the mortgage document as to the mode of the fulfilling of the obligations under it) as the consideration or part of the consideration for the mortgagee's consenting to treat the obligation under the mortgage-deed as satisfied, does require registration. See Mahamed Kasam v. Ranu Yesji Naik (2).

In this view, Exhibit II does require registration and is inadmissible in evidence.

The lower Appellate Court's decree is reversed and the District Munsif's decision is restored, but there will be no order as to costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court. Time for redemption is extended to three months from this day.

Appeal allowed: Suit decreed.

(1) 3 M. 53 at p 56.

(2) 9 Bom. L. R. 254.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 202 OF 1913.

July 22, 1913.

Present:—Mr. Justice Coxe and Mr. Justice Ray.

ABDUL KARIM ABU AHMED KHAN AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

Nawab Syed ABDUS SOBHAN CHOUDHURY AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92, suit under, whether can be compromised—Compromise before deciding whether endowment is public or not, if lawful.

A suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, cannot be compromised if it is proved that the endowment is a public one. The question whether an agreement entered into between the parties in such a suit is or is not a lawful agreement, depends on the question whether the endowment is or is not a public one and so long as it remains subject to controversy whether it is a public endowment or not, it cannot be said to be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the suit has been adjusted by a lawful agreement.

Gyananda Asram v. Kristo Chandra, 8 C. W. N. 404, referred to.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge of Dacca, dated the 15th February 1913.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, with Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy and Akhil Bandhu Guha, for the Appellants.

ABDUL KARIM v. ABDUS SOBHAN.

Mr. B. K. Chakravarti, Counsel, (with Babus Jnanendra Nath Sarkar and Naresh Chandra Sen Gupta), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

COXE, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought under section 92, Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendant had misappropriated certain property dedicated for the upkeep of two mosques, and made several allegations of misconduct against him. They prayed that the defendant might be removed from the mutwallship and a new mutwalli might be appointed, that a scheme might be framed for the proper discharge of the trust and for various other reliefs. The suit has been pending for a considerable time and several different proceedings have been prosecuted in it.

The present appeal is against the decision of the District Judge refusing to order a certain agreement to be recorded under Order XXIII, rule 3, and to pass a decree in accordance therewith. The ground on which the learned District Judge has refused to record this compromise is that this suit under section 92 cannot be lawfully compromised in this way, and the compromise arrived at is not a lawful agreement within the terms of Order XXIII, rule 3.

The defendant appeals, and it is argued on his behalf that it is not shown that this is a public endowment at all, and that if it is not a public endowment, the suit can certainly be compromised. Secondly, it is argued that even if it is a public endowment, the plaintiffs can withdraw from the prosecution of the suit and the compromise does not amount to more than such a withdrawal.

It appears to me quite clear that if this be a public endowment, the suit cannot be compromised by this petition. The case of Gyananda Asram v. Kristo Chandra (1) is, in my opinion, an authority for this view and it appears to me to be in accordance with commonsense. There is no reason whatever why the worshippers at this mosque, if it be a public mosque, and those who are interested in its management should be prejudiced, as undoubtedly they would be prejudiced, by the stifling of this suit. And it is not, in my opinion, correct to say that the compromise itself is merely the withdrawal of the suit. The first plaintiff agreed, according to the memorandum of agreement that has been placed before us, that the suit should be withdrawn for ample consideration. Paragraph 5 of the memorandum relates to the withdrawal of the suit and the first two paragraphs show that the first plaintiff was to receive a considerable advantage for this writhdrawal. It was not, therefore, a mere withdrawal from the prosecution of the suit, with which the Court, of course, could not interfere. It was an application formally to record a bargain under Order XXIII, rule 3, the terms of which bargain could subsequently be used in evidence by the parties. I think, therefore, that if this be a public endowment, the order of the Judge below is perfectly right.

On the other point, it has been argued that this question, whether or not this is a public endowment, was finally decided between the parties by a decision of the District Judge so long ago as April 1910. That decision was passed in dealing with an application for the appointment of a Receiver and the Judge held that the deed operated to create a public endowment and that the suit was prima facie maintainable. He, however, rejected the application to appoint the Receiver, so that it would hardly seem that this decision was necessary for the disposal of that application. It has, however, been argued that ever since then the parties have acted on the view that this matter has been settled. I think for the purpose of the pending proceedings that this view is correct. The parties have ever since that decision apparently gone on the assumption that for the purpose of proceeding with this suit, the endowment must be regarded as a public endowment until the ultimate decision, when the issue on this question will be finally determined. This is strongly indicated by the fact that in the judgment under appeal there is no reference at all to any controversy on this point, and this Court on the 8th February 1912 in dealing with another interlocutory proceeding also seemed to have proceeded on the assumption that while this suit is pending, it must be regarded as one dealing with a public endowment. The defendant cannot be prejudiced by this view being taken, for if hereafter it should be found, when the suit is formally tried, that this is not a public endowment, the suit will necessarily fail and he will in no way be injured but rather benefited by the fact that this compromise has not been allowed. On the other hand if this compromise is allowed, the persons interested in the mosque will be very considerably prejudiced, if the suit is disposed of on this compromise and the question whether or not it is a public mosque is not finally determined. The terms of Order XXIII, rule 3, are that where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement, the Court shall order the agreement to be recorded and pass a decree. The question whether this is or is not a lawful agreement depends on the further question whether this is or is not a public endowment, and so long as it remains subject to controversy whether this is a public endowment or not, it cannot, in my opinion, be said to be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the suit has been adjusted by a lawful agreement.

(1) 8 C. W. N. 404.

I think, therefore, that in the circumstances the decision of the Judge below is right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. The hearing fee is assessed at five gold mohurs.

The record will be sent down at once.

RAY, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 487 OF 1908.

July 26, 1909.

Present:—Mr. Justice Miller.

THE SALEM TOWN BANK LTD., BY SECRETARY, T. V. APPANNA AIYANGAR—PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER

versus

K. RAMASWAMY AIYAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Liability of sons for debts of deceased father—Right of creditor to sue any or all sons—Decree, form of.

A creditor is not restricted to a suit against all the sons for the whole of the debt due by their deceased father, or if he sues one only, to a suit for a part of the debt proportionate to his share in the joint family property. In such a suit a decree should be for the whole amount payable out of the joint family property or the assets of the father in the hands of the son.

Civil revision petition against the revised decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif of Salem, in Small Cause Suit No. 948 of 1907, dated the 14th November 1907.

Mr. T. M. Krishnasami Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar and K. Jaganadha Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In my opinion the decree should have been against the second defendant for the whole amount of the debt to the extent of his share of the joint family property and any other assets, being separate property of his father, which may be in his hands, but not against the shares of the 3rd, 4th and 5th defendants against whom the suit is barred. I have not been shown that these shares are held by the 2nd defendant on their behalf in any capacity which would warrant a decree against him and, in the absence of the owners, for the seizure of their shares by the creditor.

On the other hand I am unable to accept the argument that each one is liable only for a portion of the debt proportioned to his share in the joint family property. I have not been referred to any authority restricting the creditor to a suit against all the sons for the whole, or if he sues one only, to a suit for a portion of his debt. The authority seems to be the other way.

I modify the decree by directing the 2nd defendant to pay the plaintiff's claim so far as his share of the joint family property will go to satisfy it. It is not alleged that his father left any separate property.

The appellant succeeds in part, and is in part successfully resisted. No costs will be awarded in this Court, except that the plaintiff must pay the 3rd and 4th defendants' costs.

Decree modified.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 2320 AND 2428 OF 1913.

November 3, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

IN SECOND APPEAL NO. 2320 OF 1913.

SOMANCHI VENKATASUBBARAYUDU AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

SOMANCHI PULLAMMA AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

IN SECOND APPEAL NO. 2428 OF 1913.

DISIKA NARASAMMA—DEFENDANT NO. 2—APPELLANT

versus

SOMANCHI VENKATASUBBARAYUDU AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND DEFFENDANT NO. 1—RESPONDENT.

Will—Hindu Law—Portion of letter disposing of property after writer's death, whether Will.

A portion of a letter relating to dispositions of property after the writer's death operates as a Will, notwithstanding the fact that the remainder of the letter effects an immediate settlement and contemplates the execution of a more formal document.

Second appeals against the decree of the District Court of Godavery at Rajahmundry, in Appeal Suit No. 167 of 1911, preferred against that of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry, in Original Suit No. 3 of 1911.

FACTS.—Plaintiffs are the reversioners to the estate of one Venkatasubbayudu. Defendant No. 1 is his mother and No. 2 is his sister. The said Venkatasubbayudu wrote a letter to his brother-in-law in which he recited that his sister should enjoy his pitriam after his death and his brother-in-law, the 2nd defendant's husband, should manage his estate on his behalf; and the letter ran as follows:

"To

"Brahma Sri Darigi Sitayya Bhavagaru, who is the incarnation of Vedas, Somandi Venkatarayudu makes many salutations.

"As I have been ill till now I have neither leased my lands on cowle nor recovered kists (rents) properly. I have settled that my entire ancestral property should after my death be enjoyed by my younger sister and your wife, Darigi Narasamma. I shall execute and get registered a necessary deed in writing. You should take possession of my ancestral lands 5-10 cents of inam land in Vemavaram village, which is my maternal grandfather's property and which devolved on me, and also the cocoanut garden standing thereon, the jirayati land in Madekarru and the house situate in Bhimavaram, and lease the said lands to new ryots and remit the kists realized in Vemavaram to my mother for charity expenses. She can spend that sum as she pleases. You should recover the rents due from the ancestral lands and pay the same to my younger sister. That sum should be spent towards family expenses and an account should be maintained for the sum thus spent. You should pay to me for my private expenses the kist realized from the jirayati land in Madekurru purchased from Chan Shaib and also the rent realized from the house in Bhimavaram. You should reside along with your children in the house situate in Narasapuram. The ryots who have been cultivating the lands till now, have not properly paid kist even for one year. You should remove these ryots and lease the lands to new ryots alone. If you should lease the lands for a lower kist than before, you should have to inform me of that matter and proceed according to my orders. I have given you this authority as I am not able to look after this work and so I request that you will manage the same for five years from this date. The kadapas executed by Mudekurru and Vemavaram ryots are delivered to you..... All acts should be done according to this letter. This is the deed of authority executed with my full will. I shall execute a proper deed in wrting in respect of this. There is no kind of objection whatever to your doing work from this date forward."

After the said Venkatasubbayudu's death, the reversioners to his estate brought a suit to declare that after 1st defendant's death they are entitled to the property and that the letter is not a Will and contains no dispositions in favour of 2nd defendant. The District Munsif held that the letter is a Will and dismissed the suit entirely. On appeal the District Judge held that the letter is a Will, but it does not take effect in regard to self-acquired property but affects only paternal property. He accordingly modified the decree, giving the reversioners a decree in so far as self-acquired property is concerned. The present appeal is against that decree. Both parties appealed, the plaintiff in regard to the paternal property and the defendants so far as it related to ancestral estate.

Messrs. V. Ramesam and J. Janakiramiah, for the Appellants in Second Appeal No. 2320 of 1913 and for Respondents in Second Appeal No. 2428 of 1913.

Mr. P. Narayanamoorthy and Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondents in Second Appeal No. 2320 of 1913 and for Appellant in Second Appeal No. 2428 of 1913.

JUDGMENT.—In Second Appeal No. 2428, the 2nd defendant contends, first, that the lower Appellate Court should have decided in favour of the oral Will set up. The question is purely one of fact, and we cannot disturb the learned District Judge's decision on it.

The other contention as to the merits is that put forward in Second Appeal No. 2320 that no portion of Exhibit I is a Will. Even tried by the principles laid down in Rajammal v. Authiammal (1), the portion of Exhibit I which relates to dispositions after the writer's death is, we think, a Will; and the facts that the remainder effects an immediate settlement and that the execution of a more formal document was contemplated, do not alter this. We agree with the learned District Judge on this question.

The remaining argument in Second Appeal No. 2428 relates to the form of the lower Appellate Court's decree. By consent plaintiffs will be given a declaration that items 1, 4 to 8, 10 to 14 of the plaint schedule are the absolute property of 2nd defendant and that as to items 2, 3, 9, 15 to 19 the 2nd defendant will have no right against the reversioners after the death of 1st defendant. Plaintiffs will pay costs of defendants in this Court in Second Appeal No. 2320 of 1913, and in Second Appeal No. 2428 of 1913 each party will bear his own costs in this Court. The lower Appellate Court's decree as to costs in the Courts below is confirmed.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 7 Ind. Cas. 357; 33 M. 304; 8 M. L. T. 139; 20 M. L. J. 519.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND APPEALS NOS. 1876 AND 1989 OF 1911.

August 27, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

K. RAGHAVA NAIDU—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT IN S. A. No. 1876 OF 1911 AND RESPONDENT IN S. A. No. 1989 OF 1911

versus

P. MUTHYALU NAIDU—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT IN S. A. No. 1876 OF 1911 AND APPELLANT IN S. A. No. 1989 OF 1911.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 13, cl. (3)—Wells sunk by tenants at their own expense—Landlord, whether entitled to charge higher rates of rent.

Under the Estates Land Act a landlord is not entitled to charge higher rates of rent for the more valuable crops grown by the aid of the wells sunk by his tenant.

Second appeals against the decree of the District Court of North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 234 of 1910, preferred against that of the Revenue Divisional Officer, Ranipet, in Summary Suit No. 3609 of 1909.

In S. A. No. 1876 of 1911.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. Chandrasekhara Aiyer, for the Respondent

In S. A. No. 1989 of 1911.

Mr. M. Chandrasekhara Aiyer, for the Appellant.

Mr A. Ramachandra Aiyer, for the Respondent.

These second appeals coming on for hearing on the 26th September 1913, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The lower Courts have decided that there is no evidence to show that the tenants have constructed the wells. On behalf of the appellant it is pointed out that the only witness examined on behalf of the plaintiff stated :—"All the defendants own wells on their dry lands. It costs 200 or 300 to sink a well," and it is said that after this statement they considered it unnecessary to examine their own witnesses in attendance to prove the fact. This evidence is not disbelieved by the lower Courts, and there is no explanation of it. We think it desirable in the circumstances that the question whether the wells were sunk by the landlord or tenants should be further investigated.

We direct the Judge to return a finding on the second issue after deciding the question aforesaid on further evidence.

The finding should be submitted within six weeks, and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of North Arcot submitted the following FINDING.—I have been directed to return a finding on the 2nd issue in the suit, i. e., whether the patta was a proper one and such as the defendants were bound to accept?

The issue as framed by the lower Court was :—

Whether the terms of the patta were proper and whether lands on which wells have been constructed should be charged nanja rates [issue 2 (a)]?

Issue 2 (a) is not, I think, happily worded. The question is, not whether lands on which wells have been constructed should be charged nanja (wet) rates, but what are the proper rates of rent for crops grown on dry lands with the aid of the tenants' wells.

I am of opinion that the landholder is not entitled to levy a higher rate than that charged for cumbu, ragi, which may be regarded as staple crops, viz.—

		Rs.	a.	p.
Class I	...	21	14	0
Class II	...	18	6	0
Class III	...	14	14	0

I would accordingly return a finding on the issue sent down, that the patta tendered was not a proper one and that the maximum rate which the landholder is entitled to levy for crops raised on dry lands by the aid of the tenants' wells is the cumbu-ragi rate.

These second appeals coming on for final hearing, after the return of the above finding, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The finding is that the wells were sunk by the tenant at his own expense. The landlord is, therefore, not entitled to charge higher rates of rent for the more valuable crops grown by the aid of the wells sunk by his tenant. See section 13, clause (3), of Act I of 1908. The patta must, therefore, be modified by the insertion of the rates found by the District Judge for the crops which alone could be raised on the land without the aid of such water and which he calls staple crops. The class or the taram of the land referred to has reference to the condition of the land or crop without the aid of the tenant's improvement. Second Appeal No. 1876 of 1911 is allowed. Each party will bear his own costs throughout. Second Appeal No. 1989 of 1911 is dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 1876 allowed;
Appeal No, 1989 dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 998 OF 1912.
October 27, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Kumaraswamy Sastri.

EDAYAGIRI GOPALARATNAM AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—PETITIONERS

versus

A. L. A. R. CHOKALINGAM SETTI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Principal and agent—Goods purchased on credit—Contract by agent to pay reasonable rate of interest—Principal, whether bound.

An agreement by an agent to pay a reasonable rate of interest for goods purchased on credit is binding on his principal.

Montaignac v. Shitta, (1890) 15 A. C. 357; Heramba Chandra Pal Chowdhury v. Kasi Nath Sukul, 1 C. L. J. 199, followed.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif of Masulipatam, in Small Cause Suit No. 740 of 1910.

Mr. A. N. Sitarama Sastri, for the Petitioners.

Mr. K. N. Aiya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The District Munsif finds that the 3rd defendant was the agent of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and that the fourth defendant is the person who actually dealt with the plaintiffs in connection with the transaction. It was not disputed that goods were purchased on credit. In the letter, Exhibit C, the third defendant requests the plaintiff to charge moderate interest thus showing that interest was chargeable by plaintiffs. The fourth defendant, who actually dealt with plaintiffs agreed to pay interest at 9 per cent. Where goods are purchased on credit and payment of interest was contemplated, it is difficult to see why an agreement to pay reasonable interest (in this case Rs. 9 per cent.) should not be binding on the principals. Under the circumstances the Court must presume authority to agree to pay interest so as to bind the principals: Montaignac v. Shitta (1); Heramba Chandra Pal Chowdhury v. Kasi Nath Sukul (2).

I modify the decree of the lower Court and pass a decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for the amount claimed with costs in this and the lower Court. The suit against the third defendant will be dismissed.

Petition allowed: Decree modified.

(1) (1890) 15 App. Cas. 357.
(2) 1 C. L. J. 199.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 654 OF 1913.

October 27, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Kumaraswamy Sastri.

SUBBIER—PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER

versus

CHINNAPPA ROWTHEN alias ISMAIL ROWTHEN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVII, rr. 5, 8—Review—Court, power of—Successor of Judge who decides case, whether competent to grant review—Decision erroneous—Court, discretion of.

Order XLVII, rule 8, of the Civil Procedure Code, empowers a Court to grant a review and to re-hear the case.

Where a Judge who heard a case issues notice on an application for review, his successor is not prohibited from disposing of it. Order XLVII, rule 5, applies to Courts composed of more than one Judge.

Where a decision is on its face erroneous owing to the attention of the Court not having been called to a decision of the High Court which it was bound to follow, the Court has a discretion in such cases to grant a review and if the Court exercises its discretion, it would require a very strong case for interference by a High Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the decree in Review Petition No. 41 of 1913, in Appeal Suit No. 287 of 1911 on the file of the District Court of Trichinopoly (in Original Suit No. 89 of 1912 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Karur).

Mr. K. B. Ranganadha Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastriar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A decree was passed by the District Munsif of Karur in Original Suit No. 89 of 1912 dismissing the plaintiff's suit. An appeal was filed and the District Judge of Trichinopoly reversed the decree and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 275 with costs and further interest. The defendant applied to the District Court for review of judgment and the District Judge, who heard the appeal, passed the following order: "Admit and post for hearing after notice to the other side to 13th February 1913." The Judge went on leave and his successor heard the matter and restored the original decree dismissing the suit.

The Vakil for the plaintiff (who is the appellant) urges the following grounds: (1) that the whole procedure in respect of the petition for review was irregular as it was admitted without notice to the petitioner. (2) That no ground existed for granting the review.

There is nothing to show that the application for review was admitted without notice to the plaintiff. On the contrary the judgment of the District Judge shows that the question as to the admissibility of the review was argued. The Judge heard the objections to the granting of the review and at once proceeded to dispose of the appeal. There is nothing irregular in this procedure, as rule 8 of Order XLVII empowers the Court to grant the review and at once proceed to re-hear the case. There is nothing to show that the plaintiff wanted to argue the appeal or that he was prejudiced by the procedure of the Judge. It is argued that as the Judge who heard the review was only an acting incumbent and was not the Judge who decided the case, he ought to have left it to be disposed of by the permanent Judge.

Reference has been made to rule 5 of Order XLVII, but this rule only applies to Courts composed of more than one Judge. Where the Judge who heard the case issues notice on an application for review, I see nothing in rule 2 or any other provision of the Code prohibiting his successor from disposing of it.

The next objection is that no grounds such as are contemplated in rule 1 of Order XLVII exist and that the Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the review. I am not prepared to hold that, where a decision is on its face erroneous owing to the attention of the Court not having been called to a decision of the High Court which it was bound to follow, the Court has no power to grant a review even in cases where there is no appeal. In my opinion the Judge has a discretion in such cases and if he has exercised a discretion, it would require a very strong case for interference under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. So far as I can see, justice has not miscarried in the present case. The considered judgment of the District Munsif which was reversed on insufficient grounds has been restored.

The petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.
CIVIL APPEAL No. 285 OF 1911.
August 3, 1914.
Present:—Sir John Edward Power Wallis, Offg. Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Hannay.
AGNIHOTRAM VENKATA APPALA CHARLU—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
KUMBUM PAKIRU AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 9, 20—Jurisdiction of British Indian Courts - Right to trusteeship Temple in French territory—Parties French subjects.

The nationality of the parties has nothing to do with the jurisdiction of Civil Courts.

British Indian Courts have jurisdiction to determine the question whether a plaintiff is the sole trustee of a temple situate in French territory, even though the parties to the suit may happen to be French subjects, when the land in respect of which the suit is brought is within British India.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Kistna, in Original Suit No. 31 of 1910.

FACTS.—Suit for recovery of rent due by the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 under a rent-deed executed by them in favour of the plaintiff and his brothers, defendants Nos. 6 and 7. Plaintiff claimed to be the sole trustee of a temple situated in Frenchpet, Masulipatam, and alleged that defendants Nos. 6 and 7 had no right to the trusteeship. The temple had properties both in Frenchpet and in the British portion of Masulipatam. The parties were French subjects, but the rent-deed was executed in British territory and in respect of properties of the temple situated in British territory. Defendants Nos. 6 and 7 resisted the suit on the ground that they were joint trustees of the temple with the plaintiff, that they were willing to join as plaintiffs and that the suit was fraudulently instituted making them defendants. The District Judge, Kistna, dismissed the suit on the sole ground that the question having been raised whether the plaintiff was the sole trustee or was only a joint trustee with defendants Nos. 6 and 7 of a temple situated in French territory and the parties being French subjects, he had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. From this decree plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Messrs. V. Ramadoss and N. S. Narasimhachari, for the Appellant:—Nationality has nothing to do with the jurisdiction of Civil Courts. Dicey's Conflict of Laws, Rule 41, page 210. The suit is upon a rent-deed executed in British India in respect of properties situated in British India. British Indian Courts have jurisdiction to entertain the suit, notwithstandiug that the parties are French subjects and that the temple to which the property belonged is situated in French territory.

Mr. T. Ramachandra Row, for the Respondents:—As the parties are French subjects, the Court below had no jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of British Indian Courts depended on the nationality of the parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by the plaintiff, claiming to be trustee of a temple situated in French territory, to recover rent due by tenants under the temple of lands situated in British India. The District Judge has dismissed the suit on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to try the 4th issue, whether the plaintiff is the sole trustee of the temple and so solely entitled to sue, because the parties are French subjects and the temple is situated in French territory. No authority has been cited to show that these facts, if established deprive the Court of jurisdiction to try the issue.

There appears to be no ground for this position. We must allow the appeal, set aside the decree and remand the suit for disposal according to law. Costs of this appeal will abide.

Appeal allowed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

APPEAL AGAINST APPELLATE ORDER No. 39 OF 1913.

August 14, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

AKKAMMA—DEFENDANT No. 2—APPELLANT

versus

KOPPARAM RANGAPPA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANT No. 1—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 19—Acknowledgment of decree-debt, effect of—New Act, whether can revive barred right.

Under section 19 of the Limitation Act of 1877 acknowledgments of decree-debts had not the effect of initiating a new period of limitation.

Rama Rau v. Venkatesa Bhandari, 5 M. 171 (F. B.), referred to.

A right barred under an old Act cannot be revived by a new Act without express words.

Appeal against the appellate order of the Court of the District Judge of Bellary, in Appeal Suit No. 127 of 1911, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Penukonda, in Execution Petition No. 2122 of 1910, in Original Suit No. 455 of 1903.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, and Mr. L. S. Veeraraghava Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The decision in Rama Rau v. Venkatesa Bhandari (1) lays down the law binding on this Court so far as interpretation of section 19 of the old Limitation Act is concerned. That decision treated acknowledgments of decree debts as not having the effect of initiating a new period for limitation. Notwithstanding, therefore, the acknowledgment relied on by the decree-holder in this case, his application for execution became barred in 1908 before the new Limitation Act came into force (on 1st January 1909), and the said Act cannot revive a barred right without express words. The appeal is allowed, the orders of the lower Courts are set aside and the execution petition will stand dismissed. The parties will bear their respective costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

(1) 5 M. 171 (F. B.).

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1862 OF 1911.

May 26, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mallick.

ASIAT-ULLAH—DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

versus

SADAT-ULLAH AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 31—Allegation of fraud or mutual mistake wanting—Suit, whether for rectification of contract—Dispossession, what amounts to—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch I, Art. 120.

Where there is no allegation of fraud or mutual mistake of the parties nor any finding to that effect, the suit is not one for rectification of contract and cannot come under section 31 of the Specific Relief Act I of 1877.

If a proprietor who has been collecting rent from his tenants, is prevented from doing so because a rival proprietor has successfully invoked the assistance of a Court of Justice, the injured proprietor is dispossessed from his property just as effectually as if he had been driven out by physical force.

Article 120, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act has no application in such a case, which is governed by the 12 years' rule of limitation.

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Sylhet, dated 18th April 1911, affirming that of the Munsif, fourth Court, Habiganj, dated 22nd June 1910.

Babu Birendra Chandra Das, for Babu Ambica Charan Das, for the Appellant.

Babu Hemendra Kumar Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The case of the plaintiff No. 1 is that he and defendants Nos. 1 and 8 jointly purchased some land, the conveyance in respect of which was executed by the proprietors on the 19th Chaitra 1303 B. S., that on that day and the date of registration the plaintiff paid his share of the purchase-money, that plaintiff's share in the land was partitioned subsequently by private arrangement, that he collected rent from some of the tenants, but in 1306 the tenants refused to pay him rent as defendant No. 1 had got decrees against them for rent. He dates his cause of action, firstly, from Kartik 1304 when he first discovered that through the fraud of defendant No. 1 his name had been omitted as one of the purchasers in the conveyance of the 19th Chaitra 1303 and, secondly, from the beginning of 1306 when the refusal of the tenants to pay him rent constituted a dispossession from the land. Plaintiff No. 2 is the brother of plaintiff No. 1. The suit was instituted on the 1st Chaitra 1315 B. S. and the plaintiffs ask for a declaration of title and possession.

The Munsif finds that although there is not sufficient evidence of fraud on the part of defendants, the plaintiffs did in fact purchase the land in suit for consideration. He has accordingly decreed the suit. The Subordinate Judge agreeing with this view has dismissed the appeal. The present second appeal is preferred by defendant No. 1.

The first ground urged is that the only relief, which the plaintiff could have sought, was a rectification of the kabala of the 19th Chaitra 1303 B. S. under section 31 of the Specific Relief Act, a relief which is now barred by limitation. Now upon the findings this is not a case either of fraud or mutual mistake and, therefore, section 31 does not seem to me to apply. Next, it is urged that the facts disclosed do not establish that the plaintiffs have been dispossessed, and that a decree for rent obtained against a tenant is not an act dispossessing a rival proprietor. In my opinion both Courts have decided rightly in favour of the plaintiffs with regard to this part of the case. If a proprietor has been collecting rent from his tenants and is prevented from doing so because a rival proprietor has successfully invoked the assistance of a Court of justice, the injured proprietor is dispossessed from his property just as effectively as if he had been driven out by physical force. The case might be otherwise if the tenants inspite of the decrees obtained by a rival proprietor continue to pay to the original claimant, but that question does not arise here. The case is clearly one of dispossession and the suit is saved by the twelve years' rule of limitation. Article 120 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, therefore, has no application. No other point has been argued before me and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 335 OF 1911.

October 28, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

GRACE ROSAMUND RHODES—DEFENDANT No. 2—APPELLANT

versus

PADMANABHA CHETTIAR—DEFENDANT No. 10—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 90—Limitation Act(IX of 1908), s. 18, Sch. I, Arts. 12 (a), 166—Auction-sale—Fraud—Application to set aside sale—Plea of limitation, whether can be raised in second appeal—One administrator representing others—Decree passed against such administrator, validiy of—Auction-sale in such decree—Sale not set aside within 30 days—Suit to declare auction-sale not binding, whether maintainable—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 268 to 273.

Where one administrator acts on behalf of the other administrators and fully represents the estate, a decree passed against him and against the estate represented by him is perfectly valid, though the administrator-in-charge might be liable to the legatees for the breaches of duty and for gross negligence resulting in loss to the estate. An auction-sale held in execution of such a decree is perfectly valid and binding on the estate until set aside.

Order XXI, rule 90, of the Code of Civil Procedure, unlike the old section 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, includes applications to set aside sales on the ground of fraud.

A suit to declare an auction-purchase as not binding upon the estate fully represented by one of such administrators will not lie, but the sale might be set aside within 30 days from its date under Article 166 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act, IX of 1908.

Shivlal Bhagvan v. Shambu Prasad, 29 B. 435 at p. 448; 7 Bom. L. R. 585; Bennett v. Hamill, (1806) 2 Sch. & Lef. 566 at p. 577; Bowen v. Evans, (1844) 1 Jo. & Lat. 178 at p. 259; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 569; 68 R. R. 242; Tommey v. White, (1850) 3 H. L. C. 49 at p. 63; 10 E. R. 19; 88 R. R. 26; Sheik Ismail Rowther v. Rajab Rowther, 30 M. 295; 17 M. L. J. 165; 2 M. L. T. 186; Zain-ul-Abdin Khan v. Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan, 10 A. 166; 15 I. A. 12; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 129; Faiyaz Husain Khan v. Prag Narain, 29 A. 339; 10 O. C. 314; 11 C. W. N. 561; 2 M. L. T. 191; 4 A. L. J. 344; 5 C. L. J. 563; 17 M. L. J. 263; 9 Bom. L. R. 656 (P. C.); 34 I. A. 102; Malkarjun v. Narahari, 25 B. 337; 5 C. W. N. 10; 10 M. L. J. 368; 2 Bom. L. R. 927; 27 I. A. 216 (P. C.); Tookoomoni Dasi v. Dwarka Nath, 17 Ind. Cas. 972; 17 C. W. N. 478; 16 C. L. J. 581, referred to.

A plea of limitation can be raised even in second appeal if it is patent on the face of the pleadings and requires no additional facts to decide the same.

Balaram v. Mangta Das, 34 C. 941; 6 C. L. J. 237; 11 C. W. N. 959; Raghu Nath Singh Manku v. Pareshram Mahata, 9 C. 635; 13 C. L. R. 89; Venkata Narasimha Naidu v. Bashakarlu Naidu, 25 M. 367 at pp. 370, 373; 6 C. W. N. 641; 29 I. A. 76 (P. C.); Raja Har Narain Singh v. Chaudrain Bhagwant Kaur, 13 A. 300 at p. 304; 18 I. A. 55; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 14; 15 Ind. Jur. 283, followed.

GRACE ROSAMUND RHODES v. PADMANABHA CHETTIAR.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 267 of 1901, preferred against that of the Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly, in Original Suit No. 31 of 1901.

Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar and K. Jagannada Aiyar, for the Respondent.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 29th August 1912, the Court (Sundara Aiyar and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ.) delivered the following JUDGMENT.—We are unable to agree with the learned District Judge that under Exhibit A no valid trust was created with respect to the three suit houses or that the trust has been extinguished or has lapsed. The Vakil for the respondent admits that the estate given to the sons and daughters of the testator in the suit houses is an absolute estate. That being so, it is impossible to see how the trust was void. Such an estate would, of course, not infringe the rule against perpetuities. The administrators were bound to give the annual income of the houses to the sons and daughters of the testator until they put them in possession; and till they did so, the trust could not come to an end and the legatees would be entitled to institute a suit for administration with a view to get possession of their shares in the houses. The trust, therefore, neither failed nor was extinguished.

The 7th issue in the case is, "whether the sale and compromise in Original Suit No. 21 of 1889 was for the benefit of the administration and binding against plaintiff and others interested in the administration." That suit was instituted by the 1st defendant for setting aside the sale, which had taken place in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 204 of 1880 which was passed against one of the daughters of the testator, namely, Mrs. Grace Rhodes. The suit was compromised. By the compromise the 1st defendant agreed to pay Rs. 600, the amount of the decree in Original Suit No. 204 of 1880, by a certain date and if he failed to do so, the properties were to be brought to sale. He did not pay the money and apparently the properties were sold and purchased by the 10th defendant, Padmanabha Chetti. Now, under the compromise the 1st defendant agreed to make the estate which belonged to all the sons and daughters of the testator liable for the debt of Mrs. Grace Rhodes. It does not appear that there was any contention in Original Suit No. 21 of 1889 that the debt contracted by Mrs. Rhodes should be enforced against the other legatees under the Will. The learned Judge does not find that there was any such question raised and that the 1st defendant acted prudently in settling a res dubia by agreeing to the compromise. He observes: "Then the proposed compromise may have appeared advantageous at the time, if he (1st defendant) was of an optimistic tendency, but the members of the family do not seem to have possessed much unanimity and thus he did not receive the support on which he probably reckoned. He failed to fulfil his contract under the compromise. Can he be blamed for having no funds to pay Rs. 600 on the due date or to bring a fresh suit when he was referred to one on his petition for adjournment being refused? I think not." This statement is full of conjectures as to what might have influenced the 1st defendant to enter into the compromise. It does not refer to any circumstances which would justify the 1st defendant in agreeing to it and in making the property of all the legatees liable. The learned District Judge says that the legatees took the estate absolutely but the shares were not defined. According to the Will which gave the houses to all the legatees, they obviously were all entitled to equal shares in them and we see no reason justifying the 1st defendant in making the shares of all liable for the debt of one. Apparently the learned District Judge proceeds on the view that the 1st defendant might have intended after paying the amount of Rs. 600 to Narayana Pillai to saddle Mrs. Rhodes' share with the whole of Rs. 600; but that was not the effect of the compromise and if that was what he intended to do, he acted quite wrongly in agreeing to a compromise which made the shares of all liable for the debt of one. The District Judge did not direct his attention to the question whether there were any doubtful matters at the time of the settlement, which would make the compromise binding on the sons and daughters of the testator. We must, therefore, ask for a revised finding on the 7th issue.

The plaintiff alleged in the plaint that the sale in which Padmanabha Chetti purchased, was a fraudulent one and that he was the agent of the 1st defendant, the administrator. Apparently the suggestion was that the administrator by a fraud intended to benefit himself by the sale. It is not stated distinctly that Padmanabha Chetti was only a benamidar for the administrator. The District Judge observes that Padmanabha Chetti was a purchaser at an open sale by order of Court, that he was not a party to the previous litigation which Narayana Pillai started and that there was no reason to impute to him a knowledge that the Court sale was illegal, as disposing of property of persons not made liable under the decree. But the decree obviously was only against Mrs. Rhodes. The real question to be decided was whether Padmanabha Chetti made the purchase for the benefit of the 1st defendant, the administrator. Although the plaint is somewhat vague and the 5th issue is also vague, we consider it desirable that there should be a distinct finding on this question. The respondent complains that there is no finding on the 4th and 8th issues. We think that findings should have been recorded on them also.

We shall, therefore, ask the District Judge to record a fresh finding on the 7th issue and also to record findings on the 4th, 5th and 8th issues with reference to the observations we have made in connection with the 5th issue. The findings will be submitted within one month from the date of the receipt of this order, and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of Trichinopoly submitted the following FINDING.—The suit house formed part of the property of a certain Thomas Edmunds, who died in 1866 leaving seven sons and four daughters.

Two years before his death he executed a Will, which contained a clause directing that the suit house together with two other houses situated in the Trichinopoly Cantonment, two houses at Woriyur and one house at Pudnur be kept in trust and that the rents realised therefrom be divided equally among the whole of his children and their heirs respectively for their support and maintenance. No trustees were appointed and the testator's sons-in-law, who were appointed executors, appear to have taken no steps to carry out the terms of the Will. In 1877, the plaintiff in the present suit who is the 7th son of the testator, the 1st defendant, the testator's 6th son, and a married daughter of the testator applied for and obtained Letters of Administration with the Will annexed. One Narayana Pillai brought a suit, Original Suit No 204 of 1880, against another of the testator's married daughters, a certain Mrs. Grace Rhodes, who is 2nd defendant in this suit, to recover a sum of money she had borrowed from him and obtained a decree. The suit house together with the two other houses in the Cantonment were attached and sold in execution of this decree. The 1st defendant then lodged Original Suit No. 21 of 1889, before the sale was confirmed, to set it aside, and the suit was compromised, it being agreed that the sale should be set aside and that 1st defendant should pay a sum of Rs. 600 by a certain date, failing which the houses should again be sold. The money was not paid and the houses were sold, the suit house being purchased at Court auction by the 10th defendant in the present suit. This suit is brought for removing the 1st defendant from the trusteeship, for a declaration that the sale in Original Suit No. 21 of 1889 is not binding on the estate, and for possession of the plaint house and rent. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit, but my predecessor, holding that no valid trust was created under the Will, Exhibit A, with respect to the suit house and the other houses bequeathed therein, found that the compromise entered into by the 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 21 of 1889 did not violate the terms of any trust and reversed the lower Court's decision and dismissed the suit. In second appeal their Lordships held that a valid trust was created under Exhibit A and that the trust neither failed nor was extinguished, and called for a fresh finding on the 7th issue and findings on issues 4, 5 and 8 with reference to the observations made in their order in connection with the 5th issue.

2. The 7th issue is whether the sale and compromise in Original Suit No. 21 of 1889 was for the benefit of the administration and binding against plaintiff and others interested in the administration. The Vakil for the 10th defendant asks for a finding in his favour on three grounds:—(1) that the debt contracted by Mrs. Grace Rhodes, to which Original Suit No. 204 of 1880 relates, was contracted for the benefit of the estate, (2) that the 1st defendant's action in compromising Original Suit No. 21 of 1889 was beneficial to the estate, whether or no the decree in Original Suit No. 204 of 1880 was binding on the estate, and (3) that if the 1st defendant acted bona fide the compromise and the subsequent sale to the 10th defendant, when it proved infructuous, are binding on the other beneficiaries under Exhibit A, whether or no the 1st defendant's action was beneficial to the estate. In view of their Lordships' observations in their judgment in second appeal I do not think it is open to me to consider the second ground, for their Lordships have laid down in unequivocal terms that unless there were any doubtful matters at the time of the settlement, which would make the compromise binding on the sons and daughters of the testator, the 1st defendant acted quite wrongly in agreeing to a compromise which made the shares of all liable for the debt of one. And unless the 10th defendant can show that the compromise was entered into by the 1st defendant owing to a reasonable doubt whether he could succeed in proving in Original Suit No. 21 of 1889 that Mrs. Grace Rhodes' debt was not contracted for the benefit of the estate, I cannot see how his action, even if it were proved to be bona fide, could bind the other beneficiaries. The real question on which as I understand their Lordships desire me to return a finding is whether the evidence establishes that there were any doubtful matters at the time of the settlement, which would make the compromise binding on the sons and daughters of the testator. The only persons examined on this point are the 1st defendant himself (P. W. No. 1) and D. W. No. 3, the individual who obtained the decree in Original Suit No. 204 of 1880. The latter, no doubt, says he lent the money, in respect of which he obtained his decree, to Mrs. Rhodes to execute repairs on one of the estate houses and to pay the Municipal tax due thereon, but I concur with the view of the Subordinate Judge for the reasons set out in paragraph 39 of his judgment that the evidence of this witness cannot be believed. The 1st defendant himself does not suggest that he entered into the compromise because he entertained any doubt as to succeeding in the plea contained in his plaint, that the debt to which Original Suit No. 204 of 1880 relates was Mrs. Rhodes' private debt. On the other hand, he explicitly states that he put in the compromise petition after getting permission from the Court to sell the property, intending to pay the amount fixed in the compromise from Mrs. Rhodes' share, and adds that, as permission to sell was cancelled on the following day, he took no further steps in the matter. My finding on the 7th issue on the evidence on record is that the sale and compromise in Original Suit No. 21 of 1889 was not for the benefit of the administration and is not binding against plaintiff and others interested in the administration.

3. Issues 4 and 8 deal with the question as to whether the plaintiff is estopped from making the present claim by reason of his previous conduct and of certain admissions made by him in previous suits. In the High Court the 10th defendant appears to have complained that my predecessor recorded no finding on these issues. But I may point out that so far as I can see, no objection was taken to the findings of the Subordinate Judge in the appeal memorandum presented to this Court against his decision. I concur in the finding of the Subordinate Judge on both these issues. So far from acquiescing in the sale the plaintiff has persistently contested it, and as the Subordinate Judge points out in paragraph 31 of his judgment, the plaintiff never admitted the validity of the sale or the propriety of the 1st defendant's administration in any of the suits mentioned in the 4th issue.

4. There appears to be a slight misconception in the penultimate paragraph of their Lordships' judgment. The 5th issue relates, not to the sale in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 21 of 1889 to the 10th defendant, but to the sale in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 204 of 1880 to D. W. No. 3, which was set aside as a result of the compromise petition (Exhibit E). It is not apparent, therefore, why the 5th issue was framed, but so far as appears from the evidence on record, the decree in Original Suit No. 204 of 1880 is clearly not binding on the plaintiff. Their Lordships ask for a distinct finding on the question whether the purchase by the 10th defendant of the suit house in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 21 of 1889 was made for the benefit of the 1st defendant. There seems no reason to think that it was. No doubt the 1st defendant had usufructuarily mortgaged the suit house and the two other houses in the cantonment to the 10th defendant under Exhibit C a few months before the sale, and it may be perhaps conceded that on this document the 10th defendant occupied a position as agent in respect of the three houses under the 1st defendant. But there is nothing to show that the 10th defendant did not purchase at the Court auction like any other bidder or that he gained any advantage at the auction by his position as a usufructuary mortgagee. It cannot, therefore, I think, be held in virtue of section 90 of Act II of 1882 that when the 10th defendant purchased the suit house he purchased for the benefit of the 1st defendant, and apart from the legal position which, it is urged for the plaintiff, the purchase by a mortgagee of mortgaged property creates, there is no evidence in support of the plaintiff's suggestion that the 10th defendant made the purchase for the benefit of the 1st defendant. My finding on this point is, therefore, against the plaintiff.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing on the 20th and 21st October 1914, after the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, and the case having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaint in the suit out of which this second appeal has arisen was filed so long ago as the 18th July 1900 and hence it is now over 14 years since this suit was instituted. The suit was brought by one of the administrators of the estate of Thomas Edmonds for a declaration that the sale of the plaint house at the Court auction held in execution of the compromise decree in Original Suit No. 21 of 1889 passed against another administrator, was not valid and binding on the above estate. The plaint also prayed for the possession of the house (and for other subsidiary and alternative reliefs which need not be set out).

The 10th defendant is the contesting defendant and he was the purchaser at the Court auction. His sale seems to have been about the end of 1891 and one of the many surprises in this case is that even the sale certificate is not filed as evidence. The plaintiff attacks the validity of the Court auction-sale to the 10th defendant on the following grounds:—

(a) The compromise in the Suit No. 21 of 1889 brought by the 1st defendant, the other administrator, was not for the benefit of the trust nor was it within the 1st defendant's powers to enter into such a compromise. (See paragraph 17 of the plaint).

(b) The 10th defendant was the 1st defendant's agent. The 10th defendant has fraudulently purchased the property in Court auction and is in enjoyment of the same. (See paragraph 26 of the plaint).

This vague allegation in paragraph 26 of the plaint was afterwards expanded into the contentions:

(*b*1) that the 10th defendant was the benamidar of the 1st defendant, the administrator who acted fraudulently against the other administrator, the plaintiff, and against the other legatees under the Will;

(*b*2) that the 10th defendant took advantage of his position as the agent of the 1st defendant to bring the property to Court auction-sale and purchased the house for a low price.

I do not think it necessary to set out all the stages through which this complicated litigation has passed during the last 14 years and 4 months. The 2nd defendant who now holds the position of the plaintiff's legal representative is the appellant before us, while the 10th defendant is the only respondent before us.

The final findings of the District Court are:—

(1) That the 1st defendant in consenting to a decree being passed charging the plaint house in favour of Narayana Pillai in Original Suit No. 21 of 1889 acted foolishly and against the interests of the estate, but that he (the 1st defendant) did not act fraudulently or collusively.

(2) That the 10th defendant who was a usufructuary mortgagee of the house under the 1st defendant and who was also the agent of the 1st defendant for certain purposes, did not purchase the house in the Court auction-sale as the 1st defendant's benamidar, that there was no fraud or collusion in the matter of the said purchase and that the 10th defendant must be deemed to be a bona fide purchaser in the Court auction-sale for valuable consideration, as he is not proved to have taken any advantage of his position as usufructuary mortgagee.

Sections 267, 268 and 269 of the Indian Succession Act, X of 1865, enact that the administrator has, generally speaking, got all the powers to sue which the deceased had when living and that he can dispose of the deceased's property at his absolute discretion.

Section 271 says that where there are several administrators, the powers of all may, in the absence of any direction to the contrary, be exercised by any one of them who has taken out administration. As said in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XIV, page 300: "The personal representative has very large powers to compromise claims. His powers extend as well to claims by legatees as to claims against the estate; the only question to be considered in the case of a compromise is whether he has acted in good faith or not." It seems to me that when the administrator represents the estate fully, a decree passed against him and against the estate represented by him is perfectly valid (until it is set aside), though the administrator might be liable to the legatees for breaches of duty and for gross negligence resulting in loss to the estate. (See William's Executors and Administators, Part IV, Book II, Chapter 2, section 2). The estate itself is bound by the decree. The Court auction-sale in pursuance of that decree vests in the purchaser the title to the property sold. A representative, no doubt, commits a devastavit if he applies the estate in payment of a claim which he has no right to satisfy or if he admits claims against the estate which he ought not to admit.

The 10th defendant in this case in his written statement does not clearly raise the contentions that as a bona fide purchaser at the Court auction-sale in execution of a decree passed against him, he got an unimpeachable title and that as that Court auction-sale was not set aside within one year from the date of the sale (1891) or even from the beginning of 1898 when, according to the plaint paragraph 39, the plaintiff came to know of the alleged fraudulent acts of the defendants Nos. 1 and 10, the suit is barred by limitation under Article 12(a) of the Limitation Act. (As I said before, the present suit was brought only in July 1900. Order XXI, rule 90, of the Code of Civil Procedure, unlike the old section 311, includes applications to set aside execution sales on the ground of fraud and thus the limitation period is now only 30 days under Article 166).

The first contention, however, may be spelt out by picking out and sorting of certain words found in paragraphs 8, 10 and 16 of the written statement. In Shivlal Bhagvan v. Shambhu Prasad (1), the following passages occur: "A purchaser has a right to presume that the Court has taken the steps necessary to investigate the rights of the parties and that it has on that investigation properly decreed a sale. He has no right to call upon the Court to protect him from a title not in issue in the cause and no way affected by the decree, but if he gets a proper conveyance of the estate, so that no person whom the decree affects can invalidate the title, although the decree may be erroneous and, therefore, to be reversed, I think the title of the purchaser ought not to be invalidated. If we go beyond this, we shall introduce doubt on sales under the authority of the Court which would be highly mischievous. This is how the law was expounded by Lord Redesdale in Bennett v. Hamill (2). In Bowen v. Evans (3) Lord St. Leonards remarks that it is of the greatest importance that sales made under the authority of the Court should not be lightly set aside, and he accordingly refused to disturb the purchaser. His decree was confirmed by the House of Lords Bowen v. Evans (4)."

(1) 29 B. 435 at p. 448; 7 Bom. L. R. 585.
(2) (1806) 2 Sch. & Lef. 566 at p. 577.
(3) (1844) 1 Jo. & Lat. 178 at p. 259; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 569; 68 R. R. 242.
(4) (1848) 2 H.L.C. 257; 9 E. R. 1090; 81 R.R. 136.

"The effect of the reversal of a decree on a sale held under it was considered by the House of Lords in Tommey v. White (5). Lord Brougham in delivering his o inion said :—' We cannot set aside the sale, for the sale was under the decree of the Court, to a bona fide purchaser, there being no fraud, and consequently the setting aside that sale is utterly and absolutely out of the question; the sale must stand.' " In Sheik Ismail Rowther v. Rajab Rowther (6) it was held that even where the decree-holder himself purchases the property in Court auction and had been guilty of fraudulent proceedings in obtaining the sale, the title of a third party who had no notice of any defect in the decree and who purchased it bona fide from the decree-holder purchaser, cannot be impeached. In Zain-ul-Abdin Khan v. Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan (7) their Lordships of the Privy Council said that bona fide purchaser, who were no parties to the decree which was then valid and in force, had nothing to do further than to look to the decree and to the order for sale. Of course, if in this case the contention of the plaintiff that the 10th defendant was only the agent of the 1st defendant in making the Court auction-purchase and that he, the 1st defendant, and Narayana Pillai colluded in bringing about the decree and sale, had been established, the 10th defendant could not claim to be a bona fide third party purchaser. But on the finding of the District Court as it stands, I am of opinion that the 10th defendant's purchase cannot be set aside and his title is complete as against all persons who claim to be interested in the estate which was fully represented by the 1st defendant in the suit of 1889.

Mr. Seshachariar contended that as the 10th defendant was the mortgagee of the house from the 1st defendant under Exhibit C, dated the 6th June 1891 (i. e., subsequent to the compromise decree, Exhibit E, dated the 8th December 1890), he was a sort of trustee for the 1st defendant and his purchase in the Court auction in execution of the decree, Exhibit E, made him a trustee of the equity of redemption of the house for the benefit of the 1st defendant. As I understood him, he seemed to contend that a mortgagee is a trustee for the mortgagor and by his purchase at a Court auction-sale he could not divest himself of his position as such trustee. Their Lordships of the Privy Council, however, in Faiyaz Husain Khan v. Prag Narain (8) held that a mortgagee decree-holder who purchases in a Court auction-sale is "in as good a position as any outside purchaser unconnected with the property would have been."

The other contention also on the side of the respondent, namely, that the plaintiff's suit is barred under Article 12 (a) of the Limitation Act has to be upheld. The estate in whose interests the plaintiff brought this suit was fully represented by the 1st defendant (the other administrator), and the Privy Council case in Malkarjun v. Narhari (9) is clear authority for the proposition that a sale held in execution of a decree, even in a suit where the proper representative was not impleaded in the record, ought to be set aside within one year of the sale. If the plaintiff was by fraud kept out of knowledge of the circumstances entitling him to have the sale set aside, he ought to come in within one year of the knowledge of the fraud, reading Article 12 (a) and section 18 of the Limitation Act together. [See Tookoo Moni Dasi v. Dwarka Nath (10)]. In this case, there was no fraud proved and assuming that there was fraud, the plaintiff admits that he knew of the fraud more than $2\frac{1}{2}$ years before the suit.

But it is argued that as limitation under Article 12 (a) was not set up till the arguments in this Court, we ought not to allow the plea to be argued before us and we ought not to consider it. In Balaram v. Mangta Das (11) a Full Bench of seven Judges by a majority of six held that the Court was bound even in second appeal

(5) (1850) 3 H. L. C. 49 at p. 63 ; 10 E. R. 19; 88 R. R. 26.

(6) 30 M. 295, 17 M. L. J. 165; 2M. L. T. 186.

(7) 10 A. 166; 15 I. A. 12; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 129.

(8) 29 A. 339; 10 O. C. 314; 11 C. W. N. 561; 2 M. L. T. 191; 4 A. L. J. 344; 5 C. L. J. 563; 17 M. L. J. 263; 9 B. L. R. 656 (P. C.); 34 I. A 102.

(9) 25 B. 337; 5 C. W. N. 10; 10 M. L. J. 368; 2 Bom L R. 927; 27 I. A. 216 (P. C.).

(10) 17 Ind. Cas. 972; 17 C. W. N. 478; 16 C. L J. 581.

(11) 34 C. 941; 6 C. L. J. 237; 11 C. W. N. 959 .

o take note of the plea of limitation, if it appeared in the face of the plaint and on the facts found. Mookerjee, J., says at page 948:—"The provisions of section 542 of the Civil Procedure Code do not control and are not controlled by the provisions of section 4 of the Limitation Act. The two sets of provisions are independent of each other, though in the exercise of its judicial discretion under section 542 of the Civil Procedure Code, a Court may well have regard to the mandatory character of section 4 of the Limitation Act" (section 5 of the new Limitation Act of 1908). * * * * "If the determination of the question of limitation turns upon facts which were not investigated by reason of the omission of the defendant to take the plea of limitation in the Court of first instance, the Court of Appeal cannot be invited to entertain the point and remand the case for fresh investigation; if, however, the point arises on the face of the pleadings or on the facts found, the question must be considered." * * * * * This view is identical with that taken by Mr. Justice Wilson in the case of Raghu Nath Singh Manku v. Pareshram Mahata (12) where that learned Judge observed as follows:—"The effect of section 4 of the Limitation Act, as I understand it, is simply this : whenever a case is properly before a Court, whether it is a Court of Appeal or a Court of first instance, it is bound to take notice of the question of limitation; but in order to enable the Appellate Court to do that, the case must be before it." This is also borne out by the observations of the Judicial Committee in Venkata Narasimha Naidu v. Bashakarlu Naidu (13) where their Lordships indicate the test to be, does the question of limitation arise upon the pleadings or upon the evidence? In Raja Har Narain Singh v. Chaudhrain Bhagwant Kuar (14) the Judicial Committee said, "The Statute is there and the Judges are bound to take judicial notice of it."

In this case, I think that on the plaint itself and on the facts found, namely, that the 10th defendant is not the benamidar of the 1st defendant in respect of the execution purchase, the question of limitation is patently raised and we are bound to take notice of it.

In the result, the second appeal fails and is dismissed. But seeing that the 10th defendant succeeds on a point which he ought to have raised and did not raise till the very last stage of this protracted litigation, I direct the parties to bear their respective costs throughout.

NAPIER, J.—I concur.

Appeal dismissed.

(12) 9 C. 635; 13 C. L. R. 89

(13) 25 M. 367 at pp 370, 373; 6 C. W N 641; 29 I. A. 76 (P C.)

(14) 13 A 300 at page 304; 18 I. A. 55; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 14; 15 Ind. Jur 283.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1713 OF 1912.

September 25, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ayling and Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar.

P. KANTHU (DIED) AND OTHERS—DEFENDANT AND HER LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES—APPELLANTS

versus

DASA UPADHYA—LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE OF THE PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Alienation by widow, suit by reversioner to set aside—Legal necessity—Burden of proof—Old alienation—Court, duty of, to regard alienee's evidence indulgently—Recital in deed, whether sufficient proof of legal necessity—Sale-deed by widow incorporating conditional sale-deed by husband, invalid—Alienee, right of, to fall back upon original deed—Mulgeni lessee—Darkhast grant land; whether appurtenance of leased property.

In a suit by a reversioner to set aside an old alienation made by a widow on the ground that there was no legal necessity for the alienation, though the burden of proof as to necessity is not shifted on to the reversioner, yet the Court should approach the evidence as to the necessity adduced in respect of such an alienation by the alienee with a much more indulgent mind than where the alienation attacked took place only a few years before suit.

Chowdhry Herasutoollah v. Brojo Soondur Roy, 18 W. R. 77; Hunoomanpersaud Panday v Musammat Babooe Munraj Kunweree, 6 M. I. A. 393; 18 W. R. 81 note; Sevestre 253 n.; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 29; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 552; 19 E. R. 147; Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Bhupendra Nath Basu, 25 C 103; Maharaja of Bobbilli v Raja Kaminayani Bangaru, 8 Ind. Cas. 860; 35 M. 108 at p. 112; 9 M. L. T. 155; 21 M. L. J. 593; (1911) 2 M.W.N. 101; Gangisetti Ramaya v. Kallika Peraya, 16 Ind. Cas. 411; (1912) M W. N. 559, followed.

Recitals in documents do not of themselves afford sufficient proof of legal necessity.

Brij Lal v. Inda Kunwar, 23 Ind Cas. 715; 36 A. 187; 26 M. L. J. 443; 18 C. W. N. 649; 12 A. L. J. 495; 19 C. L. J. 469; (1914) M. W. N. 405; 15 M. L T. 395;

KANTHU v. DASA UPADHYA.

16 Bom. L. R. 352; 1 L. W. 794 (P. C.), followed.

If it is found that a widow was not justified in executing a sale-deed which purported to supersede and incorporate a previous conditional sale-deed executed by her husband, the alienee under the sale-deed and those who claim under him are entitled to fall back upon the rights created under the conditional sale-deed.

Richard Ross Skinner v. Naunihal Singh; 19 Ind. Cas. 267; 35 A. 211; 25 M. L. J. 111; (1913) M. W. N. 500; 13 M. L. T. 488; 11 A. L. J. 494; 17 C. L. J. 555; 15 Bom. L. R. 502; 17 C. W. N. 853; 40 I. A. 105(P.C.); Thumbuswamy Moodelly v. Hoosain Rowthen, 1 M. 1; 2 I. A. 241 (P. C.); 3 Suth. P. C. J. 198; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 531, followed.

Land acquired on Darkhast grant from Government by a Mulgeni lessee is not an appurtenance of the properties held by him under the Mulgeni lease, as he is neither a trustee nor a mortgagee of the owner of the lands and his acquisition under Government grant is not an unfair gain or profit obtained by him in detriment to his lessor's interest or in a fiduciary capacity.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 237 of 1910, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Mangalore, in Original Suit No. 483 of 1908.

Messrs. B. Sitarama Rao and K. P. Lakshmana Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga, for the Respondents.

This second appeal and the memorandum of objections put in by the respondent coming on for hearing on the 29th August 1913, and also on the 9th September 1913, and having stood over for consideration till 15th September 1913, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The defendant is the appellant before this Court. She purchased the plaint properties in 1901 from Ganapathi Rao, who had purchased them in 1899 from two persons, who in their turn claimed title under a sale-deed of 1869 executed by one Subbaraya Bhatta, who again had purchased the lands in 1857 from a Hindu widow, Subbammal. Exhibit VIII, dated the 3rd March 1857, is the registered sale-deed executed by the widow, Subbammal, to Subbaraya Bhatta. Under Exhibit VIII Subbaraya Bhatta purchased the plaint lands except land Survey No. 31/14 from Subbammal for Rs. 500. Subbammal's husband, who died in 1856, had shortly before his death i. e., on 9th April 1856, executed the registered deed, Exhibit XXII, to the same Subbaraya Bhatta for Rs. 150. Exhibit XXII, however, does not relate to the entire lands conveyed by the later sale-deed, Exhibit VIII, but only to $\frac{1}{3}$rd share of the said land. This Exhibit XXII calls itself a sale-deed, but contains a condition that if the purchase-money, Rs. 150, is paid back in three years, Subbaraya Bhatta should allow the vendor to redeem the properties. If, however, the money (Rs. 150) is not paid within three years, the sale was to become absolute. Of the Rs. 500 purchase-money mentioned in Exhibit VIII, Rs. 150 is the purchase-money mentioned in the prior conditional sale-deed, Exhibit XXII, Rs. 100 is recited as required to pay two creditors who had lent the said money to Subbammal's husband and to Subbammal's husband's brother for a pilgrimage to Tirupati, Rs. 75 is recited as due to another creditor of Subbammal's husband's brother, Rs. 60 is recited as required to discharge the debt borrowed for Subbammal's husband's funeral expenses and Rs. 115 is recited as paid in cash to Subbammal. The plaintiff is the reversionary heir on the death of Subbammal (which took place in 1907 more than 50 years after the date of Exhibits XXII and VIII) and he brought this suit on the allegation that the sale under Exhibit VIII was not made by Subbammal for proper necessity and hence it was not binding on him (plaintiff), the reversioner. The learned District Munsif dismissed the suit, holding that the recitals in the deed are sufficient evidence of necessity and that the Rs. 115 paid in cash might have been required by Subbammal for her maintenance, that, though the price mentioned in Exhibit VIII, viz., Rs. 500, might not have been an adequate price for the full ownership right in the lands, the circumstances showed that Subbammal intended to sell the lands subject to Subbaraya Bhatta satisfying the claims of a person who had satisfied the maintenance rights of two widows of Subbammal's husband's family and that the alienation under Exhibit VIII was, therefore, valid against the reversioner (plaintiff). The learned Subordinate Judge in appeal held that necessity for the alienation was not proved and he decreed the plaintiff's suit subject to the payment of compensation money for improvements effected by the defendant and by her predecessors-in-title from Subbaraya Bhatta downwards. Two material contentions in the second appeal before us might be formulated thus :—

(1) There having been no payment of the purchase-money within three years of 1856, as stipulated in Exhibit XXII, the title of the vendee under Exhibit XXII became absolute according to the tenor of that document in 1859 and the plaintiff's claim for the recovery of the plaint lands is, therefore, inadmissible in law, the defendant as the assignee of the rights of the vendee under Exhibit XXII being entitled to fall back on Exhibit XXII and to plead the rights secured under that deed in bar of the plaintiff's suit, if the title of the defendant based on Exhibit VIII is found invalid for any reason.

(2) The lower Appellate Court in coming to a conclusion on the question of the necessity for the sale by Subbammal under Exhibit VIII has fallen into errors of law as regards the onus of proof, as regards the sufficiency of the proof of necessity in respect of such an old transaction as Exhibit VIII and as regards the admissibility of the recitals in Exhibit VIII as to necessity, and has fallen into other errors in reciting in its judgment some portions of the evidence in the case.

Taking the second contention first, we think it must be admitted that the learned Subordinate Judge was under the wrong impression that the Court should require as strict a proof in respect of an old transaction like Exhibit VIII as it was entitled to require in respect of an alienation which took place only a few years before suit. In one place, the learned Subordinate Judge says that "there must be positive and reliable proof that the alienation was for valid and binding purposes." In Chowdhry Heerasutoollah v. Brojo Soondur Roy (1) Kemp and Glover, JJ., have considered this question at length. That was also a case brought by the reversionary heir to recover property sold by the widow of the last male holder 50 years before the suit was brought. They allude to "the unreasonableness of expecting direct evidence" of legal necessity for an old alienation after the lapse of 50 years and hold that the recital of legal necessity in the document is evidence of such necessity and that due weight should be given to it. The observations of the Privy Council in the well-known case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj Koonweree (2) are also relied upon. Their Lordships of the Privy Council say: "It is obvious, however, that it might be unreasonable to require such proof from one not an original party, after a lapse of time, and enjoyment and apparent acquiescence." Their Lordships also say that the representations of the alienor as part of the res gestæ and as contemporaneous declarations may be held to be evidence against the subsequent heir to the property. In Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Bhupendra Nath Basu (3) representations by an executor as found in the recitals in the deed executed by him were held to be evidence. In Maharaja of Bobbilli v. Raja Kaminayani Bangaru (4) and in the case of Gangisetti Ramaya v. Kallika Peraya (5) there are similar observations. We think that in this case the Subordinate Judge has, in considering the evidence, not taken sufficient account of the recitals in the deed and the length of time which has elapsed after Exhibit VIII was executed and has (so to say) misdirected himself to some extent as regards legal presumptions and the quantum of proof required in such cases. We do not go so far as to say that the burden of proof is shifted in the case of old alienations on to the reversioner, but we think that the Courts should approach the evidence as to necessity adduced in respect of such alienations by the alienee with a much more indulgent mind than when the alienations attacked took place a few years before suit. Coming to the first contention based on Exhibit XXII, this relates (as said before) to the title to only one-third of the plaint property. We think that the appellant should succeed on this second contention so far as the said one-third share is concerned if the sale under Exhibit VIII is found invalid as regards the whole of it or any fraction of it which includes that one-third share. It seems to us clear that if the limited owner (the widow, Subbammal) was not justified in executing the sale-deed, Exhibit VIII, which purported to supersede and

(1) 18 W. R. 77.

(2) 6 M. I. A. 393 at p. 420; 18 W. R 81 note; Sevestre 253 n.; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 29; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 552; 19 E. R. 147.

(3) 25 C. 103.

(4) 8 Ind. Cas. 860; 35 M. 108 at p. 112; 9 M. L. T. 155; 21 M. L. J. 593; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 101.

(5) 16 Ind. Cas. 411; (1912) M. W. N. 559.

incorporate the previous conditional sale-deed, Exhibit XXII, executed by her husband, the alienee under Exhibit VIII and those who claim under him are entitled to fall back upon the rights created under the conditional sale-deed, Exhibit XXII. It is unnecessary to dilate upon this clear principle of equity, as this principle has been in a very striking manner acted upon by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the very recent case of Richard Ross Skinner v. Naunihal Singh (6). The defendant being thus entitled to fall back upon the rights created by Exhibit XXII in favour of her predecessor-in-title (Subbaraya Bhatta) and that conditional sale-deed having become an absolute sale-deed by reason of the lapse of the period fixed in it viz., three years, for the redemption of the property by payment of the purchase money, the title possessed by Subbammal's husband to a one-third share in plaint property and which was inherited by Subbammal, became irredeemably extinguished in 1859. If the sale-deed, Exhibit XXII, had been executed after 1858, it might be argued that it was executed with reference to the erroneous course of decisions alluded to by the Privy Council in Thumbuswamy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen (7), but as this document, Exhibit XXII, was executed before 1858, the Privy Council decision in Pattabhiramier v. Venkatarow Naicken (8) clearly applied and the provisions of the document ought to be given effect to, especially as the document is not merely a mortgage which was to effectuate as a sale but is itself a sale-deed which might be treated as a redeemable mortgage, if certain conditions were strictly fulfilled by the vendor. The respondent's learned Vakil, Mr. Yegnanarayana Adiga, tried to take away the transaction under Exhibit XXII out of the class of transactions to which the ruling in Pattabhiramier's case (8) applied, by an ingenious comment on two sentences which occur in the later case in Thumbuswamy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen(7). Those two sentences in the judgment are:—"On a stale claim to redeem a mortgage and dispossess a mortgagee who had, before 1858, acquired an absolute title, there would be strong reasons for adopting the former course." (That is the course of treating the sale as having been absolute.) "In the case of a security, executed since 1858, there would be strong reasons for recognizing and giving effect to the Madras authorities, with reference to which the parties might be supposed to have contracted." It was argued that the first sentence favours only those deeds under which the alienees had acquired absolute titles before 1858 and not a deed like the present, under which the absolute title was acquired only in 1859, though the deed itself was executed before 1858. Having regard to the observations in Pattabhiramier's case (8) and the whole tenor of the observations in Thumbuswamy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen(7) (including the second sentence quoted above), we have no doubt that their Lordships of the Privy Council favoured the natural construction of all documents executed before 1858, whether the title had become absolute before 1858 or became absolute only after 1858, provided the suit to redeem was brought after the title had become absolute. In the result, the suit would have to be dismissed anyhow as regards one-third share in the plaint property. As regards the other questions raised in the appeal, one of them relates to the amount of compensation payable to the defendant in case the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. The amount of compensation is a question of fact and we see no sufficient reason to differ from the concurrent findings of the lower Courts on this question. The rate of interest allowed on mesne profits to the plaintiff by the lower Appellate Court is the same rate as is allowed by it on the compensation money due to the defendant and hence is not at all inequitable. The memorandum of objections (relating to the land No. 31/14) put in by the plaintiff must be dismissed with costs, as that land was acquired on Darkhast grant from Government and cannot, in law, be deemed to be an appurtenance of the properties alienated under Exhibit VIII,

(6) 19 Ind. Cas 267; 35 A. 211 (P. C.); 25 M. L. J. 111; (1913) M. W. N. 500; 13 M. L. T. 488; 11 A. L. J. 494; 17 C. L. J. 555; 15 Bom. L. R. 502; 17 C. W. N. 853; 40 I. A. 105.

(7) 1 M. 1; 2 I. A. 241 (P. C.); 3 Suth. P. C. J. 198; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 531.

(8) 13 M. I. A. 560; 7 B. L. R. 136; 15 W. R. (P.C) 35; 2 Suth. P.C.J. 410; 2 Sar. P. C.J. 623; 20 E. R. 660.

the defendant, who represents the original mulgeni lessee of the said properties, not being a trustee or mortgagee of the owner of the lands and his acquisition of No. 31/14 under Government grant not being an unfair gain or profit obtained by him in detriment to his lessor's interest or in a fiduciary capacity.

Before finally disposing of this second appeal, we have to obtain a finding on the following issue from the lower Court which should, in arriving at this fresh finding, have regard to the observations made in the first part of this judgment on the subject of the quantum of proof to be reasonably required, in cases like the present, of the value of recitals in old deeds, etc.

The issue remitted is:—

1. Was the sale by Subbammal of the plaint lands for Rs. 500, of which Rs. 115 was paid in cash, made for proper necessity binding on the plaintiff-reversioner? If the sale-deed is not valid as an outright conveyance, is it valid as a charge binding on the estate or any share in the estate in the hands of the reversioner to any extent and if so, to what extent? (See ground No. 26 of the second appeal memorandum). The time allowed is six weeks, from the receipt of this order. Ten days will be allowed for objections. No fresh evidence is to be adduced.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Subordinate Judge of South Canara submitted the following

FINDING — * * * *

Taking all the circumstances into account and paying due regard to the long lapse of time and the fact that the property had changed hands several times till it came into the possession of the defendant I hold that the sale was for a purpose binding upon the plaintiff-reversioner. I, therefore, find that the sale under Exhibit VIII was made for proper necessity binding upon the plaintiff-reversioner.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—Having regard to the decision of the Privy Council in Brij Lal v. Inda Kunwar (9) and the statement in paragraph 8 of the lower Appellate Court's finding that "the defendant has no evidence beyond the recitals in Exhibit VIII," we are unable to accept its conclusion that the sale under Exhibit VIII is binding upon the plaintiff-reversioner.

For the reasons given in the judgment pronounced by us on the 15th September 1913, we modify the lower Appellate Court's decree by awarding to plaintiff possession of only those portions of the plaint property which are not covered by Exhibit XXII and also excluding No. 31/14. Plaintiff will get proportionate mesne profits on the portion decreed to him and will pay proportionate compensation for improvements on that portion. The parties will bear their respective costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed in part; Decree modified.

(9) 23 Ind. Cas. 715; 36 A. 187 (P. C.); 26 M. L. J. 443; 18 C. W. N. 649; 12 A. L. J. 495; 19 C. L. J. 469; (1914) M. W. N. 405; 15 M. L. T. 395; 16 Bom. L. R. 352; 1 L. W. 794.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REFERENCE No. 9 OF 1913.

May 29, 1914.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, KT., and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

BANDI ALI FAKIR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS

versus

AMUD SARKAR AND OTHERRS—DEFENDANTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 144 (1), 193—Money payable in respect of forest rights, suit for recovery of—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 8.

The provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act applicable to suits for the recovery of arrears of rent apply, as far as may be, to a suit for the recovery of money payable in respect of forest rights.

What is payable in respect of forest right is in the nature of rent for the purposes of determining the jurisdiction of the Court, and, therefore, a suit for recovery thereof is entertainable by an ordinary Civil Court and not by a Small Cause Court.

Civil reference by the District Judge of Dacca, dated the 29th July 1913.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the District Judge of Dacca under rule

BANDI ALI FAKIR v. AMUD SARKAR.

7 of Order XLVI of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. The petitioners instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif at Dacca for recovery of a sum of Rs. 326-4-10 from the defendants on the basis of what is called a sadar patta, that is, a lease under a sub-lease. The Munsif held that the suit was cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, and on the 1st July 1913 returned the plaint for presentation in the proper Court. The plaint was then presented in the Small Cause Court at Dacca; but the Judge there returned the plaint on the 8th July 1913, because the suit, in his opinion, was not maintainable in the Small Cause Court. The District Judge has accordingly, upon the application of the plaintiffs, referred the question to this Court, whether the suit is maintainable in the ordinary Civil Court or in the Small Cause Court; he has expressed the opinion that the view of the Small Cause Court Judge as to the nature of the suit is erroneous.

On the 23rd March 1911, the defendants executed a kabuliat in favour of the plaintiffs in respect of forest rights in a tract of land described by boundaries at the foot of the document. The kabuliat states that for a period of one year, four months and twenty-one days, from the 23rd March 1911 to the 15th August 1912, the executants would have the right to cut and take out of the forest all the gajari trees and all wild trees (with the exception of mango, jack fruit, tal, bel, tamarind and simul trees) in close proximity thereto, of a circumference of more than 18 inches and one cubit above the ground, on the tract with the boundaries mentioned. The consideration for this sub-lease was specified to be Rs. 450, out of which Rs. 150 was paid in cash, and the balance was made payable in two equal instalments on the 17th September and 16th November 1911. The plaintiffs allege that the defendants have exercised acts of possession under the sub-lease and have felled and sold the forest-trees, but have withheld payment of the rent, except a sum of Rs. 97 paid in two instalments. The plaintiffs seek to recover the balance with interest and costs. The question arises, whether the suit is in essence one for damages for breach of contract maintainable in a Court of Small Causes, or whether it is a suit for rent entertainable only by the ordinary Civil Court.

Section 193 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that the provisions of the Act applicable to suits for the recovery of arrears of rent shall, as far as may be, apply to suits for the recovery of anything payable or deliverable in respect of any rights of pasturage, forest rights, rights over fisheries and the like. It is plain that the view most favourable to the defendants is that the document executed by them and called a kabuliat does not create in their favour any interest in the land on which the forest stands. But it cannot be disputed that it creates in their favour forest rights within the meaning of section 193. The transaction cannot rightly be regarded as a sale of timber; the trees were not and could not be specified, as the grantees were clearly entitled to fell timber which might attain the prescribed size at any time within the period during which the rights conferred on them were to be in force. It is further clear that what the plaintiffs now seek to recover was payable in respect of the forest rights conferred by them on the defendants. This view is supported by the decision of this Court in Abdullah v. Ashraf Ali (1). It follows consequently that the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act applicable to suits for the recovery of arrears of rent apply, as far as may be, to the present suit for the recovery of money payable in respect of forest rights. Consequently under section 144, sub-section 1, the cause of action must be deemed to have arisen within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Civil Court which would have jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the possession of the trees. This view, it may be conceded, is open to the criticism that the language of section 144 is possibly unduly strained to enable us to reach the conclusion. But it is supported by the judgment of Banerjee, J., in Shibu Haldar v. Gupi Sundari Dasya (2) where section 144 was held to apply to a case of fishery right, and this was followed, though not without some hesitation, in Abdullah v. Ashraf Ali(1) [see also Shib Prasad v. Vakai Pali (3)].

The question finally arises whether the suit

(1) 7 C. L. J. 152.
(2) 24 C. 449; 2 C. W. N. 169.
(3) 33 C. 601.

is one for the recovery of rent other than house-rent within the meaning of clause (8) of the second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act; because, unless excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes, the suit must be tried by such Court under sub-section 2 of section 15. Now, the term 'rent' is not defined in the Small Cause Courts Act, nor is any definition given in the General Clauses Act. The definition given in section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act or in section 3, clause 5, of the Bengal Tenancy Act is of no assistance, because each of such definitions was framed for the purposes of a special Statute. When we turn to law lexicons, we find a variety of definitions given. Sweet refers to Co. Litt. (142*a*) and defines rent as a periodical payment due by a tenant of land or other corporeal hereditament, which is usually payable in money but may also be resumed in fowls, wheat, spurs or the like. Wharton defines it as a certain profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements corporeal, and adds that it must issue out of the thing granted and not be part of the land or the thing itself. Bouvier defines rent as a certain profit in money, provisions, chattels or labour issuing out of lands and tenements in retribution for the use, and is thus distinguishable from purchase-money: Barrs v. Lea (4). Anderson defines rent as a compensation or return in the nature of an acknowledgment given for the possession of some corporeal inheritance. In Bacon's Abridgment, Tit. Rent, reference is made to Co. Litt. (47*a*, 142*a*) and it is laid down as a general rule that no rent can issue out of any incorporeal inheritance which lies in grant, because they are such things in their nature as a man can never recur to for a distress. To this is added the illustration that a lease of the vesture or herbage of land reserving rent is good, because the lessor may come upon the land to distrain the lessee's beasts feeding thereon. It is not necessary, however, to treat distress as an inseparable concomitant of rent, and in Brown v. Peto (5) it was pointed out that in the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the term 'rent' is used to include recurring payments not issuing out of the thing demised and for which accordingly there can be no distress. It is further pointed out in the Laws of England edited by Halsbury, Volume 24, paragraph 1032, that the term 'rent' is sometimes used in a very comprehensive sense and includes periodical sums of money charged upon or paid out of land and all corporeal hereditaments: Skene v. Cook (6). It has also sometimes been observed that rent may issue, not only from lands and tenements corporeal, but also from the personal property necessary for their proper enjoyment; for instance, where a furnished house or a stocked farm is leased, in such cases the personal property is really a part of the consideration of the rent, so that when the view is sought to be maintained that the rent issues out of the land alone, Selby v. Greaves (7) and Farewell v Dickenson (8), there is an attempt at a fictitious accommodation of the case to the defective definition. To return to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, it is plain that the term 'rent' in clause (8) of the second Schedule is used in a wide sense, otherwise the Legislature would not have found it necessary to exclude explicitly house-rent from its scope. We are consequently of opinion that what is payable by the defendants to the plaintiffs in respect of forest rights granted to them, is in the nature of rent for the purposes of determining the jurisdiction of the Court, as it has been already held to be for the purposes of determining the question of limitation applicable to a suit for its recovery. Abdullah v. Ashraf Ali (1). In this view, the plaint must be returned to the Munsif, so that he may entertain the suit and try it on the merits. The suit will be deemed for purposes of limitation to have been instituted in his Court on the date on which the plaint was originally presented.

Plaint returned.

(4) (1864) 12 W. R. 525; 33 L. J. Ch. 437; 10 L. T. 567; 3 N. R. 635.

(5) (1900) 2 Q. B. 653; 69 L. J. Q. B. 869; 83 L. T. 303; 49 W. R. 324; 16 T. L. R. 561.

(6) (1902) 1 K. B. 682; 71 L. J. K. B. 446; 86 L. T. 319; 50 W. R. 506; 18 T. L. R. 431.

(7) (1868) 3 C. P. 594; 37 L. J. C. P. 251; 19 L. T. 186; 16 W. R. 1127.

(8) (1827) 6 B. & C. 251; 9 D. & R. 345; 5 L. J. (o. s.) K. B. 154; 108 E. R. 446.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.
CIVIL APPEAL No. 109 OF 1912.
November 2, 1914.
Present:—Sir John Edward Power Wallis, Offg. Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar.
NACHIYAPPA CHETTY AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS
versus
M. R. M. K. R. RAMASAMI CHETTY—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Sale by managing member—Deed unregistered—Adverse possession against members of joint family, commencement of.

Where there is no registered sale-deed to evidence a sale by the managing member of a joint Hindu family, limitation as against the members of the family commences from the date on which the purchaser takes possession of the property sold to him.

Doraisami Sirumadan v Nondisami Sulevan, 21 Ind. Cas. 410; 25 M L. J 405; 14 M. L. T. 401; Harihar Pershad v. Bholi Pershad, 6 C, L J. 383, followed.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura, in Original Suit No. 156 of 1910.

Messrs. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar and C. A. Seshagiri Sastri, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. Krishnasami Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We agree with the decision of the Subordinate Judge. It is first objected that the first defendant's vendor, Sellappa Chetty, got no registered transfer in his favour in 1895 from his vendor, Kannappa Chetty, and that at the date of suit, two of Kannappa Chetty's sons were still minors and so entitled to question Challappa Chetty's title. We think that the objection is not sustainable. In these circumstances, time began to run against the joint family of which Kannappa Chetty was the managing member from the date of Chellappa Chetty's taking possession in 1895. [See Doraisami Sirumadan v. Nondisami Sulevan (1) and Harihar Pershad v. Bholi Pershad(2).] As regards the alleged mortgage on the property by Chellappa Chetty's widow, we agree with the Subordinate Judge that it was a mere nominal transaction and that the defendant was informed of it before entering into the agreement to purchase, and that the indemnity clause in the agreement was intended to refer to this mortgage. We also agree with the Subordinate Judge that when the plaintiff by Exhibit B undertook to sell to the defendant the house in Kanarai street, Devakotta, which he had purchased in Court sale, he did not impliedly covenant that he had acquired the melvaram as well as the kudivaram rights in the house site. We also agree with the Subordinate Judge that there was no oral covenant as to this. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The memorandum of objections is also dismissed with costs.

(1) 21 Ind. Cas. 410; 25 M. L. J. 405; 14 M. L. T. 401.
(2) 6 C. L. J. 383.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 189 OF 1913.
October 6, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Tyabji.
VISWANATHIER—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
AIYAVIER—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151—Amendment of plaint—Plaint framed on wrong view of law—Subsequent alteration of law—Adjournment of case, application for, grant of.

An application to amend a plaint on the ground that the plaint was based on the wrong view of the law and that the correct view has subsequently been laid down by the High Court, should be allowed inspite of the fact that the suit is barred by limitation on the date of the application.

Mulla Veetil v. Atchuthan Nair, 9 Ind. Cas. 513; 21 M. L. J. 213; 9 M. L. T. 431; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 165, followed

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 460 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Kulitalai, in Original Suit No. 515 of 1910.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question argued is whether the District Munsif should have adjourned the case, as he was asked to do, in order that a formal application for leave to amend the plaint might be made.

It was clear with reference to Mulla Veetil

v. Atchuthan Nair (1) that plaintiff's suit as filed was not sustainable; and that decision had not been reported till after the suit was filed. In the circumstances we think it possible to take the course taken by the learned Judges who eventually disposed of that case in accordance with the opinion of the Full Bench, and enable the present plaintiff to amend his plaint by adding a prayer for the recovery of the amount of his mortgage by sale. That course was taken by the learned Judges, as it will have to be here, inspite of the fact that plaintiff's suit would have been barred by limitation on the date of his application for an adjournment in order that he might amend. It is no doubt defendant is interested only in part of the property and will be liable at most for the portion of the mortgage amount which may be imposed on it. But that will not necessarily entail the impleading of the other person interested in the property, since the amount due for defendant's portion can be ascertained as between him and plaintiff alone.

In the circumstances we set aside the lower Courts' decisions and remand the suit to the District Munsif's Court for re-admission. The District Munsif must give plaintiff a reasonable opportunity of amending his plaint by the insertion of a prayer for recovery of the amount of his mortgage by sale of the property in defendant's hands. If no amendment is made within the time granted, the suit can again be dismissed. If an amendment is made, the suit must be disposed of on the amended plaint according to law. Plaintiff will bear his own costs in the lower Appellate Court and here. His other costs and defendant's costs will be costs in the cause.

Appeal allowed.

(1) 9 Ind. Cas. 513; 21 M. L. J. 213; 9 M. L. T. 131; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 165.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 72 OF 1913.

October 15, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

S. KRISHNA REDDI—DEFENDANT No. 7—APPELLANT

versus

SUNDARA REDDI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND SUPPLEMENTAL RESPONDENT—RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 33—Evidence given in one suit, when treated as evidence in another suit—Practice.

Evidence given in one suit can, by consent of the parties to another suit, be treated as evidence in that suit although the former suit was not between the same parties.

Sri Raja Inugunti Prakasa Raganingaru v. Venkata Rao, 21 Ind. Cas. 319; 25 M. L. J. 360; (1913) M. W. N. 800, followed.

A. B. Miller v. Babu Madho Das, 19 A. 76 at p. 92; 23 I. A. 106; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 73 and Ex parte Bottomley, (1909) 2 K. B. 14; 78 L. J. K. B. 547; 100 L. T. 782; 73 J. P. 246; 25 T. L. R. 371, referred to.

Appeal under section 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Miller, in Second Appeal No. 1568 of 1912, preferred against that of the District Court of Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 284 of 1910, presented against that of the District Munsif of Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 75 of 1909.

Messrs. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar and N. Rajagopalachariar, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The appeal is argued, first, on the ground that the plaintiffs, who proved only that the two tenants for life either were or should be presumed dead, were bound also to prove which died last and under which the reversioners claim immediatlely. The latter point is, in my opinion, immaterial since there is no question of limitation. It is only important that the succession has opened and that the plaintiffs established their character as reversioners.

Next, the evidence relied on as to the death of Ammoyee Ammal, one tenant for life, was that recorded in another case. It was regarded as evidence in this by agreement under a memorandum dated 4th December 1909. It is argued that, as such depositions could not be admitted in evidence under section 33 of the Indian Evidence Act or any other provision of law, they could not be rendered admissible by consent of parties, inasmuch as the consent of parties cannot authorize the Court to treat as evidence what could not in any circumstances be legally admitted as such. Sri Raja Inugunti Prakasa Raganingaru v. Venkata Rao (1), in my opinion, negatives this objection. The attempt to distinguish that decision from the present case, on the ground that here the parties to the two trials are different, must fail, because that fact had no influence on the reasoning by which the conclusion was reached. I, therefore, hold that the lower Courts were right in acting on this evidence.

The Letters Patent Appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

TYABJI, J.—This appeal depends upon the decision of two questions.

The first question may be shortly dealt with. It is, whether it is necessary that a reversioner, in a suit to recover the estate, should prove, not only that those who had prior interests in the estate have died, but also when or in what succession they died. The latter fact seems to me to be entirely immaterial to the reversioner's title. This question must, therefore, be answered against the appellant.

The second question seems to me to involve far-reaching principles. It is this. The death of a certain person was a fact in issue. It is alleged that the lower Courts' decisions on this issue are based on matters which were irrelevant, under the Indian Evidence Act, to the fact in issue, matters irrelevant to a fact in issue, by finding their way on the record or by otherwise coming to the cognizance of the Court either by the consent of the parties or through failure on their part to take objection, do not acquire thereby any probative force. If, therefore, the facts are as alleged, I have no doubt that the argument must prevail. I need only refer to A. B. Miller v. Babu Madho Das (2).

As I understand the law contained in the Indian Evidence Act, especially in the light of the decision cited, the Act lays down in sections 6 to 55 certain rules of logic. These sections (and I believe some other sections, e. g., 60, 61 and 158, come very near them in effect) are directions to the Court as to the cases in which the Court is to consider as a matter of logic that one fact has any relevance (or logical bearing) on another. In other words, where the Court has to consider the question whether or not a fact exists, certain sections of the Evidence Act are directions to the effect that facts A, B and C are facts from which the existence or non-existence of the fact X may be deduced. And by reason of section 5, unless the Court has the warrant of the Act for inferring as a matter of logic the existence or non-existence of fact X from the existence of facts A, B and C, the Court may not lawfully make any such inference.

Section 5, no doubt, refers primarily to the giving in evidence of facts. But the greater includes the less. Not only is the Court not to infer the existence of the fact X from A, B and C unless the facts A, B and C are declared by the Act to have a logical bearing on the fact X, but the facts A, B and C are not to be brought to the cognizance of the Court unless their logical bearing to X is so declared.

These rules of logic are to be distinguished from the rules laying down how the materials on which the Court is empowered to base its conclusions (the legal media concluendi as the Privy Council have called them in one case), are to be brought to the cognizance of the Court, i. e., the method of proving relevant facts. This latter class of rules have reference to the mode in which the Court has to collect the materials for the hypothesis. The former class of rules refers to the use to be made of the materials—the inference to be drawn from the hypothesis. In regard to the method of proving relevant facts, the parties have unrestricted power to make admissions: (section 58). But in regard to the logical conclusions to be deduced from the existence of the facts proved or admitted, the parties have no power to alter the directions given to the Courts to act in a manner declared by the Legislature to be illogical.

Thus, the parties may admit that the facts, A, B and C exist, in which case the

(1) 21 Ind. Cas. 319; 25 M. L. J. 360; (1913) M. W. N. 800.

(2) 23 I.A. 106; 19 A. 76 at p. 92; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 73.

Court will be able to deduce the existence of the fact X only if the Indian Evidence Act lays down that A, B and C are relevant to X, but not otherwise. The parties are equally at liberty to admit the existence of X itself. In that case it would no more be a fact in issue. But by the parties admitting the existence of A, B and C, the rules of logic are not abrogated, and if the Indian Evidence Act lays down that A, B and C are not relevant to X, then no deduction can be drawn relating to X from A, B and C.

I have thought it necessary to set out these somewhat elementary considerations in order to test the question which has been strenuously argued before us, that in the present case the parties purported to waive a rule of logic, a rule about the relevancy of facts, and that, therefore, the Court could not act in accordance with the course to which the parties consented.

What the parties did in the present case is stated in writing signed by the Vakils of both sides to the following effect:—

"The parties agree that the evidence let in in Original Suit No. 577 of 1908 on the issue as to whether Ammoyee Ammal is alive or dead, may be regarded as the evidence on that issue in the above case, viz., in Original Suit No. 75 of 1909."

It seems clear to me that the parties did not purport to abrogate any rule of logic contained in the Indian Evidence Act; but agreed that certain oral testimony which was given in another suit should be regarded as having been given in this suit. This does not affect any question as to relevancy. All that was waived was the method of proof. What was done did not contravene section 33. The defendant did not consent to give to evidence in another judicial proceeding probative force not given to it by section 33. The parties merely consented to let the Court take cognizance of the evidence in the prior suit in the same way as if it had been the testimony of witnesses examined before the Judge in the course of the trial of the latter suit.

The question, therefore, is whether a party is bound by his consent that the examination of the witnesses before the Judge should be dispensed with, and another method substituted for the Judge's taking cognizance of oral testimony. The law relating to this matter is partly referred to in the Indian Evidence Act and partly regulated by the law and practice relating to Civil and Criminal Procedure and, in the absence of any such law, by the discretion of the Court: cf. sections 135, 118, 119, 137 and 138 of the Indian Evidence Act. Order XVIII, rule 4, Code of Civil Procedure, contains the mode in which the evidence of the witnesses in attendance shall be taken. It seems to me clear that what was disregarded by the consent of the parties was no law relating to the relevancy of evidence but Order XVIII, rule 4.

Can the parties by consent empower the Court to act in contravention of Order XVIII, rule 4? It is beyond dispute that the parties may waive such rules of procedure as are intended to protect their personal interests and are not based on public policy. The rule that evidence shall be given in open Court, is no doubt a rule of public policy, Scott v. Scott (3). What has been waived, however, in the present case is not the giving of the evidence in open Court but its being given once again in the Court in specific reference to the trial of this suit. The Judge in Original Suit No. 75 of 1909 was the same as the one who had recently heard the evidence in the prior case, Original Suit No. 577 of 1908. What the parties did by consent was to bring about a variation of Order XVIII, rule 15, so that the same Judge could deal with the evidence recorded by him in another suit as if he had recorded it in the one he was hearing.

It seems to me that this was a course of proceeding which, though not specifically provided for in any enactment, was one nearly resembling recognised modes of procedure and varying from them in matters which do not affect any rule of public policy. The considerations referred to in Sri Raja Inugunti Prakasa Rajaningaru v. Venkata Rao (1) seem to me to be applicable. There oral testimony given before one Court was held to have been rightly taken cognisance of by another Court without a fresh examination of the witnesses on the latter occasion, the parties having consented to this course. The decision is sought to be distinguished on the ground that there the parties to the prior and later proceedings were the same, so that section 33 would not have been violated by the depositions in the earlier proceedings being given in evidence in the latter; whereas in the case which is now under decision the parties to the two suits, Original Suit No 577 of 1908 and Original Suit No. 75 of 1909, were not the same: so that under section 33 the evidence given by witnesses in Original Suit No. 577 of 1908 was not relevant to any issue in Original Suit No. 75 of 1909. But the fact that the provisions of section 33 were satisfied in Sri Raja Inugentis case (1) does not affect the question, if my opinion is correct that section 33 has no application either to the present case or to the grounds on which the decision cited proceeded. To the considerations referred to in Sri Raja Inugenti Prakasa Rajaningaru's (1) case, I may add (1) that evidence may, by consent of parties, be taken on commission and Order XXVI, rule 8, of the Code of Civil Procedure implies that by consent of parties evidence of persons not coming within clause (a) thereto may be taken on commission and used at the trial; (2) that if a party refers for information to another, that person's statement, though not given under Order XVIII, rule (4), becomes evidence under the Indian Evidence Act, section 20.

(3) (1913) App. Cas. 417; 82 L. J. P. 74; 109 L. T. 1; 57 S. J. 498; 29 T. L. R. 520.

Before concluding my judgment, however, I must add that I should not be satisfied with the correctness of my reasoning if its effect would be to nullify section 33. But I do not think any such result follows.

Section 33 in principle is an enabling section. In the circumstances mentioned in the section, matters other than the best evidence are permitted to be brought before the Court. The person relying upon section 33 says: "I am not able to adduce the best evidece—which would be the oral testimony of the witness under section 60 of the Indian Evidence Act (because the witness is dead or for some similar reason); but in its place I tender a statement of the witness on a previous occasion." If the occasion and circumstances of the statement tendered satisfy the provisions of section 33, then the substitution of the previous statement for oral testimony is permissible, because the Indian Evidence Act has laid down, as rules of logic, that inferences may be drawn not only from oral testimony but from such substitution for oral testimony.

Section 33 would, therefore, be violated if the party said, "I am not able to bring the witness in Court, take this document in substitution"—and it was found that the document offered and accepted in substitution did not satisfy the requirements of section 33.

But I have been at pains to justify my opinion that this was not what the parties intended to do. They said in effect: "We are satisfied that these witnesses, if they were called (as can be done), will depose to the same effect as they have recently deposed. We want the Court to consider that they have so deposed before it, without our being put to the trouble and expense of calling them." The fact that one of the parties agreeing to this course was not a party to the previous suit does not affect the procedure, inasmuch as it merely meant that though he had no opportunity for cross-examining in the previous suit he was content to waive that right. Had that party not consented to this course, it would still have been possible for the Court to avail itself of the procedure laid down in Ex parte Bottomley (4), viz., to re-call the witnesses, to have them re-sworn, and to put to them their previous depositions in the form of leading questions and ask the party objecting to cross-examine them further; and in a case such as the present, where the same Judge had very recently heard the witnesses give evidence I am not prepared to say that (if any objection had been raised to the course actually proposed and followed) the best way of exercising the discretion vested in the Court under sections 142 and 154 of the Indian Evidence Act would not have been to follow the procedure in Ex parte Bottomley (4).

(4) (1909) 2 K. B. 14; 78 L. J. K. B. 547; 100 L. T. 782; 73 J. P. 246; 25 T. L. R. 371.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the Court was competent to act in the manner suggested; that it exercised its discretion rightly in acceding to the suggestion, and that the result was that the witnesses were by the consent of parties taken to have given oral testimony in the suit under appeal to the same effect as in the other suit, though the testimony was not given in the exact mode provided for by the Civil Procedure Code.

The appeal should, in my opinion, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 914 OF 1911.

October 29, 1914.

Present:—Sir Alfred Kensington, KT., Chief Judge and Mr. Justice Rattigan.

MUHAMMAD AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

MUZAFFAR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, Expl. VI—Res judicata.

S sued his brothers, F and J, in 1856, for his ⅓rd share in the ancestral estate. The suit was referred to arbitration, and S accepted a certain area of the shamilat in full satisfaction of his claim. After his death, his son again sued F and J for the alleged share of S, but the suit was dismissed in January 1860 on the ground that in the previous proceedings S had given up all right to his share. Owing to some mistake which was repeated from time to time till 1908, S and his descendants were entered in the Revenue Records as full proprietors of the land in their possession and as having a right to claim a share, according to their holding, in the village shamilat. On a suit by the descendants of F to have the entry rectified:

Held, that the decision of 1860 operated as res judicata and that consequently the plaintiffs' suit ought to be decreed.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Shahpur, dated the 29th June 1911, passing a declaratory decree in respect of ¼th share in the shamilat.

Lala Ganga Ram, for the Appellants.

Mr. Badr-ud-din Kureshi, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—The family tree given in the judgment of the District Judge is admittedly correct and sets forth the relationship of the parties.

Aulia, the common ancestor, was one of four persons who owned the village Dehr in the Khushab Tahsil of the Shahpur District, all four proprietors being owners of an equal one-fourth share therein. It would appear that Aulia died about 1815, leaving his property to three sons, Fatta, Jahana and Sultan, and that at that time the land was more or less waste (uftada). Fatta and Jahana alone seem to have taken an interest in the property, and Sultan made no attempt to claim his ⅓rd share until 1856, when he brought a suit in the Court of Pandit Moti Lal for recovery of that share. By agreement of parties, this dispute was referred for determination to the two lambardars of the village who, on the 16th July 1856, gave an award which is printed in extenso at pages 3 and 4 of the paper-book. The arbitrators were satisfied that Fatta and Jahana had expended Rs. 780 upon the land and that Sultan was bound to recoup them to the extent of ⅓rd of that amount before he could claim his share in the property. Sultan appears to have admitted this liability, but he pleaded poverty and inability to pay anything to his brothers and prayed the arbitrators to award him some land for his maintenance. The arbitrators accordingly put it to Fatta and Jahana that Sultan was their own brother and that they should give him some land, whereupon the two former replied that they would abide by any award the arbitrators thought proper to make. As a result, the arbitrators decided that Fatta and Jahana should, out of their ¼th share in the shamilat, give Sultan a plot of 118 kanals 19 marlas (=29 bighas 2 kanals) of land, and they added that this portion of land would have to be taken into account in the defendants' share when partition of the shamilat was effected. Fatta, Jahana and Sultan accepted the award and the Court granted a decree in accordance with its terms. Before proceeding, we may here observe that the present defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 (the son and grandsons of Sultan) in ground No. 1 of their memorandum of appeal to this Court have attempted to place a false construction upon the words of the award to the effect that at the time of partition the area allotted to Sultan was to be taken "into account in defendants' share." According to them, the area allotted to Sultan was, by the terms of the award, to be deducted from the share in the shamilat to which otherwise Sultan would have been entitled when that shamilat was partitioned. Such was obviously not the meaning of the arbitrators. The area given to Sultan was given in charity and it was taken from the shamilat land, and what the arbitrators meant, and what the parties knew to be their meaning, was that when the shamilat land was eventually partitioned, Fatta and Jahana would, as against the other three proprietors of the village, have to be debited with the 29 bighas 2 kanals of shamilat land which they had given to their brother for his maintenance. That such was clearly the intention of the arbitrators and of the parties is apparent, not only from the terms of the award itself, but also from the statement made by Fatta and Jahana when asked by the Court whether they accepted the award. They replied that they did and added, "at the time of partition, we shall credit to the village proprietors the portion of shamilat now allowed to the plaintiff" (i.e., to Sultan). There is thus absolutely no force in grounds Nos. 1 and 2 of the grounds of appeal filed in this Court, and the District Judge was right in construing the proceedings of 1856 as amounting to a dismissal of Sultan's claim for his share in the ancestral estate. Of that estate, so far as the proprietary holding was concerned, he received nothing, but his brothers as an act of charity gave him of their own free will a plot of land in the shamilat and accepted the position that they would, at partition of the shamilat, have to credit the other three proprietors in the village with the amount of land thus received by them in anticipation.

Sultan died shortly after the above proceedings had concluded and in 1860 his son, Muhammad, again sued Fatta and Jahana for his alleged one-third share in the ancestral estate which had devolved from his grandfather, Aulia. This suit also came before Pandit Moti Lal who, on the 13th January 1860, dismissed it on the ground that Sultan, Muhammad's father, had in the previous proceedings given up all right to his share and had finally accepted the area allotted to him (viz., 29 bighas 2 kanals) in full satisfaction of all his claims. By some curious mistake, however, Sultan and his descendants were entered in the Revenue Records as full proprietors of the land in their possession and as having a right to claim a share, according to their holding, in the village shamilat, and this entry appears to have been repeated from time to time until 1908, when the patwari reported to the Tahsildar that Sultan and his heirs were mere malikan qabza and as such not entitled to claim any part of the shamilat. He accordingly proposed that the entry should be altered so as to bring it into accord with the real facts, but defendants objected and as a result, the Revenue Authorities declined to alter the entry and referred the descendants of Fatta (Jahana having died sonless some time ago) to the Civil Courts to establish their right to have the entry rectified. Hence the present suit, which has been decreed by the District Judge on the ground that the whole question was finally concluded by the decree based on the award in 1856. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 have appealed to this Court and we have heard all that Mr. Ganga Ram had to urge on their behalf. In our opinion there can be no possible doubt of the correctness of the District Court's decision. Sultan in 1856 practically threw himself upon the mercy of his brothers and gladly accepted from them, in lieu of the third share in the ancestral holding which he claimed, a specified plot of land carved out of the village shamilat and agreed, according to the judgment of Pandit Moti Lal in Muhammad's suit of 1860, to accept that plot in full satisfaction of any rights he might possess as a shareholder in the village. The plot which was given to him was, as we have said, taken out of the shamilat and could not, therefore, in any event carry as appurtenant to it a proportionate right in the rest of the shamilat. But this objection apart, the decision given in 1860 clearly operates as res judicata so far as the present plea urged by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 is concerned (see section 11, Explanation VI, of the Civil Procedure Code) Mr. Ganga Ram laid stress before us upon a statement in a certified copy of a so-called ikrarnama, which we were informed was attached to the Settlement Record of 1866. Probably this ikrarnama is part of the Wajib-ul-arz of that Settlement, but it is not necessary for us to deal with it at length. Defendants in the Court below did not so much as even refer to it, and the certified copy before us was actually filed in that Court not by them but by plaintiffs. As a matter of fact it does not in any wise strengthen defendants' case, as it is admitted that the entries in the Revenue Records have all along been in their favour, and the very object of the present suit is to show that these entries are erroneous. The ikrarnama, moreover, purports to have been executed in 1860 and that it erroneously represents the true facts is obvious when we remember that it was in that same year that Fatta and Jahana had succeeded in getting Muhammad's claim dismissed. It is impossible to believe that after their success they agreed to accept a contention which they had strenuously opposed in Court.

We have no hesitation in holding that plaintiffs have succeeded in establishing their case and we accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs. We have only to add in conclusion that there is no force in the contention that the omission of defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 6 to join the suit is a strong piece of evidence in favour of the justice of the contesting defendants' claims. Defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 6 are, no doubt, equally interested with plaintiffs, but while they have not actively assisted plaintiffs, they have in no way admitted the rights of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and we see no reason to doubt the allegation that plaintiffs are suing as much on their behalf as on their own. Pleader's fee in this Court to be Rs. 32.

Appeal dismissed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 299 OF 1911.

April 1, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Johnstone and Mr. Justice Shadi Lal.

MUNSHI RAM—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

GAINDA MAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Partition, evidence of—History of family—Money transactions.

The mere fact that no formal partition ever took place between the members of a Hindu family is not in itself conclusive against separation having occurred; the matter has to be decided upon an examination of the history of the family, of its mutual dealings, of its dealings with outsiders and upon admissions, if any, made by the members.

Apporier v. Rama Subba Aiyan, 11 M. I. A. 75; 8 W. R. (P. C.) 1; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 657; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 218; 20 E. R. 30, followed.

Money transactions between the members of a Hindu family, the one lending and the other borrowing and showing corresponding debts and credits in their books, go very far to prove disruption.

First appeal from the decree of the Honorary Subordinate Judge, first Class Jullundur, dated the 28th November 1910, decreeing the claim in part.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. H. Oertel and Lala Ram Rattan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It is convenient to reproduce here the pedigree-table with which the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge opens:—

Gainda Mal also had a third son Dev Raj, who is alive but has not been impleaded and apparently is treated as having no interest in this litigation. The lower Court has set out the pleadings and issues and it is unnecessary to repeat them. Plaintiff claims ⅓rd share in the family property which he details under 11 heads, allowing a similar share to Musammat Melo and to Gainda (and his sons) respectively; but adds that, if the Court is of opinion that the widow is not entitled to a share, than he (plaintiff) should have half and not only ⅓rd.

The points for decision were whether the family was a joint Hindu family, as plaintiff contends, or whether it had ceased to be so during Ganga Ram's life-time—he died in 1907—and in either case in what property plaintiff is by law entitled to a share. The lower Court found that some 22 years before suit Ganga Ram had separated off his sons; that on his death, out of all the property in suit, plaintiff became entitled only to his share in such property as Ganga Ram himself left, having kept it for himself at the disruption; that this share is one-half, Musammat Melo being entitled to no share, and that the property so left by Ganga Ram consisted of houses shown in list Dal attached to defendant's jawab-i-dawa, bonds and decrees shown in list Jim similarly attached, and a parcel of salt, value Rs. 250. Decree was passed accordingly, but no costs were allowed against either side.

Plaintiff appeals, and the sole question argued and requiring decision—there being apparently no dispute as to details of property—is whether the family really remained joint or not. After giving our best attention to the somewhat voluminous evidence and to the able arguments of Messrs. Sheo Narain and Oertel, we are unhesitatingly of opinion that disruption of the family is established and that the appeal must fail.

The lower Court was of opinion that both the oral and the documentary evidence showed that disruption took place long before the death of Ganga Ram. No formal partition ever took place, but according to the authorities, e. g., such rulings as Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyan (1) this in itself is not conclusive against separation having occurred, the matter has to be decided upon an examination of the history of the family, of its mutual dealings, of its dealings with outsiders; and upon admissions, if any, made by the members. The lower Court in its discussion of issue 1, page 194, line 30, paper-book, perhaps makes too much of plaintiff's admissions for—see page 100—plaintiff really only admitted separating in the matter of residence 1½ years before his father's death and stoutly denied any other separation; but for the most part the rest of the lower Court's discussion of the record is correct enough. Perusal of the oral evidence for the plaintiff produced before the Court shows that it is largely partisan in character; but even as it stands it does not much help him. A large proportion of the witnesses state no facts bearing upon the essential problem before us, and those who do state such facts by no means agree in their testimony. Some even make statements distinctly contrary to the theory of the jointness of the family; and some give themselves away by wild assertions that the family is still in practice joint, even in residence, which is oppposed alike to the allegations of the defendants and to the admissions of the plaintiff himself, and that the shop in which Ganga Ram used to work with Gainda Mal up to the former's decease is still carried on jointly "by the parties." One very useful indication of the partisan character of this evidence may be given as a sample. Ghulam Mustafa, Octroi Muharrir, page 128, says: "Goods received in the name of Munshi Ram or any of his co-partners were taken delivery of sometimes by Gainda Mal, sometimes by Munshi and sometimes by Amritsaria." This sounds decidedly in favour of plaintiff; but presently the witness is compelled to admit that "no goods were received in the name of Munshi Ram;" and he does not show by any record that Munshi Ram ever took over goods consigned in the name of Gainda Mal. The lower Court was right in holding that such evidence as this is of little value.

We need not examine minutely, or lay much stress upon defendants' oral evidence, as documentary evidence in such cases as the present is usually the only reliable evidence. That oral evidence is partly in favour of plaintiff and partly of defendants, and the general impression one gets from the whole of the oral evidence is that the family long since ceased to be a joint Hindu family in the proper sense of the term, that the members of it remained on good terms until recently and that, therefore, now and again, though seldom, transactions occurred in which both plaintiff and Gainda Mal were mixed up. The oral evidence before the Local Commissioner is decidedly more favourable to defendants than that given in Court,

(1) 11 M. I. A. 75; 8 W. R. (P.C.) 1; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 657; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 218; 20 E. R 30.

e. g., plaintiff's witnesses Allah Dad Khan and Nabi Bakhsh, pages 168, 169; and it must not be lost sight of that where we find plaintiff and Gainda Mal, for instance, jointly selling grain after Ganga Ram's death, this does not go to show jointness as of a family between them, the explanation being that both of them were interested in grain, etc., left by Ganga Ram and so would until they fell out, naturally co-operate in dealing with it.

The Local Commissioner who is a Munsif made a long and elaborate report, arriving at the conclusion that the family was still undivided. The lower Court in coming to a contrary opinion does not specifically discuss that report, which is a pity; but it gives from the documents on the record sufficient ground for its findings, dividing the indications into nine heads. The first two heads are concerned with the income-tax objections of 1905, 1906 and 1907. In the first, which was filed by Ganga Ram alone, it is plainly stated that separation has taken place. Apparently it was rejected; and in the other two petitions stress is laid by the petitioners not so much on their separation but on the smallness of their total income, though the fact that plaintiff and Gainda Mal ran separate shops was urged. Most of the other heads amount to cumulative evidence of separation, that is to say, hardly any one head by itself would be anything like conclusive, e.g., No. 3, as to nature of entries in Octroi Register; No. 5, showing that plaintiff more than once sued in his own name and got decrees and apparently never accounted to Gainda Mal or adjusted matters with him; No. 6, as to rent of shops taken by plaintiff for his own business; No. 7, showing that Arhtis kept up separate accounts in the names of plaintiff and Gainda Mal respectively; No. 8, as to separate bonds, mortgages and decrees in favour of plaintiff and Gainda Mal and Ganga Ram respectively. All of these individually no doubt are capable of the familiar explanation that adult members of joint families do for convenience' sake frequently carry on, each in his own name, business and litigation in connection with affairs made over specially to their charge; but the combined effect is by no means negligible, when it is borne in mind that there is no indication in the last 20 years or so of what might be called a general stock-taking in the family and when attention is drawn to the remarkable dearth of joint transactions in which both plaintiff and Gainda Mal, who were until lately quite good friends, took part.

Lastly, heads Nos. 4 and 9 afford, in our opinion, very strong proof of separation though here too Mr. Sheo Narain has been able to suggest something in the nature of explanation. According to the authorities, money transactions between members of a Hindu family, the one lending and the other borrowing and showing corresponding debits and credits in their books, go very far to prove disruption. The entries referred to in head No. 4 are of this type, and we do not think the suggestion that the entries were merely made to keep accounts straight is sufficient to rob them of their significance. Then as to head No. 9, though Mr. Sheo Narain has been able to show that ultimately in 1899 plaintiff himself sued on the mortgage-deed which in 1892 he had sold to Gainda Mal, we hardly think this sufficiently explains the execution of such a sale-deed containing as it does a covenant for title. The mortgage document, no doubt, must have been re-transferred to plaintiff before 1899; but we think this does not show that the sale of 1892 was merely a colourable transaction to enable Gainda Mal to sue on it. This idea seems to us to be sufficiently negatived by the fact that there was obviously no urgency about suing.

A few lines may be devoted to the more important special points taken by Mr. Sheo Narain in his addresses on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant and not already discussed. He relies to some extent on the evidence of the witness, Dasaundhi, brother of the late Ganga Ram; but like much of the oral evidence in the case it contradicts itself. Thus while saying that Ganga Ram effected no partition, he has to admit that plaintiff was separated from him, that a certain distribution in the family of bonds, etc., was made by Ganga Ram and that tambol, etc., was taken and given by plaintiff separately from his brothers. We do not think much of the next point taken, namely, that there is no partition-deed or farighkhatti forthcoming; but it is certainly a point against defendants-respondents that so many books and other documents one would expect to be in plaintiff's possession, were produced from defendants' custody. This is noticed by the Local Commissioner, page 188, line 38; but it must not be supposed that all plaintiff's papers were in defendants' custody. Then, such documents as the mortgage on page 12 do not help, being 23 years old and so probably earlier than the disruption, or at least before the disruption was complete. Further, the deed makes no mention of plaintiff at all. Similarly, the document on page 16 is easily explained as some petty adjustment between plaintiff and Gainda Mal. The receipt on page 18 proves absolutely nothing in connection with plaintiff, and a similar remark applies to all the documents up to page 22. It is useless to burden this judgment with any more examples of the way in which we look at the evidence on the record. Suffice it to say that we see no reason to differ from the lower Court in its opinion that the parties separated long before the death of Ganga Ram. Where money due to one member of the family is found paid or credited to another member, we see in the special circumstances of each and every such instance no reason to attribute the phenomenon to jointness of the family, thinking it more reasonable to explain it by genuine transfer or adjustments between separated persons. There is also important evidence of separation noticed by the Local Commissioner at page 188, paragraph marked 1, which is supported by the evidence of Parmeshria Mal and Mathra Munim—pages 167 and 179—but not taken advantage of by the lower Court. In our opinion Mr. Sheo Narain is unsuccessful in his attempts to explain away or minimise that evidence.

The parties have quoted rulings in connection with problems of jointness and separation of Hindu families; but we need not discuss them, as the law is clear.

We may note that the property mentioned in paragraph 3 of the plaint has been excluded from the suit by order of the lower Court, dated 8th December 1909, page 119.

The net result is that we agree with the lower Court in its conclusions and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL SUIT No. 190 OF 1912.

September 29, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Kumaraswamy Sastri.

V. VENKATARAMIAH PANTULU AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS

versus

P. V. SUBRAMANIAM PILLAI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Bequest of self-acquired property by father to his sons—Presumption—Property taken by sons, whether joint property—Bequest invalid—Intestacy—Management of property by eldest member who was also executor in accordance with Will—Debts contracted for family purpose by eldest member, how far binding on family—Renewal of debt — Apportionment of security — Apportionment invalid—Security not extinguished—Power of Receiver in partition suit to acknowledge debt—Acknowledgment, effect of—Joint family trade—Promissory note executed on behalf of firm by one member, if other members can be sued.

One P V died in 1887 leaving a Will, in and by which he directed that the residue of his property after payment of certain legacies should be divided at his death among his sons and grandsons, who were living with him as members of one family, into five equal shares as soon as his grandsons attained majority, that his eldest son shall be the executor to his Will and conduct the shop and business which he was carrying on in his name, and generally administer his estate. In pursuance of the directions of the Will the 1st defendant continued to manage the estate and incurred debts and executed mortgages for family and business purposes and no objection was taken as to his management by the other members of the family. In 1905 a suit was filed for a partition of the estate of P V by some of the members of the family and for an account of the properties left by him, on the ground that the estate became divisible under his Will, and during the pendency of the suit Receivers were appointed to pay interest and arrears of interest accrued due and payable on mortgages executed by the 1st defendant of the immoveable properties belonging to the estate. In the said suit it was decided that on a proper construction of the Will the bequest of the Will was invalid and that there was an intestacy in regard thereto. The plaintiff in whose favour promissory notes were executed and title-deeds were deposited as collateral security therefor, sued to recover the moneys due to him from the 1st defendant and the other members of the family. The defendants, among other pleas, pleaded that the equitable mortgage was not binding on them and that the 1st defendant as executor had no power to make any such alienation and that the payment made by the Receivers towards the said debt did not save limitation:

Held, that the residue of the properties must be deemed to have been taken by the members as joint family property and that the debts contracted and the mortgages made by the 1st defendant were in the capacity of a managing member and, therefore, binding on the family.

Where a family is joint and continues joint after the death of a testator, his properties, which they get by his Will, would be joint properties, unless there is something in the Will which raises a presumption to the contrary.

Nagalingam Pillai v. Rimachandra Tevar, 24 M. 429; 11 M. L. J 210, referred to.

Where a person borrowed money and executed promissory notes and deposited title-deeds of immoveable property creating a valid equitable mortgage thereon and was taking subsequent advances on the strength of the same security, and some time after looked into the accounts, executed two promissory notes for the total sum due and also two documents with a view to apportion the title-deeds of the immoveable property, which were already deposited, to each of the said promissory notes and it was found that the said documents were invalid:

Held that the equitable mortgage originally created was not extinguished and that the mortgagee was entitled to enforce it.

The renewal of a debt does not ipso facto put an end to the security which a person has, unless such a renewal is accompanied by a fresh contract giving fresh security, and an attempt made to apportion the security which was invalid would not deprive the person of the security which he already has.

Ganpat Pandurang v. Adarje Dadabhai, 3 B. 312, referred to.

Where a joint family trades under a firm name, the members thereof can be sued on a note properly executed by one member in the firm's name.

A payment by a Receiver, who is appointed in a suit for partition or administration and who is authorised by the order of appointment to pay interest on debts, is sufficient to keep the debts alive against all the parties who are bound by the debts. Chinnery v. Evans, (1864) 11 H. L. C. 115; 4 N. R. 520; 10 Jur. (N. S.) 855; 11 L. T. 68; 13 W. R. 29; 145 R. R. 79; 11 E. R. 1275; Annapaguda v. Sangadigyapa, 26 B. 221 (F. B); 3 Bom. L. R. 817; Wilkinson v. Gangadhar, 6 B. L. R. 486, In re Hale; Lilley v. Foad, (1899) 2 Ch. 107; 80 L. T. 827; 47 W. R. 579; 68 L. J. Ch. 517; 15 T. L. R. 389, referred to.

Mr. T. Ethiraja Mudaliar, for the Plaintiffs.

Messrs. K. Ramachandran, Short Bewes and Co., S. Duraisawmi Iyer, V. Viswanatha Sastri, G. Krishnaswami Iyer, Branson & Branson and P. Subramaniam, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue to recover Rs. 78,696-4-10 alleged to be due on an equitable mortgage created by the 1st defendant by the execution of two promissory notes dated the 1st October 1904 for Rs. 15,000 and Rs. 14,500 respectively, carrying interest at 18 per cent. per annum, and by the deposit of title-deeds of the properties specified in the plaint.

The case of the plaintiffs is that one P. Venkatachelam who was carrying on business in Madras, died leaving five sons of whom 1st and 9th defendants are now living, that the 1st defendant, his brothers and their children were members of an undivided family of which the 1st defendant was the manager, that for the purpose of joint family trade he (1st defendant) borrowed sums of money from the plaintiffs from time to time and deposited title-deeds, that the 1st defendant and the Receivers appointed in Original Suit No. 238 of 1905 paid the plaintiffs several sums of money amounting to Rs. 20,307 towards the said promissory notes and that the suit is not barred by limitation owing to such payments.

The 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants are the sons of the 1st defendant. The 5th and 6th defendants are the sons of one Singaravelu Pillai, the deceased brother of the 1st defendant. The 7th defendant is the son of Kadirivelu Pillai, another deceased brother. The 8th defendant is the son of Subbaraya Pillai who was also a brother of the 1st defendant. The 9th defendant is the brother of the 1st defendant. Defendants Nos. 10 and 11 are made parties as the 7th defendant is alleged to have executed a deed of trust in their favour transferring his interest in the properties. The 12th, 13th and 14th defendants are made parties as being puisne mortgagees of the 7th defendant.

The 1st defendant did not file any written statement. Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 filed a written statement pleading that the 1st defendant carried on business as executor under the Will of his father Venkatachelam and not as manager of an undivided joint family, that the plaintiffs with knowledge of this fact dealt with the 1st defendant as executor and not as manager, that under the Will the 1st defendant had no power to borrow and any alienations or mortgages made by him would not bind them, that they are not personally liable in respect of the debts borrowed by the 1st defendant on promissory notes, that the 1st defendant agreed to pay exorbitant rates of interest, which are not binding, that the suit is barred by limitation and the plaintiffs are entitled to no relief against them. The 5th defendant filed a written statement putting the plaintiffs to proof of the 1st defendant having borrowed moneys as manager of an undivided family or that the moneys were borrowed either for family purposes or for the purpose of trade, and pleading that there was no necessity for the same. He denies the equitable mortgage and states that, even if true, the mortgage is inoperative as against him. The 8th defendant filed a written statement pleading that the 1st defendant as executor had no power to mortgage the properties or contract loans, that the acts of the 1st defendant, as set out in the plaint, do not bind him or the other defendants, that no payments were made by the 1st defendant, and that the statement of accounts annexed to the plaint contains several items which are not chargeable against the other defendants. The 9th defendant filed a written statement admitting the allegations in the plaint, as to defendants Nos. 1 to 9 being members of a joint family and the 1st defendant being the manager of the family who has been carrying on a family business, but stating that the business was carried on by him not as manager but as executor with Probate of the Will of Venkatachelam, that there was no necessity for any loans to be contracted and that the plaintiffs, having dealt with the 1st defendant as executor, have no right to proceed against the other defendants. He puts the plaintiffs to proof of the deposit of title-deeds and states that the equitable mortgage is not valid and binding on him and that as the payments made by the Receivers were only made on behalf of the 1st defendant, they would not save the suit being barred as against the others. He pleads in the alternative that, if the mortgage is binding, the same should be set aside as an unconscionable transaction under sections 16 and 16A of the IndianContract Act, as the contract sued on was obtained by undue influence under circumstances set out in the written statement. The 12th defendant filed a written statement denying that the 1st defendant was the manager of the family and stating that he was only an executor with Probate, that he had no power to mortgage, that the mortgage was for his own private purposes and that it does not bind the other defendants. The 13th defendant filed a written statement putting the plaintiffs to proof of the allegations and denying that the amounts were borrowed for family purposes or were applied for the purpose of the business. The 14th defendant filed a written statement pleading in addition that he obtained a mortgage decree in Civil Suit No. 70 of 1910 for Rs. 9,952-15-0 for principal and interest and that he is entitled to priority over all the other mortgagees in so far as the 7th defendant's interest is concerned.

The following issues were settled:—

1. Was the money borrowed by the 1st defendant for joint family purposes?

2. Did the 1st defendant deposit the title-deeds as alleged?

3. And, if so, is the mortgage binding on the joint family?

4. Is the suit barred against any of the defendants?

5. Did the 1st defendant enter into the agreement pleaded in paragraph 6 of the plaint? If so, was such agreement obtained by undue influence and are the defendants entitled to be relieved therefrom?

6. Were defendants Nos. 1 to 9 members of a joint family, was 1st defendant manager thereof and did he borrow as such?

7. To what relief are the parties entitled?

Before dealing with the issues it is necessary to refer to the Will of P. Venkatachelam, who was admittedly the common ancestor of defendants Nos. 1 to 9, and to certain proceedings in the High Court in relation to his estate.

P. Venkatachelam, the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 9 and the grandfather of defendants Nos. 2 to 8, died on the 9th May 1887 leaving four sons, namely, Subramania Pillai (1st defendant), Singaravelu Pillai, Kadirivelu Pillai and Murugesa Pillai, and Sundaramurthi Pillai (8th defendant), the son of Subbaraya Pillai, his predeceased son. He left a Will dated 30th January 1887, Probate of which was granted to the 1st defendant on the 30th August 1889. The Will provides "that Subramania Pillai (the 1st defendant) shall conduct the shop, etc., business and other matters in the name of Pa. Venkatachelam and take the necessary steps as regards the shop". It also provides "that he shall in company with his brothers conduct the business and shall maintain and support his mother and other female members of the family." After giving certain legacies to certain persons it provides "that Subramania Pillai shall as the chief person to the Will and testament preserve and administer the landed properties and all other properties mentioned in the Will." Though in the body of the Will Subramania Pillai is not given any powers of alienation, the Will winds up with the following directions:—"Though it is mentioned that my eldest son Subramania Pillai should not sell and that no person should buy my aforesaid landed properties, still should the expenses increase by any act of King or God or by Government or by the people residing adjacent to my landed properties or by rain or by wind, or should the income of rents decrease owing to any other cause and should the expenses increase, the aforesaid Subramania may after consideration sell the landed properties, convert them into money and add the same to the ready money already in the Bank and make it yield income. He shall purchase such buildings, lands and gardens, if any, as may in his opinion yield income, and add the same to the above properties." The power to purchase properties out of the savings was already given by paragraph 9 of the Will, which empowers the 1st defendant "to purchase houses and grounds from the balance remaining in the Bank." So that the power given again is, in my opinion, a general power to make purchases of such properties which, in his opinion, may form profitable investments, in addition to the powers given to purchase properties out of the income. Mr. Subramania Pillai admittedly went on looking after the shop affairs, and, so far as the evidence goes, no notice was given to him by any of the defendants claiming partition nor was any objection taken to his administration of the properties until 1905 when 9th defendant and some other members of the family filed Original Suit No. 238 of 1905, praying that an account be taken of the properties, assets and effects of Venkatachelam in the hands of the 1st defendant as executor, for a partition and for each party being put in possession of his share. The case of the plaintiffs was that under the Will of Venkatachelam the estate became divisible into five shares as soon as the eldest grandson living at the death of the testator attained majority. They also alleged that the 1st defendant borrowed moneys without any justification whatever. On the 20th December 1905 Messrs. Parry & Co. were appointed Receivers and power was given to them "to pay interest and arrears of interest accrued due and payable on the mortgages executed by the 1st defendant of the immoveable properties belonging to the estate." The suit was dismissed by Mr. Justice Boddam, on the ground that all the grandsons were not of age and that the 1st defendant had the option to divide the properties when they became of age and that the Will did not vest the property in any one until the option was exercised. He also held that the parties were members of an undivided family and that there was no right to sue for administration. The matter went up in appeal and in Original Side Appeal No. 79 of 1906 this judgment was reversed and the case was sent back to the original side, "to be dealt with in accordance with law on the footing of an intestacy as regards the estate referred to in paragraph 11 of the Will." Their Lordships held "that the disposition referred to in paragraph 11 of the Will cannot in law be given effect to and that with regard to the residuary estate there is an intestacy. The property, therefore, devolves upon his heirs-at-law." This decision was confirmed by the Privy Council. The case was eventually disposed of and a rajinama decree was passed on the 9th October 1913. All the parties to the present suit and those who claim under them were represented in that suit and as regards the debts of the 1st defendant the decree provides as follows:—"That the debts of the 1st defendant binding on him incurred prior to the institution of this suit and disclosed to the Receivers, are binding on the parties and shall be paid by the Receivers from and out of the income accruing to the estates in their hands." It is proved by Exhibit Q-1 and it has not been disputed by any of the defendants that a list of debts was given to the Receivers and that the present debt is one of them. It is also not disputed that the Receivers did pay interest to the 1st plaintiff from time to time after they were appointed Receivers. These payments are endorsed upon the promissory notes (Exhibits A and B) and there can be little doubt that when the parties consented to the rajinama decree in Civil Suit No. 238 of 1905, they all agreed that the mortgage now sued on was to be paid by the Receivers out of the income, thus showing that they all treated the mortgage as binding on them. The decree expressly states that such debts are binding. No attempt was made to explain why the parties did not exclude the present debt from the scope of the decree, even though this suit was pending when the decree was passed and all parties knew of the plaintiffs' claim. It is argued that the plaintiffs cannot take advantage of any agreement between the parties themselves as they were not parties to the rajinama decree; but there can be little doubt the plaintiffs can use the decree as an admission by all the parties of the validity of their debt. Whether Civil Suit No. 238 of 1905 is treated as a suit filed for the administration of the estate or as one for partition, it is pretty clear that an inquiry as to the debts and their binding nature was essential to the passing of a final decree and it cannot be said that the clause about the payment of debts referred to above was immaterial or was beyond the scope of the proceedings. Whether we treat the 1st defendant as the managing member of the undivided family or as executor whose powers are limited by the Will, it seems to me that the compromise decree would be cojent evidence as to the validity of the plaintiff's claim. The parties to the partition decree have agreed to divide the properties purchased by the first defendant subsequent to his father's death. They have also got a share in the business conducted by him subsequently. Their case now is that he had no right to purchase properties but they having agreed to divide the properties which he purchased, this argument comes with very bad grace from them. The proper and honest course would have been for them to have repudiated all the purchases made subsequent to his father's death, if they wanted to contend that the mortgages created for the purpose of purchasing properties were not binding on them. That would have left the mortgagees to proceed against the properties on the footing that they belonged to the mortgagor. Having divided all the properties in Civil Suit No. 238 of 1905 and having agreed that all the debts of the 1st defendant which were in the list given to the Receivers were binding on them, they now want to get an advantage to themselves at the expense of the 1st defendant and the plaintiffs by contending that the mortgage is invalid and ultra vires. A great deal of ingenuity has been spent by some of the defendants in the pursuit of this object, but it appears to me from the evidence and the documents filed that the plaintiffs' mortgage cannot be said to be invalid, or created for purposes not binding on them. There is certainly nothing in th evidence to show that the mortgage was for 1st defendant's own private purposes or that the 1st defendant did not contract the debts bona fide and for the purpose of the business which he conducted and to the purchase of immoveable properties, which have been considerable.

Issues 1 and 6.—It is not disputed before me that during the life-time of Venkatachelam he, his sons and their children lived together as members of one family. There is no allegation that any partition was effected except by the decree in Original Suit No. 238 of 1905. The 9th defendant who is the brother of the 1st defendant, although he raises every other possible defence to the suit, admits the allegations in paragraph 3 of the plaint to the effect that defendants Nos. 1 to 9 are members of a joint Hindu family and that the 1st defendant has been the manager of the joint family. The evidence of the 1st defendant is to the effect that after his father's death he, his brothers and nephews continued to be members of an undivided family and that the moneys borrowed from the plaintiffs were moneys borrowed for purposes of the business of Venkatachelam and for purchasing immoveable properties. He also states that his brothers and nephews were living together till 1905 and that he was the managing member. The 9th defendant states that he did not attend to the business subsequent to a year after his father's death; but this would not affect the rights of the 1st defendant as managing member of the family and as the person who was admittedly carrying on the family business. As regards the Will of Venkatachelam, it is clear from the decree of the Appellate Court which was confirmed by the Privy Council that there was an intestacy; so that with the exception of the small legacies and maintenance payable as directed by the Will, the whole property devolved on his heirs not under the Will but by reason of an intestacy. It, therefore, appears to me to be clear that the fact, the Will was executed appointing the 1st defendant as executor, would not take the properties out of the ordinary rules of Hindu Law relating to succession to the properties of an intestate. The position would be just the same as if Venkatachelam died leaving no Will. Even assuming that there was no intestacy the mere fact that a Will was left would not make the properties bequeathed by a father, who was living jointly with his sons, the self-acquired properties of his sons. The general rule is that where a family is joint and continues joint after the death of a testator, the properties which they get by a Will would be joint properties unless there is something in the Will which raises a presumption to the contrary, [see Mayne's Hindu Law, paragraph 353 and Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar (1).] The terms of this Will do not indicate that the sons should treat the property as their separate property. On the contrary it indicates that the sons had very little power over the properties and that if the terms of the Will were strictly enforced, their rights would be much less than those of the members of an undivided family inheriting property by survivorship. There is absolutely no evidence that the moneys borrowed by the 1st defendant from the plaintiffs were borrowed for his own purposes or for purposes unconnected with the business carried on by him as the manager. As I have already pointed out, all the parties interested agreed to treat the debts of the 1st defendant, which were contained in the list given to the Receivers, of which the present debt is one as binding on all of them and this, in my opinion, is the strongest possible evidence of the fact that these debts could not have been debts incurred by the 1st defendant for his own private purposes. It is not disputed that the 1st defendant purchased a large number of properties nor is it disputed that the properties purchased by the 1st defendant have been agreed to be divided between the members of the family. Under these circumstances and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary let in by the defendants, I find that the moneys borrowed by the 1st defendant from the plaintiffs were for joint family purposes.

(1) 24 M. 429; 11 M. L. J. 210.

Second Issue.—The title-deeds of the properties mentioned in the plaint are produced by the plaintiffs, and the 1st defendant in his evidence did not dispute the deposit of title-deeds. It is clear from the evidence of the 1st plaintiff and the 1st defendant that there were dealings between them from the year 1899 and that moneys were lent to the 1st defendant from time to time on promissory notes and the deposit of title-deeds. The 1st plaintiff states that all the moneys he advanced were on the security of title-deeds and that 1st defendant represented to him that he wanted the loans in order to discharge a prior debt due to the Madras Bank and for the purpose of the shop. It is clear from the evidence that prior to the execution of the two promissory notes sued on (Exhibits A and B), there was a sum of Rs. 29,500 due for principal and interest in respect of the sums advanced to the 1st defendant and that the whole of this amount was secured by the deposit of title-deeds. First defendant began by depositing title-deeds and borrowing moneys, and the subsequent loans up to 1904 were on the security of the deeds with the plaintiffs. It is difficult to accept the contention of the defendants that the plaintiffs who had title-deeds in their possession, would have made subsequent advances without any security whatever. I see no reason to disbelieve the evidence of the 1st plaintiff and the 1st defendant. On the 1st October 1904 accounts were looked into and Rs. 29,500 was found to be due and in respect of this sum, the 1st defendant executed two promissory notes one for Rs. 15,000 and the other for Rs. 14,500 (Exhibits A and B). At that time an attempt was made to apportion the title-deeds to each of these two promissory notes, and the 1st defendant executed two letters (Exhibits H and J) bearing the same date 1st October 1904. In one of the letters (Exhibit J) he states that the title-deeds of four houses should be security for the promissory note for Rs. 14,500, and in the other letter (Exhibit H) he states that the title-deeds of three properties (comprised in one title-deed) should be security for the loan of Rs. 15,000.

Objection was taken that these letters are inadmissible for want of registration. I am of opinion that these letters do require registration, because not only do they recite that certain properties should be security for the debts but they go on to state that compound interest will be paid at 18 per cent. per annum (compounding every month). They, therefore, create an additional burden to secure which the title-deeds would be security. As the title-deeds were already in the possession of the plaintiffs and as no money was advanced on the date of the promissory notes (Exhibits A and B) but the whole amount was secured before an attempt to apportion the security, I am of opinion that the mere fact that there was an infructuous attempt to apportion the securities between the two promissory notes, Exhibits A and B, would not deprive the plaintiffs of the security they already had or deprive them of the right to fall back upon the deeds as security for both Exhibits A and B in case the apportionment was inoperative in law. There can be little doubt that the apportionment was for the benefit of the mortgagor and if the mortgagor chose to plead that the apportionment was invalid for want of registration, it would be perfectly open to the mortgagee upon the security which he never relinquished to insist upon his original title. It is always presumed that the mortgagee intends to take the mortgage alive when it is for his benefit to do so. It has been held in Ganpat Pandurang v. Adarji Dadhabhai (2) that a mere endorsement is sufficient to pass the securities created by the execution of a promissory note and the deposit of title-deeds, and that no deed of transfer is required. If endorsement of the promissory-notes executed prior to the notes Exhibits A and B would have passed the security to the endorsee, it is difficult to see how a renewal of the prior notes would extinguish the security unless there was a fresh deposit. I am unable, therefore, to find either any authority for holding that the renewal extinguished the security simply because Exhibits H and J require registration. It is argued that the mere execution of a promissory note in renewal of obligations already incurred amounts to a discharge of the previous obligations and that the previous obligations having been discharged, the security went with it, unless there was a fresh contract to give security. I am unable to find any authority for the proposition that the renewal of a debt ipso facto puts an end to the security which a person has unless such renewal is accompanied by a fresh contract giving fresh security, or that an attempt made to apportion the security which is invalid would deprive the person of the security which he already has. I am of opinion that the only effect of Exhibits H and J not being registered will be to put the plaintiffs in the same position as they were before the letters were executed, and it would only deprive the 1st defendant of his right to insist on an apportionment. I find this issue in favour of the plaintiffs.

Third Issue.—I have already in dealing with the 1st issue found that the 1st defendant was the managing member of the family and that the moneys were borrowed for purposes of the business carried on by the family and for the purpose of purchasing properties. There can be little doubt that the 1st defendant was carrying on the business of the family ever since his father's death. He would have been entitled to do so, even if there was no Will: but in the present case the Will expressly authorised him to carry on the business. No objection was taken to the 1st defendant's carrying on the business and to his purchasing the properties and, so far as I can see, all parties to the suit of 1905 allowed him to be in management of the family concerns. In 1899 the 1st defendant borrowed moneys for the purpose of discharging the equitable mortgage with the Madras Bank, for Rs. 12,500, of certain properties. The 1st defendant states that the Madras Bank pressed him for payment, that he had to borrow moneys for that purpose and that the plaintiffs lent moneys and got the title-deeds which were with the Madras Bank. There is nothing to show that the plaintiffs had any notice that the 1st defendant was either mismanaging the properties or was borrowing money for his private purposes. From the evidence for the 1st plaintiff and the 1st defendant and from the fact that the debt due to the plaintiffs was agreed to be treated as family debt in the decree in Original Suit No. 238 of 1905, I am of opinion that the mortgage is binding on the joint family as the debts were incurred for purposes necessary and beneficial to the family. It is argued that as the loans were evidenced by the promissory notes, Exhibits A and B, a suit against persons not the makers would not lie. The present suit is not a suit on promissory note but on a mortgage. There is no difference in the remedies between regular and equitable mortgages and there is no authority for holding that Order XXXIV, rule 1, of the General Rules of Hindu Law as to suits on mortgages created by a manager does not apply when the mortgage is created by execution of a promissory note and the deposit of title-deeds. There is no authority for holding that where a joint family trades under a firm name, the members cannot be sued on a note properly executed by one member in the firm name.

(2) 3 B, 312.

Fourth Issue.—The promissory notes were executed on the 1st October 1904 and payments on account of interest have been endorsed on the promissory notes and signed by the Receivers, and these payments are dated 27th September 1907, 22nd September 1909, 5th November 1909, 1st March 1910, 4th April 1910 and 2nd May 1910. These endorsements are not disputed, but it is contended that the payments by the Receivers would not save limitation. The order appointing the Receivers dated the 20th December 1905 expressly authorised them to pay interest and arrears of interest accrued due and payable on the mortgage created by the 1st defendant on the immoveable properties belonging to the estate. Although the suit was dismissed on the original side, the order appointing the Receivers was continued by the order of the Appellate Court (Exhibit G) dated 23rd January 1907. Messrs. Parry & Co. were continued as Receivers on the same terms and under the same powers as were contained in the order of Mr. Justice Boddam dated 20th December 1905. I am of opinion that a payment by a Receiver who is appointed in a suit for partition or administration and who is authorised by the order of appointment to pay interest on debts is sufficient to keep the debts, alive against all the parties who are bound by the debts. Chinnery v. Evans (3); Annapagauda v. Sangadigyapa (4); Wilkinson v. Gangadhar (5); In re Hale, Lilley v. Foad (6). I find that this suit is not barred by limitation.

Fifth Issue.—The promissory notes, Exhibits A and B, carry interest at 18 per cent. per annum, but by the letters Exhibits H and J the first defendant agreed to pay the interest monthly and in default to pay compound interest at the same rate with monthly rests. It is clear that this clause will not affect the immoveable property, as Exhibits H and J are not registered. The 1st defendant would, however, be personally liable on the covenant unless it can be shown that the transaction was one which is voidable. I am clearly of opinion that the agreement to pay compound interest at Rs. 18 per cent. with monthly rests ought not to be enforced. The amount due to the plaintiffs on the 1st October 1904 was Rs. 29,500, this sum itself being the principal and interest due on the loans of 1899 and subsequently. Although the amount paid, as admitted by the plaintiffs in paragraph 8 of the plaint, is Rs. 20,307, the amount still due is Rs. 78,696-4-10. The transaction, in my opinion, is prima facie exorbitant and unconscionable and the evidence of the 1st defendant shows that undue advantage was taken of his position in 1904. It is not disputed that at the time of Exhibits H and J the plaintiffs had obtained a decree in the High Court in Original Suit No. 152 of 1903. The 1st defendant states that the 1st plaintiff was threatening to arrest him under a warrant and that he actually took out a warrant of arrest. I have little doubt that the 1st plaintiff, whether he actually took out a warrant of arrest or not, was in a position to do so at any moment and that he threatened the 1st defendant with arrest unless he complied with the 1st plaintiff's

(3) (1864) 11 H. L. C. 115; 4 N. R. 520; 10 Jur. (N. S.) 855; 11 L. T. 68; 13 W. R. 20; 145 R. R. 79; 11 E. R. 1275.

(4) 26 B. 221 (F. B.); 3 Bom. L. R. 817.

(5) 6 B. L. R. 486.

(6) (1899) 2 Ch. 107; 80 L. T. 827; 47 W. R. 579; 68 L. J. Ch. 517; 15 T. L. R. 389.

demand. Under these circumstances I do not think that the 1st defendant can be said to have freely entered into the manifestly onerous condition of paying compound interest at 18 per cent. per annum with monthly rests. The 1st plaintiff admits that the security was ample and, therefore, this is not a case where the plaintiffs had taken any risk. It is argued by the plaintiffs' Vakil that there were similar agreements as regards prior transactions, but those agreements were not carried into effect when the total of the Rs. 29,500 was ascertained. It also appears to me from the evidence that this agreement to pay compound interest was never seriously intended to be enforced by the plaintiffs. Plaintiff No. 1's letters to the Receivers show that he was prepared to accept 12 or 15 per cent. per annum if he was paid and it also appears from the endorsement on Exhibit II*d*, the promissory note dated 29th July 1902 for Rs. 13,000, that though the promissory note carries interest at 24 per cent. per annum, the 1st plaintiff agreed to receive interest at 12 per cent. if the money was paid in three months. I am of opinion that the plaintiffs are only entitled to simple interest at 18 per cent. per annum and not to compound interest. It is argued that the 1st plaintiff agreed to receive 15 per cent. from the Receivers, but the letters put in show that it was only conditional on prompt payments being made and that it does not amount to a binding contract between the parties irrespective of the payments being made within the period stipulated.

Seventh Issue.—Though not covered by any issue, it was argued by Mr. Doraisamy Iyer that inasmuch as the amounts due on the promissory notes of 1st October 1904 included the sum of Rs. 4,000 due under the decree of the High Court in Original Suit No. 152 of 1903 and the promissory notes bore higher rates of interest, the whole transaction was void under section 258 of the old Civil Procedure Code. There is no issue on this point and I do not think it is open to the parties to raise this contention, as the determination of this question involves numerous questions of law and fact and the plaintiffs have no opportunity to meet them. It is also argued that the 1st defendant being the executor under the Will had no power to borrow because the Will cut down his powers. As I have already said, the High Court has held that there has been a complete intestacy as regards the residue of the property of the testator and I do not see how, if there was intestacy, the 1st defendant, who apart from the Will, was the eldest and the de facto managing member of the family, would still be subject to the limitations as to conducting the business and dividing the property between the grandsons of the testator. The rights of the 1st defendant should, in my opinion, be governed by Hindu Law because of the intestacy. However this may be, even assuming that the 1st defendant has exceeded his powers and committed a breach of trust in borrowing moneys for carrying on the business and for purchasing the properties and adding the same to the estate, it is clear that all the persons who were entitled to the residue by reason of the intestacy and who were majors and competent to contract, agreed by the rajinamah decree with the executor, who is alleged to have committed the breach of trust, to treat the transaction binding on all the parties.

There will be a decree for the plaintiffs for Rs. 29,500 with proportionate costs and interest at 18 per cent. per annum from 1st October 1904, giving credit for Rs. 20,307 paid on account of interest. The decree will be the usual mortgage decree against the properties. The mortgage decree of the 14th defendant will be subject to plaintiff's rights. Except the 1st defendant the other defendants will not be personally liable for any deficiency that may arise.

As regards the costs of the suit, I direct that the plaintiffs do get proportionate costs from the 1st defendant and that the taxed costs of defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 who are minors be paid by the Receivers out of the estate. The other defendants will bear their own costs as they have failed in their attempt to repudiate the mortgage. They agreed to treat the mortgage as binding by the rajinamah decree in Original Suit No. 238 of 1905 and after getting the benefit of the purchases made by the 1st defendant, they attempt in this suit to get rid of the liability incurred for purchasing the properties and for carrying on the business, the profits of which they have got in the partition suit. Under these circumstances I do not think they are entitled to costs.

BHAGAT SINGH v. JAI RAM.

Suit decreed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS PETITION No. 296 OF 1914.

November 23, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Rattigan and Mr. Justice Rossignol.

BHAGAT SINGH—DEFENDANT—PETITIONER

versus

JAI RAM AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110, O. XLV, r. 2—Leave to appeal to King in Council—Decree of affirmance—Substantial question of law.

Where the Chief Court affirms in part the decree of a District Judge, a petition for leave to appeal to the King in Council cannot be granted, as in substance the decree of the Chief Court is a decree of affirmance within the meaning and for the purposes of section 110, Civil Procedure Code.

A Court has a discretionary power under section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code to allow interest post litem motam at such rate as it deems reasonable and if it allows 9 per cent. per annum it is not such an arbitrary and unwarrantable exercise of discretion as to involve such a substantial question of law as is contemplated by section 110 of the Code.

Petition, under Order XLV, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, for permission to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the judgment and decree of the Chief Court, dated the 9th May 1914, passed in Civil Appeal No. 83 of 1913.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Clarence Kirkpatrick, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—Plaintiff, mortgagee, sued to recover Rs. 81,200, principal and interest, from defendant No. 1, Bhagat Singh. The District Judge granted him a decree for (1) Rs. 44,552-10-6, together with interest as in the mortgage-deed from date of institution of suit until realization, as a first charge upon the mortgaged property; (2) Rs. 37,945-3-3 with interest as in the mortgage-deed from date of institution of suit until realization, as second charge upon the said property, to rank pari passu with the charge (if any) which defendant No. 2 might still have over the mortgaged property; and (3) Rs. 2,490 as costs of suit. The District Judge further held that defendant No. 1 was liable personally and as regards his other property for the discharge of the amount decreed. Defendant No. 1 appealed to this Court, and a Division Bench by its judgment, dated 9th May 1914, agreed with the District Judge as regards all findings of facts, but held, in favour of appellant, that he was not liable to pay compound interest after the date on which the last instalment was, according to the mortgage-deed, to be paid—in other words, that after the 19th October 1901 (the date when the first three years had elapsed without payment or without full payment) the mortgagor was liable to pay simple interest only on the accumulated debt until realization. This Court, therefore, while agreeing with the findings of the District Judge upon the merits, so far accepted the appeal as to reduce the amount of Rs. 44,552-10-6 to Rs. 40,567-8 and the amount of Rs. 37,945-3-3 to Rs. 34,557-8. In all other respects the appeal was rejected and defendant No. 1 (appellant) was ordered to pay $\frac{3}{4}$ths of respondents' costs. It is clear, therefore, that the alteration made in the decree was made entirely in appellant's favour. He has now, through his Counsel, applied under Order XLV, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code for a certificate that as regards amount or value and nature the case fulfils the requirements of section 110 of the Code and is a fit and proper one for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Notice was directed to issue to respondents to show cause why the certificate should not be granted, and we have heard arguments on both sides.

Appellant's Counsel in support of the present application contends—

(a) that the amount decreed against the petitioner and in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council is over Rs. 10,000;

(b) that the decree of this Court did not affirm the decision of the District Judge and that consequently an appeal to His Majesty in Council lies as of right; and in any event,

(c) that there are substantial questions of law involved.

Point (a) is obviously correct and is not disputed by respondents.

Point (b).—On behalf of petitioner (appellant in the case before this case) it is contended that the decree of this Court cannot be said to have affirmed the decision of the District Judge, inasmuch as it reduced the amount payable by petitioner to the respondents, and it is argued that the mere fact that this alteration in the decree of the District Judge was made in petitioner's favour cannot affect the question. We are unable to accept this contention. As observed by the High Court of Calcutta (Maclean, C. J., Hill and Stevens, JJ.) in the case of Raja Sree Nath Roy v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1), "We must look to the substance of the case. What is the decree from which the present applicant now desires to appeal to the Privy Council ? He desires to appeal only against the decision of this Court so far as it affirmed the decision of the Court below: nothing else. This seems to be, in substance, as far as the subject-matter of appeal goes, a decree of affirmance. If the decree of this Court had been properly drawn, it would have dismissed the appeal, except to the extent that the additional sum was given" to the applicant.

In the present case also the petitioner clearly does not desire to appeal from that part of the decision of this Court which reduced the amount payable by him, and the object of his appeal is to attack such part of the decree of this Court which affirmed the decision of the Court below. We cannot believe that it was the intention of the Legislature that in cases such as this a petitioner (who would have had no right of appeal had the decree of the Appellate Court been wholly against him) should nevertheless have such right because in one particular the Appellate Court decided in his favour.

We hold, therefore, that the present petition does not fall within the purview of the last paragragh of section 110 of the Code.

There remains the question whether the appeal involves "some substantial question of law."

According to the petition before us, the substantial questions of law involved in the appeal are as follows :—

"(1) that the rate of interest post litem motam should not be allowed at more than 6 per cent. per annum ;

"(2) that wrong presumptions have been made in regard to the question of profits made by plaintiffs by their enjoyment of the possession and working of the defendant's factories, etc., between 1903 and 1907 ;

"(3) that the burden lay strictly on the plaintiffs to prove accounts of their working the factories, etc, item by item ;

"(4) that the nine per cent. rate of interest allowed is excessive."

In our opinion there are no substantial questions of law involved in the appeal. As regards No. 1 of the grounds above set forth, we need say no more than that section 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure gives the Court a discretionary power to allow interest post litem motam at such rate as it deems reasonable, and we cannot agree that the fixing of such rate at Rs. 9 per cent. per annum is such an arbitrary and unwarrantable exercise of this discretion as to involve a substantial question of law.

Ground No. 4 is equally untenable. The mortgagor in his deed had agreed to pay interest at the rate of Rs. 9 per cent. per annum and because the District Judge and this Court held that he must abide by his contract and that the rate was not excessive, it cannot be said that the appeal involves such a substantial question of law as is contemplated by section 110 of the Code.

As regards grounds Nos. 2 and 3 it is obvious that neither the District Judge nor this Court decided the question of profits upon mere presumptions. The whole of the evidence and all the facts on the record were discussed and considered, and it was held by both Courts that the plaintiffs' accounts and the statements of Jamna Das, plaintiff, and his manager (Munim), Sant Singh, were true and credible, while defendant and his witnesses had failed to show that the factories, etc., must have been worked at a handsome profit.

For the reasons given we hold (1) that the decree of this Court affirmed the decision of the District Judge within the meaning and for the purposes of section 110 of the Code and (2) that there are no substantial questions of law involved in the appeal, and we accordingly reject this petition with costs.

Petition rejected.

(1) 8 C. W. N. 294.

HIRA v. MUHAMADI.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 131 OF 1911.

November 11, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chevis and Mr. Justice Shadi Lal.

HIRA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

MUHAMADI alias WALAITI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), ss. 59, 111, 112—Succession to occupancy rights—Right of collaterals—Claim based on agreement—Entry in Settlement Record, effect of—Agreement, how proved.

In the absence of an express intention to the contrary, agreements recorded in a Settlement Record are not intended to take effect after the expiry of the period of the Settlement.

Where an occupancy tenant died without leaving any male lineal descendants or a widow, and his collaterals sued to succeed to the occupancy rights as against the landlords:

Held, (1) that there being no evidence to prove that the common ancestor of the last occupancy tenant and his collaterals ever occupied the land, the plaintiffs had no right of inheritance under section 59 of the Punjab Tenancy Act;

(2) that the plaintiffs' claim could not be allowed as they failed to establish an agreement referred to in section 111 of the Act.

A collateral of a deceased occupancy tenant who bases his claim to succeed to his tenancy upon an agreement, must prove it in one of the three following ways:

(1) He may produce a document which contains the terms agreed upon between the parties;

(2) he may put forward an entry made before the 18th November 1871 and attested by the proper officer in the record of a Regular Settlement sanctioned by the Local Government; or

(3) he may rely on an entry in a Record of Rights made after the above-mentioned date or on an entry in an annual record prepared under the provisions of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, 1887.

An entry which comes under (2) is by law deemed to be an agreement and nothing beyond its mere production is required, while the entry coming under (3) does not proprio vigore amount to an agreement and the party relying upon it has to prove that it embodies the terms of an agreement arrived at between the parties

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 15th November 1910, reversing that of the Munsif, first Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 10th December 1909, dismissing the suit.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, Lala Madan Gopal and Lala Balwant Rai (for Rai Bahadur Lala Sukh Dial), for the Appellants,

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Narain, the last occupancy tenant of the land in suit, died in April 1903, without leaving any male lineal descendants or a widow, and the point for decision in this appeal is whether the plaintiffs, who are admittedly his collaterals, are entitled to succeed to the occupancy rights as against the landlords. We may clear the ground by stating at the outset that there is absolutely no evidence on the record to prove the allegation that the common ancestor of the plaintiffs and Narain ever occupied the land, and that the plaintiffs have, therefore, no right of inheritance under section 59 of the Punjab Tenancy Act. The statutory rules of succession which are enumerated in that section do not, therefore, help the plaintiffs. But the law allows landlords and tenants to contract themselves out of the statute by an agreement, and if a valid agreement containing rules with respect to succession is established, the Court is bound to give effect to it.

The question then arises whether the plaintiffs have succeeded in proving an agreement by which collaterals of an occupancy tenant are entitled to succeed to his tenancy, even though the common ancester did not occupy the land. In this connection, we have considered the provisions of sections 111 and 112 of the Tenancy Act, and are of opinion that a person basing his claim upon an agreement must prove it in one of the following three ways :—

(1) He may produce a document (other than an entry in a Record of Rights or in an annual record) which contains the terms agreed upon between the parties. It is clear that there is no such document in the present case;

(2) he may put forward in support of his contention an entry made before the 18th November 1871 and attested by the proper officer in the record of a Regular Settlement sanctioned by the Local Government; or

(3) he may rely on an entry in a Record of Rights made after the above-mentioned date or on an entry in an annual record prepared under the provisions of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, 1887.

There is, however, this difference between (2) and (3), that an entry which comes under (2) is, by law, deemed to be an agreement and nothing beyond its mere production is required. On the other hand, the entry coming under (3) does not proprio vigore amount to an agreement, but the party relying upon it has to prove that it embodies the terms of an agreement arrived at between the parties. In one case the consent of the parties is presumed; in the other it is to be proved by the party relying on the entry.

With these propositions of law before us, we now proceed to consider whether the plaintiffs have complied with the requirements of (2) or (3). As regards (2), reliance has has been placed upon an entry in the Wajib-ul-arz of the Settlement of 1852. But the obvious answer to it is that the agreement contained therein was clearly intended to remain in force during the term of that Settlement and that it exhausted itself upon the expiration of that term. The internal evidence afforded by the document itself conclusively proves this point. The learned Divisional Judge has quoted extracts from the statements of the landlords and tenants recorded in the Wajib-ul-arz, and a perusal thereof leaves not the slightest doubt in our minds that the agreement was expressly restricted to the term of the Settlement and ceased to be operative when the Settlement of 1884 came into force, and that it cannot now be invoked by the plaintiffs in the present case. Moreover, it appears that in the absence of an express intention to the contrary, agreements recorded in a Settlement record are not intended to take effect after the expiry of the period of the Settlement, vide Fateh Bakhsh v. Lehna (1) and Musammat Narain Devi v. Hira (2). The plaintiffs' contention must, therefore, fail so far as the entry of 1852 is concerned.

Coming now to the proof required by rule (3) stated above, we find that there is an entry in the Wajib-ul-arz of 1884 relating to succession to occupancy rights, and the first question for determination in this connection is, whether the plaintiffs have proved that the entry gives expression to an agreement actually entered into by the landlords and the tenants. If the entry were a mere repetition of the previous entry and the persons concerned were not questioned as to whether they consented to accept it as a binding agreement, it could not obviously satisfy the requirements of section 111 of the Tenancy Act. Now, there is no evidence on the record that the landlords ever agreed to it beyond the mere fact that the Wajib-ul-arz is signed at the end by both the landlords and the tenants. But the mere signature at the end of a document containing many clauses with respect to various matters relating to rural economy cannot per se be regarded as sufficient evidence to prove the fact that the attention of the parties was directed to the rules of succession, at variance with the statutory rules, contained with other matters in one of its clauses, and that those rules were the result of their mutual consent. This observation applies with greater force when we find that the document itself states that, at the time of the Settlement, koi tankih huquq muzarian nahin kiya gaya. It is important to remember in this connection the procedure which was followed in the preparation of the Wajib-ul-arz of 1884. That procedure was prescribed in the old revenue rule 35 (vide pages 208 and 209, Spitta's Manual of Law, third Edition), and the Superintendent of Settlement has certified at the end of the Wajib-ul-arz under consideration that he acted in conformity with that rule. The judgment of the Financial Commissioner in Mamraj v. Rampat (3) throws a flood of light on the manner in which the rule was worked in a Settlement which is roughly contemporaneous with that of Hoshiarpur, and he held therein that a new entry which was merely a repetition of the entry in the old Settlement Record did not constitute an agreement under section 111 of the Act. We also observe that in Labhu v. Ganda Singh (4) an entry in the Wajib-ul-arz of 1884 relating to another village in this very District, which was in totidem verbis as the entry in question, came for consideration before a Division Bench of this Court and it was decided that the entry did not constitute an agreement within the purview of section 111. The view taken in that case coincides with the result at which we have arrived after an independent examination of the entire material before us and we entertain no doubt as to the correctness of the law laid down therein.

In the view of the case which we take, we consider it unnecessary to determine the further question as to whether, even under

(1) 4 Ind. Cas. 851; 97 P. R. 1909; 166 P.W.R 1909; 10 P. L. R. 910.

(2) 21 Ind. Cas. 843; 22 P. R. 1914; 212 P. W. R. 1913; 339 P. L. R. 1913; 12 P. L. R. 1914.

(3) 3 P. R. 1889 Rev.

(4) 20 Ind. Cas. 528; 185 P. W. R. 1913; 2 P. L. R. 1914.

RAMJAN ALI v. MAHARAM ALI KHONDKAR.

the terms of the Wajib-ul-arz, the agnates can succeed without proving that the common ancestor occupied the land.

For the reasons stated above, we are of opinion that the plaintiffs have failed to establish a rule of succession at variance with the provisions of section 59 and that the judgment and decree appealed against are correct. We, therefore, maintain the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 124 OF 1912.

May 28, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Holmwood and Mr. Justice Chapman.

RAMJAN ALI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

MAHARAM ALI KHONDKAR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFF AND REMAINING DFEENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Regulation XI of 1825, s 4, cls. 1, 4—Small and shallow river-beds, right in—Accreted land, lease of, whether recognized - Lease, whether in good faith

Under section 4, clause (4), of Regulation XI of 1825, the beds of small and shallow rivers are recognised as the private property of zemindars within whose estate they lie, subject when dried up, to the proviso stated in the first clause of the section as regards the assessment of revenue.

When, therefore, such a river dries up or recedes leaving behind dried up land, the neighbouring subordinate Talukdar cannot claim it either as appertaining to his taluk or as an accretion to it within the first clause of the section, but it remains the khas patit of the zemindar to whose estate the river belonged.

Where a lease of such river-bed is granted by a subordinate Talukdar when it is still under water, the lessee cannot claim to hold it as a raiyat as against the proprietor when the bed dries up.

The land which is the khas patit of the zemindar cannot be raiyati land, and the lessee cannot acquire any raiyati right in it by demise from a Subordinate Talukdar and he cannot be said to be a lessee in good faith of the land so demised to him.

Appeal against the decree of Sub-Judge, Second Court, Tipperah, dated 16th September 1911, affirming that of the Munsif, Third Court, at Comilla, dated 16th July 1910.

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy, for the Appellants.

Babus Dwarkanath Chakravarti and Gopal Chandra Chakravarti, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of khas possession of 5 kanis and ¼ gandas of land on proof of the plaintiff's title thereto and for wasilat. The plaintiff had taken a settlement from the Maharaja of Tipperah and got his lease in October 1907. The lands are found to be the khas patit of the Maharaja. The defendant No. 1 is the person who took a lease from defendants Nos. 9 and 10, dar-talukdars, in the year 1885 when the land in question was under water. The water that covered it was a small and shallow river known as Gomti, which does not fall within the Regulation relating to alluvion and diluvion but was the private property of the Maharaja. When this little river receded or dried up, the dar-talukdar appears to have regarded the land so left exposed as an accretion to the taluk; and the defendant No. 1's case is that he also so regarded it.

Four points were taken in appeal in the Court below, firstly, whether the suit was barred by limitation; secondly, whether the lands in suit were comprised in the taluk and dar-taluk; thirdly whether the disputed land is an accretion to the taluk and dar-taluk. And the fourth point was that the defendant No. 1 had acquired the status of a raiyat in respect of the disputed land by having in good faith obtained a lease of it for the purpose of cultivation from the dar-talukdar of the adjoining land.

The learned Judge in the Court below has in a very long, careful and well-reasoned judgment found that there is no limitation, and in doing so he has practically decided that the land is the khas patit of the zemindar and that the Maharaja was in possession all along and that defendant No. 1 could have no adverse possession against him. This is not impugned in this appeal. The second point that the disputed land is not comprised in the taluk of Karimunessa and dur-taluk of Kalagazi, which also is not and cannot be disputed in second appeal, seems also to conclude the appellant; for if the land is not and could not be in the dar-taluk his lease could not be operative.

As regards the two points which are argued here, the point that the land is an accretion obviously is concluded by the finding that we have referred to above, firstly, that there can be no accretion of the private land of the zemindar which forms the bed of a small and shallow river ; and secondly, it is sought to be argued that clause (4), section 4, of Regulation XI of 1825 is governed by clause (1) in all respects, which would mean that the law of accretion in small and shallow rivers is exactly the same as it is in great and navigable rivers. But it is perfectly clear what clause 4 says is that the provision or provisos of clause (1) also apply to clause (4), and those provisions are merely with regard to the payment of revenue. We, therefore, think there is nothing in the first contention raised by the appellant.

As to the second, the point of good faith, it is found that the defendant could not have had that good faith which would entitle him to hold possession from a trespasser in land in which he could acquire a non-occupancy right. The learned Judge found, not that he had bad faith, but that he could easily have known if he made the slightest inquiry that his lessor was neither the de facto nor the de jure landlord at the time the lease was granted, and he certainly did know that the land being under water the lessor had not inducted him into possession. But there is a much stronger ground why the defendant cannot succeed in his claim as raiyat, and that is that the land being the khas patit of the zemindar is not raiyati land and the defendant No. 1 can never have acquired a non-occupancy right in it by demise from the dar-talukdar holding land under the zemindar, even if the dar-talukdar had possession.

The grounds given by the learned Subordinate Judge for his decision appear to us to be correct. His findings of fact conclude the matter and with his view of the law we entirely agree. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1631 OF 1913.

October 12, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

JODI BIBI alias MYTHEN BIBI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 AND 2—APPELLANTS

versus

VAJIAR KHAN SAHEB AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT No. 3—RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 79, 106, 114—Minor—Plea of minority—Burden of proof.

In the case of a contract if a plea of infancy is set up, it is for the party who sets it up to prove it.

Krishnama Chariar v. Veeravelli Krishnama Chariar, 19 Ind. Cas. 452; 24 M. L. J. 517 at p. 521; 13 M. L. T. 385; (1913) M. W. N. 355; Virupakshappa v. Siddappa Basappa, 26 B. 109 at p. 113; 3 Bom. L. R. 565; Nilmonee Chowdhry v. Musammat Zuheerunnissa Khanum, 8 W. R. 371, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 43 of 1912, (transfered from the file of the District Court of Coimbatore), preferred against that of the District Munsif of Udamalpet, in Original Suit No. 589 of 1910.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The only question argued is whether the burden of proof regarding the 1st defendant's minority was rightly imposed on the defendants by the lower Appellate Court. The answer may be given shortly in the words of theChief Justice in Krishnama Chariar v. Veeravelli Krishnama Chariar(1): "in the case of contract if the plea of infancy is set up, it is for the party who sets up the plea to prove it," that is, in this case, for the defendants. Virupakshappa v. Sidappa Basappa (2) and Nilmonee Choudhry v. Musammat Zuheerunnissa Khanum (3) are also in point. The second appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

TYABJI, J.—In this case, in my opinion, no question arises which can be considered in second appeal. All we are really asked to decide is, whether the learned Subordinate Judge considered an issue of fact in the correct manner. That question must, in my opinion, depend upon whether the Subordinate Judge acted in accordance with the Indian Evidence Act or in contravention of it. The argument before us is that the present appeal is dependent on the question whether the burden of proof as to the first issue lay upon the defendants which, in my opinion, without any warrant is assumed to be always a question of law. The first issue is, "was 1st defendant a major at the time of the sale relied on by the plaintiff ?"

(1) 19 Ind. Cas. 452; 24 M. L. J. 517 at p. 521; 13 M. L. T. 385; (1913) M. W. N. 355.
(2) 26 B. 109 at p. 113; 3 Bom. L. R. 565.
(3) 8 W. R. 371.

Unless this issue is answered in the affirmative, the plaintiff must fail, because it was the plaintiff who was relying on the sale executed by the first defendant and it was necessary for him to prove the validity of the sale in order to prove his title. The Subordinate Judge did answer it in the affirmative. For doing so, he presumed that the first defendant was of age at the date of Exhibit A and threw the burden of proof on the defendants as regards the issue. It may be that this course was necessitated by section 106 of the Indian Evidence Act; it was, in my opinion, certainly within his powers under section 114, especially in consideration of the fact that he held Exhibit B (to which I shall refer later) to be genuine. But the learned Subordinate Judge did not refer to either section. Nor was his decision expressed to be based on the grounds I have mentioned.

If the lower Courts were to refer to the sections of the Indian Evidence Act or at least to follow the terminology of that Act (which ought to be taken as the first guide in the decision of facts), a great number of second appeals would not be filed at all and a great number of others would not withstand fruitless efforts on the part of the appellant to formulate grounds of appeal. On the other hand a discussion of facts in language not corresponding to that which is adopted in the Indian Evidence Act, and without anything to indicate that the attention of the Court has been directed to its powers and duties as laid down in the Indian Evidence Act make the task of Courts sitting in second appeal unnecessarily laborious. In this particular case, I may point out that the Subordinate Judge has considered the whole evidence carefully and has come to the conclusion that the oral evidence is quite unreliable, and that only one document, Exhibit B, is proved to have any bearing on the age of the 1st defendant—that document is evidence as an admission that the first defendant was of age. If on these materials the learned Subordinate Judge had given a decision with reference to the Indian Evidence Act, sections 106 and 114, it would have been wholly satisfactory. It would then have been quite appropriate to cite as he did Virupakshappa v. Sidappa Basappa (2) for the purpose of showing that a Court of superior jurisdiction adjudicating upon similar facts had based its decision by presuming in favour of majority. It would have then also been proper to refer to the obiter dictum of the Chief Justice in Krishnama Chariar v. Veeravelli Krishnama Chariar (1) and to the case in Nilmonee Chowdhry v. Musammat Zuheerunnissa Khanum (3), which was decided five years and twelve days prior to the date when the Indian Evidence Act came into operation.

When presumptions and the incidence of the burden of proof are the subject of discussion it seems to me to be unsafe and unsatisfactory to ignore the appropriate sections, of the Indian Evidence Act and in particular sections 4, 79, 90 and 101—114. Their effect is summarized in the following terms by Messrs. Ameer Ali and Woodroffe in their commentary just preceding section 101 :—

"In conclusion, the general principle with regard to burden of proof may be stated to be that a party, who desires to move the Court, must prove all facts necessary for that purpose (sections 101—105). This general rule is, however, subject to two exceptions: (a) he will not be required to prove such facts as are especially within the knowledge of the other party (section 106), nor (b) so much of his allegations in respect of which there is any presumption of law (sections 107—113), or, in some cases, of fact (section 114) in his favour."

To the sections mentioned by the learned authors in paranthesis, might be added sections 79—90 of the Indian Evidence Act and the other provisions of the law such as sections 118, 122 or 137 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881. The expression "presumption of law" is taken from the system prevailing in England and as I understand the matter, it refers to those presumptions which the Judge is required to point out to the jury. The Indian Evidence Act does not follow that phraseology, but lays down that certain matters shall be presumed and others may be presumed (Indian Evidence Act, section 4, Taylor on Evidence, paragraphs 25, 70, 72 et seq and 111. The introduction of the Indian Evidence Act by its draftsman, Sir James Stephen, re-printed in Ameer Ali and Woodroffe's Edition of the Act at page 79 shows the relation between the English Law and the Indian Evidence Act on this subject). I desire also to refer in this connection to my remarks in Pingale Viswanatha Row v. Chinnakolandai Nainar (4) which were explicitly concurred in by my learned colleague.

When decisions referring to presumptions are relied upon, it is necessary to bear in mind whether the presumption raised (or rejected) in the decisions is one of fact or of law,—something which the Court may presume or shall presume (See Indian Evidence Act, section 4). For this purpose it is advisable to see whether the decision cited is or is not of a Court adjudicating upon facts.

In my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge was, for the reasons I have stated, entitled (especially in view of section 106 of the Indian Evidence Act and of his decision that the only piece of reliable evidence in the case was in favour of the plaintiff) to draw the presumption that the 1st defendant was of age and to throw the burden of proving his minority on the defendants, and his decision on that issue cannot be questioned in second appeal.

I would, therefore, dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(4) 22 Ind. Cas. 369; 1 L. W. 197.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 542 OF 1913.

September 23, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

AYYASAMI IYENGAR—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

KYLASAM PILLAI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58—Writer of document signing below attestor, whether attesting witness.

The writer of a document, who signs after an admitted attestor, signs as an attestor, though he merely describes himself as the writer.

Veerappuddayan v. Muthu Karuppa Thevan, 19 Ind. Cas. 589; 24 M. L. J. 534; (1913) M. W. N. 400; 13 M. L. T. 463, Shamu Pattar v. Abdul Kadir Rowthen, 16 Ind. Cas. 250; 35 M. 607; 16 C. W. N. 1009; 23 M. L. J. 321; 12 M. L. T. 338; (1912) M. W. N. 935; 10 A. L. J. 259; 14 Bom. L. R. 1034; 16 C. L. J. 596; 39 I. A. 220 (P. C.), followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 188 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Chidambaram, in Original Suit No. 779 of 1911.

Messrs. V. S. Govindachariar and V. S. Kallabiram Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Following Veerappuddayan v. Muthu Karuppa Thevan (1) which was decided after the Privy Council decision in Shamu Pattar v. Abdul Kadir Rowthen (2), we hold that the writer of the document in question in this case, who signed after an admitted attestor, did sign as attestor, though he merely describes himself as the writer of the document, and hence there is nothing in the contention of the appellant that the document is not attested by two witnesses as required by law.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 19 Ind. Cas. 589; 24 M. L. J. 534; (1913) M. W. N. 400; 13 M. L. T. 463.

(2) 16 Ind. Cas. 250; 35 M. 607; 16 C. W. N. 1009; 23 M. L. J. 321; 12 M. L. T. 338; (1912) M. W. N. 935; 10 A. L. J. 259; 14 Bom. L. R. 1034; 16 C. L. J. 596; 39 I. A. 220 (P. C.).

RAI CHARAN MANDAL v. BISWANATH MANDAL.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 3511 OF 1911.
May 13, 1914.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee Kt., and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

RAI CHARAN MANDAL AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

BISWANATH MANDAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 10, procedure under, not resorted to—Suit to be tried on original cause of action in all its stages—Devolution of plaintiff's interest pendente lite, if a change in cause of action—Competency of plaintiff to continue suit.

A suit must be tried in all its stages on the cause of action as it existed at the date of its commencement.

Radhay Koer v. Ajodhya Das, 7 C. L. J. 262, followed.

Anundomoyee v. Sheeb Chunder, 9 M. I. A. 287 at p. 301; 2 W. R. (P. C.) 19; Marsh 455; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 485; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 854; 19 E. R. 750, referred to.

Though there are well-recognised exceptions to the above rule, which show that a Court may take notice of events which have happened since the institution of the suit and afford relief to the parties on the basis thereof, yet a devolution of the plaintiff's interest in the subject-matter of the suit pendente lite is not such an exceptional event and does not make the plaintiff incompetent to maintain the suit, there being no change in the cause of action on which the suit was originally brought.

In the event of such devolution of interest, the successor-in-interest of the plaintiff may, if he chooses, come on the record with leave of the Court under Order XXII, rule 10, but if he does not, the plaintiff is entitled to continue the suit and his successor will be bound by the result of the litigation Appeal against the decree of the Additional Sub-Judge, Khulna, dated 2nd September 1911, reversing that of the Munsif, 3rd Court, at Bagerhat, dated 28th July 1910.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Bipin Chandra Bose, for the Appellants.

Babus Nilmadhab Bose and Jadunath Kanji Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for recovery of possession of land with mesne profits, on declaration of title thereto. The Court of first instance found against the plaintiffs and dismissed the suit. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge has reversed that decision and decreed the suit. In the present appeal, the only substantial question of law which has been argued on behalf of the defendants is that as the interest of the plaintiffs in the property claimed was sold pendente lite in execution of a decree for arrears of rent and was purchased by the landlords, decree-holders, on the 19th November 1909, the suit should have been dismissed. The contention in substance is that a decree for recovery of possession cannot properly be made in favour of persons who, at the time the decree is made, are found to have lost all interest in the property claimed by them. In our opinion there is no foundation for this position.

The rule was recognized in Radhay Koer v. Ajodhya Das (1) that a suit must be tried in all its stages on the cause of action as it existed at the date of its commencement. This is in accord with the observation of Lord Kingsdown in Anundomoyee v. Sheeb Chunder (2) that in appeal the question is, whether the decision of the primary Court is correct on the facts as they stood when the judgment was rendered and that no subsequent event or devolution of interest can affect that question, because to give effect to them, should justice require it, would be the office, not of an appeal, but of some supplementary proceeding. As illustrations of the general rule, reference may be made to the cases of Govinda v. Perumdevi (3); Ramanadan Chetti v. Pulikutti Servai (4); Wamanrao v. Rustomji (5); Raja of Venkatagiri v. Mokku Narasaya (6). But to this ordinary rule, exceptions have been recognized on grounds fully explained in the case of Ram Ratan Sahu v. Mohant Sahu (7). The decisions in Sakharam v. Hari Krishna (8); Sangili v. Mookan (9); Ahmadjee v. Mahamadjee (10); Rustumji v. Purushotamdas (11); Balkishan v. Kishan Lal (12); Hazari Mull v. Janaki Prosad (13); Ramyad Sahu v. Bindeswari Kumar Upadhya (14); Udit Chobey v. Rashika Prasad Upadhya (15); Hedlot Khasia v. Ka Ran

(1) 7 C. L. J. 262.
(2) 9 M. I. A. 287 at p. 301; 2 W. R. (P. C.) 19; Marsh. 455; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 485; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 854; 19 E. R. 750.
(3) 12 M. 136.
(4) 21 M. 288; 8 M. L. J. 121.
(5) 21 B. 701.
(6) 7 Ind. Cas. 202; 37 M. 1; (1910) M. W. N. 369; 8 M. L. T. 258.
(7) 6 C. L. J. 74; 11 C. W. N. 732.
(8) 6 B. 113.
(9) 16 M. 350; 3 M. L. J. 137.
(10) 1 Bom. L. R. 218.
(11) 25 B. 606; 3 Bom. L. R. 227.
(12) 11 A. 148; A.W.N. (1889) 42; 13 Ind. Jur. 309
(13) 6 C. L. J. 92.
(14) 6 C. L. J. 102.
(15) 6 C. L. J. 662; 3 M. L. T. 41.

Khasiani (16) and Banwari Lal v. Sheo Sankar Misser (17) show that a Court may take notice of events which have happened since the institution of the suit and afford relief to the parties on the basis of the altered conditions. This doctrine is of an exceptional character and is applied in cases where it is shown that the original relief claimed has, by reason of subsequent change of circumstances, become inappropriate, or that it is necessary to base the decision of the Court on the altered circumstances in order to shorten litigation or to do complete justice between the parties. A similar view has been taken in England in Quilter v. Mapleson (18) and Attorney-General v. Birmingham, Tame and Rea District Drainage Board (19), where the principle was recognized that on appeal such a judgment may be given as ought to be given if the case came at that time before the Court of first instance (Cf. Order XLI, rule 33, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.) The case before us obviously does not fall within the exception. The plaintiffs claim to be owners of the disputed property and the allegation is that the defendants have dispossessed them wrongfully. This has been investigated and found to be substantially true by the Subordinate Judge. But the defendants contend that as during the pendency of the litigation in the Court of first instance, there has been a devolution of interest, the plaintiffs are no longer competent to maintain the suit. It cannot be disputed that in respect of mesne profits from the date of dispossession, the claim of the plaintiffs has not been affected by the sale of their interest in the land. That portion of the claim, at any rate, must be investigated, and before a decree for mesne profits can be made in favour of the plaintiffs, the question of their title to the land also must be determined. The defendants are consequently restricted to the contention that although the title of the plaintiffs to the land at the date of the suit may be established, relief should not be granted to them by way of recovery of possession, and that such relief can legitimately be awarded only to persons who have succeeded to the interest of the plaintiffs. For this proposition no authority has been cited. On the other hand the argument, tested from the point of view of principle as well as convenience, seems obviously unreasonable. Under rule 10 of Order XXII of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, when there has been a devolution of interest during the pendency of a suit, the suit may, by leave of the Court, be continued by or against persons to or upon whom such interest has come or devolved. This entitles the person who has acquired an interest in the subject-matter of the litigation by an assignment or creation or devolution of interest pendente lite, to apply to the Court for leave to continue the suit. But it does not follow that it is obligatory upon him to do so. If he does not ask for leave, he takes the obvious risk that the suit may not be properly conducted by the plaintiff on record, and yet, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Moti Lal v. Karab-ul-Din (20), he will be bound by the result of the litigation even though he is not represented at the hearing. But the Legislature has not further provided that in the event of devolution of interest during the pendency of suit, if the person who has acquired title does not obtain leave of the Court to carry on the suit, the suit would stand dismissed. It is also plain that if the person who has acquired an interest by devolution, obtains leave to carry on the suit, the suit in his hands is not a new suit, for as Lord Kingsdown said in Prannath v. Rookea Begum (21) a cause of action is not prolonged by mere transfer of the title. It is the old suit carried on at his instance and he is bound by all proceedings up to the stage when he obtains leave to carry on the proceedings: Rajaram Bhagwat v. Jibai (22); In the matter of the petition of Sarat Chandra Singh (23). If this view were not maintained, what would be the result? The suit commenced, by the plaintiff stands dismissed. The person who has acquired the right, title and interest

(16) 13 Ind. Cas. 377; 15 C. L. J. 241.
(17) 1 Ind. Cas. 670; 13 C. W. N. 815.
(18) 9 Q. B. D. 672; 52 L. J. Q. B. 44; 47 L. T. 562; 31 W. R. 75.
(19) (1912) A. C. 788; 82 L. J. Ch. 45; 107 L. T. 353; 76 J. P. 481.
(20) 25 C. 179; 24 I. A. 170; 1 C. W. N. 639.
(21) 7 M. I. A. 323 at p. 353; 4 W. R. (P. C.) 37; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 367; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 692; 19 E. R. 331.
(22) 9 B. 151.
(23) 18 A. 285; A. W. N. (1896) 45.

of the plaintiff commences a fresh suit. His cause of action is the original cause of action upon which the first plaintiff commenced his suit. It may consequently happen that while the plea of limitation would have been of no avail in answer to the claim of the original plaintiff, it may be very effective as an answer to the subsequent suit. It may also be asked, if the contention of the appellants were to prevail, what would happen in the event of a devolution of the interest of the defendants. Would the suit be heard ex parte, because the interest of the defendants had passed to a stranger to the litigation, or would the suit stand dismissed because it was at that stage a suit against a person who had no interest in the litigation? If the contention of the appellant were upheld, there would obviously be endless litigation and the substantial rights of litigants might be completely defeated. It is also worthy of note that at the stage when the objection is taken, neither the Court nor the parties may be in a position to decide that there has been a final and operative devolution of interest. For instance if the devolution of interest is due to an execution sale of the right, title and interest of the plaintiff, the validity of that sale may be challenged and the proceedings consequent thereon may be protracted. Would the original suit be dismissed on the assumption that the sale was valid and operative? If this course were pursued, what would happen if it ultimately transpired that the sale was inoperative and that there had been no effective devolution of interest? No doubt cases are conceivable, where the Court may have to stay the trial of the suit by reason of a devolution of the interest of one of the parties in favour of his opponent. For instance, if the interest claimed by the plaintiffs have been purchased by the defendants, the latter may fairly ask, that the suit be stayed till the question of the validity of the sale in their favour has been finally determined. But except in cases of this peculiar character, it is plain that the trial of the suit should not be arrested merely by reason of the devolution of the interest of the plaintiffs. The successor-in-interest may, if he chooses, obtain leave of the Court under Order XXII, rule 10, but if he does not do so, the original plaintiffs are entitled to continue the suit and their successor will be bound by the result of the litigation. The consequence will be that the plaintiffs, if successful, will obtain a decree which will enure to the benefit of their successor.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CIVIL RULE NO. 1119 OF 1913.

December 16, 1913.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, KT., and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

Srimati SHAJAN BIBI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—PETITIONERS

versus

Moulvi SAFFIRUDDIN—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13—Ex parte decree, application to set aside - Appeal subsequently preferred—Jurisdiction to deal with application.

A Court, which passed an ex parte decree, is not deprived of its jurisdiction to deal with an application to set aside the ex parte decree on the merits, merely because an appeal against the ex parte decree has been subsequently preferred.

Sankara v. Subrayar, 30 M. 535; 17 M. L. J. 436, Sarat Chandra v. Damodar, 12 C. W. N. 885, Damodar v. Sarat Chandra, 3 Ind. Cas. 468; 13 C. W. N. 846, and Kumud Nath v. Jatindra Nath, 9 Ind. Cas. 189; 38 C. 394; 13 C. L. J. 221; 15 C. W. N. 399, followed.

Application in the matter of Miscellaneous Application No. 264 of 1912 of the District Judge's Court of Tipperah, in Miscellaneous Case No. 140 of 1912 of the Court of the Munsif 5th Court, Comilla.

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy, for the Petitioners.

Babu Jotindra Mohan Ghosh, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to discharge an order by which the Court of first instance refused an application to set aside an ex parte decree. The ex parte decree was made on the 29th June 1912. On the 30th July 1912, the petitioners applied under rule 13 of Order IX of the Code of 1908 to set aside the ex parte decree. On the next day they preferred an appeal to the District Judge against the ex parte decree, as they were entitled to do under sub-section 2 of section 96 of the Code. On the 14th December 1912 the application to set aside the ex parte decree was taken up for disposal. The Court dismissed the application on the ground that as an appeal had been preferred against the ex parte decree, the power of the Court, which had made the ex parte decree, to set it aside had terminated. The petitioner appealed to the District Judge against this order under clause (d), rule 1, of Order XLIII. The District Judge dismissed the appeal on the ground that if the petitioner had any grievance, he would have his remedy in the appeal against the ex parte decree and it was consequently superfluous to take evidence to determine whether there were good grounds to set aside the ex parte decree. We are now invited to hold that the primary Court refused to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law when it refused to entertain the application to set aside the ex parte decree. We are of opinion that this contention is well-founded.

It cannot be disputed that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the application when it was made on the 30th July 1912. On what principle can it be held that such jurisdiction was destroyed as soon as an appeal was preferred to the District Judge against the ex parte decree? The proceeding to set aside the ex parte decree and the appeal to the superior tribunal are entirely distinct in their scope and purpose. If the application to set aside the ex parte decree is successful, the suit will stand revived and the defendant will have an opportunity to establish his defence on the merits. In the appeal, he is restricted to the materials already on the record brought in by the plaintiff behind his back and without his knowledge. He can at least show that the materials on the record do not justify the decree made in favour of the plaintiff. There is thus no reason apparent why the defendant should not have a two-fold remedy. We are not prepared to adopt the view taken in Sankara v. Subrayar (1) that as soon as an appeal has been preferred, the Appellate Court has seizin of the suit and the jurisdiction of the primary Court is destroyed, with the result that the Appellate Court thereafter becomes competent to deal with an application to set aside the ex parte decree under section 107 read with Order IX, rule 13. The argument is obviously fallacious, because although the Appellate Court acquires jurisdiction to confirm, reverse or modify the decree, still the decree continues to be the decree of the primary Court till it has been confirmed, reversed or modified by the decree of the Appellate Court. Order IX, rule 13, authorises the Court to set aside an ex parte decree made by itself. Section 107, sub-section 2, read with Order IX, rule 13, may be taken to authorise an Appellate Court to set aside an ex parte decree made in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction (as expressly laid down in Order XLI, rule 21), but it does not authorise an Appellate Court to entertain an application to set aside an ex parte decree made by a Subordinate Court. We are of opinion that the original Court was not deprived of its jurisdiction to deal with the application to set aside the ex parte decree on the merits, merely because an appeal against the ex parte decree was subsequently preferred to the District Judge. The view we take is supported by the cases of Sarat Chandra v. Damodar (2), Damodar v. Sarat Chandra (3) and Kumud Nath v. Jatindra Nath (4).

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the orders of the Courts below are discharged. The application under Order IX, rule 13, presented on the 30th July 1912 will be restored and heard on the merits in the presence of both parties. The petitioner is entitled to his costs throughout these proceedings. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

(1) 30 M. 535; 17 M. L. J. 436.

(2) 12 C. W. N. 885.

(3) 3 Ind. Cas. 468; 13 C. W. N. 846.

(4) 9 Ind. Cas. 189; 38 C. 394; 13 C. L. J. 221; 15 C. W. N. 399.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER NO. 322 OF 1913.

September 23, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

VADIVELU PILLAI AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS NOS. 2 TO 5—APPELLANTS

versus

MARUDA PILLAI alias SOMASUNDARAM PILLAI—PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48—Court

VADIVELU PILLAI v. MARUDA PILLAI.

passing decree, whether has jurisdiction to execute it after transfer of jurisdiction—Step-in-aid of execution—Application returned for correction not re-presented—Correction not essential to validity of application.

A Court, which passes a decree for the sale of certain properties, cannot, after transfer of jurisdiction, entertain an application for sale of those properties.

Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi, 30 M. 537; 2 M. L. T. 466; 17 M. L. J. 417 and Gomatham Alamelu v. Komandur Krishnamacharlu, 27 M. 118, distinguished.

Allagappa Mudaliyar v. Thiyagaraja Mudaliyar, 7 Ind. Cas. 864; (1910) M. W. N. 477; 8 M. L. T. 299 and Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar, 22 Ind. Cas. 899; 26 M. L. J. 189; (1914) M.W.N. 205; 1 L W. 251; 37 M. 462, followed.

The validity of the original presentation of an application for execution of a decree is not affected by a subsequent order of return for correction of defects unless the defects to be corrected are such as to prejudice the judgment-debtor substantially.

Therefore, an application for execution returned for correction of defects, not essential to the validity of the application, although not re-presented after correction, is a step-in-aid of execution and is valid for the purpose of section 48, Civil Procedure Code.

Raghunatha Thatha Chariar v. Venkatesa Tawker, 26 M. 101; 12 M. L. J. 435; Gopal Sah v. Janki Koer, 23 C. 217; Ramanadan Chetti v. Periatambai, 6 M 250 and Ramayyan v. Kadir Bacha Sahib, 31 M. 68; 3 M. L. T. 254; 17 M. L. J. 596, followed.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in Execution Petition No. 49 of 1913, in Original Suit No. 15 of 1899.

Mr. B. Somayya, for Mr. S. Dorasawmy Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first question argued is whether the application of 27th June 1910 was a step-in-aid of execution. Appellant (2nd defendant) contends that it was not, because it was presented to the Mayavaram Court to which jurisdiction over the suit property had lately been transferred, not to the Kumbakonam Court which passed the decree. Appellant relies on Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi(1) and Gomatham Alamelu v. Komandur Krishnamacharlu (2). The latter case turned on acquiescence in the Court's jurisdiction and is not in point. The correctness of the former has been doubted in Allagappa Mudaliyar v. Thiyagaraja Mudaliyar (3) and it was not followed in Sabbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (4). In the last-mentioned case the whole question was considered fully, though the Court was not obliged to act on its conclusion, since it could deal with the matter by means of a transfer. That conclusion which we adopt is that the Court which passed a decree for sale cannot, after a transfer of jurisdiction, even entertain an application for the sale of the suit properties. We have not been shown that for the present purpose any distinction can be drawn between execution of a decree of that nature and the decree before us, one for possession. We, therefore, hold that the application of 27th June 1910 was not made to the wrong Court.

It is next urged that the applications of 27th April 1907 and 27th June 1910 were not steps-in-aid of execution, because they were not properly presented. They were in fact filed in Court, but were returned for correction of defects and eventually were not re-presented corrected. No doubt in Raghunatha Thatha Chariar v. Venkatesa Tawker (5) and Gopal Sah v. Janki Koer (6) it was held that an application returned for correction must be treated as having been presented, when the Court has accepted it corrected. But in the former case the defect was fundamental and the application should have been rejected in the first instance: and the latter decision expressly dissented from a series of Madras cases beginning with Ramanadan Chetti v. Periatambai(7), in which it was held that the validity of the original presentation was not affected by a subsequent order of return, unless the defects to be corrected were such as to prejudice the judgment-debtor substantially. See also Ramayyan v. Kadir Bacha Sahib (8). The defects in the applications now in question were not of that character. Only one of them calls for notice, the fact that the application of 1910 was not accompanied by a petition under Order XXXII, rule 12, Civil Procedure Code. The explanation that that rule applies only to pending proceedings is, however, sufficient. In these circumstances the fact that these applications were returned does not deprive

(1) 30 M. 537; 2 M. L. T. 466; 17 M. L. J. 417.
(2) 27 M. 118.
(3) 7 Ind. Cas. 864; (1910) M. W. N. 477; 8 M. L. T. 299.
(4) 22 Ind. Cas. 899; 26 M. L. J. 189; (1914) M. W. 205; 1 L. W. 251; 37 M. 462.
(5) 26 M. 101; 12 M. L. J. 435.
(6) 23 C. 217.
(7) 6 M. 250.
(8) 31 M. 68; 3 M. L. T. 254; 17 M. L. J. 596

them of their character as steps-in-aid of execution.

Appellant, however, contends that this conclusion is affected by the decree-holder's failure ever to re-present these applications properly corrected to the satisfaction of the Court. This is material also to his argument regarding the application of 6th December 1912. It was returned, as they were, for similar defects and had not been corrected and accepted by 31st December 1912. It is true that in the present Code, which was in force at the date of the two last applications in question, there is a special provision for the calculation of limitation from the date of first presentation, "where an application has been amended," Order XXI, rule 17. But that we think assumes, what is not here the case, that the amendment required was essential to the validity of the application. If the application was valid without amendment with reference to the authorities already cited, it must be held to be a step-in-aid and to be valid for the purpose of section 48, Civil Procedure Code.

Appellant's remaining argument based on that section must, therefore, fail, because there had been a valid presentation of the application now before us within twelve years from the date of the decree, that is before 6th December 1912. It is urged that that application is not the one before us, because after it had been returned by the Mayavaram Court for amendment in non-essential respects, it was re-presented on 15th January 1913, after jurisdiction had been transferred to the Kumbakonam Court by notification with effect from 1st January 1913, with a prayer for its return for presentation to the latter Court as the proper one. It was returned and presented accordingly, and we are asked to consider this prayer as a withdrawal of the application by respondent, to which the Court gave effect by its order. We cannot do so, since the Mayavaram Court, on losing its jurisdiction, lost also its power to deal with the application in any way, and respondent's prayer and the Court's order on it could have no legal effect. In these circumstances it is not necessary for us to consider whether respondent's delay in applying to the Kumbakonam Court can be excused under section 14 of the Limitation Act. The application must be treated as having been on the file of the Mayavaram Court, until it was transferred with the other business of that Court to the Kumbakonam Court; and it is immaterial whether it was taken to the latter by respondent or sent there with the Mayavaram Court's other records.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1109 OF 1912.
December 2, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Rattigan and Mr. Justice Rossignol.
MANGHI RAM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS
versus
FIRM OF RAM SARAN DAS-MAMAN CHAND, THROUGH KUNDAN LAL —PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Principal and agent—Money spent by agent for principal—Right of agent to compensation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 83.

The right of an agent to be recouped by his principal in respect of losses sustained by the agent in his agency is a direct consequence of the agency contract, and a suit to enforce the right is governed by Article 83 of the Limitation Act.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Hissar, dated the 11th May 1912, reversing that of the District Judge, Rohtak, dated the 30th November 1911, dismissing the claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Appellants.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs' suit is one for recouper on the allegation that they acted as the defendants' agents in entering upon certain badni transactions, that those transactions resulted in a loss to the defendants and that plaintiffs as agents of the defendants, paid those losses to the winning third parties who are outside this suit.

Plaintiffs sued to recover these losses from defendants and the first Court dismissed the claim on the preliminary point that it was time-barred, inasmuch as it was brought just under six years from the date of the accrual of cause of action, whereas the limitation for the suit was limited to three years by Article 65 of the Limitation Act of 1908.

From this decree of dismissal an appeal was had to the Divisional Court, which held that the suit fell under Article 61 of the Act and remanded the case for a decision on the merits.

In the result the first Court again dismissed the suit on the ground that the defendants had not authorized the plaintiffs to enter into these transactions, but the Divisional Court on appeal reversed this finding and decreed for the plaintiffs.

Against this decree the defendants have preferred a second appeal and we have heard arguments on the point of limitation only.

The appellants' contention, briefly put, is that the plaintiff's claim is based on an implied contract to indemnify him for his disbursements on the defendants' behalf, that when two Articles of the Limitation Act are prima facie applicable to the facts of a case, the preference must be given to the particular over the general, consequently Article 83 and, if not that Article, then Articles 65 or 115 provide the proper limitation, whilst Article 61 applies to contingencies such as are contemplated by sections 69 and 70 of the Contract Act.

Article 115 is a residuary Article, and comes into operation only in cases to which no other Article applies. If Article 83 be held not to apply by reason of the fact that plaintiff sues, not on a contract, but on an obligation imposed upon defendant independently of his contract, then Article 115 must be rejected on the same grounds. Article 65 must be ruled out for the same reason. The contest then lies between Articles 61 and 83 and the plaintiffs-respondents quote Kandaswami Pillai v. Arayambal (1) as authority for the view that Article 61, and not Article 83, governs this case.

Though in the General Act the period of limitation under each of these Articles is three years, under the Punjab Loans Limitation Act the period under Article 61 has been extended to six years.

The plaintiffs-respondents maintain that the obligation to indemnify does not flow from the nexus of principal and agent, is not part of the contract, but is an obligation imposed upon defendants by Statute independently of the contract.

With all respect, we find it difficult to follow the reasoning of the Madras Court and are unable to reach its conclusion. Its ratio decidendi appears to be that the agent's right to indemnification is no part of the agency contract, but is conferred upon him by Statute Law.

But section 222 of the Contract Act purports to be and is an integral part of the law of contract and it merely affirms and expressly lays down one of the principles of the law of contract. In effect it says that, unless there be some agreement to the contrary, the establishment of the relation of principal and agent shall inevitably bring in its train the liability of the principal to indemnify the agent. The right, instead of being merely implied in accordance with general principles, is expressed clearly by the Statute. To take the case of a mortgage, could not the mortgagor redeem, if there were no special provision for redemption in the mortgage contract and no Statute Law on the point? Or in this very case, are we to hold that if section 222 of the Contract Act did not exist, no action by the damnified agent would lie?

We have no difficulty in holding that the right of the agent to be recouped by his principal in respect of losses sustained by the agent in his agency is a direct consequence of the agency contract.

Consequently, we hold that Article 83 of the Limitation Act fits the facts of this case exactly. The suit was brought more than three years after the plaintiffs were damnified and is, therefore, barred by time.

The result, therefore, is that the appeal is accepted, the Divisional Court's decree is reversed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

(1) 7 Ind. Cas. 399; 34 M. 167; (1910) M. W. N. 316; 20 M. L. J. 989; 8 M. L. T. 194.

KASHI RAM v. HET SINGH.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1241 OF 1913.

November 25, 1914.

Present:—Sir Henry Richards, KT., Chief Justice, and Justice Sir P. C. Banerji, KT.

KASHI RAM AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

HET SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage - Discharge of previous mortgages—Charge —Priority.

A co-mortgagor who discharges a prior mortgage has a prior charge over the property as against those who discharge a subsequent mortgage.

Har Prasad v. Raghunandan Prasad, 1 Ind. Cas. 825; 31 A. 166 at p. 168; 6 A. L. J. 67, referred to.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Agra, dated the 14th August 1913.

Mr. S. K. Dar, for the Appellants.

Mr. Durga Charan Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts connected with the suit out of which this appeal arises are a little complicated, but they nevertheless may very shortly be stated. Tikam Singh made a mortgage in the year 1880 of a village called Kokna. A second mortgage was made in the year 1889 by the same Tikam Singh and five of his sons. A third mortgage was made in the year 1891 by the same Tikam Singh and two sons. The village was at that time joint family property. Subsequently the sons of Tikam Singh divided the village into a number of mahals. The mortgagee under the mortgage of 1880 brought a suit against Het Singh, one of the sons, with the result that his mahal was sold and the mortgage discharged. Het Singh brought a suit against his brothers and their children claiming contribution under section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act and obtained a decree. In the meantime, however, the plaintiffs had discharged the two later mortgages and they brought the present suit claiming that they also had a charge under section 82. It was useless to them to claim any charge against the mahal which had belonged to Het Singh, because that mahal had been sold in discharge of first mortgage. A number of questions were gone into in the Court below which, it appears to us, were not very relevant. The Court of first instance granted the plaintiffs a decree. The lower Appellate Court modified the decree of the Court of first instance by dismissing the suit of some of the plaintiffs, on the ground that they pleaded their claim as a set-off to the suit brought by Het Singh, that such plea was decided against them and that accordingly on the principle of res judicata they could not now set up a claim which was disposed of in the previous litigation. Had it been necessary to decide the point, we doubt very much that we would have agreed with the lower Appellate Court on this question of set-off. It seems to us very doubtful whether under the circumstances of the present case the claim of the plaintiffs could have been "setoff" against the claim of Het Singh in the previous litigation. In the view we take of the case, however, it is unnecessary to decide this point. It seems to us that the only question which it is necessary to decide is the question of the priority of the charge of Het Singh. The mortgage of 1880 was not discharged until the 20th of April 1907. If Het Singh's charge is to take priority as of this date, then it would appear to us that the plaintiffs would be entitled to make the "interest" of the defendants, i.e., their charge contribute rateably to the discharge of the two mortgages of 1889 and 1891. On the other hand if Het Singh's charge takes priority from the date of the mortgage of 1880, then the plaintiffs are not entitled to any charge under section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act. The very question seems to have arisen in the case of Har Prasad v. Raghunandan Prasad (1). At page 168 of the judgment there is the following passage:—"The next question is whether this charge can take priority over the plaintiffs' mortgage. No doubt the charge came into existence when the mortgage was paid off, but as the person who acquired the charge had discharged a prior mortgage he acquired, we think, priority over an intermediate puisne mortgagee. There can be no doubt that a subsequent mortgagee or the purchaser of the equity of redemption, who pays off a prior mortgage, acquires on equitable grounds priority over a puisne mortgagee. On the principle of subrogation he is substituted for the prior mortgagee and acquires the rights of such mortgagee and the benefit of the securities held by him. We fail to see any difference in principle between the case of a subsequent mortgagee or purchaser of the equity of redemption and that of a co-mortgagor who satisfies a prior mortgage. Both classes of persons relieve another and his property of the liability which attaches to them and the same principles of justice and equity which apply to the one class equally apply to the other."

(1) 1 Ind. Cas. 825 at p. 826; 31 A. 166 at p. 168 6 A. L. J. 67.

Applying this principle to the present case, it would appear that the plaintiffs' position cannot be placed higher than that of standing in the shoes of the mortgagees under the mortgages of 1889 and 1891, that is to say, that they are puisne to Het Singh and his successors-in-title, who for the purposes of the present claim stand in the shoes of the mortgagee under the mortgage of 1880, which was discharged by the sale of Het Singh's property.

This being so, it is clear that none of the plaintiffs have any right against the person or property of the defendants. The result is that we must dismiss this appeal with costs, including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1462 OF 1912.

October 8, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

KANNU CHETTY—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

AMIRTHAMMAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Alienation—Widow—Necessity—Urgent necessity for lesser amount than realised by sale—Sale, whether valid.

If in the case of a sale by a widow a small portion of the purchase-money was not required for urgent necessity, it does not follow that the sale itself was not due to necessity, unless it could be reasonably presumed or unless it is proved that the sale of lesser property for the exact amount required for urgent necessity was feasible.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 172 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Erode, in Original Suit No. 149 of 1908.

FACTS.—The plaintiff and the 1st defendant's husband were brothers. These and others originally formed members of an undivided Hindu family. They subsequently became divided, a deed of partition having been executed. After that partition, however, the two brothers lived together, the latter managing the properties. They also carried on a joint trade and executed jointly bonds to third parties. One of the brothers died and after his death the plaintiff, the surviving brother, paid some of his debts. The widow of the deceased having come into possession of the suit property, alienated a portion thereof, the plaintiff sued for possession of the suit property which, he claimed, had fallen to him by right of survivorship, as the brothers had become re-united after partition, and for setting aside the alienation by the widow. The widow was the 1st defendant and the other defendants were her alienees. The defendants contended that there had been no re-union and that the widow was entitled to the property as the same was the separate property of the deceased. The lower Courts found that the brothers lived together after partition, that they jointly traded and executed pro-notes, that the plaintiff paid the debts of his deceased brother and that the alienation made by the widow was not justified by legal necessity to the extent of Rs. 550. They, however, held that there was no re-union and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Thereupon the plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Mr. K. R. Subrahmanya Sastriar, for the Appellant:—The lower Courts have found that there has been joint management and joint execution of documents and payment of debt of one brother by the other. The only legal inference which these facts are capable of is one of re-union. The lower Courts having found these facts, they were bound to draw the necessary legal inference and they erred in not doing so. On the finding that the sum of Rs. 550 was not necessary, the sale ought to have been set aside, the vendee being given a charge for the amount found to have been required for justifiable necessity. Further the widow has to account for Rs. 700 found to have been collected by her.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswamy Iyer, for the 1st Respondent:—A sale ought not to be set aside when the major portion of the consideration was for necessity. Thalagara Ramanne v. Kalagare Gangayya (1); Felaram Roy v. Bagalanand (2) and Appeals Nos. 112 and 113 of 1909.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Respondents Nos. 2 to 6, was not called.

JUDGMENT.—We do not think that the lower Appellate Court was legally bound to infer re-union on the facts found by it and it was justified, after considering all the facts including those facts relied on by the plaintiff's learned Vakil, to arrive at the opposite conclusion.

As regards the validity of the sale-deed, Exhibit V, dated 19th October 1904, for Rs. 2,700, there is clear evidence that Rs. 2,150 went to discharge debts binding on the reversioners. Assuming that the remaining Rs. 550 of the purchase-money was not required for urgent necessity, it does not follow that the sale itself was not due to necessity, unless it could be reasonably presumed or unless it is proved that the sale of a lesser area for the exact amount of Rs. 2,150 was feasible. It is not shown that any such reasonable presumption arises on the circumstances of the case (see also Appeal Suits Nos. 112 and 113 of 1909).

The second appeal is dismissed with costs of the 3rd respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 26 Ind. Cas. 178; 27 M. L. J. 132.
(2) 6 Ind. Cas. 207; 14 C. W. N. 895.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1360 OF 1913.
November 23, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Tudball.

LACHMIN NARAIN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
versus
KALKA PRASAD AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 20, 31, 167—Illegal transfer of occupancy holding—Ejectment—Jurisdiction of Civil or Revenue Court—Suit for declaration that mortgage of occupancy is null and void, whether cognizable by Civil Court.

Where an occupancy tenant mortgages his holding and the mortgagee after obtaining a decree on foot of the mortgage forecloses it, the zemindar can sue for ejectment in a Revenue Court under section 31 of the Agra Tenancy Act. But a suit for a declaration that such mortgage and decree were null and void and not binding on the landlord, would lie in the Civil Court.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Mainpuri, dated 11th June 1913.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Appellants.
Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in a suit which has arisen out of the following circumstances. In the year 1897 an occupancy tenant gave a mortgage, with conditional sale to a mortgagee, of one plot of land forming part of his occupancy tenure. That tenant is now represented by defendants Nos. 3 and 4 in the present suit. The mortgagee is represented by defendants Nos. 1 and 2. A foreclosure suit was brought against the tenant by the mortgagees, and it was decreed by the 13th April 1905. Final decree was obtained, was put into execution and the mortgagees-decree-holders obtained possession through the Civil Court on the 14th January 1912. To none of these proceedings was the plaintiff or his representative a party. The present suit was brought on November 15th, 1912, by the zemindar against the occupancy tenant and the mortgagees-decree-holders. The following reliefs were asked for: that it may be declared that all proceedings taken in regard to the mortgage, the decree and the obtaining of possession were null and void as against the plaintiffs and, secondly, that the occupancy tenants and their transferees be dispossessed and the plaintiffs put into possession. The suit was instituted in the Court of the Munsif who decreed it. On appeal the only point argued before the Court below was one of jurisdiction. The Court below treated the case in a peculiar manner. The point before it was only one of jurisdiction. It actually held that the suit was one under section 31, clause 2, which is mentioned in group (c) of Schedule IV of the Tenancy Act of 1901 and as in that Schedule the period of limitation for such a suit is one year calculated from the date on which the illegal transfer was made and as the suit has been brought more than twelve years from the date of the original mortgage, it was barred by limitation. The argument before me is that section 31 of the Tenancy Act does not govern the present suit at all, that the Revenue Court has no power to declare a decree of the Civil Court to be null and void, that section 31 does not cover or include those transfers which are declared to be illegal by section 20, clause 2, or section 21 and that the case is one which is cognizable by a Civil Court and is well within the period of twelve years. In the alternative I am asked to grant to the plaintiffs a declaration that the Civil Court decree and all proceedings taken thereunder are null and void as against the plaintiffs and not binding upon them, this being a declaration which the Revenue Court would have no authority to grant.

LACHMIN NARAIN v. KALKA PRASAD.

This is asked with a view to enable the plaintiffs to take further proceedings in the Revenue Court for ejectment of the opposite party. It seems to me that the suit as brought, in so far as the relief in ejectment is concerned, is clearly a suit contemplated by section 31 of the Tenancy Act. At the time when the mortgage was made, i.e., in the year 1897 the old Rent Act was in force, but even under that Act the transfer was illegal and could have been set aside. The present suit, if it had been brought before Act II of 1901 came into force, to obtain this relief, would have been brought in the Civil Court. But Act II of 1901 has clearly in view of sections 20, 21, 31 and 167 removed a suit of this nature from the jurisdiction of the Civil Court and has placed it under the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court. The illegal transfers contemplated by section 31 of the Tenancy Act clearly so include and cover the illegal transfers mentioned in sections 20 and 21. Some stress is laid on the use of the word 'voidable' in section 31. It conflicts, in one sense, with the meaning of sections 20 and 21. But it seems to me that it is quite clear that the word 'voidable' is used in a wrong sense in section 31. The object of that section is simply to state the methods in which a zemindar may avoid the result of a void transfer made by a tenant. It points out that the zemindar may sue for cancellation of the same, though it seems difficult to understand why a void transfer should require cancellation; it also enables him to eject both the tenant and the transferee. Personally I have no doubt whatever that if an illegal transfer of any description whatsoever is made by a tenant at the present time, the landlord if he wishes to interfere in the matter must do so by a suit brought in the Revenue Court in terms of section 31 of the Tenancy Act. It is clear, therefore, that the present suit in so far as it seeks the ejectment of the transferors and the transferees, is a suit which can only be brought in the Revenue Court and the Court of the Munsif had no jurisdiction whatsoever to deal with that portion of the case. In a suit of that description, moreover, an appeal does not lie to the Civil Court but to the Revenue Court (vide Schedule IV of the Act). Otherwise if the appeal had lain to the Civil Court, the question of jurisdiction would have fallen to the ground in the Court of Appeal.

There remains the question of the declaration that the decree and possession thereunder are null and void and not binding on the plaintiffs. This, in my opinion, is correct. Section 20, clause 2, of the Tenancy Act clearly states that the interest of an occupancy tenant is not transferable in execution of a decree of the Civil Court. Also where the interest of the tenant is not transferable, section 21 states that he shall not be competent to transfer his holding or any part thereof otherwise than by sub-lease as hereinafter provided. On behalf of the respondents it is urged that to grant to the plaintiffs this declaration will be of no use because, if they go to the Revenue Court now to seek ejectment they will be met by the bar of limitation. The plaintiff came into Court within twelve months of the delivery of possession by the Civil Court. It is quite possible that the Revenue Court may treat that delivery of possession as an illegal transfer in execution of a decree of the Civil Court and may possibly grant to the present appellants the whole of the period which has been occupied in the present litigation, on the ground that they have bona fide brought their suit in ejectment in a wrong Court. It is quite possible that the Revenue Court may, therefore, hold that there is no bar of limitation. It is not for me to lay down for the Revenue Court what it ought or ought not to do. But in view of this possibility and in view also of the fact that the mortgage, the decree and delivery of possession were all contrary to law, I think I shall be justified in granting to the plaintiffs at least the declaration which they seek. It may possibly be of considerable use to them in the Revenue Court. The grant of the declaration is a matter of discretion. It was clearly asked for by the plaintiffs in their plaint. In the result the suit so far as it is a suit for ejectment, must fail on the ground that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it. In so far as the suit is one for declaration, that the decree and proceedings taken in execution thereof are all contrary to law, null and void and not binding on the plaintiff, I think the suit should be decreed. I, therefore, allow the appeal to this extent that I grant to the plaintiffs the declaration that I have just set forth above. The rest of the claim stands dismissed. The parties will pay and receive costs in all Courts in proportion to failure and success. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Appeal partly allowed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER NO. 178 OF 1912.

February 19, 1913.

Present:—Justice Sir Ralph Benson, KT., and Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar.

THE OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF MADRAS —PETITIONER—APPELLANT

versus

N. PONNUSAWMY MUDALI AND ANOTHER —PLAINTIFF-DECREE-HOLDER AND PURCHASER—RESPONDENTS.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), ss. 18, 53—Execution sale—Subsequent insolvency of debtor, if affects purchaser's right—Official Assignee, right of, to set aside sale and stop confirmation.

According to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, an auction-purchaser's title dates from the date of the sale, provided the sale is confirmed by the Court. Until confirmation, however, he has an inchoate right which he is entitled to have recognised and perfected. An order of adjudication passed against the judgment-debtor does not affect such right, as the Official Assignee only takes the estate subject to the rights of third persons affecting the same and cannot claim to have the sale cancelled on the ground of any equity possessed by the general body of creditors at the time of the order of adjudication.

Appeal against the order of the City Civil Judge, Madras, dated 6th March 1912, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 270 of 1912, in Execution Petition No. 309 of 1911, in Original Suit No. 189 of 1909.

FACTS.—Certain properties belonging to a judgment-debtor had been sold in execution of a decree obtained against him and purchased by the 2nd respondent. Subsequently the judgment-debtor filed his petition and schedule in insolvency in the High Court. Thereupon he was adjudged an insolvent and an order was passed vesting his properties in the Official Assignee. The judgment-debtor then put in a petition under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, for setting aside the sale, alleging grave irregularities in its conduct. Notice of this petition was also given to the Official Assignee. The latter continued the petition, but subsequently changing his mind presented a petition under sections 18 and 53 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, for setting aside the sale and withdrew the petition under Order XXI, rule 90, previously filed by the judgment-debtor. The ground on which the Official Assignee put in the application was that the sale not having been confirmed, the property of the insolvent had vested in the Official Assignee and so the Court could not legally confirm the sale. The purchaser contended that title to the property vested in him on the date of the sale and was indefeasible, except by a petition under Order XXI, rules 89, 90 or 91, and a proper order passed thereon. Mr. C. R. Tiruvenkatachariar, City Civil Judge, Madras, dismissed the petition. His reasons were as follows:

"In the present case an application to set aside the sale was made by the defendant (insolvent) under rule 90, which was continued by the Official Assignee and eventually withdrawn on the 21st of February. There can be no doubt that but for the vesting order on the 2nd of December 1911, the Court will be bound to confirm the sale and grant a certificate of sale to the purchaser vesting the property in him from the 6th of November 1911. If the vesting order had been made before the date of sale, there can be no doubt that the purchaser would acquire no title to the property by reason that at the date of sale the property had ceased to belong to the judgment-debtor [See Sundarappaiyar v. Arunachalla Chettiar (1)]. No case has been cited to me in which it has been held that the same result will follow where the vesting order was made after the sale and not before it. Under section 316 of the old Code the title to property sold in execution of a decree vested in the purchaser only from the date of confirmation of the sale; and if during the interval between the sale and the confirmation, the defendant (insolvent) ceased to have any title to the property by reason of the vesting order, it may be a question whether the purchaser could acquire a valid title to the property. But section 65 of the present Code is quite clear on the point, and title to the property vests in the purchaser from the date of sale. If on that date the property belonged to the judgment-debtor as whose property it was sold, his subsequent insolvency and the vesting order made in consequence thereof cannot, in my opinion, affect the title of the purchaser provided there is no other impediment in the way of confirmation of the sale by the Court. In the present case the application made under rule 90 to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity having been withdrawn, there is no such impediment and if the purchaser applies for confirmation, the Court is bound to confirm the sale unless the position taken by the Official Assignee in the present petition is sound in law. The Official Assignee's Attorney relied on section 53 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act in support of his contention. I am of opinion that section does not help him in any way. The first clause of that section to which my attention was drawn concerns itself with a different question, namely, as to the respective rights of the execution creditor and the Official Assignee as regards the proceeds of the execution sale. It assumes that the sale has been completed and that the question for the Court is whether the execution creditor can claim the amount realised by the sale as against the Official Assignee, or whether they pass to the Official Assignee in preference to the execution creditor. Clause 3 of section 54 runs as follows:—'A person who in good faith purchases the property of a debtor under a sale in execution shall in all cases acquire a good title to it against the Official Assignee.' This provision supports the respondent's contention. It is not urged on behalf of the Official Assignee that the purchase by the respondent was not made in good faith. The circumstance that the Official Assignee withdrew the petition which was presented under rule 90 by the insolvent, may also be relied upon by the respondent as showing that the good faith of his purchase has not been impeached. Section 54 of the same Act tends, in my opinion, to support the view that a sale which has been made is not liable to be affected so far as the purchaser is concerned by any vesting order subsequently made. After the sale the proceeds realised thereby represents property sold and, takes its place as appertaining to the estate of the insolvent and would vest in the Official Assignee, subject to such rights as the execution creditor might have already acquired by the steps taken by him in execution proceedings. The analogy of a private sale made by the debtor before the vesting order against him has been made, also supports the conclusion that the title of the purchaser to the property is unaffected by the subsequent insolvency of the judgment-debtor. In the case of a private sale by the debtor himself the contract of sale could be specifically enforced against the Official Assignee and all that the latter could claim is the payment to him of the balance of purchase-money, if any, which was due at the date of the vesting order. As explained in Rabbidge Ex parte; Pooley, In re, (2), the Official Assignee in such a case took the legal estate in the property subject to the equity of the purchaser under the contract, which gave the purchaser a right to say, "convey me the estate on my paying the purchase-money." In that case the balance of the purchase money was paid to the vendor (insolvent) after the vesting order was made, and it was held that the payment cannot be relied on as a valid payment against the trustee in bankruptcy and that the purchaser could claim specific performance only on payment of the balance of the purchase-money to the said trustee. But if the purchase-money had been fully paid before the vesting order had been made, there is no doubt that the trustee in bankruptcy would be bound to convey the property to the purchaser unconditionally.

(1) 31 M. 493; 4 M. L. T. 188; 18 M. L. J. 487.

(2) (1878) 8 Ch. D. 367; 38 L. T. 663; 26 W. R. 646.

INDAR SINGH v. KARTAR SINGH.

"I am of opinion that the present petition is unsustainable and I accordingly dismiss it with costs."

Against this order the Official Assignee appealed to the High Court

Messrs. Ranganadham Naidu and Tirumalai Pillai, for the Appellant :—The title of the judgment-debtor is divested only on the confirmation of the sale and the issue of a sale certificate. If in the meanwhile the debtor becomes insolvent, his title vests in the Official Assignee and in such an event the Court cannot confirm the sale as if the property belonged to the judgment-debtor.

Mr. T. Ethiraja Mudaliar, for the Respondents:—The purchaser in an execution sale acquires title to the property purchased, from the moment the sale is concluded. If he makes no default in payment of the purchase-money, according to law his title could be defeated only by means of an application under Order XXI, rules 89, 90 or 91. In the absence of such application or where such an application is made and dismissed the Court is bound to confirm the sale and issue certificate to the purchaser.

JUDGMENT.—In this case certain properties were sold in execution of a decree against a debtor. The debtor was adjudicated an insolvent before an order confirming the sale was passed. The Official Assignee then moved the Court not to confirm the sale as the insolvent's property had vested in him.

The learned Judge of the City Civil Court dismissed the petition. We are of opinion that his order is right. According to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code an auction-purchaser's title dates from the date of the sale, provided the sale is confirmed by the Court. Before the order of confirmation, therefore, he has an inchoate right which he is entitled to have recognised and perfected. There is no reason for holding that an order of adjudication against the judgment-debtor would affect such right. The Official Assignee takes the estate of the insolvent subject to the rights of third persons affecting it. Nor can the Official Assignee claim to have the sale cancelled on the ground of any equity possessed by the general body of creditors at the time of the order of adjudication. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 897 OF 1912.

June 29, 1914.

Present:—Sir Alfred Kensington, KT., Chief Judge, and Mr. Justice Rattigan.

INDAR SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

KARTAR SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Registration—Compromise deed—Arrangements about certain estate.

A deed of compromise which gives effect to some arrangement arrived at between parties about a certain estate is compulsorily registrable.

Malukchand v. Manilal Nansha, 6 Bom. L. R. 296; 28 B. 364, referred to.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge of Hoshiarpur, dated the 22nd of April 1912, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, second Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 31st of December 1911, dismissing plaintiff's claim.

Pandit Rambhaj Datta, for the Appellant.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—To make this case clear the material portion of the pedigree concerned is reproduced as follows:—

Indar Singh, plaintiff, has sued as reversioner of Jaswant Singh for a declaration covering a large area of land owned by Jaswant Singh and now said to be the property of the latter's widow for her life.

The defence is that by a registered deed, dated 5th July 190 Jaswant Singh being then a very old man, adopted his daughter's son, Kartar Singh.

RIJHUMAL v. MICHUMAL.

The suit is primarily one to set aside the adoption deed and treating it as such, the lower Courts have concurred in dismissing the suit. They have held that the adoption of Kartar Singh was genuine and valid by custom. There can be no second appeal on this point without a certificate and the appeal is, therefore, bound to fail on this main issue.

This would have ended the matter if the lower Courts had properly scrutinised the plaint and declined, as they should have done, to go into certain further reliefs asked for by way of declaration. The correct answer to plaintiff in respect of these reliefs was that the suit is premature and cannot be gone into till the succession opens out on the death of Musammat Nandan. As, however, the Courts have discussed the question of further relief at great length, we think it better to decide the point so as to save further litigation if possible.

This secondary part of the case turns on the compromise proceedings of 28th November 1906 in respect of Amar Singh's land (on his death in April 1906) in a suit between the present plaintiff, Indar Singh, and Amar Singh's step-son, Sundar Singh. This explains how Amar Singh's widow and step-son came to be made defendants in the present suit with which they are not primarily concerned.

The compromise in question took account of Jaswant Singh's estate, making certain provisions in respect thereof, though his property was not immediately in dispute in 1906. For reasons of their own and under pressure from a panchayat Jaswant Singh and his son-in-law, Arjan Singh, agreed that as part of the general settlement between Indar Singh and Sundar Singh certain arrangements should be made about a portion of Jaswant Singh's land also. Agreements appear to have been drawn up accordingly by Jaswant Singh and Arjan Singh, which contemplated, and required, registration. Subsequently Jaswant Singh and Arjan Singh changed their minds and declined to register, and registration was in fact refused.

The plaintiff now contends that registration was not required and asks that he may be given a declaration the effect of which would be to hold defendants Nos. 1 to 3 to the arrangement contemplated in November 1906. The lower Courts have declined to do this and plaintiff can only succeed on second appeal if his plea as stated in ground No. 1 of the appeal be allowed, namely, that registration of the 1906 agreement was unnecessary.

The lower Courts have considered the point carefully and we agree with them that if the agreement was to take effect, registration was compulsory. We see no force in the arguments of the plaintiff's Pleader which are mainly based on a complete misunderstanding of what he has called a composition-deed, thereby misusing a technical term referring to settlements between debtors and creditors which is totally inapplicable to the present case, see Malukchand v. Manilal Nansha (1).

The short answer to plaintiff is that he had the clearest notice in 1906 of refusal by Jaswant Singh and Arjan Singh to proceed with the complicated settlement then suggested and yet remained silent, taking no steps to enforce such remedy as he may have had at the time. It is too late for him now to attempt to secure any advantage for himself from agreements which undoubtedly required registration and were not in fact registered.

The appeal then fails on the only points with which we are now concerned. It is dismissed with costs to the defendants. Pleader's fee Rs. 80.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 28 B. 364; 6 Bom. L. R. 296.

SIND JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 23 OF 1911.

April 24, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Hayward, J. C., and Mr. Boyd, A. J. C.

RIJHUMAL SHIVANDAS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

MICHUMAL HOTCHAND AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 104—Stoppage in transit—Sufficient notice—Telegram to carrier not to deliver.

RIJHUMAL v. MICHUMAL.

Where an unpaid vendor sent goods by rail to and at the request of the vendee and on becoming insolvent, while the goods were still in transit, telegraphed to the Railway Company asking them not to deliver the goods:

Held, that the telegram was sufficient notice to the carriers, as no particular form of notice is required to effect a valid stoppage in transit under section 104 of the Contract Act.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Judicial Commissioner of Sind.

Mr. Wadhumal Oodharam, for the Appellants.

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued defendants No. 1 for damages in respect of goods consigned to defendants No. 1 on the order of defendantsNo. 2, alleging that wrongful possession was taken of the goods by defendants No. 1 after they had been stopped in transit on the insolvency of defendants No. 2. A decree was passed for the value of goods against the 1st defendants. No decree was passed against the defendants No. 2. The defendants No. 1 appeal against this decree. The defendants No. 2 have not appeared.

It has been contended on behalf of theappellants, in the first place, that the plaintiffs were not principals and had no right to sue. But the plaintiffs stated they were principals in respect of the goods and they were supported by the defendants No. 2 and other witnesses. The only point made has been that their account books were not produced. We do not see any sufficient reason in these circumstances for disagreeing with the learned Judge.

It has been contended on behalf of appellants, in the second place, that theplaintiffs had no right to stop the goods in transit because before consigning them to the defendants No. 1 they had already given delivery to the defendants No 2. The plaintiffs, no doubt, weighed out the goods into bags supplied by the defendants No. 2 and arranged their carriage to the railway station in the presence of Rajumal, the agent of the defendants No. 2. But they paid the expenses themselves and loaded the bags into the railway wagons five or six days later and consigned them to the defendants No. 1 in their own name, and not in the name of defendants No. 2, and at that time neither Rajumal nor anybody else was present on behalf of the defendants No. 2. We agree in these circumstances with the finding of the learned Judge.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellants, in the third place, that the telegrams "do not deliver" and "deliver to a third man," did not amount to stoppage in transit inasmuch as they were followed by a letter stating that the consignment to defendants No. 1 was a mistake and that the delivery ought to be made to the third person and inasmuch as no mention was made of unpaid vendors or the insolvency of the defendants No. 2. No case has been cited before us in which any particular form of notice has been required, and the intention of the telegrams is a question of fact which would appear from a subsequent letter of the defendants No. 1 to have been perfectly well-known to the defendants No. 1 and the Railway Company. There was no occasion, however, for developing the evidence as to intention, as it was never disputed in the lower Court, nor has it been distinctly questioned in the memorandum of appeal. We hold, therefore, that the intention of the telegrams was to stop delivery in transit on behalf of the unpaid vendors owing to the insolvency of the purchasers, the defendants No. 2, and that the telegrams were sufficient notice under section 104 of the Contract Act as held by the learned Judge.

It has finally been contended on behalf of the appellants that the plaintiffs would not be entitled to recover the full value of the goods but only the balance of the unpaid purchase-money. This suit, however, was based on tort. The defendants No. 1 were alleged to have taken possession of the goods wrongfully and were bound to restore possession of the goods or to pay the full value of the goods. It was not based on contract and there was no question as regards the amount of the unpaid purchase-money. That could only be a proper question in the suit based on contract against the purchasers, defendants No. 2. It has also been contended that the freight amounting to some Rs. 300 should be deducted from the value of goods, but no satisfactory evidence has been pointed out as to the value of the goods at the time they were taken over by the defendants No. 1 and it appears to us that the damages recoverable would be the value of the goods in Karachi, because possession was wrongfully taken of those goods in Karachi and in default of any reliable evidence to the contrary, it must be presumed that the value was at least the amount paid up-country for those goods plus the freight to Karachi. No merchant could be presumed intentionally to buy goods up-country at such a rate that they would not realize that rate plus railway freight to Karachi. Apart from this the claim to deduct the freight is of the nature of a set-off and was, therefore, a claim which should have been particularly pleaded on payment of the appropriate Court-fee.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs and confirm the decision of the learned Judge.

Appeal dismissed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 71 OF 1911.

April 7, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Scott-Smith and Mr. Justice Shadi Lal.

GHAMAN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

KANHIYA MAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Registered sale-deed—Oral agreement of mortgage, whether can be proved—Fraud, if alleged, should be specifically pleaded.

Oral evidence cannot be given to show that the parties to a deed of sale intended the transaction to be one of mortgage and not of sale.

A party relying on fraud ought to allege it specifically in the plaint.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Multan Division, dated the 1st December 1910, affirming that of the Munsif, first Class, Multan, dated the 27th June 1910, dismissing the claim.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nanak Chand and Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The land in suit was sold by plaintiffs' father to defendants' father for Rs. 1,300 on 21st December 1880. Plaintiffs sued for redemption alleging that the contract was really one of mortgage and not of sale. The first Court found upon the evidence that there was no separate oral agreement such as is alleged, that the transaction should be treated as a mortgage and dismissed the suit. Upon appeal the Divisional Judge held that plaintiffs were barred by section 92 of the Evidence Act from proving that the transaction was not what it purported to be according to the registered deed. He, therefore, dismissed the appeal.

Plaintiffs have filed a further appeal to this Court.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din, on behalf of appellants, was unable to cite a single authority in support of the contention that evidence could be given to show that the parties to the deed of sale intended the transaction to be one of mortgage and not of sale. There is ample authority to the contrary and we have no hesitation in agreeing with the lower Appellate Court's view of the law.

With reference to the third ground of appeal, it is sufficient to say that no fraud was specifically alleged in the plaint.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din urges that in any case there was no intention to sell a share of the shamilat. The deed of sale shows that a share of the shamilat was sold. Moreover, it was allotted to defendants-respondents during the partition proceedings which began in 1891 and terminated on 3rd June 1896. During these proceedings Ghaman, present plaintiff, objected saying that the shamilat should go to him and his brother, but the decision went against him. Since then defendants have been holding the shamilat as proprietors and plaintiffs' claim to it is barred by time.

We note further that in the lower Appellate Court there was no contention that the shamilat had been fraudulently entered in the deed of sale, and in the grounds of appeal to this Court there is no reference to it at all. We have no doubt that the shamilat was sold along with the proprietary land and we are supported in this view by the mutation, dated 9th June 1881.

The appeal clearly fails on more than one ground and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

GANESH v. BABU RAM.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1205 OF 1913.

November 17, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chamier and Mr. Justice Piggott.

GANESH—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

BABU RAM—PLAINTIFF AND ANOTHER DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Moveable property—Flag of Pragwals, whether can be charged for payment of annuity—Mortgage—Auction purchaser—Notice—Estoppel.

The flag used by the Pragwals at the confluence of the Ganges and Jumna at Allahabad is a valuable property and may be charged with the payment of an annuity and may be sold subject to that charge even in execution of a decree for arrears of the annuity.

A person who brings property to sale in execution of a decree without disclosing the existence of a mortgage which he holds on the property, cannot afterwards set up the mortgage against the purchaser, at all events where the purchaser had no notice of the mortgage.

Second appeal from the decision of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge of Allahabad, dated the 31st July 1913.

Mr. Lakshmi Narayan Tewari, for the Appellant:—The lower Court is wrong in the view it takes, that we could have got information about the charge if we had inquired in the Registration Office. Transfers of moveable property are not required to be registered and so registration cannot amount to notice in the case of transfers of moveable property. In the case of immoveable property alone all transactions are acquired to be effected by registered instruments and in those cases registration would be notice.

In the case of auction sales all charges are proclaimed. In this case the charge was not entered in the sale notification. Moreover, the plaintiff who has the charge was himself bidding for the property in execution of his decree and his action would lead the appellant to believe that he had no charge. The plaintiff not having given notice of his charge, is estopped and cannot enforce it against my clients who are purchasers for value and without notice.

I rely on Tukaram v. Ramchandra (1); Agarchand v. Rakhma (2); Ramchandra v. Jairam (3); Jaganatha v. Gangi Reddi (4); Ramanath Dass v. Boloram (5); Muhammad Hamid-ud-din v. Shib Sahai (6); Kasturi v. Venkatachalapathi (7).

Once a charge has been enforced, it is exhausted and no longer exists. This view was held in Sheshgiri Shanbhog v. Salvador Vas (8). In this case it was held that not only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor was sold, but also rights which the decree-holder and judgment-debtor were capable of passing. Moveable property cannot be sold subject to a charge, Nanhuji v. Chimna (9).

Mr. Beni Madho Ghose, for the Respondent:—There is nothing in law to prevent a property being sold subject to a recurring charge. Moreover, in this case it was admitted by some of the defendants that they were in possession of the property sold and the auction-purchaser did not get possession and the property remained with the judgment-debtor. I can enforce my security against the judgment-debtor.

JUDGMENT.—A suit brought by the respondent, Babu Ram, for possession of moveable and immovable property was settled by an agreement, dated November 17th, 1906, and duly registered, whereby the property there in suit was charged with the payment of an annuity of Rs. 200 to Babu Ram. In 1908 Babu Ram obtained a decree for arrears of the annuity against Brij Mohan, father of the respondent Badri, and in execution thereof part of the property, namely, a birt jijmani, some old book containing the names and genealogies of the clients (jijman) and a flag were brought to sale. The birt jijmani and the book were purchased by Babu Ram himself and the flag was purchased by the appellant Ganesh.

The appeal now before us arises out of a second suit brought by Babu Ram for recovery of further arrears of the annuity by sale of the moveable and immoveable property charged by the agreement of 1906. Brij Mohan(since deceased) and his son, the respondent Badri, were impleaded as the persons in possession of the immoveable property and the appellant, Ganesh, was impleaded as the

(1) 1 B. 314.
(2) 12 B. 678.
(3) 22 B. 686.
(4) 15 M. 303.
(5) 7 C. 677; 9 C. L. R. 233.
(6) 21 A. 309; A. W. N. (1899) 87.
(7) 15 M. 412.
(8) 5 B. 5.
(9) 10 Ind. Cas. 86 7 N. L. R. 72.

purchaser in possession of the flag. The claim was decreed by the first Court and its decision was confirmed by the lower Appellate Court. This is a second appeal by the defendant, Ganesh, in which he repeats all the pleas put forward by him unsuccessfully in the Courts below.

His first point is that the flag having been once brought to sale by the respondent, Babu Ram, cannot be brought to sale by him again. It was indeed suggested that moveable property cannot be charged with the payment of an annuity, but such a contention cannot be accepted. In the case of Sahib Mirza v. Umda Khanum (10) both moveable and immoveable property was charged with the payment of an annuity. The property was sold repeatedly subject to the annuity in execution of decrees passed for arrears of the same, and there were many suits between the annuitants and the holders of the property and between the holders of the property inter se. Sahib Mirza v. Syed Muhammad (11) is an example of them. It is clear that moveable as well as immoveable property—at all events moveable property which is not perishable or necessarily consumed by use—may be effectively charged with the payment of an annuity and may be sold subject to the charge, even in execution of a decree for arrears of the annuity. The property now in question is of a peculiar character. The flag is one of those used by Pragwals at the confluence of the Ganges and the Jumna for the purpose of attracting pilgrims. Each flag bears a distinctive device which may be recognized by an old client. His flag and his books are the ordinary paraphernalia or stock in trade of the owner of a birt jijmani. Together, the birt jijmani, the books and the flag often form a valuable property, and we may assume for the purposes of this case that such property may be charged with the payment of an annuity and may be sold subject to that charge, even in execution of a decree for arrears of the annuity. This brings us to the appellant's second point, namely, that the flag was not sold to him subject to the annuity and that the respondent, Babu Ram, is by his conduct estopped from asserting that it was. Babu Ram was, of course, not bound to have the flag sold subject to the annuity.

It was open to him to have it sold free of the charge, and such a course would often be advantageous to the owner of the annuity in the case of moveable property of a wasting character—whether by accident or design, it appears that nothing was said about the property remaining subject to the charge. The case appears to be analogous to those cases in which it has been held that a person who brings property to sale in execution of a decree, without disclosing the existence of a mortgage which he holds on the property, cannot afterwards set up the mortgage against the purchaser, at all events where the purchaser had no notice of the mortgage, see, for example; Hamid-ud-din v. Shib Sahai (6); Jaganath v. Gangi Reddi (4); Kasturi v Venkata Chalapathi (7) and Ramchandra v Jairam (3). It is not suggested that the appellant had any notice of the charge, or that there was anything to lead him to suspect that the flag was being sold subject to a continuing charge for an annuity. On the contrary Babu Ram's own action in allowing the birt and the books to be sold separately from the flag suggested that he intended that the flag, the birt and the books should all be sold free of the charge for the annuity, for the flag without the birt and the books will produce no income. For these reasons we are of opinion that the flag held by the appellant was sold to him free of the charge for the annuity and that the respondent, Babu Ram, is estopped from contending the contrary.

We decree the appeal and dismiss the suit as against the appellant with costs throughout.

Appeal decreed.

(10) 19 C. 444 (P. C); 19 I. A. 83.
(11) Select Case No. 306.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1704 OF 1913.

October 14, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ayling and Mr. Justice Hannay.

KAVUTU PURNANANDAM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

Vidwan Madabhushi LAKSHMI-NARASIMHA CHARYULU AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Interest—Damages for breach of contract, whether interest legal from date of breach.

The award of interest on the amount of damages allowed for a breach of contract from the date of the breach is illegal.

Subramania Aiyar v. Subramania Aiyar, 31 M. 250; 18 M. L. J. 245; 3 M. L. T. 278; Boddu Sanyasiraju v. Kotra Ramamurthi, 21 Ind. Cas. 543; (1913) M. W. N. 874; Sheikh Mahamad Ravuther v. The British India Steam Navigation Company, Ltd., 1 Ind. Cas. 977; 32 M. 95; 18 M. L. J. 497; 4 M. L. T. 110 (F. B.), followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam, in Appeal Suit No. 64 of 1912, preferred against that of the Additional District Munsif of Bezwada, in Original Suit No. 208 of 1909.

FACTS.—Suit to recover damages for breach of contract. The plaintiffs alleged three different contracts under which defendants agreed to buy paddy from the plaintiffs at certain rates. In respect of two of the contracts plaintiffs' claim was disallowed by the Courts below, but damages were allowed in respect of the third contract. Interest was also allowed on the amount of damages from the date of breach up to the date of suit. The lower Appellate Court relied on Sheikh Mahamad Ravuther v. The British India Steam Navigation Coy. Ltd. (1). No costs were allowed to defendants in respect of the portion disallowed. The amount of damages was assessed at 8 annas a bag, being the difference between Rs. 3-8-0 which was the contract price and Rs. 3, the price realised on re-sale. Defendants filed a second appeal.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Appellants, contended:—(1) The proper measure of damages was not the difference between the contract price and that realised on re-sale but the difference between the contract price and the market price on the day of breach.

(2) The interest ought not to be given on unliquidated damages. He relied on Subramania Aiyar v. Subramania Aiyar (2) and Boddu Sanyasiraju v. Kotra Ramamurthi (3). No reasons were given in Sheikh Mahamad Ravuther v. The British India Steam Navigation Coy. Ltd. (1).

(3). Defendants ought to get costs on the disallowed claim.

[AYLING, J.—Why should recourse be had to the Interest Act when the interest to be awarded is upon an uncertain amount?]

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondents, contended:—(1) The re-sale being on a date near enough to the date of breach the price realised on re-sale is evidence of the market price on the date of breach. The defendant has no better or rebutting evidence.

(2) In Sheikh Mahamad Ravuther v. The British India Steam Navigation Coy. Ltd. (1) interest was correctly awarded though no reasons were given. This judgment was one by three Judges. The other cases are not correctly decided, as the Bombay cases on which the case in Subramania Aiyar v. Subramania Aiyar (2) was based did not really decide the point. He referred to Illustration to section 23 of the Contract Act.

(3) Costs are in the discretion of the Court.

JUDGMENT.—In our opinion the lower Appellate Court has rightly held that time was not of the essence of the second contract in respect of which he has awarded damages to the plaintiffs: and the defendants (appellants) are liable for their breach of the same on refusal to take delivery.

The amount of damages awarded is attacked on three grounds, with which we shall deal seriatim.

It is pointed out that the number of bags refused is only 452 and not 540. The figure 540 is clearly due to an arithmetical error: but apart from this it is now admitted that the number of bags accepted on 18th December 1906 was 434, as stated by the District Munsif, and not 426 as stated by the Subordinate Judge. In any calculation of damages, 452 must be substituted for 540 as the number of bags refused.

(1) 1 Ind. Cas. 977; 32 M. 95; 18 M. L. J. 497; 4 M. L. T. 110 (F. B.).

(2) 31 M. 250; 18 M. L. J. 245; 3 M. L. T. 278.

(3) 21 Ind. Cas. 543; (1913) M. W. N. 874.

In the second place, it is pointed out that the basis of assessment of damages should be the difference between the contract price and the price that the rejected goods would have fetched if sold at the time of refusal i. e., 18th December 1906: and it is argued that this is not the basis on which the lower Appellate Court has proceeded. The Subordinate Judge has calculated damages on the difference between the contract price and that actually fetched by the refused bags when sold at the place of delivery (Bezwada). It does not appear on the record before us when this sale took place. But the appellants adduced no evidence of the market price on the date of breach (18th December 1906) and we are unable to say that the award of the Subordinate Judge is erroneous.

It is next argued that the award of interest on the amount of damages so calculated from date of breach of contract is illegal. This, we think, must be conceded. Whatever view we might be inclined to take if the question were res integra, we feel bound to follow the ruling in Subramania Aiyar v. Subramania Aiyar (2), as did the learned Judges in a recent case of Boddu Sanyasiraju v. Kotra Ramamurthi (3). The Subordinate Judge has relied on Sheikh Mahamad Ravuther v. The British India Steam Navigation Company Ltd. (1) in which interest on unliquidated damages was allowed. But in that case no reasons are given for departing from the usual practice: and the point does not appear to have been raised or considered.

The decree must be amended by omitting interest on the damages now found to be due to the plaintiffs.

Lastly it is urged that each side ought to pay and recover proportionate costs. We think this must be conceded. The plaintiffs sued on three contracts and succeeded only on one: damages in the case of the other two were refused by both the lower Courts and their decision in that respect was not appealed against. Plaintiffs should pay the defendants' proportionate costs in the two lower Courts on the amount of their claim eventually disallowed.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be modified as indicated above. Each side will bear its own costs in this Court.

Decree modified.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 381 OF 1910.

November 3, 1914.

Present:—Sir Alfred Kensington, KT., Chief Judge, and Mr. Justice Rattigan.

Rani BHAGWAN KAUR—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Rani HARNAM KAUR—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Res judicata—Decision in previous execution proceeding between same parties, whether bars suit on same subject-matter—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 244—Widow in possession of her husband's house, when trespasser—Maintenance, right to claim, when allowed.

The executors of a deceased proprietor sued his widow and some other persons for recovery of various parts of his estate. The parties came to an amicable settlement and a decree was passed in terms of the written compromise. In execution proceedings, the widow objected to the attachment of the house she was residing in, but the objection was overruled and the execution allowed to proceed, the Chief Court on appeal holding that she had no right to live on in the house. On a suit by the widow for declaration that she was entitled to live during her life-time in the house in suit and for maintenance allowance:

Held, (1) that the decision in the previous execution proceedings between the same parties made this question res judicata;

(2) that inasmuch as the widow must be regarded as a trespasser in possession of property to which she had no right, she was not entitled to claim maintenance unless and until she had given possession of the house and accounted for the profits up to the date of possession.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 30th March 1910, dismissing the claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., and Messrs. Roshan Lal and Duni Chand, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Beechey and Santanam and Lala Bhagat Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Sardar Dayal Singh, Majithia, a wealthy Gil Jat, died on the 9th September 1898 leaving a very large estate, partly ancestral and partly acquired. On the 15th June 1895 he had executed a Will with regard to the administration of his estate and had appointed certain Indian gentlemen, who were well-known to him, to be his executors. After his death, the executors applied for Probate but were resisted by the present appellants, Rani Bhagwan Kaur, the widow of the deceased, Sardar Gajindar Singh, his nearest agnatic heir, and others, but after protracted and expensive litigation, Probate was eventually granted on the 5th August 1903. In June 1904 the executors brought a suit for recovery of various parts of the deceased's estate which were in the possession of the said Rani, Sardar Gajindar Singh and other persons, the principal defendants being, of course, the Rani and the Sardar. In July 1907 the executors and the principal defendants arrived at an amicable settlement, and as a result the Additional District Judge passed a decree in terms of a written compromise which was filed in his Court and to which the Chief Court granted sanction upon the application of the parties. Before proceeding it is to be noted that the written agreement upon which the decree of the Additional Distrtct Judge was based, is in some respects different from an agreement which appears to have been arrived at subsequently and of which a copy has been filed in this case as the final agreement between the parties. A copy of the latter agreement was produced before the Additional District Judge, but he rightly proceeded to give his decree in accordance with the written agreement which had come up for sanction to this Court, and had, as the learned Judge expressed it, "received the imprimatur of the Chief Court."

Under the terms of the agreement which was embodied in the decree, it was provided that the executors should make an allowance to the Rani, but that this should not in any way affect her right to maintenance from Sardar Gajindar Singh or any other rights which she might have under her late husband's Will. It was, however, provided [see paragraph 2, clause (l)] that the executors were to obtain possession through the Court of all properties devised to Sardar Gajindar Singh by the testator and should thereafter hand over the same to him, and further that the Sardar himself should be at liberty to recover possession (by execution of decree) of any part of the said properties which might happen to be put in the possession of any of the parties.

The decree is dated the 4th July 1907, and shortly afterwards Sardar Gajindar Singh applied for execution of it by attachment of the premises at Amritsar which were used by the testator during his life-time as a residential house and which after his death had been taken possession of by his widow, Rani Bhagwan Kaur. The latter immediately objected to the attachment on the ground that according to the conditions of the deed of compromise and the decree thereon, Sardar Gajindar Singh had no right to apply for execution or to take any property from the possession of the petitioner unless and until all the conditions of the deed of compromise had been complied with. The District Judge, by order, dated the 8th January 1908, overruled these objections and held that the applicant was entitled in virtue of the clause above referred to to take out execution on his own account. From this order, which was clearly one passed under the provisions of section 244, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, the Rani appealed to this Court and the first four grounds of her appeal run as follows :—

"Because the learned District Judge has misunderstood the terms of the decree. Paragraph (a) clearly makes the decree subject to Rani Bhagwan Kaur's rights secured by the Will, and so the decree cannot be executed for the house she resides in, as the Will clearly provides that she can choose to reside in the family house at Amritsar or Majitha and she has chosen to reside in the family house at Amritsar.

"2. Because on the correct interpretation of the decree the objection of the Rani Sahib ought to have been allowed.

"3. Because the residential house against which the decree is sought to be executed is not included in the decree. Prays that pending the disposal of this application the further execution proceedings be stayed.

"4. Because the Court executing the decree was competent to decide all questions under section 244, Civil Procedure Code, and section 228, Civil Procedure Code."

It is clear from these grounds that the Rani, through her legal advisers, pressed this Court to decide as between her and Sardar Gajindar Singh the question as to her right to retain the house she was living in, and it was with reference to and in accordance with that prayer that the late Chief Judge (Clark, C. J.) by order, dated the 13th May 1908, held that "all that Rani Bhagwan Kaur is entitled to under the decree, compromise and clause 4 of the Will, is a suitable residence at Amritsar or Majitha as she may desire. She has no right to live in the house she is living in at present.....She has no right to stay execution of decree as to the house in which she is now residing."

On the 12th May 1908, i.e., one day before the date of the last-mentioned order, the Rani brought the present suit in which she claims the following relief :—

(a) that she is entitled to live during her life-time in the haveli situate in Amritsar, Katra Baggian, Khata Shumari No. 2995;

(b) future maintenance in accordance with the terms of clause 4 of the Will at a rate to be fixed by the Court but provisionally fixed by plaintiff at Rs. 500 per mensem; and

(c) arrears of maintenance from the 1st September 1906 up to date of suit, amounting in all to Rs. 9,720.

The suit was contested and the relief claimed by the plaintiff was objected to by the defendant on various grounds. Pending the suit Sardar Gajindar Singh died and his widow Sardarni Harnam Kaur was brought on the record as his representative. On the 30th March 1910 the District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that upon a proper construction of the terms of the Will, defendant was under no obligation to grant maintenance to the plaintiff or to carry out such terms of the Will as were in her favour until the whole of the properties devised and bequeathed to him had actually come into his possession, and as to the latter point, the District Judge held upon the evidence given by Sardar Tek Singh, plaintiff's agent and brother, that a very considerable portion of that property had not yet come into the hands of the Sardar or his widow.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court, and we have heard arguments at considerable length on behalf of the appellant and of the respondent. We do not think it, however, necessary to discuss any but the one point upon which Mr. Beechey laid special stress, namely, that the decision of Clark, C. J., in May 1908 makes the question of the Rani's right to the haveli res judicata and that she can no longer claim to be entitled under the terms of the Will to retain possession of it during her life. It is true that this plea was not urged in the District Court, but the question is one of law, is obvious upon the face of the execution proceedings which preceded the present suit and goes to the root of the plaintiff's claim, and we, therefore, are compelled to consider it in the first instance. In our opinion the plea must prevail, for it is quite clear that it was the Rani herself who insisted upon a decision being given by the Chief Judge with regard to her alleged right under the terms of the Will to keep the haveli in her possession and the question was one directly connected with the execution of the decree and cognizable under section 244 of the Code of 1882 by the Court executing that decree. We must accordingly hold that it is not competent for the Rani to raise the same question again by a separate suit.

As it has been definitely decided that the Rani has no right to retain the haveli and as she has admittedly kept possession of it ever since the death of her late husband, she must be regarded as a trespasser in possession of property to which she has no right and as such, we do not think that she is entitled to claim maintenance or arrears of maintenance from Sardar Gajindar Singh's widow unless and until she hands over the haveli to the latter and accounts to her for the income and profits accruing therefrom during her occupation of it. At the conclution of the arguments we suggested to Messrs. Muhammad Shafi and Beechey that a settlement of this dispute between the two widows is eminently desirable and that it might be feasible for the parties to agree that Rani Bhagwan Kaur should remain in possession of the haveli during her life, she on her part foregoing any right of further maintenance from Sardarni Harnam Kaur. We believe that both Counsel used their best endeavours to effect a settlement on the above lines, but unfortunately without success. We are thus compelled to decide the case in the appeal upon the merits and in accordance with our conclusions as given above. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

WARYAM SINGH v. MAHTAB SINGH.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.
FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 1217 OF 1910.
November 3, 1914.
Present:—Sir Alfred Kensington, KT., Chief Judge, and Mr. Justice Rattigan.
WARYAM SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
MAHTAB SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (II of 1905), s. 12 (c) "secondly"—Sub-division—Patti created for fiscal purposes—Proprietor of patti, pre-emption, right of—Pre-emptor, obligations of—Extension of time to pay pre-emption money, when allowed by Appellate Court—Law of pre-emption, nature and basis of—Villages of recent growth, whether can be subject of pre-emption.

A pre-emptor is given a very special and peculiar right which overrides the ordinary rights of contract and if he asks the Court to give effect to that right, he must be careful to see that he complies, compatibly with his honest pleas, with the decree which the Court grants him.

Therefore, an Appellate Court will not as of right grant to a pre-emptor an extension of time within which to pay any further sum which that Court finds to be justly payable by him, if in point of fact he has paid no money into Court or has made no tender of a sum to the Court or if the sum he has paid or tendered is unreasonably small.

A patti which is created merely for fiscal purposes and in no way represents homogeneity of area or descent of the proprietors, does not constitute a "sub-division" within the meaning and for the purposes of section 12 (c) "secondly" of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1905, and, therefore, a proprietor in such patti has no right of pre-emption.

The law of pre-emption as applicable to village communities was intended, primarily at all events, to protect the village against the intrusion of strangers, who might otherwise obtain a footing in it contrary to the wishes of the community who were bound to each other by the ties of descent and would resent the advent of an intruder.

Therefore, the principle can have no application when the village is of but recent foundation and is composed of individuals whose sole connection inter se is that each has been selected by Government as a person to whom a grant of land might fitly be made.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 2nd November 1910, decreeing the claim on payment of Rs. 56,000.

Mr. Ralli, and Sardar Parman Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Beechey, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Sardar Waryam Singh, Jat, is a lambardar in what is described as "Patti Waryam Singh" of Chak No. 224, Rakh Branch, in the Lyallpur District, and he seeks to pre-empt five squares of land (= 1074 kanals, 15 marlas) sold by defendant No. 1, on the 16th August 1907, to defendant No. 2 Fatteh Din, an Arain and a resident of the said Chak, for an alleged consideration of Rs. 56,000. No sale-deed was executed, but the sale is admitted and a memorandum of it was duly made by the patwari in his diary (or roznamcha) and on the 4th September 1907 mutation was effected in the vendee's favour.

Plaintiff bases his claim on the ground that he is a proprietor in the patti in which the land sold is situate, whereas the vendee owns no land in that patti [section 12, clause (c), sub-clause "secondly", of the Pre-emption Act, 1905]. He also alleges in his plaint that the real consideration for the sale was Rs. 11,000 only and that that sum fairly accurately represents the market-value of the land.

Defendant-vendee pleaded that the plaintiff had no right of pre-emption, as the alleged patti was not "a sub-division" of the estate, within the meaning of the sub-clause above referred to, and further that the full amount of Rs. 56,000 had been duly paid by him to the vendor.

The District Judge disposed of the first question, namely, plaintiff's right to pre-empt, by a preliminary order, dated the 14th March 1910, and held that the pattis of Chak No. 224 constituted "pattis or sub-divisions" within the meaning of the Act, and that in consequence plaintiff was entitled to claim pre-emption. The learned Judge thereafter proceeded to take evidence as to the issues relating to the price to be paid by the pre-emptor.

Finding that the direct evidence regarding payment of consideration was not altogether satisfactory, the District Judge had an inquiry made through a Revenue Assistant for the determination of the market-value of the land. The report of the Local Commissioner was that the value was about Rs. 35,000. Thereafter evidence was taken in Court upon this point, and in the result the Court found that the market-value was about Rs. 56,000 and that regard being had to this fact which supported the direct evidence, there was sufficient justification for holding that the price had been fixed and paid in good faith. He accordingly granted plaintiff a decree for possession by pre-emption of the land in suit subject to the payment by him of Rs. 56,000, and costs, on or before January 3rd, 1911; in default the suit to stand dismissed with costs.

On the 15th November 1910 plaintiff, through his Counsel Mr. Shadi Lal, filed an appeal in this Court taking objection to the findings of the District Judge upon the question of price to be paid and also to the period fixed by the Court for such payment, plaintiff complaining that the period in question was very short and should be extended.

On the 25th January 1911 the vendee, through Mr. Beechey, filed a cross-appeal taking exception to the finding that plaintiff was entitled to claim pre-emption.

Upon the appeals first coming before a Division Bench of this Court for consideration, a question arose as to the correctness of the Court-fee stamp affixed by the plaintiff to his memorandum of appeal. This question was referred to a Full Bench* and, as a result, it was held that the amount of Court-fee payable by plaintiff was to be calculated ad valorem on the amount by which he wished the price fixed by the District Judge to be reduced. The late Mr. Pestonji, on behalf of the plaintiff, informed the Division Bench on the 22nd December 1913 that his client asked for a reduction of Rs. 36,000 only and was ready and willing to pay the sum of Rs. 20,000, for the land. The Division Bench directed that the deficiency in Court-fee should be made good and adjourned the hearing to a future date. Plaintiff has complied with that order and we have now heard his appeal on the principal question involved in the case, namely, whether he has a right to claim pre-emption. This was a point decided in his favour by the District Court, but we were so doubtful as to the correctness of that decision that without calling upon Mr. Beechey to support his appeal, we directed Mr. Ralli to confine his arguments in the first instance to that point. We also pointed out to Mr. Ralli that in view of his client's conduct both before and after decree, we would not be prepared to extend the period for payment fixed by the District Judge, namely, the 3rd January 1911, and that as a result, even if we rejected Mr. Beechey's appeal and granted plaintiff a decree for pre-emption, plaintiff's suit must necessarily fail as he could not now comply with the condition affixed to his decree by the District Judge. We might explain here that the conduct of the plaintiff to which we make reference, consisted (1) in his originally fixing the small sum of Rs. 11,000 as the true market-value of the land, though he has had to admit in this Court that such market-value is, as a matter of fact, not less than Rs. 20,000; and (2) in his wilful and deliberate neglect to comply with the order of the Court that he should pay the money decreed into Court by a specified date. It is admitted that plaintiff has not paid a single rupee into Court, but it is urged on his behalf that he did not do so because he was taking exception on appeal to the amount fixed by the Court below. This, however, could not possibly justify his refusal to pay even the sum of Rs. 11,000 into Court. It has been finally decided by a Full Bench of this Court [Wasawa Singh v. Lal Singh (1)] that an Appellate Court is not bound to grant to a pre-emptor an extension of the period for payment fixed by the Court of first instance, though, no doubt, it has power to do so and will probably exercise that power in favour of a pre-emptor whose conduct has been bona fide and does not exhibit a contemptuous disregard of the order passed by the Court. If, for example, an Appellate Court finds that the pre-emptor has paid into Court a sum, which is less than that fixed by the first Court, but yet approximates reasonably to the amount eventually fixed by the Appellate Court, the latter would probably allow the pre-emptor a further period within which he could pay the difference between the amount paid into Court by him and the higher amount fixed by the Court itself. In the case before us, however, beyond giving security under section 19 of the Act for Rs. 5,000, the pre-emptor admittedly made no attempt to pay any sum of money into Court, though he knew full well that in no event could he possibly get a decree even from the Appellate Court unless he paid at least Rs. 11,000 to the vendee. It is possible that the plaintiff's misguided action was due to advice which he received from his local

*See Waryam Singh v. Mehtab Singh, 19 Ind. Cas 961; 76 P. R. 1913; 240 P. L. R. 1913; 141 P. W. R. 1913 (F. B.).—Ed.

(1) 48 P. R. 1906 (F. B.); 104 P. L. R. 1906.

WARYAM SINGH v. MAHTAB SINGH.

Pleaders, but it should have been obvious to him, if not to his advisers, that he could not possibly hope to obtain a decree for pre-emption except upon payment into Court of a sum which he bona fide believed to represent the true value of the land, and that if he wished the Appellate Court to extend the period for payment fixed by the District Judge, it was incumbent upon him to show that he, on his part, had acted in good faith and had not defiantly ignored the order of that Court. A pre-emptor is given a very special and peculiar right which overrides the ordinary rights of contract, and if he asks the Court to give effect to that right, he must be careful to see that he complies, compatibly with his honest pleas, with the decree which the Court grants him. He may well believe that the Court, which passed the decree in his favour, has erred in estimating too highly the value of the property and he is, of course, at liberty to contest that estimate by appeal. But he must recognize that the Appellate Court will not as of right grant him an extension of time within which to pay any further sum which that Court finds to be justly payable by him, and if in point of fact he has paid no money into Court or has made no tender of a sum to the Court, or if the sum he has paid or tendered is unreasonably small, he cannot expect to be granted an extension of time. We make these remarks more for the guidance of litigants and their legal advisers in the future than for the purposes of the case now before us, as in this case we must dismiss plaintiff's suit upon the preliminary ground that he has not established his alleged right to claim pre-emption. We now proceed to discuss this latter point and to give the grounds upon which we decide against plaintiff.

Chak No. 224 is a village which lies just outside the town of Lyallpur. It was founded in 1893 when Government made yeomen grants of five squares of land to each of fifteen sufedposhes, all of whom belonged to separate districts and were (with the exception of two grantees who were brothers) in no way related to each other. Each grantee was, as regards the squares allotted to him, entirely separate from his neighbour and with his abadi land no one else in the Chak had any concern. There was no shamilat, or common land, nor was the responsibility for the payment of land revenue joint as well as several. On the other hand, the Revenue Authorities, obviously for the easier collection of land revenue and for their own purposes, divided the Chak into three pattis and appointed a lambardar for each patti, each lambardar being responsible for the due payment of land revenue by the various grantees who were allotted to him. A jamabandi and Settlement Record were prepared and the tenure was declared to be bhayachara. But there was no territorial division of the village into ring-fences, and plots belonging to the various pattis appear to be intermixed. In these circumstances we have no doubt that Government and its officers had no intention that the law of pre-emption should prevail in a Chak thus constituted, and we find from Notification No. 771 of the Local Government, dated 6th December 1910, that it has now been definitely declared that that law is not to obtain in any area to which (as here) the Government Tenants' Act, 1893, has been made applicable. We refer to this fact not as having any direct bearing upon the question before us, as the present suit was instituted long before the publication of the Notification in question, but as showing that Government, which really created this and similar "estates", does not regard them as villages of the ordinary kind in this Province. Mr. Ralli relies strongly upon the ruling of this Court reported as Bhagat Hira Nand v. Lal Khan (2), which is to the effect that if in point of fact there is a recognized sub-division of a village, such sub-division must be accepted as such for the purposes of the pre-emption law irrespective of any question of principle. It must be remembered, however, that that decision was given before the foundation of the numerous thriving colonies which have since sprung up and had reference to the constitution of the old type of Punjab village. But even so, we may with all deference venture to doubt the correctness of the proposition laid down in such general and unqualified terms, and we do so with the greater confidence because we find that later authorities take a very different view and place a far more limited construction upon the words "patti or other sub-division" of the estate. Thus in Sher Singh v. Maluk Singh (3) a Division Bench held that "there must be some one or more well-defined attributes to justify treatment of a section of the village as a sub-division, such, for instance, as homogeneity of area or descent of the proprietors, and in determining the point, the first thing to be looked to is the history of the village so far as it can be ascertained from the Settlement Record." In the case before us, it is obvious that there is no "homogeneity of area or descent of the proprietors," as the estate was founded so recently as 1893 by the grant from Government of distinct plots of five squares each to fifteen persons who, with the one exception above-mentioned, had no connection with each other.

(2) 169 P. R. 1889.

Then again, in Bija v. Bishan Singh (4) another Division Bench drew a marked distinction between a sub-division properly so called and a nominal distribution of proprietors for convenience in collecting revenue or similar purposes, and held that a "patti" created for the latter purpose could not be regarded as a sub-division for the purposes of the law of pre-emption. In the case before us, it was clearly for "convenience in collecting revenue" and for no other purpose that the Revenue Authorities nominally distributed the properties of Chak No. 224 into three "pattis", each under a lambardar who was to be responsible for the payment of such revenue by the proprietors within his "patti."

The law of pre-emption as applicable to village communities was intended, primarily at all events, to protect the village against the intrusion of strangers, who might otherwise obtain a footing in it contrary to the wishes of the community who were bound to each other by ties of descent, and would resent the advent of an intruder. This principle can obviously have no application when the village is of but recent foundation and is composed of individuals whose sole connection inter se is that each has been selected by Government as a person to whom a grant of land might fitly be made.

Both upon principle and authority, therefore, we must hold that plaintiff has no right to pre-empt the land in suit, as the so-called "sub-division" of the Chak into three pattis, which was made merely for fiscal purposes and in no way represents homogeneity of area or descent of the proprietors, does not constitute a true sub-division of the Chak within the meaning and for the purposes of section 12 (c) "secondly" of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1905.

We accordingly accept defendant-vendee's appeal (No. 117 of 1911) and rejecting plaintiff's appeal, we dismiss his suit with costs. Pleader's fee in each appeal we fix at Rs. 100.

Appeal dismissed.

(3) 142 P. L. R. 1905.
(4) 45 P. R. 1897.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 665 OF 1912.
(WITH 87 OTHER APPEALS NOS. 3394 TO 3426, 2506 AND 2532 TO 2582 OF 1911 AND 1804 AND 1900 OF 1911 ANALOGOUS TO IT AGAINST THE SAME RESPONDENT.)

February 12, 1914.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, Kt., and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

KALIKANANDA MUKHERJEE—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

BIPRO DAS PAL CHOUDHURI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Putni Regulation (VIII of 1819), s 11—Putni Taluk, purchaser of, rights of—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 121—Encumbrance, meaning of—Suit to annul encumbrance—Adverse possession, when encumbrance—"Court may presume possession to follow title," applicability of—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss 159, 161, 167, 195 (c)—Encumbrance, suit to annul—Conditions to be fulfilled.

A purchaser of a putni taluk at a sale held under Regulation VIII of 1819 takes the taluk in the state in which it was initially created, that is to say, the purchaser takes the property not free merely of all incumbrances that may have accrued upon the tenure by act of the defaulting proprietor, his representatives or assignees, but also free of the interest acquired by an adverse possession which commenced after the creation of the putni.

Therefore, if a plaintiff relies upon Article 121 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, 1877, he has to establish that the encumbrance which he seeks to annul is due to adverse possession which commenced after the creation of the putni.

Naffer Chandra Pal Chowdhury v. Rajendra Lal Goswami, 25 C. 167, followed.

Umesh Chunder Gupto v. Raj Narain Roy, 10 W. R. 15; Khantomoni Dasi v. Bijoy Chand Mahatap, 19 C. 787 and Karmi Khan v. Brojo Nath, 22 C. 244, referred to.

The doctrine "that the Court may presume possession to follow title", however valuable in deciding questions of limitation in cases of conflicting evidence as to possession on both sides, can have no application in a case where the plaintiff has to establish possession at a particular point of time.

KALIKANANDA MUKHERJEE v. BIPRO DAS PAL CHOUDHURY.

Runjeet Ram Panday v. Goberdhun Ram Panday 20 W. R. 25 at p. 29; Mohima Chunder Mozumdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neogi, 16 I A. 23; 16 C. 473 (P. C.), followed.

Bibi Sahodra v. Rai Jang Bahadur, 8 I. A. 210; 8 C. 224; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 294; 6 Ind. Jur. 108; Jafar Husain v. Mashuq Ali, 14 A. 193; A. W. N. (1892) 55; Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chundar Neogi, 16 I. A. 23; 16 C. 473; Rani Hemanta Kumari v. Jagadindra, 10 C. W. N. 630; 3 A. L. J. 363; 8 Bom. L. R. 400; 1 M. L. T. 135; 16 M. L. J. 272 (P. C.), referred to.

Where in an ejectment suit by the purchaser of a putni taluk the purchaser does not establish that the possession of the defendants commenced after the creation of the putni or that the proprietor of the estate was in possession at the time when the putni was granted, the interest of the defendants cannot be said to be an incumbrance within the meaning of Article 121 of the Limitation Act, 1877, or within the meaning of section 11, clause (1), of Regulation VIII of 1819 and the purchaser is not entitled to a decree of ejectment.

Attorney-General v. Emerson, (1891) App. Cas. 649; 61 L. J. Q. B. 79; 65 L.T. 564; 55 J. P. 709; Malcolmson v. O'Dea, (1862) 10 H. L. C 593; 9 Jur. (N. S.) 1135; 9 L. T. 93; 12 W. R. 178; 11 E. R. 1155; 138 R. R. 317; Bristow v. Cormican, (1878) 3 App. Cas. 641 at p. 668 and Blandy Jenkins v. Earl of Dunroven, (1899) 2 Ch. 121; 68 L J. Ch. 589; 81 L. T. 209, referred to.

Under the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, also the word incumbrance in sections 159, 161 (a) includes a statutory title acquired by a trespasser in adverse possession of the land of the defaulting tenure, provided such act of possession commenced after the tenure had been created.

Gokul Bagdi v. Debendra Sen, 11 Ind. Cas. 435; 14 C. L. J. 136 and Arsadullah v. Munseb Ali, 14 Ind. Cas. 349; 16 C. L. J. 539; 16 C. W. N. 831, relied on.

The restriction mentioned in section 195 (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not touch the question of the applicability of section 167 to the lands in suit.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nadia, dated 2nd June 1911, reversing that of the Munsif, first Court, at Krishnagar, dated 28th August 1908.

Mr. S. P. Sinha (with him Babus Jogendra Nath Mukherjee, Harakumar Mitra and Sarat Chandra Khan, for the Appellants.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh (with him Babu Amarchandra Nath Bose), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These eighty-eight appeals arise out of as many suits for declaration of title to immoveable property and for recovery of possession thereof. The case for the plaintiff-respondent may be briefly stated. He alleges that in 1799 an estate was created from which a putni tenure was carved out later on on some date not known, but the putni was sold in 1807, and the purchaser, Romesh Chandra Mukerjee, on the 26th June 1807 gave a kabuliat to the zemindar, Moharaj Tej Chandra. In execution of a decree for arrears of rent obtained by the proprietor against the putnidars, the tenure was sold under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act on the 28th November 1899, and passed into the hands of the plaintiff. The plaintiff asserts that the defendants in the various suits are in possession of different parcels of land within the ambit of the putni taluk purchased by him and that they have no right to continue in occupation. He accordingly prays that his title by his purchase may be declared and that the defendants may be ejected as trespassers. According to the plaintiff the cause of action in each of these suits arose on the 28th November 1899, the date of the auction purchase, and no question of limitation could arise as the suits have been instituted within twelve years from the date of such purchase. The defendants resist the claim on the ground, amongst others, that they hold under rent-free grants and that in any event the claim of the plaintiff is barred by limitation. Their case in substance is that they have been in possession of these lands from the time of their predecessors and that their possession can be traced back to at least 1790, long before the creation of the putni as also the formation of the permanently settled estate out of which the putni was carved. The District Judge has found in favour of the plaintiff, that the defendants have failed to establish their rent-free tenure and that the suits are not barred by limitation, inasmuch as they have been commenced within twelve years of the date when the sale became final and conclusive within the meaning of Article 121 of the second Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. On behalf of the defendants-appellants the decision of the District Judge has been assailed on the merits and the view taken by him upon the question of limitation has been attacked as obviously unsound. It is not necessary for our present purpose to examine the merits of the cases, because we have arrived at the conclusion that the suits are barred by limitation.

The District Judge has held that Article 121 of the second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act is applicable to the cases. That Article provides that suits to avoid incrumbances in a putni taluk sold for arrears of rent must be commenced within 12 years from the date when the sale becomes final and conclusive. We shall for the purposes of the present argument, and for that purpose alone, assume that Article 121 applies to a case in which a suit has been instituted by purchaser of a putni taluk at a sale held under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The question on this assumption arises, whether the suits before us are suits to avoid encumbrances in a putni taluk. The District Judge has held on the authority of the decision in Naffer Chandra Pal Chowdhry v. Rajendra Lal Goswami (1) that Article 121 is applicable. That decision formulates the proposition that the interest acquired by an adverse possessor of land included in a putni taluk is an incumbrance within the meaning of Article 121 of the second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act. This view is in accord with the principle recognised in the cases of Umesh Chunder Gupto v. Raj Narain Roy (2); Khantomoni Dasi v. Beioy Chand Mahatap (3) and Karmi Khan v. Brojo Nath Dass (4). It is very material to observe, however, that the adverse possession contemplated in these cases is possession which commenced after the creation of the putni tenure. These cases are founded on the principle laid down in section 11 of Regulation VIII of 1819. The first clause of that section declares that any taluk or saleable tenure that may be disposed of at a public sale under the rules of the Regulation for arrears of rent due on account of it, is sold free of all incumbrances that may have accrued upon it by act of the defaulting proprietor, his representatives or assignees, unless the right of making such incumbrances shall have been expressly vested in the holder by stipulation to that effect in the written engagements under which the said taluk may have been held. No transfer by sale, gift or otherwise, no mortgage or other limited assignment is permitted to bar the indefeasible right of the zemindar to hold the tenure of his creation answerable in the state in which he created it for the rent, which is in fact his reserved property in the tenure, except the transfer or assignment should have been made with a condition to that effect under expressed authority obtained from such zemindar. The principle consequently is that the purchaser of a putni taluk at a sale held under Regulation VIII of 1819 takes the taluk in the state in which it was initially created, and the judicial decisions to which we have already referred lay down the doctrine that the purchaser takes the property not free merely of all incumbrances that may have accrued upon the tenure by act of the defaulting proprietor, his representatives or assignees but also free of the interest acquired by an adverse possessor who has been able to acquire such interest by the inaction of the defaulting proprietor. This doctrine is plainly limited in its application to cases where the adverse possession commenced after the creation of the putni. In a case in which the proprietor of the estate is out of possession, he cannot merely by the device of the creation of a subordinate taluk avert the effect of the adverse possession which has already commenced to run against him, and such possession would be effective not only as against the subordinate tenure-holder but also as against the superior proprietor. Consequently if a plaintiff relies upon Article 121 of the second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, he has to establish that the incumbrance which he seeks to annul is due to adverse possession which commenced after the creation of the putni. The District Judge has not found that in the cases before us the adverse possession of the defendants and their predecessors commenced after the creation of the putni. On the other hand, there is ample evidence that the adverse possession of the defendants and their predecessors commenced before the creation of the putni. There are traces on the record to show that there had been assertions of hostile title before the putni itself was created. On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent, however, it has been suggested that there is some evidence of ancient possession of the disputed land by the proprietor of the estate. But before we deal with the evidence to which allusion has been made in the course of argument, it may be pointed out that the plaintiff, before he can succeed, must prove that the proprietor was in possession when the putni was created. In order to establish that the proprietor was in possession at that time, it has been argued that we should presume that possession follows title. In our opinion, that doctrine has no application to a case of this description. No doubt it was pointed out by their Lordships of the

(1) 25 C. 167.
(2) 10 W. R. 15.
(3) 19 C. 787.
(4) 22 C. 244.

Judicial Committee in the case of Runjeet Ram Panday v. Goberdhun Ram Panday (5) that in the decision of the question of limitation, if there is conflicting evidence on both sides, the Court may presume that possession was with the party whose title has been established. But it does not follow that when the plaintiff has to establish possession at a particular point of time, he is entitled to call upon the Court to presume that because his title has been established, possession must be presumed to have been with the holder of the title at that specific period of time. This contention, indeed, is clearly opposed to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Mohima Chunder Mozumdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neogi (6), where their Lordships pointed out that it is not enough for the plaintiff in an action in ejectment to establish his title or his possession at some remote time, but that it is essential for him to prove that he was in possession within twelve years antecedent to the suit. To the same effect are the decisions in Musammat Bibi Sahodra v. Rai Jang Bahadur (7); Jafar Hasain v. Mashuq Ali (8); Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neogi (9); Rani Hemanta Kumari v. Jagadindra (10). We have next been asked to hold that the grant of the putni tenure itself is evidence of possession and in support of this argument we have been asked to consider the terms of the putni kabuliat. Our attention has also been invited to the cases of Attorney-General v. Emerson (11); Malcolmson v. O'Dea (12); Bristow v. Cormican (13) and Blandy Jenkins v. Earl of Dunroven (14) to show that ancient documents produced from proper custody and by which any right to property purports to have been exercised are admissible even in favour of the grantor or his successors in proof of possession. This doctrine is justified on the principle that documents of this character may rightly be treated as presumptive evidence of possession, because ancient possession is incapable of direct proof by witnesses and such documents are themselves acts of ownership, real transactions between man and man, intelligible upon the footing of title or at least of a bona fide belief in title, since in the ordinary course of things men do not execute such documents without acting upon them. This principle plainly has no application to the circumstances of the present cases. An examination of the putni kabuliat does not show that there is any assertion that the grantor of the putni at the time was in possession of every parcel of land comprised within the boundaries of the putni, nor is there any allegation in the document that the grantee of the taluk obtained actual possession of every piece of land within the tenure granted to him. It has finally been argued that the thak map of 1852 is evidence of possession, and that witnesses have been called to speak to possession of two villages by a lessee from the putnidar. The evidence, however, is of the vaguest description and does not show that the putnidar or the owner of the estate was in actual possession of any particular parcel of land now in dispute. In these circumstances we are of opinion that the plaintiff has not established that the possession of the defendants commenced after the creation of the putni or that the proprietor of the estate was in possession at the time when the putni was granted. Consequently the interest acquired by the defendants cannot be deemed to be an incumbrance within the meaning of Article 121; nor is it an incumbrance within the meaning of the first clause of section 11 of Regulation VIII of 1819. In this view, the decrees made by the District Judge cannot be supported.

It is clear, however, that the case as made in the plaint is based on an entirely erroneous assumption. The plaintiff has come into Court on the allegation that his cause of action arose on the 20th November 1899 when he purchased the property at a sale held under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This statement was material for the purposes of the case, because under section 50, clause (d), of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to embody in his plaint a plain and concise statement of the circumstances constituting the cause of action and where and when it

(5) 20 W. R. 25 at p. 29.
(6) 16 I A. 23; 16 C. 473 (P. C.).
(7) 8 I. A. 210; 8 C. 224; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 294; 6 Ind. Jur. 108.
(8) 14 A. 193 ;A. W. N. (1892) 55.
(9) 16 I. A. 23; 16 C. 473.
(10) 10 C. W N 630; 3 A L. J. 363; 8 Bom. L. R. 400; 1 M. L. T. 135; 16 M L J. 272 (P. C.)
(11) (1891) App. Cas. 649; 61 L. J. Q. B. 79; 65 L. T. 564; 55 J. P. 709.
(12) (1862) 10 H. L. C. 593; 9 Jur. (N. S.) 1135; 9 L. T. 93; 12 W. R. 178; 11 E R 1155; 138 R. R. 3.7.
(13). (1878) 3 App. Cas. 641 at p. 668.
(14) (1899) 2 Ch, 121; 68 L. J, Ch. 589; 81 L. T. 209.

arose. It was further his duty if the cause of action arose beyond the period ordinarily allowed by any law for instituting the suit, to show in his plaint the ground upon which exemption from such law was claimed. In the cases before us the defendants have been unquestionably in possession for more than 12 years antecedent to the suit. The plaintiff, therefore, had to make out an affirmative case to take his suit out of the Statute of Limitation, and he based his case on the ground that the cause of action arose on the 20th November 1899, on the assumption that Article 121 of the second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act was applicable. But it cannot be disputed that the cause of action did not arise on the 20th November 1899. The plaintiff made his purchase at a sale held in execution of a rent decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act. Under section 159 of the Bengal Tenancy Act he made his purchase with power to annul the interests defined as incumbrances in section 161. Clause (a) of that section lays down that the term encumbrance, used with reference to a tenancy, means any lien, sub-tenancy, easement or other right or interest created by the tenant on his tenure or holding or in limitation of his own interest therein and not being a protected interest as defined in section 160. With reference to the use of the term incumbrance in this section, it was held in the cases of Gokul Bagdi v. Debendra Nath Sen (15) and Arsadullah v. Museb Ali (16) that incumbrance includes a statutory title acquired by a trespasser by adverse possession of the land of the defaulting tenure, provided such act of possession commenced after the tenure had been created. It was further held that such incumbrance cannot be annulled in any manner other than that provided in section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Consequently upon the facts of these cases, it is clear that before the plaintiff can succeed he must establish that the interests acquired by the defendants by adverse possession constitute an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and are capable of annulment in the manner provided in section 167. The difficulty of the plaintiff, if this view of the matter be adopted, is that he has not established that the adverse possession of the defendants and their predecessors commenced after the creation of the putni taluk. But even if he had succeeded in establishing that such adverse possession commenced after the creation of the putni taluk, before he would succeed he would have to prove that under sub-section (1) of section 167 he had annulled the incumbrances by service of notice within one year from the date of the sale or the date on which he first had notice of the incumbrances. In the plaint it was stated that notices had been served as contemplated by sub-section (1) of section 167 on the 5th October 1907. But the plaintiff asserted that such service of notice was unnecessary and the Courts below did not investigate whether the notices were actually served, and, if served, whether they were served within one year from the date on which the plaintiff first had notice of the incumbrances. It is not disputed that the notices, which are alleged to have been served on the 5th October 1907, were not served, if served at all, within one year from the date of the sale, which took place, as already stated, on the 20th November 1899. If, therefore, the interests of the defendants constituted an incumbrance, the plaintiff would have to establish that he had notice of the incumbrance within one year prior to the 5th October 1907. The Courts below have not found that the plaintiff had first notice of the interests of the defendants within one year prior to the 5th October 1907. On the other hand, it is extremely improbable, to say the least, that when so many persons in so many suits were in open and peaceable occupation of so many parcels of land, that the plaintiff should not have discovered till after 5th October 1906, that is, nearly seven years after he has purchased the putni at the execution sale, that the defendants claimed to hold under an adverse title. The slightest inquiry such as a prudent owner would in ordinary course have made, would have disclosed that the occupants of the lands claimed to hold them without payment of rent to the proprietor or his representatives. Consequently if the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act are applied, as they must be applied, the position of the plaintiff becomes even more difficult than it is if reliance is placed only upon Article 121 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act, on the groundless assumption that the sale took place under the provisions of the putni

(15) 11 Ind. Cas. 435; 14 C. L. J. 136.

(16) 14 Ind. Cas. 349; 16 C. L. J. 539; 16 C. W. N. 831.

Regulation. We may add that the restriction mentioned in section 195, clause (c), of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not touch the question of the applicability of section 167 to the lands in suit.

The result is that these appeals must be allowed, the decrees of the District Judge set aside and the suits dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Appeals allowed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 39 OF 1912.

December 17, 1913.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shah Din and Mr. Justice Beadon.

GOBINDA MAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

SANTA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VII, r 6 —Suit instituted beyond period of limitation - Plaint silent on ground of exemption from law of limitation—Plaintiff, whether can rely on such ground—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 14.

Under Order VII, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiffs are bound to show in the plaint the ground on which exemption from the law of limitation is claimed and they cannot be allowed to rely upon a ground upon which the plaint is wholly silent.

The proceedings in a Revenue Court do not fall within the purview of section 14 of the Limitation Act so as to extend the period of limitation for a suit.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Ferozepore Division, dated the 10th October 1911, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, first Class, Ferozepore, dated the 22nd May 1911, decreeing the claim.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for the Appellants.

Mr. Brij Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants for possession as mortgagees of 768 kanals 11¼ marlas of land, situate in Mauza Ghulla, which was mortgaged to them by the defendant-respondent by a registered deed, dated the 23rd September 1898, for Rs. 1,200. According to the mortgage-deed, possession was given to the mortgagees who were to cultivate the land, or get it cultivated, and to pay the land revenue thereof. The suit was instituted on the 15th February 1911, and the defendant pleaded, inter alia, that it was barred by limitation. One of the issues framed by the first Court was as to whether the suit was within time, and in connection with that issue the plaintiffs relied on section 14 of the Limitation Act in support of their contention that they were entitled to deduct the time spent by them in prosecuting a suit in a Revenue Court for the ejectment of the defendant. In the plaint reference was made to the litigation in the Revenue Court prior to the institution of the present suit, though it was not alleged in so many words that the time covered by that litigation should be deducted in computing the period of limitation applicable to this suit.

The first Court held that section 14 of the Limitation Act was applicable to the case and after considering certain other matters relating to the merits of the claim, with which we are not now concerned, it decreed the suit. On appeal the learned Divisional Judge held that section 14 aforesaid was wholly inapplicable, and further, with reference to the contention advanced before him for the first time by the plaintiffs' Counsel that by reason of an acknowledgment of liability made by the defendant in March 1899 limitation was saved under section 19 of the Limitation Act, the learned Judge decided that the said section had no application to the alleged acknowledgment. He, therefore, accepted the appeal and dismissed plaintiffs' suit.

In further appeal before us the appellants' Counsel has frankly admitted that he cannot rely upon section 14 of the Limitation Act as the litigation in the Revenue Court, which is referred to in the plaint, does not fall within the purview of that section. He has, however, urged that the decision of the Divisional Judge that section 19 of the Limitation Act is not applicable to the statement of the defendant, dated the 18th March 1899, is incorrect and that the acknowledgment of liability by the defendant as contained in the said statement saves the suit from being barred by time. Now, the suit as laid in the plaint was prima facie barred by limitation, and under Order VII, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiffs were bound to show in the plaint the ground upon which exemption from the law of limitation was claimed. In the plaint they simply referred to the previous litigation between the parties in the Revenue Court with the object of showing that they relied upon section 14 of the Limitation Act (though they did not mention the section in the plaint) to claim exemption from the operation of Article 135 of the Act. There is no reference in the plaint at all to the alleged acknowledgment of liability by the defendant so as to make section 19 of the Limitation Act applicable to the case; and, in our opinion, the plaintiffs cannot now be alleged to rely upon a ground of exemption from the law of limitation upon which the plaint is wholly silent. We are fortified in our opinion by the decision in Jogeshwar Roy v. Raj Narain Mitter (1), in fact the case before us is stronger than the Calcutta case, for whereas in the Calcutta case there was a reference in the plaint to a certain alleged acknowledgment of liability by defendant which, however, was different from the acknowledgment which was subsequently relied upon under section 19 of the Limitation Act, in the present case the plaint does not even remotely suggest that any acknowledgment of whatever description had been made by defendant so as to make section 19 of the Act applicable. We have no hesitation in following the principle underlying the Calcutta case; and we hold that it was not open to the plaintiffs, in the circumstances of the particular case, to rely upon the alleged acknowledgment of liability by the defendant as a ground of exemption from the law of limitation applicable to their claim. The decision of the Bombay High Court in Yakub Ebrahim Sayani v. Bai Rahimabai (2), on which the plaintiffs' Counsel has relied, is clearly distinguishable from this case and it, therefore, does not help them.

KARAGA v. DEVAPPA.

For the reasons given, we hold that the plaintiffs' suit was barred by limitation, and accordingly we maintain the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 31 C. 195; 8 C. W. N. 168.
(2) 19 Bom. L. R. 346.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 527 OF 1913

September 9, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

KARAGA alais THIMNAPPA MELONTA PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

DEVAPPA alias CHEMNAYYA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Injunction—Religious office, transfer of—Land attached to office transferred, whether right to office also transferred—Injunction, whether allowable.

A religious office cannot be transferred by purchase and, therefore, a purchaser of the land attached to the office as emoluments, acquires no right to the office and is not entitled to an injunction to protect his possession of it.

Rajah Varmah Valia v. Ravi Varmah Kunhi Kutti, 1 M. 235; 4 I. A. 76; 1 Ind. Jur. 134; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 687; 3 Suth. P. C. J. 382; Narasimma Thatha v. Anantha Bhatta, 4 M. 391, Kuppa v. Dorasami, 6 M. 76; 7 Ind. Jur. 75; Lakshmanaswami Naidu v. Rangamma, 26 M. 31, followed.

Rajaram v. Ganesh, 23 B. 131, referred to.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 20 of 1911, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Mangalore, in Original Suit No. 115 of 1909.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rau, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Sundara Rau, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for an injunction in respect of a religious office, alleging that he held it in virtue of his ownership of certain land. Here it is admitted that he acquired the land by purchase.

The first ground of appeal argued, and the only one with which we need deal, is that a religious office cannot be transferred by purchase and that therefore plaintiff could have acquired no right to this office by that means, and having no right to it he is not entitled to an injunction to protect his possession of it. This is supported by reference to Rajah Varmah Valia v. Ravi Varmah Kunhi Kutti (1); Narasimma Thatha Acharya v. Anantha Bhatta (2); Kuppa v. Dorasami (3) and Lakshmanaswami Naidu v. Rangamma (4). Contra, the plaintiff on the recognition, in the decision first mentioned at

(1) 1 M. 235; 4 I. A. 76; 1 Ind. Jur. 134; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 687; 3 Suth. P. C. J. 382.
(2) 4 M. 391.
(3) 6 M. 76; 7 Ind. Jur. 75.
(4) 26 M. 31.

page 250, of the possibility of proof of the custom of the particular institution as authorising sales contends that the conclusion at page 252 is that a custom for sale, as distinguished from gratuitous transfer, would be bad and is consistent with the other decisions referred to. Reference has also been made by plaintiff to Rajaram v. Ganesh (5). But there the Court statedly refused to apply strictly the principle which it referred to as prevailing in this Presidency. In these circumstances we follow the current of Madras authority and dissent from the lower Appellate Court's conclusion.

Plaintiff then contends that his purchase was of the land, not of the office. As he claims the latter as inseparable from the former, we cannot follow this distinction.

An attempt has been made to argue that plaintiff can succeed on his title by prescriptive enjoyment. If such a case could be made out with reference to an office of this description, it is sufficient that it was not relied on in the lower Courts and cannot be put forward here for the first time.

The second appeal is allowed, the lower Appellate Court's decision being set aside and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

(5) 23 B. 131.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1990 OF 1913.

November 3, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Hannay.

MANI AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

KOMALAN KANNAN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 153, O. VI, r. 17—Suit to declare mortgage-deed invalid—Mortgage found to be partly valid—Plaintiff, whether entitled to amend relief for redemption.

Where, in a suit by the junior member of a tarwad to declare a mortgage created by the karnavathi invalid and not binding upon the junior members of the tarwad, a portion of the consideration for the mortgage is found to be binding upon the family, the plaintiff should be allowed to amend his plaint by adding a relief for redemption on payment of the valid portion of the mortgage-debt.

Limba bin Krishna v. Rama bin Pimplu, 13 B. 548 and Abdul Kadar v. Mahomed, 15 M. 15, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 445 of 1911, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Kasargod, in Original Suit No. 596 of 1910.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs are the junior members of a tarwad of which the 1st defendant was the karnavathi. On 24th November 1907 the first defendant created a mortgage of the family properties for a period of 30 years for a sum of Rs. 800, of which Rs. 400 was the amount due under a previous mortgage executed on 21st March 1894; the rest was for money due to the 2nd defendant for moneys borrowed from time to time. The plaintiffs bring the present suit to declare that the latter mortgage was not binding on them, on the ground that they were not created for family necessity. The plaintiffs, however, admitted that the previous mortgage for the sum of Rs. 400 was binding upon the family, and bring the suit to declare that the whole mortgage is not binding upon them. The District Munsif found that the mortgage was not binding upon the family and gave the declaration prayed for. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff having admitted that the mortgage for Rs. 400 was binding upon them, the defendants are entitled to retain the lands themselves until that mortgage is redeemed by plaintiffs, and that so long as that is not redeemed, the defendants are entitled to resist any suit brought by plaintiffs, even if it be for mere declaration. He accordingly reversed the decree and dismissed the suit. The present appeal is against that decree.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellants.

Messrs. K. P. Madhava Rao and K. P. Lakshmana Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Following Limba bin Krishna v. Rama bin Pimplu(1) [which is approved of in Abdul Kadar v. Mahomed(2)] and the principles embodied in section 153 of the Civil Procedure Code and Order VI, rule 17, we hold that the lower Appellate Court ought to have given an opportunity to the plaintiffs to amend their plaint by adding or substituting a prayer for redemption of items 1 and 2. The decrees of the lower Courts are set aside, and the case is remanded to the District Munsif to allow the plaintiffs an opportunity to so amend the plaint within four weeks of the receipt of records by that Court and then to re-try the suit as amended. If the plaint is not amended within the time allowed (or within the extended time, if any, allowed by the District Munsif), it will stand dismissed with costs. In any event, the plaintiffs will pay to the defendant his costs incurred by him in the Subordinate Court and in this Court up to this day and bear their own costs in these two Courts.

(1) 13 B. 548.
(2) 15 M. 15.

Appeal allowed: Suit remanded.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 146 OF 1913.

July 8, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Beaman and Mr. Justice Heaton.

SUNDRA BAHU SHETYE—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

SAKHARAM GOPALSHET GANDHI—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11 - Matter substantially in issue in both suits same—Plaintiff not adequately represented in former suit, whether barred—Pro forma defendant in former suit, whether can sue for same matter.

Section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code does not bar a suit only on the ground of the matter in suit having been substantially in issue in a previous suit, if the plaintiffs in the second suit were minors at the time of the first and were not adequately represented or if the plaintiff was a pro forma defendant in the first suit and took no active part in that suit.

First appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge of Ratnagiri, in Civil Suit No. 128 of 1912.

Mr. V. R. Sirur, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, three in number, in this suit are seeking to obtain property from the defendant-appellant, grand-daughter of one Tukaram, on the ground that Tukaram and their ancestors were joint. The only question which we have to answer here is, whether the matter in issue is res judicata by reason of the decision in a suit of 1909, in which the present plaintiff No. 1 was defendant No. 4 and the father of the present plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 was plaintiff. Doubtless we should have been glad to hold that the matter was res judicata, although the position occupied by plaintiff No. 1 in that suit might have occasioned some difficulty, for there can be no doubt but that the matter substantially in issue here was substantially in issue there and was decided against the father of the present plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3. Unfortunately plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 were not made parties to that suit. Still the matter might have been res judicata against them under the principle, and, we think, also the words of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, which has recently been interpreted in this sense by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Raja Rampal Singh v. Ram Ghulam Singh (1), had it not been for a very important circumstance which distinguishes this case from cases falling in that general class. Here the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 were minors at the time of the suit of 1909, and the finding of the learned Judge who tried that suit shows conclusively that the father of these minors did not adequately represent them. He comments most adversely upon the manner in which the suit was conducted before him and makes the conduct of these plaintiffs' father the ground of saddling the defendants in spite of their success with their own costs. In these circumstances we feel that it would be impossible to say that these minors, who were not parties to that suit and are judicially declared not to have been adequately represented at the trial, are bound by its result. They are, therefore, at liberty to proceed with the present litigation, and since plaintiff No. 1 was no more than a pro forma defendant in the former suit and appears to have taken no active part in it, and the decree, speaking generally, appears to have been in his favour as one of the defendants, we feel some doubt in holding that he is bound by the result either, to the extent of being precluded from prosecuting this litigation. We must, therefore, confirm the decree of the Court below upon this preliminary point and remand the case to be dealt with upon the merits. Costs costs in the cause.

Decree confirmed.

(1) 32 I. A. 17; 1 C. L. J. 46; 27 A. 37; 2 A. L. J. 237 (P. C.).

RAS BEHARI LAL v. AKHAI KUNWAR.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1250 OF 1913.
November 20, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Chamier and Mr. Justice Piggott.
RAS BEHARI LAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
AKHAI KUNWAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Easements Act (V of 1882), ss. 59, 60—License—Revocation—Transferee of licensor, right of.

The transferee of a licensor cannot revoke the license where the licensee acting upon the license has executed a work of a permanent character and incurred expenses in the execution

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Ghazipur, dated 20th August 1913.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Supru (with him Mr. Purushottam Das), for the Appellant.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are that in the year 1888 one Jhingur Singh made over to the first defendant, in consideration of medical services rendered by him, some plots of land in a village. The defendant entered into possession, planted a garden and built houses on the land laying out a considerable sum of money thereon. In 1906 Jhingur Singh sold his rights in the village to the plaintiff-appellant, who at once set to work to compel the first defendant to pay rent for the land. All his attempts in the Revenue Court failed and he then brought this suit praying for proprietary possession of the land and for mesne profits for the three years immediately preceding the suit. The defence was that the plots in question were given by the zemindar to the defendant in recognition of his medical services, that the defendant had spent a large sum of money on the land and that the plaintiff had no right to dispossess him. The Courts below have agreed in dismissing the plaintiff's claim. In second appeal it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that in the absence of a registered document, the defendant is no more than a licensee and that the plaintiff being a transferee of the property is entitled to revoke the license. Reliance is placed on section 59 of the Easements Act, which runs as follows:—

"When the grantor of a license transfers the property affected thereby the transferee is not as such bound by the license."

The defendant, on the other hand, relies on section 60 of the Act which so far as it applies to the present case, is as follows:—

"A license may be revoked by the grantor, unless the licensee, acting upon the license, has executed a work of a permanent character and incurred expenses in the execution." The plaintiff admits that on the facts found the case is clearly covered by section 60 of the Act, but he maintains that section 59 lays down an independent rule, which entitles a transferee of property to revoke a license even if the licensee acting upon the license has executed a work of a permanent character and incurred expenses in the execution, that is to say, even if the license could not have been revoked by the original grantor. It seems to us that the words "as such" in section 59 are extremely significant and would not have appeared in the section if the intention had been to lay down an independent rule that a transferee of property might revoke a license which conld not have been revoked by the transferor. The section was probably inserted in order to meet the possibility of a plea by the licensee of property that no one but the grantor of a license is entitled to revoke it, and that if the grantor does not choose to revoke it his transferee cannot do so. In our opinion section 59 means that when the grantor of a license transfers the property, the transferee is no more bound by the license than the transferor was and, we think, it is impossible to construe this section as meaning that the transferee has a better right than the transferor. For these reasons we are of opinion that section 59 of the Easements Act does not entitle the plaintiff to revoke the license granted to the defendant even if he is only a licensee. We need only add that the plaintiff's claim against the defendant as a trespasser is clearly not maintainable. The suit was rightly dismissed and we dismiss this appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

ABDUL HAQ v. DATTI LAL.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1568 OF 1913.

December 3, 1914.

Present: —Mr. Justice Chamier and Mr. Justice Piggott.

ABDUL HAQ AND ANOTHER - DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

DATTI LAL AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s 108 (f)—Lease—Occupiers of houses in abadi qassaban in Mohalla Atala, village Atarsuiya, Allahabad—Transfer of house, right of.

The rights of an occupier of a house in abadi qassaban, in Mohalla Atala, village Atarsuiya, in Allahabad are those of a lessee holding under a building lease, and as such are transferable.

Second appeal from the decision of the Judge of Small Cause Court, Allahabad, dated 30th June 1913.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor, with him Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—In this case the plaintiffs are the proprietors of a mahal in village Atarsuiya situated on the outskirts of the city of Allahabad. The second defendant, being the owner of a house situated in the plaintiffs' mahal, has executed a deed of sale transferring the same to the first defendant. In the suit as originally framed the plaintiffs simply claimed one-fourth of the sale price on the basis of their alleged customary rights as proprietors of the soil. The plaint was subsequently amended so as to claim another relief in the alternative. This was that the defendants should be ordered to remove the materials of the house within a time to be fixed by the Court and that the plaintiffs should thereupon "be put in proprietary possession of the site in question together with the kacha built walls." I think it worth while to lay stress at the outset on two points regarding the frame of the plaint. One is that the second relief is claimed only in the alternative, in case the first relief be not granted. The other is that the second defendant is described as "resident of Mohalla Atala, Allahabad city." The defendants filed a joint written statement. They put their case in various alternative forms, and some of their pleadings come perilously near denying the title of the plaintiffs. They did, however, expressly admit that the plaintiffs are the proprietors of a certain mahal of village Atarsuiya and that they are entitled to receive a ground-rent in respect of the land in suit, calculated at the rate of Rs. 10 per bigha. Nevertheless they pleaded that the house in suit is situated in the city of Allahabad in a particular quarter of that city which was assigned, a little more than fifty years prior to the institution of the suit, by arrangement with Government and with the local landholders (including the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs) for the residence of a colony of butchers, and has ever since been known by the designation of Mohalla Atala of Allahabad city, as stated in the plaint. They pleaded that the sites of houses in this mohalla are not subject to the same customary law as the sites of houses occupied by cultivating tenants, or members of the village community, in agricultural villages. More particularly, they pleaded that they were not subject to any custom affecting the purely agricultural portion of village Atarsuiya, under which the proprietors could claim one-fourth of the sale consideration on a transfer. Finally, they pleaded that the owners of houses in Mohalla Atala had an established right to transfer the houses themselves, and the right of residence therein, to whomsoever they pleased, and that the proprietors of the soil had no right to question any such transfer or to interfere with the owners of the houses, so long as their ground-rent of Rs. 10 per bigha was duly paid.

The learned Munsif of Allahabad before whom the suit was first tried, held that the tenure of the land in dispute (i. e., the site of the house in question) "was subject to the same incidents as the village abadi land elsewhere, and that the defendants had failed to prove anything to the contrary." He held further that a certain clause in the Wajib-ul-arz of Mauza Atarsuiya which recognized a right on the part of the zemindars to receive one-fourth of the price, on sales of houses situated in that portion of the abadi not within the limits of Allahabad city, referred only to agricultural tenants, to which class the second defendant does not belong. On these findings he dismissed the claim for one-fourth of the sale price, but decreed the alternative claim for possession of the site after removal of the materials. The defendants appealed and the plaintiffs filed cross-objections with regard to the dismissal of their claim for one-fourth of the sale price. What they meant by this I find it a little difficult to understand. The plaint makes it perfectly clear that the two reliefs were claimed in the alternative. Even if it could be successfully contended on the evidence that the plaintiffs were entitled both to possession of the site after removal of the materials and also to one-fourth of the sale price, it would be a complete answer that no such case was set up in the plaint. The lower Appellate Court in the first instance sent down certain issues for specific findings. Two of these issues relate to a very doubtful plea set up by the defendants, a plea not really consistent with other admissions in their written statement, that the land in suit had been granted to the predecessors-in-title of defendant No. 2 by the Government, and not by the zemindars of village Atarsuiya. In any case this point is now concluded against the defendants by an express finding of fact and was not pressed before us. The third issue remitted was in the following terms :—

"Is the land in suit in the abadi of village Atarsuiya? Or in the abadi which is called in the Wajib-ul-arz as abadi shahr"?

On this issue there was a finding in favour of the plaintiffs which has been finally endorsed by the lower Appellate Court. The form of the issue requires to be correctly appreciated. It refers to the Wajib-ul-arz for village Atarsuiya prepared at the Settlement of 1875 A. D. This document draws a distinction between that portion of the village area which is situated within the limits of Allahabad city and the portion outside those limits. Tenants residing within the city are recognized as having a right of transfer in respect of their houses "along with the sites," without reference to the zemindars. Tenants residing outside the limits of the city may sell the materials of their houses after paying one-fourth of the sale price to the zemindars. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the land in suit is situated outside the limits of the city, as those limits were understood when the Settlement Record of 1875 was drawn up. I think it would be easy to criticise the reasons given for this finding. The learned Subordinate Judge has regarded it as decisive that the site of the house in suit can be shown to have been cultivated land at the previous Settlement of 1839, and that it was part of the area dealt with at the last partition of village Atarsuiya. The latter circumstance is of no weight, unless and until it be further shown that the village area recognized as within the city limits at the Settlement of 1875 was not also formally apportioned between the various new mahals formed at the last partition. The former seems to me of very slight weight. I think, however, that I am bound to treat the finding as one of fact and to decline to re-consider it in second appeal I cannot stretch the finding beyond the ground actually covered by it. We were asked to accept it as a finding of fact that the land in suit must be regarded as situated in a purely agricultural village, and, therefore, subject to all the presumptions of law which have been laid down, in various published decisions of this Court, as applicable to the sites of houses so situated. An issue of this sort has always been regarded in this Court as a mixed question of fact and of law. It is necessary to examine the facts actually found by the Court below, and then to consider whether these justify the conclusions of law upon which the decision of that Court is based. There is, as both the Courts below have recognized, another portion of the Wajib-ul-arz of 1875 which has an important bearing on the question in issue. In the eighth paragraph of that record reference is made to the butchers' quarter (abadi qassaban), in respect of which it is recorded that, inasmuch as the butchers were permitted to build upon land which had been under cultivation at the previous Settlement of 1839, they paid rent for the sites of their houses at a uniform rate of Rs. 10 per bigha, which rent could not be reduced and was not liable to enhancement, except by order of some competent authority or Court. This entry requires to be considered in connection with other evidence on the record, not perhaps of great value in itself, but important as explaining the formation of this butchers' quarter in village Atarsuiya. The following facts seem to have been treated by the lower Appellate Court as substantially established; they were not questioned in argument before us, and, I think, I am justified in treating them as established without discussing the precise evidence on which they rest. Sometime shortly after the Mutiny of 1857, the estates of one or more co-sharers in village Atarsuiya were confiscated by Government, on account of the disloyalty of the proprietors. The Government was, therefore, for a time a co-sharer in village Atarsuiya. At about the same time a question arose as to the advisability of settling the butchers of Allahabad in some convenient locality on the outskirts of the city. Negotiations must have taken place between the local landholders, the butchers and the Local Government, the latter probably acting both in its executive capacity and as one of the co-sharers in the village. The result was the arrangement referred to in the eighth paragraph of the Wajib-ul-arz of 1875. A certain area previously under cultivation was given up by the proprietary body for the formation of the new abadi qassaban. The butchers, no doubt, built their own houses. They covenanted to pay a ground-rent of Rs. 10 per bigha to the proprietors of the soil. This seems to be a substantial rent; I notice that the learned Munsif was of opinion that it is considerably in excess of anything the proprietors could hope to obtain even now by letting this land for agricultural purposes. There was a covenant securing the permanence of this rate of rent, unless it should be lowered or enhanced by some competent authority. This last expression is, no doubt, somewhat vague; but it is impossible to interpret it as anything but a stipulation against arbitrary enhancement at the will and pleasure of the proprietors. The abadi qassaban thus formed is what is now known as the Atala Mohalla of Allahabad City, referred to in the plaint as the residence of defendant No. 2. It has long since been included within Municipal limits.

Taking these as the facts of the case, it seems to me idle to enter into a discussion of the principles involved in a series of decided cases of this Court which deal with the respective rights of proprietors of the soil and occupants of houses in purely agricultural villages. I accept, as already remarked, the finding of the Court below that the Wajib-ul-arz of 1875 did not intend to include this butcher's quarter within the limits of Allahabad city, the abadi shahr as it then stood. Even so, it seems to me decidedly questionable whether a Court would be justified in applying to an area with such a history as the above the principles laid down for house-sites in purely agricultural villages. The decisions of this Court on which the plaintiffs-respondents rely all proceed on the assumption that, in the ordinary case of occupiers of house-sites in agricultural villages, there is no definite information forthcoming as to the circumstances under which the site came to be occupied. If the occupiers of houses in such villages were to be treated, in the absence of positive evidence to the contrary, as were squatters, it would necessarily follow that twelve years' occupation would give them an adverse title to the house-sites as against the proprietors of the village. It was felt that this would be monstrous, and would lead to all sorts of undesirable consequences. The only alternative was to regard the occupiers of houses in such villages as a peculiar kind of licensees, applying to their case certain presumptions of law which could be based upon general and well-established custom. Now the tenure of a licensee is in its essence non-transferable, and the Records of Rights in thousands of villages in all parts of the Province could be referred to in support of the proposition that the right of residence enjoyed by the occupiers of houses in ordinary village-sites was everywhere regarded as a right, heritable no doubt, but not transferable.

In the present case, we have fairly definite informations as to the circumstances under which the predecessors-in-interest of the second defendant came to occupy this site. The whole transaction by which this "abadi qassaban" in village Atarsuiya came to be created, amounts on the face of it to a letting of the village on building leases at a uniform ground-rent, with a stipulation against arbitrary enhancement at the pleasure of proprietors. The contract is essentially one of lease; and the rights of a lessee, in the absence of express stipulation to the contrary, are in themselves transferable: vide the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 103 (f).

The only real question to my mind is whether a stipulation to the contrary can be inferred from the evidence before us. I do not think so. Even the plaint in this case, as originally drafted, shows that the plaintiffs at first desired to bring their suit within the scope of the provision in the Wajib-ul-arz of 1875, which gives to tenants residing outside the city limits a right of transfer, subject to payment of one-fourth of the sale price to the proprietors of the soil. It was evidently after the plaint had been filed that a difficulty was felt by reason of the fact that this passage of the Record of Rights refers to kashtkaran, a word which as it stands must be rendered "cultivating tenants." The plaintiffs then amended their claim so as to ask for alternative reliefs. They said in effect:—"The second defendant is either a kashtkar in the sense in which this expression is used in the third paragraph of the Wajib-ul-arz, or he is not. If he is, he can transfer his house with the right of residence thereon, but he must pay us one-fourth of the sale price; if he is not, he has no rights of transfer at all, and we claim forfeiture and possession of the soil, after the purchaser has removed the materials of the house." It was only when they filed their objections in the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiffs for the first time suggested that the clause of the Wajib-ul-arz in question must be interpreted as meaning that a kashtkar residing outside the limits of the abadi shahr can only transfer the materials of his house without any right of residence in the house thus transferred, and even then must pay one-fourth of the sale price to the proprietors of the soil. The lower Appellate Court has very properly ignored this plea. Having come to the conclusion that the second of two alternative reliefs must be decreed, the learned Subordinate Judge contented himself with remarking that the question of the plaintiffs' right to the first relief did not arise. I note this point because I have felt some difficulty about the present position of the plaintiffs with regard to this first relief. They have filed no cross-objections in this Court, and are obviously precluded from claiming that both reliefs ought to have been decreed. Can they ask this Court to consider their claim to the first relief asked for, in the event of the Court's holding them disentitled to the second? I incline to the opinion that it is open to them to do so. The conclusion I come to on this point is that the plaintiffs have an arguable case, but one which ought not to be accepted on the record as it stands. If the suit had gone to trial on the plaint as originally framed and upon issues arising only in respect of the claim for one-fourth of the sale price, I think it just possible that the Courts might have come to the conclusion that the word kashtkaran in this particular passage of the Wajib-ul-arz was not used in its strict sense of "cultivating tenants," but was intended to apply to all occupiers of houses situated outside the limits of the abadi shahr. As the case now stands, the question is much complicated by the fact that the plaintiffs have succeeded in the Courts below upon a precisely opposite contention, namely that the second defendant and the other butchers residing in the abadi qassaban are not kashtkars within the meaning of the Wajib-ul-arz. If the second defendant, as lessee of the land in suit, has in fact a transferable right in respect of the house in suit and the right of residence therein, it is for the plaintiffs to satisfy the Court that this right is subject to a provision entitling the ground landlords to claim one-fourth of the sale price on each transfer. The case in favour of a loose interpretation of the word "kashtkaran" is partly rebutted by the proof on the part of the defendants of several instances of transfers in which no claim seems to have been preferred by the landholders to any portion of the sale price. On the record as it stands, I am not prepared to dissent from the finding of the first Court that this particular provision of the Wajib-ul-arz refers to "cultivating tenants" only, and does not affect the rights of the butchers occupying houses in the abadi qassaban.

The rights of these butchers are, in my opinion, those of lessees holding under building leases, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary they must be held entitled to transfer their rights as such lessees.

I would, therefore, set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and dismiss this suit with costs in all Courts, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

CHAMIER, J.—I agree.

MOTAN DAS v. MORNI BAI.

BY THE COURT:—The appeal is allowed. The decrees of both the Courts below are set aside and the plaintiffs' suit is dismissed with costs throughout including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 986 OF 1911.

July 27, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chevis and Mr. Justice Shadi Lal.

MOTAN DAS—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

Musammat MORNI BAI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Custom or Hindu Law – Khattar Aroras of Multan city – Succession – Daughter, whether can succeed – Custom – Burden of proof.

In matters of succession, Aroras of Multan city are governed by the Hindu law.

Therefore, a daughter of an Arora of Multan city is entitled to succeed to the estate of her deceased father.

The burden of proving that they follow any custom in derogation of the Hindu law lies heavily on the person alleging the custom.

Radho v. Harnaman, 69 P. R. 1907, followed.

Lacho Bai v. Asa Nand, 144 P. R. 1882; Mokanda v. Balli Singh, 85 P. R. 1884; Pitambar v. Ganesha Ram, 148 P. R. 1890; Anant Ram v. Hukman Mal, 62 P. R 1902; 102 P. L. R. 1902, discussed.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge of the Multan Division, at Ferozepore, dated the 27th May 1911, varying that of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 22nd of August 1910, decreeing the claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Appellant.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The genealogical tree is as follows:—

The parties are Khattar Aroras of Multan city. The mere fact of a house having been built recently in tarf Ravi, a suburb of the city, can make no difference to the case. The ancestral house of the family is in the city, and for purposes of the main question in this case, viz., whether the parties are governed by personal law or by custom, the parties must be regarded as residing in a town.

The dispute is as to the property of Lal Chand who has not been heard of for many years past; he left Multan about 30 years ago, and is now presumably dead. His wife, Musammat Chharkandi Bai, died in 1909, and the dispute is between the daughter, Musammat Morni Bai, who is suing for a declaration relying on Hindu Law, and the brother, Mul Chand, who has died since the suit was instituted and is now represented by his son, Motan Das. Apart from a dispute as to some date trees, which will be dealt with in the latter part of this judgment, the only question for decision is whether the daughter or the brother is entitled to succeed to the property. The first ground of appeal raises the question whether a suit for a declaration lies, but this has been given up by appellant's Counsel who realises that the decision of the lower Courts on this point is correct.

Both the lower Courts have decided the question of succession in plaintiff's favour, so it is the defendant who is the appellant in this Court.

For the defendant it is contended that the family should be held to be an agricultural family. It is true that the documentary evidence proves that as far back as Sambat 1881(=1824 A. D.) or even earlier, Tikkan Mal, the ancestor, acquired certain land, and that the family has held land ever since, but, on the other hand, it is not shown that any member of the family has ever cultivated with his own hands. Lal Chand was a hawker, Mul Chand was a patwari for many years, and Motan Das still is a patwari. The members of the family have also had money dealings, and acted as weighmen (dambirs) and the whole evidence on this part of the case shows that the family is not mainly dependent on agriculture, but on shopkeeping or service. The mere fact that in certain documents Lal Chand and Mul Chand have described themselves as zemindars or malguzars is, in our opinion, of no importance whatever.

We start then with the fact that we are dealing with a family of Aroras, living in a large town, and not agriculturists though owning land. The initial onus of proving that such a family is governed by agricultural custom and not by personal law lies on the defendant, who undoubtedly would succeed to the property in suit according to the general agricultural custom of the Punjab —the property being ancestral—but who has no right to exclude the daughter if the family be governed by personal law. One point which is relied on as being in defendant's favour is that in this family there is a custom, which has undoubtedly been followed in more than one instance, whereby an elder son takes an extra share on the death of the father. This, however, is not in accordance with general agricultural custom, and the mere fact that in this particular family a special custom exists whereby an elder brother takes an extra share is not, in our opinion, any good ground for presuming that in matters of succession generally the family has adopted agricultural custom and ceased to be governed by their personal law. The peculiar custom of allowing an extra share to an elder son may have been started by the caprice of Tikkan Mal, and may have continued ever since, but it does not follow that Tikkan Mal would have dreamt of a daughter, who was her father's only child, being excluded by her uncle.

According to the Riwaj-i-am prepared for Hindus of Multan city, the property of a man who leaves a daughter and a brother is shared between the two, but this is unsupported by instances and is not relied on by either party, so it may be ignored.

We have left for consideration the decisions of the Courts, especially the Chief Court rulings, and the instances cited by the witnesses for the parties.

The earliest reported case is Musammat Lacho Bai v. Asa Nand (1), a case of Aroras of Multan city. This was a suit by certain collaterals of one Gobind Ram for a declaration that two alienations effected by one of the widows of Gobind Ram should not affect their reversionary rights. For the defence it was pleaded that the plaintiffs had no locus standi in the presence of Khem Chand, a daughter's son of Gobind Ram. Gobind Ram had also left a daughter, but it was held that "the existence of a daughter entitled to succeed on the widow's death would probably, if there were no daughter's sons, not be enough to bar the right of the person presumptively entitled next after the death of both the widow and the daughter to obtain such a declaration. For the daughter's interest in her father's property is, like the widow's, only a restricted interest, and on her death the property devolves on the line of the last male owner." As to the daughter's son we read (page 427): "It, therefore, becomes necessary to determine whether Khem Chand would be entitled to succeed to the property either as adopted son of Gobind Ram, or, after his mother's death, as daughter's son. This question can only be considered for the purpose of determining whether the plaintiff should be allowed to maintain the present suit. He cannot get a declaration that Khem Chand was not adopted by Gobind Ram, or would not be entitled to succeed in preference to the plaintiff." Then, on page 429 we read: "Coming now to the question whether Khem Chand would inherit in preference to the plaintiff as daughter's son, it appears that though the issue drawn related to the title of the daughter to inherit, this substantially involved the right of the daughter's son to succeed on her death, and the evidence given relates equally to both. On this question the evidence is conflicting, but the evidence for the plaintiff seems entitled to more weight than that for the defendant....There appears, therefore, to be sufficient evidence of a custom excluding daughter's sons to justify us in refusing to treat the daughter's son as the nearest reversioner, and to hold that the plaintiff's suit should, therefore, not be entertained. It seems enough to decide that the plaintiff is not proved not to be the next reversioner, without attempting to decide finally whether daughters' sons are by custom excluded from the succession." So whether daughters or their sons were by custom not entitled to succeed was not finally decided, and we cannot regard this case as of any material value to us.

The next case cited is Mokanda v. Balli

(1) 144 P. R. 1882.

Singh(2), a case relating to Aroras of Multan origin, but residing in Amritsar. Whether the custom of Amritsar Aroras is the same as that of Multan Aroras, and if not, whether this particular family had kept their Multan customs or adopted the Amritsar customs, is not clear Here the contest was between a nephew and a daughter's son. No evidence was adduced of a nephew excluding a daughter's son, while eight instances of a daughter's son and one of a daughter succeeding were cited. The learned Judges remarked that the Extra Assistant Commissioner who made the inquiry had not taken much care to ascertain the precise facts of the several instances referred to, and after criticizing these instances held that it did not appear that any of them could be regarded as instances of the succession of a daughter's son as of right to the exclusion of brothers or brothers' sons.

Next comes Pitambar v. Ganesha Ram (3), a case relating to Aroras of Dera Ismail Khan and Bhakkar. Here the contest was between a daughter and a nephew. The property was partly ancestral and partly self-acquired. The case was decided in favour of the nephew, and the daughter was excluded even from her father's self-acquired property, so that she fared even worse than she would ordinarily do under agricultural custom. In this case the daughter's Counsel quoted certain rulings in support of his argument that the onus should be placed on the nephew, but the learned Judges noted that the cases referred to did not relate to Aroras, and further held that "after a full consideration of all the evidence in the case, we are prepared to hold that the plaintiff has affirmatively established the custom in his favour."

To this ruling is appended as a foot-note, Civil Appeal No. 1422 of 1887 [Nihal Chand v. Prem Bai (4)], a case relating to Aroras of Multan city. Here the property was self-acquired, and as regards onus it was held that if custom applied the onus should lie on the plaintiffs (brothers and father of the deceased) to show that by custom they could exclude a daughter or her sons (this was held with reference to "the caste of the parties, the locality in which they live, and the nature of the property in dispute"). The judgment states: "We find it impossible to hold that any established custom as to the respective rights of the daughter and her son on the one hand, and the near collaterals on the other, is satisfactorily made out. The cases cited have not been very fully elucidated; but if genuine precedents they rather go to show that there is no invariable customary rule of succession, though the balance fluctuates a little in favour of the daughter." The judgment then goes on to hold that the entry in the Customary Law to the effect that daughters share equally with brothers is not a correct record of custom. Lastly the judgment, after referring to Musammat Mulo v. Phulo Missar (5), states: "to succeed in their suit the plaintiffs must prove affirmatively that they have a right preferential to the daughters and their sons, and this they have certainly failed to establish. If we fall back upon the Hindu Law on the ground that no custom governing the issue in the case has been proved by either side, the result will be the same, as under that law the daughter will succeed in preference to either a father or the brothers of the deceased proprietor."

In Anant Ram v. Hukman Mal (6) the parties were Aroras of Kasur, of the shop-keeping and money-lending class and residing in a town, and it was held that the onus of proving that the daughters were excluded lay on the plaintiff, a brother of the deceased. But though the instances cited by the plaintiff were not altogether satisfactory, for the judgment says: "in several instances the meagre nature of the details was partly due to the action of the District Judge in not making a full record," it was held that the other side should have shown by cross-examination or evidence in rebuttal that those instances did not in reality support the alleged custom. So it was held that the plaintiff had proved his right to succeed. As decided cases amongst Aroras in favour of the collaterals and against the daughter, Musammat Lacho Bai v. Asa Nand (1); Mokanda v. Balli Singh (2); Pitambar v. Ganesha Ram (3) and the foot-note to the last ruling are here cited. Though in the first ruling the question of succession was not finally decided, in the second and third case the onus was placed on the daughter although the parties were, as in Anant Ram v. Hukman Mal (6), Aroras residing in a town, and in

(2) 85 P. R. 1884.
(3) 148 P. R. 1890.
(4) 148 P. R. 1890 foot-note.
(5) 108 P. R. 1888.
(6) 62 P. R. 1902; 102 P. L. R. 1902

the case published as a foot-note the decision was in favour of the daughter. In this ruling, Anant Ram v. Hukman Mal (6), the property was, partially at least, self-acquired, but the learned Judges found themselves unable on the evidence to make any distinction "between ancestral, immoveable and self-acquired moveable property in the matter of succession...the subject-matter of the suit not being a woman's peculium." They added, "we are not prepared to go further than to say that the nature of the property might slightly affect the onus, as appears to have been suggested in Civil Appeal No. 1422 of 1887." So in this case too the daughter lost even the self-acquired property of her father, faring worse than an ordinary agriculturist's daughter would do.

Lastly comes Radho v. Harnaman (7), a case of Aroras of Amritsar city, where it is held that in a case relating to high caste Hindus residing in a town, the burden of proving that the parties follow any custom in derogation of their personal law lies heavily on the person alleging the custom. The facts of this case were somewhat peculiar. One Nathu Mal left a daughter, two full brothers and two half brothers. The contest was between the daughter and one of the half brothers, the full brothers and the other half brothers not being parties to the suit for some unexplained reason. In this judgment the rulings already referred to in the present judgment have been fully dealt with, and it is pointed out that in some of the earlier cases, owing to the omission of the parties to plead that they were governed by Hindu Law, an assumption seems to have been made that there was a general custom in favour of the collateral, and so the onus was placed on the daughter or the daughter's son.

We have no hesitation in following the last mentioned ruling, and in holding that the onus in this case lies on the defendant. We do not forget that the property in question in this case is landed and ancestral property, but still we hold that, the parties being non-agricultural Aroras and residing in a town, the burden of proving that the daughter is excluded rests on the defendant, for the daughter would succeed to her father's whole estate under her personal law. If the property were self-acquired, then even the general agricultural custom of the Punjab would be in her favour. It may be noted, too, that in the majority of the reported cases above dealt with no distinction has been made between ancestral and self-acquired property; such of these decisions as are in defendant's favour would deprive the daughter even of her father's self-acquired property.

Lastly, we come down to the instances cited in this particular case, and these are to be found on page 10 of the paper-book, where the District Judge has dealt with them in detail. In the first place we note that, as has been admitted before us in arguments, only three instances relate to Aroras living in Multan city or a suburb of Multan city. Apart, therefore, from the other reasons given by the learned District Judge for holding these cases to be of no value, we cannot regard them as proving the rule of succession in the family of the parties. We are not inquiring into village custom but town custom, and instances relating to villagers are of no value. Remembering how often a daughter may be excluded by consent, owing either to the property being small in value or to her being married and well-off and living at a distance or to other reasons, we think three instances far too small a number to prove any such custom as is alleged by the defendant in the present case. We note that several instances of a daughter's succession have been cited by the plaintiff, but we do not think it necessary to deal with them.

While discussing Radho v. Harnaman (7), we omitted to note that Mr. Shafi's objection to the applicability of that judgment is that in that case both parties admitted that Aroras were governed by Hindu Law. But in the present case too the plaintiff relies on Hindu Law, and the parties being Aroras living in a town the presumption is that Hindu Law applies, and so we hold that the onus of proving any custom opposed to Hindu Law has rightly been placed on the defendant.

We hold that the daughter is entitled to succeed, and the only question remaining for decision is the matter of the date trees.

In 1875 Lal Chand and Mul Chand divided their lands, but kept certain date trees joint. The trees continued to be shown joint, and in 1899 when Musammat Chharkandi Bai got mutation of her husband's estate effected in her name, she was entered as owner of one half share in the trees. But in the next jamabandi we find the trees shown in two separate khatas, as if there had been a partition. (It may here be noted that in Multan there is a custom whereby date trees are given a khata number of their own, apart from the khata number of the land on which they stand). So we now find two khatas, one, No. 143, consisting of 27 trees standing in Mul Chand's name, and one, khata No. 144, consisting of 86 trees standing in Musammat Chharkandi Bai's name. Plaintiff claims full ownership of the 86 trees, while defendant denies that there has ever been any partition of the trees. The District Judge finds no proof of any partition, and thinks a mistake has crept into the jamabandis. The learned Divisional Judge presumes a partition, presuming the revenue entries to be correct even though no mutation sanctioning the change is forthcoming. In the absence of any mutation entry, we do not think the entries in the jamabandis can be presumed to be correct. There is no proof of any partition, and we cannot presume any partition to have taken place. It would, moreover, be a curious partition by which 86 trees fell to one person, and 27 to the other.

(7) 99 P. R. 1907.

Further, it is to be noted that in the District Court the plaintiff made a statement offering to limit her claim in the 86 trees to one-half on condition that defendant admitted her right to one-half in the 27 trees. This offer the defendant was ill-advised not to accept. (His acceptance would, of course, have been conditional on plaintiff's proving that she had a right to succeed her mother in the estate.) We hold that plaintiff has a half share only but that it extends to all the trees.

As regards ground 5 of the present appeal, which relates to claims for Rs. 250 for repairs to a house and Rs. 100 spent on Musammat Chharkandi Bai's funeral, there are concurrent findings of the lower Courts, and Mr. Shafi has not addressed us on this ground.

We accept the appeal only so far as to vary the Divisional Judge's decision as to the trees. The decree will be that the plaintiff is declared to be owner to the extent of one-half share in both khatas (No. 143, consisting of 27 date trees, and No. 144, consisting of 86 date trees). The decree declaring plaintiff owner of the rest of the property in suit will stand.

As to costs the defendant has failed except in the minor matter of the date trees, and even that could have been settled satisfactorily in the lower Court had the defendant been sensible. We order, therefore, that the defendant do bear the plaintiff's costs in all Courts.

Appeal partly accepted.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 83 OF 1914.

November 23, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chamier and Mr. Justice Piggott.

RAM LAL AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

TIRBENI SAHAI AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, rr. 23, 25—Appellate Court not definitely reversing lower Court's finding—Procedure—Practice.

Where an Appellate Court does not definitely reverse the finding of the first Court that the suit was barred by limitation, but is of opinion that in the event of a finding that a certain person was not in possession on a particular date the suit was still liable to be dismissed on the ground of limitation, the proper procedure for the Appellate Court to adopt is to proceed under Order XLI, rule 25, and not under Order XLI, rule 23.

First appeal from the order of the Additional District Judge of Gorakhpur, dated the 13th February 1914.

Mr. Jang Bahadur Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Parmeshwor Dayal, for Mr. Iswar Saran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit in which the plaintiffs claimed possession of certain property, alleging that it had belonged to one Gopal Baksh, who mortgaged it with possession in the year 1896; that the plaintiffs had redeemed that mortgage and had entered into possession, but had been dispossessed by the defendants. There were a number of defences raised, including a denial that Gopal Baksh had any title to the property in suit in the year 1896. The first Court framed four issues. We are at present concerned with the first of them. One of the pleas in defence was to the effect that the defendants had been in adverse possession for more than twelve years prior to the institution of the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge framed an issue on this point and proceeded to discuss the evidence. The parties were at issue on a question of fact, as to whether the plaintiff had or had not obtained possession after the date of the alleged redemption of the mortgage of 1896. On this point the first Court found against the plaintiffs and held that the defendant had in fact been in possession for more than twelve years prior to the institution of the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge expressly declined to go into the question whether Gopal Baksh was in possession in the year 1896, that is to say, at the date of his mortgage. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge differed from the view of law taken by the first Court. He remarked that, if Gopal Baksh was in fact in possession at the date of his mortgage, time would not begin to run against him, or any person claiming through him, merely because of the fact that the mortgagees whom he had put in possession might have been dispossessed by a trespasser. He, therefore, came to the conclusion that the first Court's finding on the question of limitation could not be maintained on the ground on which it proceeded, and the question whether Gopal Baksh was or was not in possession in 1896 at the date of the mortgage was one which required to be determined before the issue as to limitation was decided. Having come to this conclusion, the lower Appellate Court did not proceed to examine the evidence itself, as it might well have done, and come to a finding with regard to Gopal Baksh's possession. The lower Appellate Court should have either affirmed or definitely reversed the finding of the first Court on the issue of limitation. As a matter of fact the learned Additional Judge, purporting to act under Order XLI, rule 23, has remanded the case to the Court of first instance for trial on the merits. This procedure was not justified by Order XLI, rule 23, for the lower Appellate Court has not definitely reversed the finding of the first Court that the suit was barred by limitation. On the contrary the learned Additional Judge was clearly of opinion that in the event of a finding that Gopal Baksh was not in possession in 1896, the suit was still liable to be dismissed on the ground of limitation. Under the circumstances we are of opinion that if the lower Appellate Court was not prepared to come to a finding itself on the question of Gopal Baksh's possession at the date of the mortgage, it should have exercised its powers under Order XLI, rule 25, to remit an issue. This might have been done with a further direction that findings should also be recorded on the remaining issues in the case, in the event of the Court's finding in favour of Gopal Baksh's possession. In taking this view we are fully supportd by the procedure set by a Bench of this Court in Habib-ullah Khan v. Lalta Prasad (1). We set saide the order of remand under appeal. We send the record back to the Court of the Additional Judge and direct him to re-admit the appeal to his file of pending cases and to dispose of it according to law with due regard to the remarks made above. Costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

Order set aside.

(1) 17 Ind. Cas. 94; 34 A. 612; 10 A. L. J. 190.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 119 OF 1913.

October 15, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

ALAMELU AMMAL AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

BALU AMMAL AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Daughters taking estate of father under Will from mother—Oral partition—Survivorship, right of, whether extinguished—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115 - Estoppel - Daughters taking under Will, whether estopped from claiming as heirs—Partition, oral whether valid.

ALAMELU AMMAL v. BALU AMMAL.

Daughters taking the estate of their deceased father, according to a Will executed by their mother, are not estopped from claiming subsequently as heirs to their father on the ground that the Will executed by their mother in respect of such properties is invalid.

But when they divide the properties equally among themselves under an oral partition, they must be deemed to have given up their rights to succeed by the right of survivorship to the estate of a sister who may die subsequently.

A partition of immoveable property of whatever value can be effected by oral arrangement and need not be in writing and registered, as it is not an 'exchange,' 'sale,' 'mortgage,' or 'lease.'

Therefore the mere fact that the rights mutually relinquished under an oral partition are to continue for periods of greater or less duration, cannot have much bearing on the question whether written instruments are required to effect valid partitions.

Dalton v. Fitzgerald, (1897) 2 Ch. D. 86; 66 L. J. Ch. 604; 76 L. T. 700; 45 W. R. 685; Paine v. Jones, (1874) 18 Eq. 320; 43 L. J. Ch. 787; 30 L. T. 779; 22 W. R. 807; Rup Chand Ghosh v. Sarveswar Chandra Chandra, 33 C. 915; 10 C. W. N. 747; 3 C. L. J. 629; Gyannessa v. Mobarakunnessa, 25 C. 210; 2 C. W. N. 291; Satya Kumar Banerjee v. Satya Kripal Banerjee, 3 Ind. Cas. 247; 10 C. L. J. 503, Rawan Pershad v. Musammat Radha Beeby, 4 M. I. A. 137; 7 W. R. 35 (P. C.); 1 Suth. P. C. J. 172; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 327; 18 E. R. 651, referred to.

Subramania Aiyar v. Sivithri Ammal, 4 M.L.T. 354; Ariyaputhira v. Muthukumaraswamy, 15 Ind. Cas. 343; 37 M. 423; (1912) M. W. N. 854; 23 M. L. J. 339; 12 M. L. T. 425; Lakshmiammal v. Gengiammal, 7 Ind. Cas. 858; 34 M. 72; 8 M. L. T. 233; (1910) M. W. N. 692; Tirurengadachariar v. Ranganatha Aiyangar, 13 M. L. J. 500; Ramakkal v. Ramasami Naicken, 22 M. 522; 9 M. L. J. 101, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 2 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Tiruvadi, in Original Suit No. 71 of 1910.

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for Mr. A. Venkatarama Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar and P. S. Vaidanatha Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. They are two out of the three daughters of one Sambasiva Aiyar, who died in 1880. The first defendant is the daughter and heir of Subbammal, who is now dead and who was also a daughter of Sambasiva Aiyar like the two plaintiffs. The mother of the plaintiffs and of Subbammal died in 1899 having enjoyed a widow's estate in the properties. Shortly before her death, however, she executed a Will treating the properties as her absolute properties and bequeathing the lands described in the plaint, B schedule, absolutely to her three daughters namely, the two plaintiffs and Subbammal. The daughters accordingly divided the B schedule properties into three equal shares by an oral division shortly after their mother's death, purporting to take each one-third absolutely according to the Will of their mother. Subbammal died in 1908 and her one-third share (the plaint schedule property) was taken possession of by her daughter (the first defendant) as her heir. Now, the two plaintiffs have brought the suit out of which this second appeal has arisen, on the allegation that the plaint schedule property was taken by their sister Subbammal as heir of their father Sambasiva Aiyar after the death of their mother in 1899 and that that property which the first defendant has so taken possession of belongs to them after the death of their sister Subbammal. (The plaintiffs in their plaint dishonestly suppressed the fact that Subbammal had been enjoying the plaint one-third share separately under a partition to which the plaintiffs were parties, and they made a false allegation that the plaintiffs' two shares and Subbammal's share were all enjoyed according to the convenience of the three sisters without any permanent division by the plaintiffs and their sister, Subbammal, till the latter's death.)

The lower Courts dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that the plaintiffs are estopped from claiming title to possession of this one-third share as heirs of their father, because they and their sister purported to take the land under the Will of their mother which gave one-third absolutely to Subbammal. The Subordinate Judge relied upon the English case of Dalton v. Fitzgerald (1) in support of his view. The case of Dalton v. Fitzgerald (1) and the prior case of Paine v. Jones (2) were considered in Rup Chand Ghosh v. Sarveswar Chandra Chandra (3). Rampini, J., says: "In Dalton v. Fitzgerald (1) the defendant obtained possession of certain land from a grantor, who had no title to it. By means of that possession he was able to acquire a good title by possession against the true owner. Hence, he was held to be estopped as against the grantor and his remainder-men from disputing the validity of the deed of grant." Thus, the case of Dalton v. Fitzgerald (1) is authority only for the proposition that if possession is acquired under a particular grant, and could not be traced to any other title than as regards that particular property of which possession was so obtained, the grantee cannot claim the benefit of the English Statute of Limitations, i.e., a claim to acquire an absolute title by adverse possession so as to deprive the remainder-men who were granted rights in remainder under the same grant under which the life-tenant secured possession and entered into possession as life-tenant. As Rampini, J., says: "The rule of estoppel laid down in Bigelow would seem to be that the estoppel only exists so long as the grantee claims under the title of his grantor alone." Woodroffe, J. says that "if a grantee assert no other right or title than that from a common grantor, he will be precluded as against another grantee under the same instrument from denying that his grantor had a title when he conveyed." See also Bigelow on Estoppel, 6th Edition, pages 376 and 377, as to the limits within which the doctrine of estoppel laid down in Dalton v. Fitzgerald (1) should be confined.

(1) (1897) 2 Ch. 86; 66 L. J. Ch. 604; 76 L. T. 700; 45 W. R. 685.

(2) (1874) 18 Eq. 320; 43 L. J. Ch. 787; 30 L. T. 779; 22 W. R. 807.

(3) 33 C. 915; 10 C. W. N. 747; 3 C. L. J. 629.

Without going so far as was said in Rup Chand Ghosh v. Sarveswar Chandra Chandra (3), that section 115 of the Evidence Act is exhaustive of the law of estoppel to be applied by the Courts in India, I am of opinion that Dalton v. Fitzgerald (1) should not be extended beyond what is absolutely necessary to support the decision on the facts of that particular case. So confining it, the present case is clearly distinguishable because (1) the plaintiffs do not rely upon the possession got under the Will to claim the benefit of any statute of limitations giving the possessor absolute title; (2) the plaintiffs do not claim a higher right to the two-thirds share which was granted to them by the Will (and of which they are in possession) than the right which was so given by the Will, but their claim relates to the other one-third share to which no right was granted to them by the Will; (3) neither their title nor their possession as regards the two-thirds share need be traced to the invalid Will at all, but it can be traced to their undoubted right as legal heirs of their father. The decisions of the lower Courts cannot, therefore, be supported on the ground on which they have based the said decisions. Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, Vakil for the respondent, argued that the lower Courts' decisions could be supported on two other grounds: (a) that the plaintiffs are estopped by section 115 of the Evidence Act from claiming title to the one-third share, (b) that in any event, as the plaintiffs and Subbammal effected partition on the understanding that Subbammal should enjoy the property without any right in the plaintiffs to take her one-third share from her heirs or her assignees on her death, the plaintiffs cannot rely on their right of survivorship which they relinquished by the partition arrangement. As regards the first contention, I do not think there is anything on the record from which it could be established that the plaintiffs by their conduct induced Subbammal to do anything to her own detriment. Subbammal and the plaintiffs all allowed their mother to execute the Will and they all took under that Will. No representation was made by the plaintiffs to Subbammal or by Subbammal to the plaintiffs. Either all of them were ignorant of their real rights or all of them knew their real rights and chose to act according to their ignorance or in spite of their knowledge, as the case may be. This contention, therefore, fails. The second contention involves more difficult questions. It must be now taken as settled that a partition of immoveable properties of whatever value can be effected without any registered instrument in writing as it is not an exchange, sale, mortgage, or lease. [See Gyannessa v. Mobarakannessa (4) which was decided by Ameer Ali and Macpherson, JJ.] I feel bound by the authority of the decision of the eminent Judges who took part in that case, as that decision seems not to have been questioned in any other High Court. In Satya Kumar Banerjee v. Satakripal Banerjee (5) the decision in Gyannessa v. Mobarakannessa (4) was followed and reference is further made to the Privy Council case in Rewun Pershad v. Musammat Radha Beeby (6). But the Privy Council case had been decided long before the Transfer of Property Act came into force. In Subramania Aiyar v. Savithri Ammal (7) it was held that if a partition was effected by an instrument in writing and if the property was of the statutory value, the deed of partition must be registered. But as pointed out in Satya Kumar Banerjee v. Satya Kripal Banerjee (5) the case in Subramania Aiyar v. Savithri Ammal (7) does not lay down that partition cannot be effected orally. As I said before, I am not prepared to dissent from the view that notwithstanding the Transfer of Property Act, a partition of immoveable property of whatever value may be effected by oral arrangement. In Ariyaputhira v. Muthukumaraswamy (8) I have ventured to state that "all conveyances of ownership right in lands were intended to be brought under 'sale' or 'gifts' or 'exchanges' and to be effected as a rule by registered instruments," and I also expressed the wish that the British Indian Legislature would pass an enactment making a registered writing, indispensable for the validity of all settlements, partition agreements and Wills and authorities to adopt, making very few exceptions in special cases (such as soldiers' and sailors' Wills). I took it for granted in that decision that it was too late to hold that partition agreements could be validly made only by registered instruments.

(4) 25 C. 210; 2 C. W. N. 91.
(5) 3 Ind. Cas. 247; 10 C. L. J. 503.
(6) 4 M. I. A. 137; 7 W. R. 35 (P. C.); 1 Suth. P. C. J. 172; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 327; 18 E. R. 651.

In Latchumammal v. Gengammal (9) Benson and Krishnaswamy Aiyar, JJ., held that there is nothing in the Transfer of Property Act to prevent co-widows from effecting an absolute division of properties orally. It seems to have been conceded there that if the partition be only for life with the right of survivorship, it may be valid, though oral. Reliance was placed in that case on Thiruvengadachariar v. Ranganatha Aiyangar (10) for the view that partition need not be in writing. But the case in Tiruvengadachariar v. Ranganatha Aiyangar (10) was the case of an oral transfer of lands to a sister by two brothers in satisfaction of a claim made by her. I ventured to doubt the correctness of that decision in Ariyaputhira v. Muthukumaraswamy (8). But so far as partition agreements are concerned, I have not come across any case which treats such transactions as coming under sales or exchanges. While I do not adopt the entire reasoning in Latchumammal v. Gengammal (9) therefore, I think that if a partition (which involves relinquishment of mutual rights) can be effected orally, the mere fact that the rights mutually relinquished under the oral partition are to continue for periods of greater or less duration cannot have much bearing on the question whether written instruments are required to effect valid partitions. In this view, the plaintiffs having effected an oral partition with Subbammal giving her under the oral partition agreement an absolute right in plaint properties, which gift involves the relinquishment by themselves of their right to claim possession of the property if they survived Subbammal, the said partition arrangement is binding upon them, though it may not bind the reversioner entitled to the estate of Sambasiva Aiyar after the plaintiffs' death, and hence I hold that the plaintiffs' suit was rightly dismissed. [See Ramakkal v. Ramasami Naicken (11).]

In the result the second appeal is dismissed with costs.

NAPIER, J.—I concur with my learned brother in holding that there was an oral partition acted on by the parties and that accordingly the second appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

(7) 4 M. L. T. 354.

(8) 15 Ind. Cas. 343; 37 M. 423; (1912) M. W. N. 854; 23 M. L. J. 339; 12 M. L. T 425.

(9) 7 Ind. Cas. 858; 34 M. 72; 8 M. L. T. 233; (1910) M. W. N. 692.

(10) 13 M. L. J. 500.

(11) 22 M. 522; 9 M. L. J. 101.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1393 OF 1913.

November 6, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chamier and Mr. Justice Piggott.

BANWARI LAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

KHUBI RAM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 97—Lease—Endorsement by Kanungo—Date from which it takes effect—Subsequent registered lease—Priority.

BANWARI LAL v. KHUBI RAM.

A document endorsed by a Kanungo or Revenue Officer under section 97 of the Agra Tenancy Act takes effect from the date on which it was executed.

Therefore, a lease executed prior to, but endorsed after, the execution and registration under the Registration Act of another lease for the same holding, has priority over the latter.

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, dated the 6th September 1913.

Mr. P. L. Banerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, J.—The facts of this case as found by the lower Appellate Court are as follows. The occupancy tenants of some land executed in favour of the defendant, Khubi Ram, on November 15th, 1910, a lease for five years. On December 7th, 1910, they took it to a Kanungo under section 97 of the Tenancy Act and got him to sign and date an endorsement thereon under sub-section (2) of that section. In the meantime on November 21st, 1910, they had executed a similar lease in favour of the plaintiff and caused it to be registered under the Registration Act on the same day. The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants second party and that suit was dismissed on their pleading that they had paid the rent to Khubi Ram, defendant No. 1. The plaintiff then brought the present suit for possession of the property and for a declaration that the lease held by Khubi Ram, defendant No. 1. was void and ineffectual as against his lease of November 21st, 1910. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit and its decree was confirmed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge. This is a second appeal by the plaintiff. On his behalf it is contended that the lease in favour of the defendant, Khubi Ram, did not take effect until it was endorsed by the Kanungo; while on behalf of Khubi Ram, defendant, it is contended that the lease took effect from the date on which it was executed. The decision of the question depends on the construction of sub-section 3 of section 97 of the Tenancy Act. That sub-section runs as follows: "Such instrument shall thereupon be as valid as if it had been registered under the law for the time being in force for the registration of assurances." It appears to me that this sub-section means that an instrument which has been endorsed under section 97 by a Revenue Officer or Kanungo is to be as valid in all respects as if it had been taken to the registration office and registered under the Indian Registration Act, and that full effect will not be given to this provision if it is held that such an instrument takes effect from the date on which the endorsement is made under this section and not from the date of execution. In this particular case such a view would result in the lease held by the defendant, Khubi Ram, having no effect at all, for it would have to give way to the lease which has been registered. It was contended that if any provision of the Registration Act is applied to an instrument endorsed under section 97, all the provisions of the Act must be applied including the provisions regarding the time within which a document is to be presented for registration and the provision allowing a document to be registered after the expiry of four months in certain cases. I am not prepared to go as far as this. It seems to me such matters should be governed by the rules which the Local Government is empowered to make under section 203 (c) read with section 97 of the Tenancy Act, and this, I think, sufficiently meets the contention that unless all the provisions of the Registration Act are considered to be applicable to the case of an instrument taken to a Kanungo to be endorsed under section 97, it would be possible for a party to a lease of this kind to take it to a Revenue Court or officer several years after it was executed. It appears to me also that the procedure regarding the presentation of a document for registration stands on an entirely different footing from such a provision as that contained in section 47 of the Registration Act, i. e., that a document shall operate from the time from which it would have commenced to operate if no registration thereof had been required or made, and not from the time of its registration. I am not prepared to say that the question we have to decide is entirely free from difficulty; but on a full consideration of the arguments addressed to us and of the language of the section it appears to me, as I have said before, that full effect will not be given to sub-section 3 if we do not hold that an instrument endorsed by a Kanungo or a Revenue Officer under this section takes effect from the date on which it was executed. The result is, in my opinion, that the appeal should be dismissed.

PIGGOTT, J.—The point for determination in this appeal has been stated by my learned colleague. I am bound to confess that I felt, and still feel, considerable difficulty in coming to a decision. The argument on which considerable stress was laid on behalf of the appellant, that if documents endorsed under section 97 of the Tenancy Act are held to operate from the date of their execution, the result will be to open a wide door to fraud, in the absence of any provisions limiting the period within which a document must be presented to the Revenue Court or Officer referred to in the said section (97), seems to me of considerable weight. I agree, however, with what my learned colleague has said as to the powers of the Local Government in this matter. In section 97 itself the right conferred thereby to substitute attestation before a Revenue Court or officer for the regular procedure of registration is made subject to such conditions as the Local Government may, by rules under this Act, direct. It is probable that the question of appropriate rules to be made for the regulation of procedure in this matter and avoidance of fraud requires further consideration by the Local Government. At the same time it must be admitted that under the Registration Act itself there are possibilities of fraud or, at any rate, of dishonest dealing, and that the Courts are sometimes called upon to decide difficult questions of fact, when two documents have been executed dealing with the same immoveable property and registered on different dates. A plea to the effect that a document subsequently registered was fraudulently antedated has been raised in cases to which the Registration Act applies and is often difficult to determine satisfactorily. The real question, however, is as to the wording of the two enactments bearing on the question in issue. The case on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant seems to me to be put in its strongest form when reference is made to the provisions of section 47 of the Registration Act as embodying a special privilege intended by the Legislature to apply only to a registered document in the sense in which that expression is used in section 47 itself. The word "registered" is defined in the General Clauses Act (Local Act I of 1904), section 4, clause (35), as registered in British India under the law for the time being in force for registration of assurances. Now in section 97 of the Tenancy Act, clause (3), it is not laid down that a lease endorsed by a Revenue Court or Revenue Officer under the provisions of that section shall be deemed to be a registered document, but only that it shall be "valid as if it had been registered under the law for the time being in force for the registration of assurances." The real question to my mind is whether any intention on the part of the Local Legistature favourable to the contention now urged before us on behalf of the present appellant can be inferred from the use of the latter expression rather than the former. On the whole, while feeling the force of the arguments urged in support of this appeal, I have come to the conclusion that the view which has been expressed by my learned colleague is correct. If the lease of the 15th of November 1910 had been registered under the law for the time being in force, it would have been valid for the purpose of conferring title from the date of its execution, that is to say, from the 15th of November 1910; and, on the whole, it appears to me that we should be making law on our own account rather than interpreting the law as it stands if we refuse to give its full force to the word "valid." I concur in dismissing the appeal.

BY THE COURT.—The appeal is dismissed with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 773 OF 1913.

December 3, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Hannay.

VENGALA VENKAYYA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

THALLAM VENKATARAMIAH—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Slander—Invited guest turned away because he had taken meals at widow marriages—Excommunication—Outcasting—Defamation—Caste questions—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 499, Expl. 4.

VENGALA VENKAYYA v. THALLAM VENKATARAMIAH.

The defendant invited the plaintiff, a Brahman, to attend a sradha ceremony at his house, but on his arrival turned him away saying that, as he had taken meals at widow marriages, some other Brahmans refused to attend the sradha if he was present. The plaintiff sued the defendant for damages for slander:

Held, that the defendant had not slandered the plaintiff.

Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—Civil Courts may discuss and deal even with a caste question where the membership and character of a member have been injuriously affected.

Pragji Kalan v. Govind Gopal, 11 B. 534, followed.

Defamation as defined in section 499, Explanation (4), of the Indian Penal Code, is wide enough to include caste questions within it, even where those questions do not necessarily imply defect of character.

To tell a Hindu, who does not wish to be out of his caste, that he has been excommunicated or is out of caste is defamation.

To impute to a Brahman unfitness to officiate or be the guest at a sradha does not necessarily amount to defamation of his character in respect of his caste.

Unless the words used in respect of the caste of a Hindu are tantamount to saying "you have become an outcaste or you have been excommunicated from your caste," the words are not defamatory.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Kurnool, in Appeal Suit No. 121 of 1912, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Kurnool, in Original Suit No. 196 of 1912.

Mr. K. Pandalay (with him Mr. S. Ranganatha Aiyar), for the Appellant.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I need not repeat the facts which have been set out fully in the judgment just now pronounced by my learned brother. So far as the case-law is concerned I do not wish to go further back than what has been laid down in Cuppusami Chetty v. A. T. Doraisawmy Chetty (1) and in M. Coopoosami Chetty v. A. T. Duraisawmy Chetty (2). On these caste questions, the law, in my humble opinion, ought to be made progressive. Social customs among Hindus have begun to change with quite appreciable rapidity and conservative observations, therefore, which may be found in cases decided about 30 years ago [as in Queen v. Sankara (3) and Venkatachellapati v. Subbarayadu (4)], even though those observations were made by very learned and eminent Judges, ought not to be pushed now-a-days too far.

Even the highest judicial minds, like those of Lord Eldon, Lord Mansfield or Lord St. Leonards, are affected to some extent by the spirit of conservatism or of liberalism, as the case may be and the recognition of that fact by even lesser minds implies no disrespect to those great jurists. I do not at all mean to question the soundness of the actual decisions in Queen v. Sankara (3) and Venkatachellapati v. Subbarayadu (4), but only to submit that all the incidental observations therein need not be strictly adhered to without the necessary qualifications at the present day.

Mr. Justice Chandavarkar said in Nathu Velji v. Keshavji (5): "Roughly speaking, a suit raising a caste question must fall within one of three classes: firstly, it may be a suit brought by a member of a caste complaining of his expulsion from it and asking for a declaration that the expulsion is illegal, and that he is still a member of the caste and as such entitled to its social privileges; secondly, a member of a caste expelled from it may sue for a declaration that the excommunication is illegal, and that he is entitled to certain rights of property or office as a member of the caste; or, thirdly, it may be a suit brought by such member for damages on account of loss of caste or character. The decided cases, of which there is a large number, show that a suit involving a caste question must fall under one or other of these heads."

The present suit belongs to the third class. As regards this third class, Mr. Justice Chandavarkar says: "Turning now to the third class, suits claiming relief for loss of caste and character are in the nature of suits for libel and fall within the law applicable to the latter. The Bombay Regulation expressly provides for them. As held by West, J., in Pragji Kalan v. Govind Gopal (6), 'the Civil Courts may discuss and deal even with a caste question where the membership and the character of a member have been unjustly injured.' "

I do not know whether it is not a matter

(1) 3 Ind. Cas. 955; 33 M 67; 6 M. L. T. 290; 19 M. L. J. 714.

(2) 17 Ind. Cas. 527; (1912) M. W. N. 1220.

(3) 6 M. 381; 1 Weir 595.

(4) 13 M. 293.

(5) 26 B. 174; 3 Bom. L. R. 718.

(6) 11 B. 534.

for some regret that the Legislature should have given so wide a definition of defamation in the Penal Code (see section 499, Explanation 4) as to include caste questions within it where those questions do not involve implications as to moral character. I have heard of a theiving caste in which a man born in that caste loses "character in respect of his caste," if he is taunted with not having had a theft to his credit before he attains the adult age. If the words "character of that person in respect of his caste" in section 499, Explanation 4, of the Indian Penal Code, be too liberally interpreted, it would lead to a person taunted as above bringing a suit or launching a criminal case in respect of such an imputation.

In many cases, no doubt, a caste offence is committed by an act which implies a defect in the moral or intellectual character of the person, but the imputation of such an act is "defamation" irrespective of the fact that it is also a caste offence. The giving up of the rules of caste by birth now-a-days does not, however, always mean any defect in the moral character as is shown by the actions of the members belonging to the Brahma Samaj, the Arya Samaj and other liberal movements. That a person does not care for the rigidity of caste rules is even a sign of moral strength in many cases, though, of course, in other as numerous cases, it is a sign of moral weakness if the neglect of caste rules is due to the weakness of the will in resisting temptations of the flesh. The mere fact that Hindus who believe in caste by birth alone are just now in the majority and look down upon those Hindus who do not believe exclusively in it is, in my opinion, immaterial in the consideration of the question. It was decided in an English case that to call a man a homeopath when homeopaths were usually looked down upon as quacks, is not defamation. It follows that to impute actions to a Hindu which show him to be a reformer is not defamation, unless it also necessarily implies that he has ceased to belong to his caste. However, it seems to be now settled that to tell a man who does not wish to be out of his caste that he has been excommunicated or is out of caste, is defamation and it seems not possible to unsettle that view for several years to come.

It is well-known to every Hindu that while 30 years ago the fact that a South Indian Brahman took even his ordinary meals in the presence of a non-Brahman or on the same table with a non-Brahman might have entailed the penalty of a prayaschitham, such a risk is almost absolutely negligible now-a-days, especially in towns like Madras or Kurnool. Again, while dining with England-returned persons who had not undergone prayaschitham is even now a little risky, dining with those who have so dined is quite common and unnoticed now-a-days. Hence if a person merely refuses to associate with another, giving out as his reason that he has associated in meals with a person who has himself associated in meals with another person who has contracted re-marriage with a widow or who has gone to and returned from England, such allegations do not impute to the person about whom they are made an unworthiness to call himself a member of the caste and are, therefore, not defamatory. Unless the words used in respect of a caste Hindu are tantamount to saying "you have become an outcaste or you have been excommunicated from your caste," the words are not defamatory. Such I take to be the principles of the decisions for which Benson and Sankaran Nair, JJ. are responsible in the cases reported as Cupusami Chetty v. A. T. Doraisawmy Chetty (1) and M. Coopoosami Chetty v. A. T. Duraisawmy Chetty (2). It was held in these cases that even if the words imputed to the plaintiff a ceremonial impurity which required an expiation by a prayaschitham, provided that the prayaschitham to be performed is not of the kind which is required to bring back an outcaste into the caste but only such minor ceremonies which are performed by even those who remain within the caste and who have incurred only ceremonial impurities, the words are not defamatory and do not give rise to a cause of action for libel. I might be permitted to say that the appeal decided in M. Coopoosami Chetty v. A. T. Duraisawmy Chetty (2) was against the decision of this City Civil Court presided over by Mr. K. Kumaraswamy Sastri (now a Judge of the Court and a profound Sanskrit scholar) and that the appellate decision confirmed his views on this question.

It is rather curious that the plaintiff in this case, who has in direct opposition to the opinion of the late Head of the Sringeri Mattam (a very learned and respected and influential Matadhipathi) supported the Komatti community in their claim as Vaisyas to study and pronounce the Vedas and to perform Vedic Sandyavandhanam and other Vedokta ceremonies and who has thus definitely broken with the orthodoxBrahmans, should consider himself libelled because he was said to have become liberalized a little further by countenancing the re-marriage of widows, even to the extent of dining at feasts given on the occasions of Brahman widow marriages.

The words alleged to have been used by the defendant do not impute that the plaintiff has ceased to belong to the Brahman caste, but only that the defendant does not wish to associate the plaintiff with the defendant's ultra-orthodox purohits in the performance of sradhas in the defendant's house. I am quite clear that to impute to a Brahman unfitness to officiate or be the guest at a sradha is not necessarily to defame his character "in respect of his caste." As Manu says in the 3rd Chapter "To a student who has not read the Vedas" (now-a-days most of the caste Brahmans have not read the Vedas, though it is obligatory to read at least one of the Vedas thoroughly): "Let him never give food at the sacred obsequies. Physicians (many Brahmans are physicians), image-worshippers for gain must be shunned in oblations to progenitors. A public servant (many are public servants), a man with whitlows on his nails, or with black yellow teeth, a deserter of the sacred fire (very few Brahmans now keep up to sacred fire), one omitting to do the five great sacraments, (same observation as above), a younger brother married before the elder, an elder brother not married before the younger, the son of a twice-married woman, a man who has lost one eye, one who teaches the Veda for wages and one who gives wages to such a teacher, a man with elephantiasis, the husband of a younger sister married before the elder, a father instructed in the Veda by his own son, a blind man, one who teaches the use of arms, one who subsists by astrology, the husband of a twice-married woman, a Brahman unlearned in holy writ, a sacrificer for the sudra, is considered unfit by many to officiate as priest at a sradha." Surely if a man refuses to allow any of the above persons to officiate a sradha in his house, it cannot be held that that person is libelled or slandered in his character in respect of his caste.

I should like on the question of plaintiff's claim for damages to quote a few further passages from the judgment of Mr. Justice Chandavarkar in Nathu Velji v. Keshavji (5): "In the second place, so far as the plaintiffs claim damages on account of loss of reputation, they have not proved that their reputation has suffered or that they have sustained any damages on that account. Their own evidence and the evidence they have led proves that about twenty of their caste people still hold social intercourse with them, and all that has occurred is that the other members of the caste do not invite them to dinner or give them water. Assuming that their reputation has suffered by reason of their exclusion from social privileges by a majority of the caste, there is nothing to show that they have sustained any damage beyond the loss of some dinners, or how, if they have suffered in reputation, the damages are to be estimated. In fact, no specific issue was raised in the lower Court, nor was any evidence led on the point. On this ground, therefore, the claim for damages must fail." In the present case also it is clear that even if the plaintiff had associated with Brahmans who had partaken meals at a widow marriage, he is still in very good company and there are very influential and good men in Kurnool who are remaining in the Brahman caste notwithstanding their encouragement of the widow re-marriage movement by dining at such re-marriages, and there is no evidence worth the name that he has sustained any damages. Three witnesses have been examined for the plaintiff, including the plaintiff himself. Even his own statements do not prove that he has sustained any damages, while neither of the other two witnesses gave evidence that any pecuniary damage has been sustained by the plaintiff.

I might be permitted to state that a person like the plaintiff who is himself a social reformer, should not be too sensitive on account of its being stated that he is a reformer, not only in the matter of allowing Vedokta ceremonies to Komattis and performing such ceremonies in Komattis' houses, but also in considering that re-marriage of widows is not prohibited by the Shastras. It is even difficult to state in these changing times whether it is defamatory at all to call a person a social reformer or as one supporting reform. Unless words are used regarding a person which impute that that person is no longer a member of his caste, Courts ought not to encourage suits for libel or defamation merely because some of his (plaintiff's) castemen or even a majority of his castemen state that they will not associate with him in meals or ceremonies on the ground that he holds reformed views or has done actions which the extreme orthodox party disapprove of or that he has associated with reformers, provided these latter have not been excommunicated. In the result, I agree that the second appeal and the memorandum of objections should be dismissed with costs.

HANNAY, J.—The plaintiff sued for damages for slander, claming Rs. 50 as the amount of damages. In the Court of the District Munsif, he succeeded in getting decree for Rs. 20. On appeal to the District Court, however, in respect of the amount disallowed, the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The plaintiff now appeals.

The parties belong to Kurnool. The plaintiff is a Purohit Brahman who appears to have settled at that place about fifteen years before suit. The defendant is a Komati. The plaintiff appears to have gained the respect of the Komati community since he settled at Kurnool, for the evidence shows that although he is not himself a family Purohit of the Vaisya community there, he is allowed to officiate jointly with the family Purohits of Komattis during family ceremonies and on one occasion he was selected by the Vaisya community to represent them at an assembly when the Vedokta rights of Vaisyas came up for discussion (see Exhibit A). The defendant admits that the plaintiff officiated at his second marriage. This state of affairs continued for several years until a widow marriage was celebrated at Kurnool, which resulted in dissension in the Brahman community at that place, some approving of the marriage, while others condemned it as being contrary to the Shastras and the recognised custom among Brahmans. Those who approved of the marriage appear to have testified their approval either by directly dining with the re-married widow or by dining with those who had dined with her. This act of dining as well as other acts indicating approval are regarded by those who oppose widow marriage as a sin. The defendant's Purohits Seshiah and Viriah, are opposed to such marriages. The plaintiff, though he does not admit he is in favour of widow marriages, says he is willing to dine with persons who are in favour of them. There can be little doubt that the plaintiff's attitude in that matter has given ground for the view that he supports the party in favour of widow marriage. It found as a fact, however, that the plaintiff did not go so far as to take meals at the widow marriages at Kurnool.

It was after this marriage that the incident occurred which has given rise to this suit. It appears that on the 27th November 1911, a ceremony called Aradhana was to take place at the defendant's house. Aradhana appears to be equivalent to an annual ceremony among Brahmans. The lower Courts find that the defendant invited the plaintiff to attend at his house and to bring four or five other Brahmans with him in order to assist at the ceremony. The plaintiff as plaintiff's witness No. 1, states that the defendant asked him to bring the other Brahmans because he feared that his own family Purohits might refuse to perform the ceremony along with the plaintiff. However that may be, when the plaintiff and the other Brahmans arrived at the defendant's house, it is found by the lower Court that defendant turned them away, saying in effect that as they had messed and taken part in other things during widow marriages, his Purohits, Seshiah and Viriah, refused to attend if they were present. What the exact words used were has not been found by either of the lower Courts, but I take it that the above (which is a reproduction from the plaint) contains the substance of what the defendant said. When the lower Appellate Court sent back the case for findings upon certain points the plaintiff, who was then examined as defendant's witness No. 2, stated that the words used were: "As you have taken meals at widow marriages, our Purohits, Seshiah and Viriah, refuse to come. So you are not fit. Hence go away." The words, "So you are not fit". do not appear in the plaint or in the original deposition made by the plaintiff as plaintiff's witness No. 1. These words are plainly an after-thought on the part of plaintiff and as the lower Courts do not find that the respondent used any such words, they must be left out of consideration.

The question is whether the defendant can be said in these circumstances to have slandered the plaintiff. For the plaintiff reliance is placed upon the cases of Queen v. Sankara (3); Venkatachellapati v. Subbarayudu(4); Cuppusami Chetty v. A. T. Doraisammy Chetty (1). In the first case it was held by Sir Muthusawmi Aiyar that widow re-marriage is contrary to the usage and custom of Brahmans and other regenerate classes in this Presidency, and the case further shows that a person who attended at and advocated a widow marriage was then liable to excommunication at the hands of the spiritual head of his caste, nothwithstanding that the Legislature had legalised widow marriages by Act XV of 1856. In the second case the continuance of the general usage in the particular temple was held to be sufficient ground for excluding a Brahman, who had married a widow, from entering the temple. As regards the case at Cuppusawmy Chetty v. A. T. Duraisami Chetty (1) reliance is placed on the observation at page 69: "Words, therefore, which are intended to bring about disastrous consequences resulting from the loss of caste, such as deprivation of religious and social communion, by imputing unworthiness to any person to continue a member of his caste, are prima facie defamatory and give rise to a cause of action. They certainly may lower him in the estimation of his own caste and of other castes."

The decision of this case seems to me to turn upon the question whether at the present time attending or advocating widow marriages necessarily involves liability to excommunication and whether the defendant intended by his allegation to impute that the plaintiff was an outcaste or had lost caste status. The cases cited for the plaintiff no doubt show that in 1883 attendance at a widow marriage resulted in excommunication and that in 1890 in a particular institution a person who had married a widow was, on that ground, subjected to disability in that he had lost caste status in respect of that institution. There is, however, nothing in the evidence in the present case to show that the act attributed to the plaintiff, even if true, would, in present conditions, have rendered him liable to be outcasted or otherwise caused him to lose his caste status. The plaintiff, no doubt, says he has lost hundreds of rupees through the defendant's accusation, but he does not prove a single specific instance in which he has lost anything and he values his damages at Rs. 50. He admits he has not been excommunicated. It seems to me, therefore, that the lower Appellate Court is right in holding that the defendant has not libelled the plaintiff, inasmuch as he has not called him an outcaste and is not proved to have said anything which necessarily implies that he was an outcaste or had lost caste status. The case of Cuppusawmi Chetty v. A. T. Doraisawmy Chetty (1) is, if anything, against the plaintiff, because the words there used, "Prayaschitham must be performed as Coopoosami Chetti attended the Karmanthiram", were held not to imply that Coopoosami Chetty was an outcaste and that, therefore, there was no cause of action. See Coopoosami Chetti v. A. T. Duraisawmy Chetty (2). On the whole, I think the lower Appellate Court was right in taking the view that the words complained of in this case meant nothing more than the defendant desired no longer to associate with the plaintiff or utilize his services, on the ground that he was a sympathiser with the party in favour of widow marriage. I would, therefore, dismiss this second appeal with costs. The order of the lower Appellate Court refusing defendant his costs seems to me to be right and I would, therefore, dismiss the memorandum of objections with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL DECREES NOS. 136 AND 200 OF 1912.

August 10, 1914.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, KT., and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

Haji RAHIM BAKHSH MANDAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 TO 4—APPELLANTS IN NO. 136 AND RESPONDENTS IN NO. 200

versus

SAJJAD AHMAD CHOWDHARY AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS IN NO. 136 AND APPELLANTS IN NO. 200.

Lease, construction of—Plain and unambiguous words—Words in written deed, how to be construed—Contemporaneous usage, when ground for interpretation of doubtful words—Damages, suit for—Lessee, failing to pay Government revenue as contracted, liability of—Damages, measure of—Loss sustained by sale—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 123, 129—Gift—Registration of gift without delivery of possession, whether valid under Muhammadan Law.

Where the true effect of the language used in a lease is perfectly clear, no reference is permissible to the conduct of the parties, because if according to its true construction the deed says one thing, it cannot be said that it means something else merely because the parties have gone on so long without understanding it.

Therefore, the words of a written instrument must be construed according to its natural meaning and no amount of acting by the parties can alter or qualify words which are plain and unambiguous.

The doctrine that "contemporaneous usage is a strong ground for the interpretation of doubtful words or expressions" in a document, has no application where the document is neither ancient nor ambiguous.

In the case of sale of an estate by reason of the default of a lessee to perform his part of the contract, the measure of damages is the loss actually sustained by reason of the sale.

Obiter dicta:—

A party is not entitled to damages for breach of contract, if by the use of reasonable precautions he might have avoided loss.

The mere registration of a deed of gift in accordance with section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act cannot make up for the want of delivery of possession required by the rules of Muhammadan Law.

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 30th of March 1912.

Dr. G. H. B. Kenerick, Advocate-General, Mr. Z. R. Zahid Suhrawardy, Counsel, Moulvi Songhat Ali and Babu Sudhangser Sekhar Mukerjee, for the Defendants.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Bankim Chandra Mukerjee, for the Plaintiffs.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals are directed against the decree in a suit for damages instituted by the proprietors of an estate against their lessees, on the ground that the estate has been sold for arrears of revenue by reason of the default of the lessees to pay the revenue they had undertaken to deposit. The claim was valued at over Rs. 17,486. The Subordinate Judge has given the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 4,000. The plaintiffs as well as the defendants have preferred appeals against this decision, the former on the ground that they were entitled to a larger sum than what has been decreed by the Subordinate Judge, the latter on the ground that the claim is wholly unfounded and should have been dismissed. The facts essential for the appreciation of the questions raised before us may be briefly narrated.

On the 11th February 1892 one Kuran Mani Dasi, now represented by the plaintiffs, granted a patni lease to Safiunnissa, wife of the first defendant, in respect of an one-third share of estate No. 126 on the Revenue Roll of the Collector of Dumka in the District of Sonthal Parganas. A bonus of Rs. 5,000 was paid by the lessee, and the annual rent was fixed in perpetuity at Rs. 318-9-8. The lessee was directed to pay into the Collectorate, instalment by instalment, out of the annual rent, a sum of Rs. 308-9-8 which was the annual revenue fixed for the one-third share. The lessee was further directed to pay the balance, Rs. 10 direct to the lessor. The details of the instalments in which the Government revenue for the one-third share was payable, were specified as follows in a schedule to the lease:—

	Rs.	a.	p.
March	118	0	0
June	85	0	0
September	22	0	0
January	83	9	8
TOTAL	308	9	8

The sum of Rs. 10 was, according to the direction given in another schedule, made payable in four equal instalments in the months of Jaistha, Aswin, Pous and Falgun. The estate, it may be added, though it stood on the Revenue Roll of the Collector of Dumka included four villages in the District of Murshidabad. As regards the portion included within the Sonthal Parganas, a separate account had been opened, during the year 1881-82, in respect of an one-third share which belonged to one Krishna Sundari Chowdhurani and subsequently passed into the hands of Hare Krishna Saha, whose name was substituted in the register during the year 1888-89 (Exhibit 23). Consequently, in 1892 when Kuran Mani Dasi granted the patni lease, there was a separate account for an one-third share in the name of Hare Krishna Saha and the balance (two-thirds share) owned by her constituted the residuary share. In respect of the villages included in the District of Murshidabad the position was similar. There was a separate account for an one-third share in the name of Hare Krishna Saha, the balance (two-thirds), which constituted the residuary share, stood in the names of Sasadhar Ghose, Bankey Behary Chowdhury and Harihar Das. Kuran Mani Dasi acquired by purchase the share of Bankey Behary Chowdhury and got herself registered for a five-twenty-fourths share before the lease was granted. The position, consequently, was that the shares held by Kuran Mani Dasi in the residue of the two portions of the estate were not identical in extent. From the materials on the record, it has not been found possible to determine the basis on which the Government revenue payable by her was calculated to be Rs. 308-9-8. This much is known that there was a re-distribution of the revenue (Exhibit 14) and the instalments of the revenue were fixed as follows for the residuary share on some date not definitely ascertained, but presumably subsequent to the creation of the patni:—

RAHIM BAKHSH MANDAL v. SAJJAD AHMAD CHOWDHARY.

	Rs.	a.	p.
28th June	91	8	5
28th September ...	24	11	11
12th January ...	53	8	2
28th March ...	172	2	1
TOTAL	341	14	7

It will be observed that by the re-adjustment of the revenue, the amounts of the different instalments and the ratio of each instalment to the aggregate sum were varied. On what principle this was done has not been ascertained, but we know that Kuran Mani Dasi lost an one-sixth share by an adverse decision in a suit by Anukul Chandra Chowdhury. It also appears from Exhibit 23 (copy of an extract from the D. R. of the Collector issued on the 8th May 1908 after the revenue sale) that the residuary shares, at that time, in the two portions of the estate were different (namely, one-half in the Sonthal Parganas portion and five-twenty-fourths in the Murshidabad portion). This may possibly account for the re-distribution of the revenue. In any event it is indisputable that by the patni lease the lessee undertook to pay into the Collectorate a sum of Rs. 308-9-8 annually in four specified instalments. On the 11th January 1908 the representatives of the original lessee paid into the Collectorate a sum of Rs. 42-8-0 instead of Rs. 83-9-8. The result was that on the 20th March 1908, the residuary estate was sold for an arrear of Rs. 39-1-9 and passed into the hands of one Reajuddin. The lessees were not prejudiced by this sale because under section 54 of Act XI of 1859, the purchaser acquired the share subject to all encumbrances. The plaintiffs, who had acquired the proprietary interest by purchase from Kuran Mani Dasi on the 14th January 1897, however, lost their right in the estate. Consequently they commenced this action for recovery of damages against the representatives of the original lessee Safiunnissa, namely, her husband and four sons. They resisted the claim as entirely unfounded. They denied that there had been any default on their part and asserted that the purchase at the revenue sale had been made by the maternal uncle of the plaintiffs on their behalf and for their benefit. The first defendant further alleged that at the time of the default, if any, he had no subsisting interest as lessee, as he had many years before transferred his right by gift to his sons. The Subordinate Judge did not frame any issues before the trial commenced and when he formulated the points for decision in his judgment, did not specify the special ground of exemption urged by the first defendant, although he alludes to it in his summary of the pleadings. The Subordinate Judge has held that the defendants defaulted to pay the Government revenue, that the estate has been sold and has passed into the hands of a stranger, that the plaintiffs have suffered loss thereby, but that their claim is exaggerated. In this view he has partially decreed the suit. On behalf of the defendants, this decree has been assailed substantially on four grounds, namely, first, that there was no default on their part, as they had deposited whatever they were bound to pay into the Collectorate on a true construction of the lease, secondly, that if it be assumed that there were default on their part, the plaintiffs are not entitled to damages as they might and should have saved the estate from sale by payment of the arrears, thirdly, that the first defendant is not liable for the default, if any, and fourthly, that the plaintiffs are not entitled to more than rupees five hundred, which was fixed in the lease as the maximum amount of compensation payable in the event of sale of the estate by reason of the failure of the lessee to pay the Government revenue. On behalf of the plaintiffs, the decree of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed on the ground that the damages have been calculated on an erroneous basis, and that they are entitled to the full sum claimed. The grounds urged in the appeal by the defendants must obviously be examined first.

In support of the first ground, it has been urged that, upon a true construction of the lease, the lessees were bound to pay into the Collectorate, not Rs. 308-9-8 in the instalments mentioned, but only such sum as might, from time to time, be fixed as the revenue payable in respect of the share covered by the lease. Reference has, in this connection, been made to the fact that from January 1897 to January 1908 the lessees remitted to the Collectorate Rs. 42-7-12 gds. on account of the January instalment. Reliance has also been placed on the principle that in the construction of ambiguities in an ancient instrument, reference may be made to contemporaneous usage, as indicated in the cases of Waterpark v. Fennell (1); Doe d. Pearson v. Ries (2); Chapman v. Black (3). In our opinion there is no foundation for the contention of the defendants. The terms of the lease are perfectly plain. The rent for the lease is fixed at Rs. 318-9-8. The lessor directs the lessee to pay into the Collectorate on her behalf a definite sum of Rs. 308-9-8, instalment by instalment, the balance of Rs. 10 to be paid to the lessor in four equal instalments. No doubt, the sum directed to be deposited in the Collectorate is described as the Government revenue, but it does not follow from this description that the lessor directed the lessee to deposit in the Collectorate only such sum as might, from time to time, be determined as the Government revenue. If the sum required to be deposited in the Collectorate had been regarded as variable, the sum payable to the lessor would also be variable, inasmuch as the rent was constant. If the contention of the defendants were well-founded the covenant in the lease would have been differently framed. As the true effect of the language used in the lease is perfectly clear, no reference is permissible to the conduct of the parties. The principle upon which the defendants relied was thus formulated by Sugden, L. C., in Attorney-General v. Drummond (4): "One of the most settled rules of law for the construction of ambiguities in ancient instruments is that you may resort to contemporaneous usage to ascertain the meaning of the deed, tell me what you have done under such a deed, and I will tell you what that deed means." To the same effect is the observation of Lord Brougham in the same case in the House of Lords: "Contemporaneous usage is, indeed, a strong ground for the interpretation of doubtful words or expressions." Drummond v. Attorney-General (5). But this doctrine has no application where the deed is neither ancient nor ambiguous. This is clear from the observation of Cranworth, L. C., in Sadlier v. Biggs (6): "If there is a deed which says, according to its true construction, one thing, you cannot say that the deed means something else, merely because the parties have gone on for a long time so understanding it." Equally emphatic is the statement by Halsbury, L. C., in North Eastern Railway Co. v. Lord Hastings (7): "The words of a written instrument must be construed according to their natural meaning and...no amount of acting by the parties can alter or qualify words which are plain and unambiguous." It is worthy of note that the acts and conduct of parties on which

(1) 7 H. L. C. 650 at p. 685; 11 E. R. 259; 5 Jur. (N. S.) 1135; 7 W. R. 634; 115 R. R. 317.

(2) 8 Bing. 178; 131 E. R. 369; 1 M. & Scoth 259; 1 L. J. C. P. 73.

(3) 4 Bing. (N. C.) 187; 5 Scoth 513; 1 Arn. 15; 7 L. J. C. P. 100; 2 Jur. 206; 132 E. R. 760.

(4) (1842) 1 Dr. & War. 353 at p. 368; 3 Id. 162; 1 Com. & L. 210; 2 Id. 98; 58 R. R. 292.

(5) 2 H. L. C. 837 at p. 861; 14 Jur. 137; 9 E. R. 1312; 81 R. R. 433.

(6) 4 H. L. C. 435 at p. 458; 10 E. R. 531; 94 R. R. 172.

(7) (1900) A. C. 260; 69 L. J. Ch. 516; 82 L. T. 429; 16 T. L. R. 325.

reliance was placed in the case just mentioned extended over a period of forty years. Lord Davey in the same case adopted a similar view and referred in support to the speech of Lord Watson in Trutees of Clyde Navigation v. Laird (8). To the same effect are the observations of Shadwell, etc., in Monro v. Taylor (9), and of Lindley, M. R., in Lord Hastings v. North East Railway Co. (10). Consequently even if it be assumed that the Government revenue for the one-third share covered by the patni is Rs. 243-12-1, payable in four instalments in June, September, January and March in the sums of Rs. 65-5-0, Rs. 17-6-3, Rs. 38-3-8 and Rs. 122-13-3 respectively, the mere fact that the defendants have for eleven years made deposits accordingly, cannot in any way affect the question of construction of the lease and of their liability thereunder. We hold accordingly that the defendants were bound under the lease to deposit Rs. 308-9-8 annually in the Collectorate, and that the sum payable in January 1908 was Rs. 83-9-8. As the defendants deposited only Rs. 42-8-0 on account of that instalment, there was default in the payment of Government revenue. The first ground urged by the defendants consequently fails.

In support of the second ground, it has been contended by the defendants that the plaintiffs are not entitled to damages, as they might and should have saved the estate from sale by payment of the arrears. To justify the argument, it is necessary to establish that the plaintiffs were aware that default had been made by the defendants, but this has not been proved. The defendants contend that the plaintiffs must have known of the default, because as the defendants themselves had, in previous years, deposited only Rs. 42-8-0 for the January instalment, the plaintiffs themselves must have, year by year, deposited in that month Rs. 11-0-2, otherwise the estate would have been sold for Government revenue. This argument is wholly fallacious. In the first place no direct evidence is produced to show that the plaintiffs ever deposited Rs. 11-0-2 for the January instalment. If once payment had ever been made, evidence could easily have been produced from the Collectorate. In the second place, the mere fact that the defendants had on previous occasions deposited in January less than the amount of the instalment fixed for that month and that the estate had not been sold notwithstanding such circumstance, does not necessarily show that the plaintiffs must have deposited Rs. 11-0-2 to make up the deficiency in that instalment. The estate may not have been sold for various other reasons. The defendants did, as a matter of fact, pay into the Collectorate Rs. 252-8-4 annually during many years, which would be sufficient to meet the annual demand for revenue, Rs. 243-12-1, and cesses, Rs. 8-8-10. Moreover, the residuary share would not be sold under section 13 of Act XI of 1859 unless there was an arrear upon the entire estate; for if there is over-payment in respect of any share, another share actually in default does not run the risk of a sale if the deficiency in the one account is made up by the surplus in the other. Then again, the Collector is not bound to bring the estate or a share thereof to sale whenever there may be a default. We find, as a matter of fact, from Exhibit 18 that this very estate had been in default on more than one occasion previously and yet was not brought to sale. We hold, accordingly, that the defendants have failed to show that the plaintiffs had on any previous occasion supplemented their payment of Rs. 42-7-12*gds.* in January by a payment of Rs. 11-0-2. It cannot consequently be said that the plaintiffs were aware in January 1908 that they were expected to pay Rs. 11-0-2 and that if such payment was not made by them, the estate would be sold. It is further worthy of note that as the defendants made the deposit on the day previous to the last day of payment, the plaintiffs could not very well receive information in time to enable them to make a supplementary deposit; and after the expiry of the last date, the payment would be useless, unless the Collector could be induced to accept the payment. On the other hand, there is ample evidence to show that the defendants were aware that the sale would be held for arrears of revenue. On the 14th February 1908 their Mukhtar, Babu Ballabh Mitra, who had discovered that the estate was in default, applied to the Deputy Commissioner, in anticipation of the sanction of his principals, for leave to deposit the arrears due (Exhibit 5).

(8) (1883) 8 App. Cas. 658 at p. 673.

(9) 8 Hare 51 at p. 56; 8 Mac. & G. 713; 21 L. J. Ch. 525; 85 R. R. 194; 68 Eng. Rep. 269.

(10) (1899) 1 Ch. 656 at p. 663; 68 L. J. Ch. 315; 80 L. T. 27; 15 T. L. R. 247.

RAHIM BAKHSH MANDAL v. SAJJAD AHMAD CHOWDHARY.

This application was granted (Exhibit 19), but although he wrote to the defendants and asked them to send the money, they refused to comply (Exhibit 7), on the ground that they were not bound to pay the arrears and that their patni rights would not be affected by the sale. The Mukhtar protested against the adoption of this course (Exhibit A). But the defendants adhered to their decision and allowed the estate to be sold. In these circumstances, the conduct of the defendants is open to the legitimate comment that they should have apprised the plaintiff that the estate was in default and was about to be sold. It is probable that if the plaintiffs had been informed in time they would have taken steps to save the estate by the payment of the small sum due, Rs. 39-1-9 (Exhibit 20) and in view of the favourable order recorded by the Deputy Commissioner on the 15th February 1908 (Exhibit 19), the sale would have been averted. The position consequently is that the defendants deliberately allowed the estate to be sold and never intimated the danger to the plaintiffs who were ignorant that default had been made by their lessees. The contention that the plaintiffs could have saved the estate thus turns out to be unfounded, and there is no room for the application of the doctrine that a plaintiff is not entitled to damages for breach of contract when by the use of reasonable precautions he might have avoided loss (Sedgwick on Damages, sections 201,205). Consequently, no question arises in what way their right to recover damages would have been affected, if it had been shown that they did not save the estate though they had the opportunity to do so. The second ground taken by the defendants must be overruled.

In support of the third ground urged by the defendants, it has been contended that the first defendant cannot be held liable as he had no subsisting interest in the patni and consequently no obligation thereunder at the date of default. The point was taken in the joint written statement filed by the first four defendants and is mentioned by the Subordinate Judge in the summary of the pleadings given in his judgment. But the question is not included in any of the four points formulated by him for decision. No issues were raised in this case before the commencement of the trial. This was clearly not the right course to pursue, as questions of some complexity were in controversy between the parties. We are consequently left in some uncertainty as to whether the special ground of exemption claimed by the first defendant was really pressed in the Court below; but there are circumstances which tend to support the view that the point was not seriously pressed, and they may be briefly summarised. In the first place, the point is not mentioned by the Subordinate Judge as one of the questions for determination. In the second place, the point was taken in a joint written statement and the defendants were throughout represented by the same Pleaders, although if the point was pressed there would clearly be a conflict of interest between the first defendant and his sons (the other defendants). If the point was urged and prevailed, the whole of the liability under the claim of the plaintiff would be thrown upon the sons to the exclusion of their father. A similar observation applies to the proceedings in this Court. Here also the ground is taken in a memorandum of appeal presented jointly on behalf of the defendants who are all represented by the same Counsel and Vakil. In the third place, the evidence was not directed to the elucidation of this special defence. The whole of the evidence on the record bearing on this point consists of casual statements by Babu Ballabh Mitra, the Mukhtar of the defendants, who was called by the plaintiff to depose to a very different matter, and Bajruquddin, a servant and relation of the first defendant. Even the time of death of Safiunnissa and the date of the alleged gift by the first defendant were not set out in the written statement. In this Court it has been mentioned that, as recited in a conveyance executed by the fifth defendant on the 18th November 1910 (Exhibit 4), Safiunnissa died on the 8th May 1895 and the first defendant made a gift of the one-fourth share inherited by him by a registered deed dated the 25th August 1895. The recitals, however, are plainly no evidence of the facts mentioned, and if the first defendant seriously maintained in the Court below that he had divested himself of all rights in the patni, the original deed of gift should have been produced and proved. Furthermore, it would be necessary to establish under the Muhammadan Law that a valid gift was effected by delivery of possession, for, under section 129 of the Transfer of Property Act, the registration of the deed of gift in accordance with section 123 cannot make up for the want of delivery of possession required by the rules of Muhammadan Law [Mogulsha v. Mahomed Saheb(11); Ismail v. Ramji (12); Vahazullah v. Boyapati (13)]. A question might also arise as to the validity of a gift of an undivided share in property capable of division [Muhamad Mumtaz Ahmed v. Zubaida Jan (14); Ibrahim v. Saibo (15)]. Finally, evidence of actual possession and enjoyment subsequent to the date of the alleged gift would have a material bearing in the determination of the question, whether the gift by the father to his sons was intended to be real and operative or was a sham transaction. From this point of view, the circumstance that the name of the second defendant alone appears in connection with various transactions relating to the patni would require explanation. The fact that immediately after institution of this suit and shortly before the written statement was filed, the second defendant on the 1st May 1911 conveyed to his father, the first defendant, one-fourth share in the patni for an ostensible consideration of Rs. 3,000 (Exhibit B) may also have an important bearing on the subject. No trace of these questions, however, can be found in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, and the evidence requisite for the determination is conspicuous by its absence. The legitimate inference is that the special ground now urged on behalf of the first defendant, though mentioned in the written statement, was not seriously pressed at the trial. The third ground taken in support of the appeal preferred by the defendants must be overruled as untenable.

In support of the fourth ground taken by the defendants, it has been contended that upon a true construction of the patni lease the plaintiffs are entitled at most to Rs. 500 as damages, that in any event the sum decreed by the Subordinate Judge is excessive, and that he should not have allowed interest on the compensation, decreed at Rs. 12 per cent. per annum. These contentions must be considered along with the argument advanced by the plaintiffs in support of their appeal, viz., that the Subordinate Judge has under-estimated the damages sustained by the plaintiffs by the loss of their estate. It is necessary to bear in mind that the patni included only a portion of the residuary estate which has been sold for arrears of revenue and that the part outside the patni was in the direct possession of the plaintiffs. To measure the loss sustained by the plaintiffs, it is necessary to determine the worth and value of the residuary share which would be necessarily dependen upon the annual income derivable therefrom. The plaintiffs in their plaint relied for this purpose upon the returns by themselves under the Bengal Cess Act, 1880. These papers have been rightly discarded by the Subordinate Judge, because under section 95 they cannot be used as evidence in favour of the persons who filed them or of their representatives-in interest. The plaintiffs had consequently to fall back upon their collection papers, which if produced and found trustworthty would be the most valuable evidence on this matter. But they were produced only in respect of the villages in the District of Murshidabad and even these are obviously unreliable. There is no evidence to show that rent was ever actually realised for the amounts mentioned in the collection papers, and the officer who produced them merely stated that they had been prepared from other collection papers which were not produced. As regards the villages in the District of Sonthal Parganas no collection papers have been produced; this omission justified the adverse comment of the defendants that the papers were held back because they would not support the exaggerated claim made by the plaintiffs. Instead of these papers extracts from a Record of Rights prepared under Regulation III of 1872 and published under section 24 on the 27th July 1905 have been produced; the entries therein, however, are not conclusive. Besides the fact that they were liable to be challenged after publication by the parties affected, there is nothing to show that the rents payable by the actual occupants of

(11) 11 B. 517.
(12) 23 B. 682.
(13) 30 M. 519; 17 M. L. J. 562.
(14) 16 I. A. 205; 11 A. 460; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 433.
(15) 34 I. A. 167; 35 C. 1 (P. C.); 11 C. W. N. 973; 6 C. L. J. 695; 9 Bom. L. R. 872; 4 A. L. J. 572; 17 M. L. J. 408.

the soil were received by the proprietors themselves; there might be intermediate tenure-holders who hold under rent-paying or rent-free grants and intercept a considerable proportion of the rent. In these circumstances the only material on which the damages can be calculated is that afforded by the patni lease. We are not prepared to accept the contention of the defendants that the plaintiffs are limited to a maximum sum of Rs 500. The clause upon which reliance is placed provides that in the event of sale of the estate for arrears of revenue brought about by the default of the lessees, the lessors would be entitled to fifty-times the annual profit of Rs. 10 reserved in their favour. This clause must be read along with the previous clause that the lessee would have a separate account open in respect of the one-third share covered by the patni. The parties contemplated that if this was carried out, the only loss which the lessors could suffer by the default of the lessee would be the sale of the one-third share and a consequent loss of Rs. 10 annually. It was from this point of view that the measure of damages was taken to be the capitalised value of the annual rent reserved at fifty years' purchase. What has happened, however, is, that the separate account has not been opened and by the default of the lessees the whole of the residuary share has been sold. Consequently the measure of damages is the loss actually sustained by the plaintiffs. Now the patni lease recites that the gross income of an one-third share of the estate is Rs. 888, consequently the income of the one-sixth share outside the patni is Rs. 444. If we deduct from this amount 10 per cent. for collection charges, 10 per cent. for vacancies and also the road-cess payable, there is left a net income of Rs. 341. To this must be added Rs. 318, the net income from the one-third share covered by the patni. This makes a total income of Rs. 659 from which a deduction of Rs. 343 must be allowed for Government revenue. The capitalised value of the balance Rs. 316 at fifteen years' purchase gives Rs. 4,740 as the value of the residuary share, which fetched at the Revenue sale Rs. 2,600. Consequently the damages sustained by the plaintiff may be estimated approximately at Rs. 2,000. There is no reason why the plaintiff should be allowed interest on this sum at more than 6 per cent. per annum.

The result is that the appeal by the plaintiff (No. 200 of 1912) is dismissed with costs, while the appeal by the defendants (No. 136 of 1912) is allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge discharged. The plaintiff will have a decree for Rs. 2,000 with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the 13th January 1908 (the date from which title vested in the purchaser) to the date of realization. In Appeal No. 136 of 1912, as also in the Court of first instance, each party will have costs in proportion to his success. A self-contained decree will be drawn up which will specify the sums payable to each party by his opponent under this order.

Appeal No. 136 allowed;
Appeal No. 200 dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL SUIT No. 253 OF 1913.

October 21, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Bakewell.

C. KANDASAMI CHETTI—PLAINTIFF

versus

S. MURUGAPPA CHETTI—DEFENDANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 9—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Application to set aside abatement—Delay in obtaining Probate—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s 4—Application by executor for Probate—Acceptance of office.

The plaintiff sued defendants Nos. 1 to 4 for an account and the profits of a concern which they carried on jointly. The 2nd defendant died pending the suit on the 23rd November 1913 leaving a Will, thereby appointing the plaintiff and another as executors. The plaintiff applied for Probate on 5th March 1914, the other executor having renounced office. On 18th September 1914 the Court made a declaration that the suit had abated as against the 2nd defendant. The plaintiff made the present application on 2nd October 1914 to set aside the abatement, alleging that he hesitated for a long time to obtain Probate on account of the hostile attitude of the testator's son, that he had not yet obtained Probate and that he was under an impression that if he brought himself on the record as the legal representative of the 2nd defendant he could not sue himself:

Held, that the application was barred by limitation and no sufficient cause had been shown for excusing the delay in bringing the legal representative on the record.

KANDASAMI CHETTI v. MURUGAPPA CHETTI.

Held, also, that the delay in making the application to set aside the abatement was not accounted for.

Lakshmichand v. Kachubhai, 11 Ind. Cas. 559; 35 B 393; 13 Bom. L. R. 517, distinguished.

If, an executor applies for Probate, he must be taken to have accepted the office of executor and he becomes the legal representative of the deceased testator and the property of the deceased vests in him as such.

FACTS.—The plaint stated that the plaintiff and the defendants, who were four in number, were trustees under a composition-deed executed by a firm of debtors, that the trustees agreed to take over the properties of the debtors and pay the debts due by them at the rate of 6 annas per rupee, that they made themselves personally liable to the creditors of the firm, many of whom signed the trust-deed, and that the trustees agreed amongst themselves that the balance remaining out of the assets of the firm after payment out to the creditors at 6 annas per rupee should be divided between the trustees.

Sometime after the suit was filed, that is on 23rd November 1913, the 2nd defendant died leaving a Will, thereby appointing the plaintiff and another as his executors. The other executor having renounced office, the plaintiff applied for Probate on the 5th March 1914. The case came on for hearing on the 28th August 1914, when the Vakils for defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4 pointed out that no steps had been taken to bring the 2nd defendant's representative on the record. The case was adjourned and again came on the 18th September 1914, in the meantime nothing having been done by the plaintiff. The Court made a declaration on that day that the suit had abated as against the 2nd defendant, and at the plaintiff's request the suit was adjourned three weeks, as he desired to apply to set aside the abatement.

The plaintiff now files the application and the grounds relied on by him are (1) that the testator's son assumed a threatening attitude towards the plaintiff and his co-executor (2) that the plaintiff for a long time hesitated to take out Probate and finally determined to apply on 5th March 1914 and had not yet obtained a grant and (3) that he was also under the impression that if he came on record as the legal representative of the 2nd defendant, he could not sue himself,

Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Iyer (with him Mr. C. Venkatasubbaramiah), for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. M. Venkatasubba Rao and Radhakrishnaiya, for Defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Iyer, for the Plaintiff:—There was sufficient cause for the delay. Till Probate is obtained the plaintiff cannot represent the deceased testator. He has applied for Probate within time. Moreover, this is a case in which it is difficult for the plaintiff to judge what he has to do. I rely on Lakshmichand v. Kachubhai (1) where in order to adequately deal with the rights of parties, a legal representative was brought on record even after the period of limitation. Plaintiff is already on record. Only a formal amendment is necessary.

Mr. M. Venkatasubba Rao, for the Defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4:—No sufficient cause has been shown in affidavit for failure to make application to bring legal representative on record within six months from date of death.

Nor is sufficient cause shown for failure to apply to set aside abatement within 60 days from abatement.

Applicant is bound to show sufficient cause first, under Order XXII, rule 9, and secondly, under section 5 of the Limitation Act. He has shown neither.

Suit abated automatically on 23rd May 1914 and what happened on 18th September 1914, was that an entry to that effect was made on the record.

The cases have held that the party in whose favour the order sought to be set aside was made, acquires a vested right and the applicant must account for every day's delay.

The applicant's only ground seems to be that he was under a mistake of law or that he was not well advised. This is not sufficient cause.

Lakshmichand v. Kachubhai (1) cited by the other side does not apply. The party was in that case entitled in his own right to be made a party and did not derive that right from another. The party was added under Order I, rule 10.

ORDER.—The plaint in this case recites an agreement, under which the parties took over the property of a certain firm and agreed to pay thereout a dividend to the creditors within a fixed period and which stipulated that any balance should be retained by them as their remuneration, and alleges that the plaintiff and 3rd defendant advanced certain moneys for the purposes of the agreement, which has been fully carried out, and prays for an account of those transactions and payment of the plaintiff's share of any balance.

(1) 11 Ind. Cas. 559; 35 B. 393; 13 Bom. L.R. 517.

KANDASAMI CHETTI v. MURUGAPPA CHETTI.

As regards the parties to this suit the contract was, I think, one of partnership, and all of them were necessary parties to the taking of the accounts. The suit was instituted on 15th September 1913, and the 2nd defendant died on 23rd November 1913, leaving a Will whereby he appointed the plaintiff executor, who applied for Probate, but has not as yet obtained a grant. On 28th August 1914 the suit was posted for trial, and was adjourned, apparently because the representative of the 2nd defendant had not been brought on record; and on 18th September 1914, when it was posted again, I made a declaration that the suit abated as against the 2nd defendant and directed the plaint to be amended by striking out his name and I adjourned the case for three weeks in order that the plaintiff might apply to set aside the abatement. On the 2nd October the plaintiff took out this Judge's summons for an order to set aside the abatement and asked that the cause title may be amended by entering plaintiff as the legal representative of the 2nd defendant, or in the alternative, that plaintiff may be allowed to sue also as executor of the 2nd defendant, and that the delay in making the application may be excused. The application is not to add a party to the record, within the meaning of Order I, rule 10, of the Code, because the 2nd defendant was a party at the time of institution of the suit, and the addition to the record can only be made by bringing on a person in his capacity of representative of that defendant. In the case of Lakshmichand v. Khachubhai (1) relied upon by the applicant, the party added to the record was entitled in his own right to a share of the family property and could have brought a separate suit for partition; and it is to be noted that the order directed the party to be added as defendant, and not as representative of the deceased plaintiff, and was expressly made under Order I, rule 10. The plaintiff admits that he was aware of the death of 2nd defendant, and of his appointment as executor, but states that for various reasons he hesitated to apply for Probate for some time. Having determined to apply for Probate he must be taken to have accepted the office of executor, and accordingly he became the legal representative of the 2nd defendant for all purposes, and the property of the deceased vested in him as such (Probate and Administration Act, 1881, section 4). Under section 187 of the Succession Act, 1865, which applies to this case, the right of the plaintiff as executor cannot be established in any Court of Justice unless Probate has been granted, and this Court cannot, therefore, recognise his title as legal representative of the deceased.

I am inclined to think that, had no application to add the legal representative of the deceased been made within the prescribed period, opportunity might have been given to the plaintiff to perfect his title, upon his showing that he was proceeding with due diligence to obtain a grant, but as matters stand the Court cannot at present make the order prayed. Under Order XXII, rule 4, the suit abates automatically, and upon an application under rule 9 to set aside the abatement the plaintiff must prove that he was prevented by a sufficient cause from continuing the suit. The only reason alleged for the delay is that the son of the deceased used threats to the applicant, and there is no explanation of his failure to make an application under rule 4 during the period from 5th March 1914 to 13th July 1914, when the Court re-opened after the vacation, and the suit abated. Under Article 171 of the first Schedule of the Limitation Act, 1908, an application for an order to set aside an abatement must be made within 60 days from the date of the abatement, and this application is barred unless the plaintiff can satisfy the Court that he had sufficient cause for not making it within that period (Limitation Act, section 5).

There is absolutely no explanation of the delay except that the plaintiff was ill-advised, and I accordingly dismiss this application with taxed costs of defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

Application dismissed.

NARAYANASAWMY NAIDU GARU v. KAMURI RAMAYYA

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITIONS NOS. 569 TO 571 OF 1911.

August 20, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar.

G. NARAYANASAWMY NAIDU GARU, RECEIVER, NIDADAVOLE AND MEDUR ESTATES—PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER

versus

KAMURI RAMAYYA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Jurisdiction, how determined - Cause of action, whether affected by subsequent events - Subordinate Courts, right of.

Plaintiff's remedy in a suit should ordinarily be restricted to the cause of action with which he comes into Court. The events that transpire since will not enable him to add to his reliefs nor will they cut down his rights.

Jurisdiction lies in the forum which is competent to grant the appropriate relief at the time of the institution of the suit.

A Subordinate Court has no right to question the order of an Appellate Court when the parties are willing to abide by it.

Young v. Adams, (1898) A. C. 469; 67 L. J. P. C. 75; 78 L. T. 506; 14 T. L. R. 373, Midland Railway Company v. Pye, 10 C. B. (N. S.) 179 at p. 191; 30 L. J C. P. 314; 4 L. T. 510; 9 W. R. 658; 142 E. R 419; 128 R. R. 666, Queen v. Ipswich Union, 2 Q. B. 269; 46 L. J. M. C. 207; 36 L. T. 317; 25 W. R. 511, Rai Charan Mandal v. Biswanath Mandal, 26 Ind. Cas. 410, 20 C. L. J. 107; Govinda v. Perumdevi, 12 M. 136; Ramanadan Chetty v. Pulikutti Servai, 21 M. 288; 8 M. L. J. 121, followed.

Petitions, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the orders of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kistna at Ellore, in Miscellaneous Appeals Nos. 13, 14 and 15 of 1910, preferred against those of the District Munsif of Tanuku, in Original Suit Nos. 416, 417 and 415 of 1908, respectively.

Mr. P. Nagabushanam, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are not in dispute. The suit is one for damages against defendant for having cultivated the plaintiff's land without permission. It was instituted on the 30*th June* 1908. The Estates Land Act came into force only on the 1st of July 1908. It is contended by Mr. Nagabushanam who appeared for the plaintiff, that under the new Act the claim ought to be laid in the Revenue Court. It is also clear that prior to the Act, the Civil Courts had jurisdiction to entertain this suit. The question for consideration is whether the fact that the trial of the suit had to be commenced after the new Act came into force, takes the case from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. We are clearly of opinion that it does not. It is now well established that plaintiff's remedy in a suit should ordinarily be restricted to the cause of action with which he comes into Court. The events that transpire since will not enable him either to add to his reliefs nor will they cut down his rights. It follows from this, that jurisdiction in respect of his remedy is in the forum which was competent to grant the appropriate reliefs at the time of the institution of the suit. As was pointed out by Lord Watson in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Young v. Adams (1): "It does not seem to me very probable that the Legislature should intend to extinguish, by means of retrospective enactment, rights and interests which might have already vested." Erle, C. J., in Midland Railway Company v. Pye (2) and Cockburn, C. J., in Queen v. Ipswich Union (3) have laiddown the same principle. In a very recent case decided by the Calcutta High Court, Rai Charan Mandul v. Biswanath Mandul (4) Mookerjee, J., points out that a suit is to be tried in all its stages on the cause of action as it existed at the date of its commencement. Reference may also be made to Govinda v. Perumdevi (5) and Ramanadan Chetty v. Pulikutti Servai (6). We, therefore, hold that the Civil Courts which had jurisdiction to entertain the suit must try it in all its stages.

One other argument should be noticed. When the Civil Court originally returned the plaint on the 21st August 1908, the plaintiff filed it on the 24th in the Munsif's Court on its original side. That officer held that he had no jurisdiction and returned the plaint. Against this order an appeal was preferred to the Subordinate Judge. The Appellate Court decided on the 31st March 1909 that the Munsif had jurisdiction and directed him to take the case on his file. The Munsif again came to the conclusion that he had no

(1) (1898) A. C. 469; 67 L. J. P. C. 75; 78 L. T. 506; 14 T. L. R. 373.

(2) 10 C. B. (N. S.) 179 at p. 191; 30 C. L. J. C. P. 314; 4 L. T. 510; 9 W.R. 658; 142 E. R. 419; 12 8 R. R. 666.

(3) 2 Q. B. D. 269; 46 L. J. M. C. 207; 36 L. T. 317; 25 W. R. 511.

(4) 26 Ind. Cas. 410; 20 C. L. J. 107.

(5) 12 M. 136.

(6) 21 M. 288; 8 M. L. J. 121.

jurisdiction. We are surprised at this attitude of the Munsif. If the parties do not choose to question the order of the 31 March 1909, it was the duty of the Munsif to obey it. It would strike at the root of judicial efficiency, if the Court of first instance takes upon itself the responsibility of criticising the judgment of the Court to which he is subordinate, when the parties are willing to abide by it. We are of opinion that the Munsif was bound by the order of the Appellate Court passed on the 31st March 1909 and that it was not open to him to go behind it.

For the above reasons, we reverse the orders of the Court below and direct the Munsif to re-take the case on his file and to dispose of it according to law. Respondents will pay petitioner's costs of these petitions in this Court.

Order set aside; Case remanded.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 933 OF 1912.
August 5, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee.

SARDAKAR PODH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

BISSESWAR GOANTIA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Central Provinces Tenancy Act (IX of 1883), ss. 21, 32—Unregistered lease by thekadar, whether can confer permanent title—Sanction of zemindar, effect of—Improvement made by tenant under bona fide belief of permanent title, compensation for, whether allowed—Equitable estoppel—Landlord, whether bound by equities binding on his thekadar—Compensation, assessment of—Assessors, failure to appoint, effect of—Irregularity.

An unregistered lease by a thekadar of a village cannot confer any permanent title, although the lessee may have been in possession for a long time, nor can the assent or sanction of the zemindar in very guarded terms be construed as sanctioning the tenancy "for ever."

If a tenant under a bona fide belief that he has a perpetual lease makes a permanent improvement within the knowledge of his landlord, which is advantageous not only to his own holding but can also enure to the benefit of the other holdings of the zemindar, he is entitled to compensation on ejectment.

A landlord who gets possession of a holding by the surrender of the person who held it and who gave a permanent lease for valuable consideration, may be considered to be bound by the equities binding upon the person surrendering.

A Munsif who is authorized under the Central Provinces Tenancy Act to assess compensation for an improvement in a holding but is directed to associate with him assessors, commits an irregularity if he does not associate them, but the irregularity is such as can be waived.

Second appeal from a decision of the Sub-Judge of Sambalpur, dated 25th March 1912, affirming that of the Munsif of Bargarh, dated 20th November 1911.

Babu Satis Chandra Ghose, for the Appellants.

Babu Ram Chandra Mazumdar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Naga, who was either a goantia or a thekadar of some kind in a village in the Central Provinces gave to the defendant a lease for all time in respect of some lands, which are found to be Bhojra lands of the village, on receipt of a salami of Rs. 300 in 1893. Naga afterwards surrendered the mouza to the zemindar who, while in khas possession, made an endorsement on the lease granted by Naga saying that he sanctioned the holding of the defendant as a ryot. The zemindar then settled the mouza with the plaintiff, who is the present goantia. The lease by Naga was not by a registered document and no effect has been given to it in the Courts below The defendant, however, claimed compensation for improvements effected by him. There was no dispute in the first Court as to the fact of an improvement having been made. The dispute was as to the cost of the improvement, the plaintiff putting it at Rs. 120, the defendant at Rs. 400. On the evidence of the plaintiff's own witness the first Court awarded Rs. 300 as compensation. There was an appeal by the defendant and a cross-appeal by the plaintiff as to the amount of the compensation. The learned Subordinate Judge confirmed the decision of the first Court and there is a second appeal by the defendant and a cross-appeal by the plaintiff. The learned Vakil for the appellant contended that the lease of the defendant was a permanent lease ratified by the landlord and in any case his possession under it for a long time gave him title. I do not share the doubt of the learned Subordinate Judge as to the permanency of the lease as granted, but it is not necessary to go into that question as the lease being unregistered could not have conferred any permanent title. Assent or sanction of the zemindar also is in very guarded terms and I do not think that he intended to sanction the holding of the defendant for ever, although the defendant may have believed that the lease as granted was being sanctioned. The appeal, therefore, fails.

SARDAKAR PODH v. BISSESWAR GOANTIA.

The cross-appeal, however, raises a more difficult point. It is contended, in the first place, that the defendant is not a tenant who could under the Central Provinces Tenancy Act effect an improvement and even if it be taken that he made the improvement he could not claim compensation and secondly, that the Courts below had no jurisdiction to determine the amount of the compensation without the aid of assessors as required by section 33 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act and the rules made thereunder.

Section 31 provides that in respect of Bhojra lands the landlord alone could make an improvement. Section 32 provides that a tenant who makes an improvement with the consent of the landlord shall be entitled to compensation for the same before he is ejected, and the Civil Court making a decree for ejectment shall determine the amount of the compensation. Section 33 says the Local Government may frame rules requiring the Civil Court to associate with itself for the purpose of estimating the compensation to be awarded under section 32 such a number of assessors as the Local Government may think fit: and rule 1 under section 33 directs that the Court shall take not less than two and not more than six assessors and rule 8 directs that when the assessors are finally chosen, the Court shall fix a date for hearing the case.

No question under the Central Provinces Tenancy Act seems to have been raised before the learned Munsif. No question was raised as to whether the improvements had been effected with the consent of the landlord or if so effected, whether assessors should not be appointed. The parties seem to have proceeded on the assumption that some compensation was payable, the dispute being as to the amount. The learned Munsif says: "They constructed the munda to the knowledge of the former goantia who did not prevent them: apparently they believed they were holding as perpetual lessees, otherwise they would not have spent so much money." He then refers to the payment of Rs. 300 as salami and looking to the equities of the case, decrees Rs. 300 as compensation. The only question pressed before the learned Subordinate Judge on the cross-appeal was that assessors should have been appointed and there should be a remand for that purpose. The learned Judge said the point had never been raised in the first Court and not even in the cross-appeal and was at least an irregularity which had been waived. He says further on: "But considering the long time the defendant had been allowed to hold the land and allowed to effect the improvements without any objection and the fact that the plaintiff has reaped its fullest advantage and it has been the cause of the defendants' rents having been doubled at the last survey, I think this is a case in which compensation should be equitably allowed."

It is contended that the findings arrived at are not sufficient to support the equitable estoppel upon which relief has been granted. It was held in the case of Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (1) that a tenant for a term who has built valuable structures on his holding, the landlord standing by and making no objection, was liable to ejectment without compensation. It was not shown in that case that the tenant bona fide believed that he had good title and the facts found did not lead to the inference that there had been acquiescence by the landlord. In this case the first Court found that the defendant was under a bona fide belief that he had a perpetual lease: the second Court has not upset that finding and held further that the landlord has derived a decided advantage from the improvement as the rents have been doubled. The improvement, again, is not of a kind that can be removed: it remains where it is and will enure to the benefit of the landlord not only in respect of the disputed lands but also other lands which may be irrigated from the tank. Besides, the landlord came in by the surrender of the person who gave the permanent lease for a valuable consideration and may be considered to be bound by the equities binding upon the person surrendering. On the merits, therefore, I think the Courts below are right.

(1) 21 A. 496; 26 I. A. 58; 1 Bom. L. R. 400; 3 C. W. N. 502; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 523.

But then it is said that the assessment of the compensation without assessors is without jurisdiction and reliance is placed on the case of Kamini Dasi v. Secretary of State (2), which is a case under Act X of 1870. Section 21 of that Act required the Judge and the assessors to determine the amount of the compensation. Section 32 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, however, requires the Court to determine the amount and the rules direct the Court to associate assessors with it. There is, therefore, no want of initial jurisdiction in the Court and it is the manner in which that jurisdiction is to be exercised which has been defective in this case. In this view of the case, I think the lower Appellate Court was right in treating it as a mere irregularity, which could be and has been waived.

I, therefore, dismiss this appeal and cross-appeal. Each party will bear its own costs in this Court.

Both appeal and cross-appeal dismissed.

(2) 17 C. 380.

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 134 OF 1912.

December 7, 1914.

Present:—Sir Charles Fox, KT., Chief Judge, and Justice Sir Henry Hartnoll, KT.

THE TWINZAS OIL COMPANY, LIMITED —DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

MOWER & COMPANY, LIMITED—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Principal and agent—One limited Company acting as managing agent for another, whether can make profits in supplying goods.

The plaintiff Company were managing agents of the defendant Company and supplied to the latter, at reasonable retail prices, goods which they themselves had bought wholesale at lower prices:

Held, that the plaintiff Company were not entitled to make any profit on the goods supplied to their principal, the defendant Company.

Bentley v. Craven, (1853) 52 Eng. Rep. 29, 18 Beav. 75; 104 R. R. 373, referred to and followed.

Mr. J. R. Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Eggar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

FOX, C.J.—The plaintiff Company, Mower and Co., Limited, were managing agents of the defendant Company, the Twinzas Oil Company, Limited. Mower and Company, Limited, carried on a general merchant's business and dealt amongst other things in what are called engineering stores. The Twinzas Oil Company's field manager when he required such stores would write to Mower and Company, Limited, to supply them. Sometimes the latter would obtain them from other firms and sometimes they would supply them from their own stores. Their suit was to recover what they charged for certain stores which they had supplied from their own stock. So far as the evidence goes, the charges they made for goods supplied to the defendant Company were what they would have made to any of their customers, and were reasonable retail prices. They themselves had bought the goods wholesale at lower prices.

On behalf of the defendant Company it was contended that the plaintiff Company having been its managing agent at the time the goods were supplied, it could not make any profit on goods supplied to it, and consequently no more than the actual cost price would be charged against them.

On the one hand, vigorous expressions of the rule that no agent in the course of his agency can be allowed to make any profit out of a transaction on behalf of his principal without the knowledge and consent of the principal, have been relied on. On the other side, some more recent decisions, the result of which is that a Court should not interfere where the contract has not been rescinded by the principal and where the thing bought and sold cannot be restored, have been quoted as affording a rule which debars the defendant's contention. The learned Judge held that as the defendant Company had accepted the contracts, had not rescinded them and could not restore the goods, it was bound to pay the prices charged. He was influenced in this decision by a conisderation chiefly of the reports of the first and second stages of the litigation between a contributory and a former direction during the winding-up of the Cape Breton Company. [In re Cape Breton Co. (1)]. The report of the last stage of this litigation was not brought to the learned Judge's notice: it is to be found in Cavendish Bentinck v. Fenn (2) before the House of Lords. The facts in that case were that Fenn the Director had been a party to a purchase of some property by the Company for £42,000, which he and others had purchased two years previously for £5,500 at a time when he was not a Director of the Company. The contributory sought to make Fenn liable for misfeasance or breach of trust on the ground that the Director had allowed the Company to make the purchase without disclosing his own interest, and at a price far exceeding the value. The contributory's claim was dismissed by all the Courts, but the case is remarkable for the variety and divergence of the grounds on which the learned Judges dealing with the case based their decisions. In the House of Lords the case was decided on grounds which had not been dealt with by either of the lower Courts. One noble Lord expressly stated that he did not desire to rest his judgment on the reasons which were assigned for the decision of the learned Judges in the Court of Appeal, without questioning in any way the decisions of Pearson, J., and the majority of the Court of Appeal in that case. It does not appear to me that the judgments apply to the case we have to deal with. In that case Fenn the Director had acquired an interest in the properties long before their purchase by the Company and his becoming a Director of it. He alone did not buy the properties for the Company, the purchase was made by the Board of Directors. Some years afterwards during the course of the winding-up, two proposals were put before the Company, one that the purchase should be repudiated, and the other that it should be adopted and that the properties should be sold to the best advantage. The latter was adopted by the Company in meeting, and the properties were subsequently sold by the liquidator. It would have been strange if under such circumstances a shareholder or contributory of the Company could have been entitled to make Fenn account even if he had not disclosed his interest in the properties to his fellow-Directors. In the present case we have not to deal with agents for the purchase of specific properties. The supply of the goods, their sale and purchase were entirely in the hands of the plaintiff Company and were carried by them alone. There is nothing to show that the Directors of the defendant Company were supplying it with goods on the terms on which it was doing so. It appears to me that in such a case the rule stated in Bentley v. Craven (3) is applicable and the plaintiff Company was not entitled to make any profit on the goods supplied to its principal, the defendant Company.

(1) (1885) 29 Ch. D. 795; 54 L.J. Ch. 822; 53 L.T. 181.

It may be noted that Cotton, L. J., referred to Bentley v. Craven (3) in his judgment in the Court of Appeal in the Cape Breton case. [In re Cape Breton (1)]. He did not disagree with the decision, on the contrary his remarks imply that it was undoubtedly right, but he distinguished the case from the one they were dealing with.

In the House of Lords, Lord Herschell in some passages of his judgment refers to a description of agency, such as we have to deal with in the present case, as not being parallel with the case they had to deal with. No doubt his remarks contemplate that a Company's agent employed to make purchases of goods for the Company at market rates, who supplies his own goods at his own prices, could only be made to re-pay to the Company any excess over market prices, but he was not deciding this question, and what he said cannot be taken as overruling the long standing rule referred to in Bentley v. Craven (2).

For these reasons, I hold that for their own goods which they supplied to the defendant Company the plaintiff Company is not entitled to recover more than the cost price of the goods to themselves.

I would consequently set aside the decree of the original Court and remand the case to it for an inquiry as to the cost of the goods supplied and for a decree for the amount of the price of the goods at cost rates.

The plaintiff Company should pay the defendant Company costs of this appeal.

HARTNOLL, J.—I concur.

Decree set aside; Case remanded.

(2) (1887) 12 App. Cas. 652; 57 L. J. Ch. 552; 57 L. T. 773; 36 W. R. 641.

(3) (1853) 52 Eng. Rep. 29; 18 Beav. 75; 104 R. R. 373.

SASHI SEKHARESWAR ROY v. SASHIBALA DEBI.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL DECREES NOS. 254, 284 AND 300 OF 1912.

August 7, 1914.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, KT., and Mr. Justice Mr. Beachcroft.

IN NO. 254 OF 1912

Raja SASHI SEKHARESWAR ROY BAHADUR—DEFENDANT NO. 3—APPELLANT

versus

Rani SASHIBALA DEBI—PLAINTIFF AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

IN NO. 284 OF 1912.

Rani HEMANGINI DEBI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

Rani SASHIBALA DEBI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Contribution, suit for—Maintenance grant to widow by three brothers—Charge created on their share of properties—Sale of some properties—Maintenance decree satisfied by one purchaser—Purchaser, liability of—Contribution between purchaser and legal representatives, principle of.

Three brothers executed an ekrarnamah granting a certain annual maintenance to the widow of their fourth brother, by making themselves jointly and severally liable therefor and by creating a charge on half shares of their zemindari properties. The maintenance fell into arrears with the result that the widow obtained a decree. The plaintiff, who had purchased the share of one of the three brothers in one of his properties, satisfied that decree of the widow and sued the holders of the different properties for contribution:

Held, that the three brothers or their representatives were equally liable; and that as between the plaintiff and the representatives of his vendor the liability should be determined on the basis of the value of the properties respectively in their hands at the time when the decree for maintenance was passed.

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, Rampore Baolia, of Zillah Rajshahye, dated 21st of December 1911.

IN APPEAL NO. 254 OF 1912

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Brojolal Chuckerbutty, for the Appellant.

Babus Bepin Behary Ghose, Debendra Nath Bagchi, Priya Sankar Majumdar and Profulla Chunder Chuckerbutty, for the Respondents.

IN APPEAL NO. 284 OF 1912

Babu Priya Sankar Majumdar, for the Appellants.

Babus Bepin Behary Ghose, Debendra Nath Bagchi and Profulla Chandra Chuckerbutty, for the Respondents.

IN APPEAL NO. 300 OF 1912.

Babu Sarat Chandra Khan, for the Appellant.

Babu Brojolal Chuckerbutty, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

R. A. NO. 254 OF 1912.

This is an appeal by the third defendant in a suit for contribution. The facts which have given rise to the litigation are complicated, but in so far as it is necessary to state them for the decision of the question raised before us, they may be briefly narrated.

On the 16th July 1883, three bothers, Tarakeshwar, Kasiswar and Biseswar executed an ekrarnamah in favour of Jagadishwari, the widow of their deceased brother Jagadishwar, by which they undertook to pay her Rs. 2,400 a year as maintenance for her life. They made themselves jointly and severally liable for this sum, which was secured by a charge on a share of three estates numbered 207, 215 and 233 on the Revenue Roll of the Collector of Rajshahye. The maintenance fell into arrears, with the result that the lady sued and obtained a decree. The plaintiff who has purchased the share of Tarakeshwar in estate No. 207 and has satisfied the decree, now seeks contribution from the holders of the different properties. The share of Tarakeshwar has vested in the plaintiff and the first two defendants; the share of Kasiswar has passed to defendants Nos. 4 to 9 and the share of Biseswar is held by the third defendant, the appellant in this Court. It appears that the share of Tarakeshwar in estate No. 215 was subject to a prior charge at the time when the ekrarnamah was executed on the 16th July 1883. Tarakeshwar did not redeem the property. The result was that the mortgagee sued to enforce his security and obtained a decree in execution whereof the property has passed into the hands of defendants Nos. 13 to 15, who have acquired it free of the charge under the maintenance grant. The position, consequently, is that Tarakeshwar did not really furnish security to the same extent as his brothers did, and this has raised the present controversy as to the respective liability of the parties for contribution.

It is plain that the failure of Tarakeshwar to furnish security to the same extent as his brothers could not in any way prejudice the rights of their sister-in-law to satisfy her claim from any portion of the properties charged. It is equally clear that as amongst the brothers themselves such failure on the part of Tarakeshwar could not increase the liability upon the property of Kasiswar and Biseswar, whose representatives are thus liable to bear the burden of the maintenance claim only to the extent of two-thirds. But as between the plaintiff on the one hand and the first two defendants on the other, a question of some nicety arises. They now hold the share of Tarakeshwar, but while the plaintiff has acquired by purchase some of the properties charged under the maintenance grant, the first two defendants are the personal representatives of Tarakeshwar. When, as now, a question of contribution arises as amongst these persons, it is obviously just and equitable that the liability of the plaintiff should be determined on the footing that Tarakeshwar had carried out his undertaking and had given as security property of the same value as his brother. The first two defendants are the representatives of Tarakeshwar and cannot be allowed to take a defence which would not have been available to Tarakeshwar himself. If the brothers of Tarakeshwar had sought for contribution as against him, he could not have successfully pleaded that he was liable to contribute less than one-third share as he had furnished security to a smaller extent than his brothers had done. The answer would have been conclusive that property furnished as security by him was liable to the extent of one-third precisely in the same manner as the property of his brothers. But the plaintiff stands in a different position: she has purchased the share of Tarakeshwar in estate No. 207 and has taken that property subject to the maintenance charge, but she is under no personal obligation to satisfy the liability created by the maintenance grant. Consequently, as between her and the first two defendants, contribution must be allowed on the footing that Tarakeshwar has furnished security to the extent of one-third. This the Subordinate Judge has not done, and the result has been that a larger measure of liability has been thrown upon the appellant than she is in equity bound to bear. The liability must be determined on the basis just explained with reference to the value of the properties at the time when the decree for maintenance was made.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge modified. Accounts will be taken in this Court of the respective liabilities of the parties. The representatives of Kasiswar as also those of Biseswar will be liable to the extent of one-third each, and the properties in their hands will be made liable as directed by the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff and the first two defendants are liable to the extent of one-third, but as between them the amount payable by the plaintiff will be determined on the footing that Tarakeshwar had furnished security to the extent of one-third; the balance will be payable by the first two defendants and will be charged on their share. The order for costs made by the Court below will stand. In this Court the appellant and the plaintiff-respondent will each receive his or her costs from the first two defendants. We assess the hearing fee for each at two gold mohurs. The other parties will pay their own costs in this Court. A self-contained decree will be drawn up here in supersession of the decree of the Court below.

R. A. Nos. 284 and 300 of 1912.

In view of our decision in R. A. No. 254 of 1912 these appeals are not pressed. They are, therefore, dismissed. There will be no order for costs.

Appeal allowed; Decree modified.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

First Civil Appeal No. 1200 of 1911.

March 31, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Johnstone and Mr. Justice Shadi Lal.

THIRAJ and others—Plaintiffs—Appellants

versus

KASIM and others—Defendants—Respondents.

Adverse possession—Joint holding—Possession by one co-sharer, when adverse to other co-sharers—Revenue Records—Statutory presumption—Burden of proof.

THIRAJ v. KASIM.

There is a statutory presumption in favour of the correctness of the Revenue Records and the onus lies on the party who disputes the correctness to prove that they are incorrect.

In a joint holding, the possession of one co-sharer is the possession of all the co-sharers and in the absence of a clear and unequivocal overt act, the possession of a joint owner cannot be regarded as adverse to his co-owner.

Where the Revenue Records of two successive Settlements and the entries in the jamabandis were in favour of the defendants and the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiffs had agreed to the property in dispute being mutated in the defendants' names:

Held, that the title in the property had passed to the defendants and though the plaintiffs were in possession, their possession being permissive and in their capacity as co-sharers, could not ripen into ownership.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Montgomery, dated the 31st July 1911, dismissing the claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Appellants.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain and Messrs. Akbar Omar and Khem Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants who were plaintiffs in the District Court have appealed from the decree of that Court dismissing their suit. To understand properly the contentions and the relationship of the parties we consider it necessary to set out the following pedigree-table, which is admitted to be correct by both sides.

Kamir died sonless many years ago and for the purpose of the present litigation may be left out of consideration altogether. The dispute relates to a plot of land in village Dadan of Tahsil Montgomery, which is the estate of Mir who died before the Settlement of 1871. Plaintiffs, who are descendants of Farid and of Hadait and Narang (two out of the three sons of Amir), sue the descendants of Nathu, a third son of Amir, for a declaration that the plaintiffs are entitled to 5/6ths share of the estate of Mir in accordance with the ancestral shares and that the defendants are entitled to the remaining one-sixth and that the entries in the Revenue Records showing the defendants as owners of the entire estate of Mir are incorrect. The plaintiffs further allege that they have been in possession of that share of the land, enjoyed its produce and paid revenue assessed thereon. The defendants contest the allegations of the plaintiffs and state that Mir adopted Nathu and consequently Nathu's sons succeeded to his estate and that they were minors at the time and Hadait, the ancestor of some of the plaintiffs, acted as their guardian and that the mutation in their favour was effected in the presence and with the consent of all the reversioners of Mir. They also pleaded bar by estoppel and limitation. On these pleadings, the District Judge framed the following three issues :—

(1) Whether the plaintiffs are in possession of 5/6ths of the suit lands and a declaratory suit can lie ?

(2) Whether the plaintiffs came to know of the alleged incorrect entries during the partition proceedings and so their claim is within time ?

(3) To what relief are the plaintiffs entitled ?

He held that the revenue entries were correct and were dictated by the ancestors of the plaintiffs and that the latter have been all along cognisant of them. He further held that the possession of the parties was in accordance with the recorded shares and that the limitation and estoppel barred the plaintiffs' claim.

In this appeal by the plaintiffs the crucial point, upon which the decision of the case turns, is whether the entries in the revenue papers according to which the estate of Mir passed to the sons of Nathu, are correct or whether they were wrongly made and the plaintiffs are entitled to the property according to ancestral shares. We have heard the point argued at considerable length on both sides and propose to decide first the question of title.

It is clear, and indeed it is not disputed by the learned Counsel for the appellants, that the Revenue Records of the two Settlements and the entries in the jamabandis have for the last 40 years been uniformly in favour of the defendants. There being a statutory presumption in favour of their correctness, the onus lies on the plaintiffs to satisfy us that they are incorrect. In reply to this case of the defendants, the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has contended that his clients are entitled to 5/6ths of the property in dispute according to the rule of ancestral shares which must be followed and that they have been in possession of the property to which they are entitled. According to him, his clients were ignorant of the entries and as the holding was joint and possession held in accordance with ancestral shares, importance should not be attached to what he called "paper entries." We intend to deal with the question of possession later on, but the point which we want to settle at present is whether on the death of Mir his estate passed to all his reversioners or only to Nathu's sons. In this connection we have got an important document, D. 18, which is printed at pages 29-30 of the paper-book. It is a statement as to partition of the land of Dadan made by the proprietors at the Settlement of 1871 and appended to the pedigree-table prepared at that time. From this document we gather the following facts :—

(1) Mir's son Salehon or Saleh died sonless in the life-time of his father.

(2) Mir being sonless and of advanced age joined Nathu, son of Amir, with himself and made him his Sarbarah.

(3) Salehon's wife Musammat Fateh Bibi married Nathu, and Qasim and Rahman were the result of the union.

(4) In 1857, Nathu being a rebel was transported for life and his minor sons continued to live with Mir.

(5) Eleven years before the Settlement, i.e., about 1860, Mir died and his entire property was mutated in favour of the minor sons of Nathu, and his other reversioners and the ancestors of the present plaintiffs did not get any share in his estate.

(6) While ownership in the other two tarafs of the village, namely, taraf Nawab and taraf Ziadat, is regulated by ancestral shares, the measure of ownership in taraf Mali is not ancestral shares but rasmi hissa. It is for this reason that the tenure of the village is pattidari mukamil (presumably in two tarafs) and bhaichara (presumably in taraf Mali).

This document bears, inter alia, the signature of Narang but is not signed by Farid and Hadait. The estate of Mir having thus passed to the sons of Nathu, the entries in the column of ownership with respect to the family land in taraf Mali were made in the following manner :—

1. Sons of Nathu, 4/9ths This was evidently made up of one-third which was the estate of Mir and one-ninth which was the share of Nathu as one of the sons of Amir ;

(2) Farid's branch, one-third ;
(3) Hadait, one-ninth; and
(4) Narang's branch, one-ninth ;

There are four other villages, namely Nathu Fatiana, Chah Khokhranwala, Bahawal Fatiana and Jalli Fatiana, in which the family has got lands, and we find that in all these villages the estate of Mir has been recorded in favour of Nathu's sons and the entries similar to those in Dadan village are made in the records of these villages.

It appears that in 1870, Hadait applied to be appointed guardian of the property of the minors Qasim and Rahman, and an order (vide page 26, as to the land in Nathu Fatiana) granting his application was passed by the Settlement Superintendent on the 16th March 1870. This order and that of the Tahsildar dated the 23rd March 1870, printed at page 27, clearly show that the share of Nathu's sons was four-ninths in that village and that Hadait as guardian accepted this specification of share as correct.

The next document to which reference should he made is D. I (page 28) which is an extract from the pedigree-table of village

THIRAJ v. KASIM.

Chah Khokhranwala prepared in 1870. In this document the aforesaid shares of all the descendants of Mali are clearly specified and at page 29 is the declaration of the proprietors admitting the correctness of the particulars. The declaration bears the signatures of the ancestors of all the plaintiffs, i.e., of the two sons of Farid, of Hadait and of the two sons of Narang. Similar entries as to the villages Bahawal Fatiana and Jalli Fatiana are found at pages 45 and 47, respectively.

These are the extracts from the Settlement Records of 1870-71 and, as stated above, the shares of the parties have continued to be recorded in the same manner in the second Settlement. After giving our best consideration to the documentary evidence furnished by the revenue papers and the criticism which the learned Counsel for the appellants urged against it, we entertain no doubt that all the members of the family agreed on the death of Mir that his property should be mutated in favour of Nathu's sons who were minors at that time. At this distance of time it is difficult to say what the exact reason for this arrangement was. It might be that Nathu, as alleged by the defendants, was appointed an heir by Mir or that the latter associated the former with himself in cultivation and gifted his land to his sons. Be that as it may, we are convinced that a family settlement was arrived at and that the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiffs agreed to it. We are unable to accept the suggestion of Mr. Muhammad Shafi that the mutation of Mir's land in the names of Nathu's sons was due to the desire of their guardian, Hadait, to obtain possession of a larger area than the minors were entitled to and appropriate its produce during their minority. There is absolutely no evidence in support of this conjecture. On the other hand, as pointed out already, Hadait was appointed guardian in 1870 and Nathu's sons were recorded as owners of the property of Mir on the latter's death which took place in about 1860. Further, we fail to see why Hadait, in lieu of a temporary benefit of holding possession of the property during the minority of Nathu's sons, should permanently surrender his right of ownership in the estate of Mir and why Farid and Narang, who had nothing to gain by this arrangement, should give their consent to it.

Our conclusion on this part of the case is that in pursuance of the family settlement arrived at after the death of Mir, to which the defendants' ancestors were consenting parties, the title in his property passed to the sons of Nathu and that this settlement has been accepted by all the parties concerned during the last 40 years. We do not find any cogent reason for disturbing the existing state of things.

Turning now to the question of possession, we may say at once that there is not an iota of evidence to prove that Farid's branch was ever in possession of more than one-third share of taraf Mali which was its own property. Indeed Mr. Shafi was unable to point out any evidence on the record to show that Farid's descendants have ever been in possession of any part of Mir's lands. He, however, drew our attention to some oral and documentary evidence which need not be specified here but which certainly goes to show that the descendants of Hadait and Narang have held possession of, and paid revenue for, one-third of the total area of taraf Mali. This state of affairs fits in to some extent with the contention put forward on behalf of the plaintiffs that Mir's estate was inherited equally by his brothers' descendants, and that Farid's branch consequently became owner of one-half of taraf Mali and Amir's descendants got the other half, and hence the descendants of Hadait and Narang between themselves got two-thirds of one-half, i.e., one-third of Mali's estate. On the other hand, there is the rival theory that Nathu's sons having got the whole of the estate of Mir allowed their cousins, i.e., the descendants of Hadait and Narang, to occupy the entire one-third share which was owned by Amir, and that their possession was permissive and not intended to disturb the rights of ownership as recorded in the revenue papers. In support of this theory is the important fact that Farid's descendants have been in possession of only one-third of taraf Mali which is their ancestral share and have not possessed one-half of the taraf, to which they would be entitled if Mir's land was inherited by his brothers in equal shares.

The statement of Qasim at page 18. on which the learned Counsel for the appellants has strongly relied, lends colour to his contention that the descendants of Hadait and Narang have been in possession of one-third share of the entire taraf, but in view of what has been said above we are inclined to think that the witness's statement does not advance the appellants' case. Qasim stated that he had been giving produce of one-third share which belonged to Amir (not Mir as the District Judge thinks) to Sarang and Shadad etc., and receiving the revenue for the years in which he gave produce. This, he said, he did because Sarang, etc., were his relatives. We are of opinion that this statement is consistent with the version of the defendants and cannot be invoked to support the plaintiffs' case.

The evidence on the record is insufficient to enable us to determine the exact length of the period, whether continuous or intermittent, during which the descendants of Hadait and Narang held possession of the total area of Amir's estate, but the possession in these circumstances cannot ripen into ownership. Indeed the learned Counsel for the appellants has contended, and we think rightly, that in a joint holding the possession of one co-sharer is the possession of all the co-sharers and in the absence of a clear and unequivocal overt act, the possession of a joint owner cannot be regarded as adverse to his co-owners.

We, therefore, hold that the defendants became owners of one-third share which belonged to Mir on the latter's death and have all along been in possession of it. They are also owners of one-ninth, the paternal estate of their father, Nathu, which appears to have been in possession of the descendants of Nathu's brothers for some years, but their possession was permissive and in their capacity as co-sharers. The defendants' right of ownership in one-ninth share has not, therefore, been extinguished. In view of these findings, it is unnecessary to decide the questions of estoppel and limitation.

The result is that we maintain the decree of the District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 146 OF 1913.

July 27, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Holmwood and Mr. Justice Chapman.

RAM GOPAL SEN—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

ABHOYA CHARAN GHOSH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Easement—Easement of necessity—Use of way, absolutely necessary, whether constitutes—Obstructing right of way for boats—Non-user for two years—Suit, if barred—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 26.

The fact that it is absolutely necessary for a person to have the use of a way, does not constitute an easement of necessity.

Where a plaintiff sues for obstructing the right of way for boats in the rainy season, the non-user of the way within two years previous to the institution of the suit is no bar under section 26 of the Limitation Act.

Koylash Chunder Ghose v. Sonatun Chung Barooie, 8 C. 132; 4 Shome L. R. 144; 8 C. L. R. 281; 5 Ind. Jur. 642, followed.

Chuni Lal v. Ram Kishen Sahu, 15 C. 460, referred to Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, third Court, Tipperah, dated the 29th June 1912, affirming that of the Munsif, 5th Court at Comilla, dated the 30th May 1911.

Babus Kritanta Kumar Bose and Bepin Chandra Bose, for the Appellant.

Babu Jatindra Mohan Ghose, for the Repondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for removal of a certain obstruction in a temporay water-course, which flows over the defendant's land in the rainy season and enables passengers in small boats to pass and catch fish which are the common property of the tenants who live on the bank, and occasionally large boats of 200 to 250 maunds bearing merchandise come up to the plaintiff's house and to the house of the defendants and possibly of some other persons, though no other persons are mentioned in the suit. The learned Munsif found that there was a right of way by prescription and he also, as frequently happens in the Courts in this country, stated that it was absolutely necessary for the plaintiff to have use of this way and although he does not say so, as the learned Judge does, he seems to have erroneously supposed that this constitutes an easement of necessity. Of course it does nothing of the kind, but his finding of easement by prescription is quite sufficient and this finding has been upheld by the learned District Judge in appeal, although the learned Judge has indulged in some erroneous views of law on the question of easement of necessity.

The principal point raised by the defendant in this appeal is that the suit was barred by two years' limitation, by reason of the fact that in the year 1314 the defendant so far narrowed the water-course as to make it 2 or 3 cubits instead of 5 cubits, which had the effect of preventing large boats laden with merchandise from coming up to the plaintiff's house. But it is found as a fact that until the year 1316 the water-course was not altogether blocked and the right of the plaintiff continued to go himself and to bring such boats as he could. The suit having been brought in 1317 the lower Courts appear to be right in holding that the right of bringing boats and going up the water-course and catching fish is clearly not barred.

But it is urged that at any rate the passage of big boats laden with merchandise is barred by reason of the partial obstruction in 1314. That this is not so is clear from the explanation to section 26 of the Limitation Act which says, "Nothing is an interruption within the meaning of this section unless where there is an actual discontinuance of possession or enjoyment by reason of an obstruction by the act of some person other than the claimant;" and it was pointed out by Garth, C. J., in the case of Koylash Chunder Ghose v. Sonatun Chung Barooie (1) that where the plaintiff sued for obstructing the right of way for boats in the rainy season, the non-user of the way within two years previous to the institution of the suit was no bar, and the learned Chief Justice pointed out that illustrations in Acts of the Legislature ought never to be allowed to control the plain meaning of the section to which they are appended, especially when the effect would be to curtail a right which the section in its ordinary sense would confer. There is nothing in the Full Bench ruling in Chuni Lal v. Ram Kishen Sahu (2), which is the leading case on the subject of easements, which in any way traverses the finding in that case. That case was not cited before the Full Bench, nor had the question before the Full Bench anything to do with it. It is a particular form of easement which is as far as we know only dealt with by Garth, C. J., in this particular ruling; and it is clear on that authority which is binding upon us, that the two years' rule in section 26 does not apply to this case; although we have held that even if it did apply, it would have no force having regard to the fact that the enjoyment was not discontinued till within one year of the suit. As we have found that both the Courts have found as a fact that the prescription of 20 years is fully established, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 7 C. 132; 4 Shome L. R. 144; 8 C. L. R. 281; Ind. Jur. 642.

(2) 15 C. 460.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 116 OF 1912.

April 27, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Scott-Smith and Mr. Justice Shadi Lal.

MED SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

Musammat KABIR-UN-NISSA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 4—Appeal by several persons—Death of one of them—Failure to bring on record his representatives within limitation—Partial abatement, effect of.

Where an appeal is preferred by several persons against a decree passed against them on grounds common to all and one of them dies, the failure to bring on record his legal representatives within the period of limitation causes the appeal to abate so far as the deceased is concerned, but this partial abatement does not prejudice the appeal of the other appellants, as under Order XLI, rule 4, of the Civil Procedure Code any one of the appellants is empowered under the circumstance to appeal against the whole decree.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Hissar Division, dated the 23rd November 1911, reversing that of the District Judge, Rohtak, dated the 21st May 1910, dismissing plaintiff's claim.

Bakhshi Gokal Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is recorded in the revenue papers an occupancy tenant of the land in dispute, has brought the present suit against the recorded proprietors for a declaration that she is owner of land and that the entry in the revenue papers giving her the status of occupancy tenant is incorrect. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, but it was decreed on appeal by the Divisional Judge. The defendants who are more than thirteen in number have preferred a further appeal to this Court and Mr. Sundar Das, on behalf of the respondent, has raised a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal that as the application to bring on the record the representatives of Hira was made after the expiry of six months from the date of his death, the appeal has abated. It appears from the copy of an extract from the death register that Hira died on the 4th April 1912, and the application to implead his heirs was not made till the 30th May 1913. On these facts, it is clear that the appeal abates so far as the deceased Hira is concerned, and the question arises whether this partial abatement involves the dismissal of the appeal of the remaining appellants. Now, Order XLI, rule 4, provides that when the decree appealed from proceeds upon a ground common to several plaintiffs or defendants, any one of them may appeal from the whole decree and the Appellate Court may, thereupon, reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or the defendants. The decree in the present case undoubtedly proceeds upon a ground common to all the defendants, and it was, therefore, open to any one of them to appeal against it, and this Court would have been empowered to reverse or modify the decree in favour of all the defendants. The fact that all the defendants preferred a joint appeal does not, in our opinion, make any difference. If each of the surviving appellants could have appealed separately and asked this Court to interfere with the entire decree of the lower Court, we fail to see why the fact that he chose to join with others in filing one appeal should put him in a worse position. The partial abatement does not, therefore, produce any prejudicial effect and the appeal can proceed as if Hira had not been an appellant from the very beginning. This view of the law is in accordance with the judgments of the Bombay and Allahabad High Courts in Chandarsang Verabhai v. Khimabhai Raghabai (1); Chintaman Nilkant v. Gangabhai (2); Ram Sewak v. Lambar Pande (3). We, therefore, have no hesitation in overruling the preliminary objection.

The history of the land in dispute as gathered from the Revenue Records and other documents may be briefly stated. In 1851 the Nawab of Dadri and Bahadurgarh made a grant of the land to one Ilahi Bakhsh, the ancestor of the plaintiff, for the maintenance of a tomb. But the sanad does not clearly show whether the grant was of proprietary rights or of occupancy rights. The point is, however, immaterial, because in 1858 the estate was confiscated by the British Government and all rights in existence before the date of confiscation were extinguished. On the 17th March 1860, Ilahi Bakhsh put in an application praying that the settlement for the payment of land revenue be made with him, and this prayer was granted. But it is significant that in this application he described himself as muzara maurusi. In the Settlement of 1863 he was entered as an occupancy tenant and the village community were recorded as proprietors and in the Settlement of 1879, the entry was repeated and he was declared to be an occupancy tenant under section 5 in the Naqshah tankih-i-haquq muzarian. During the course of that Settlement the proprietors applied for enhancement of rent and Musammat Nasib-un-Nisa, the daughter and heir of Ilahi Bakhsh, applied for the correction of the revenue entry. The enhancement was disallowed on the ground that it could not be granted during the pendency of the Settlement and Musammat Nasib-un-Nisa was required by an order, dated the 23rd July 1875, to have her right declared by a Civil Court. No suit was, however, filed in pursuance of this order. During the last Settlement, the proprietors again applied for the enhancement of rent and succeeded in obtaining an order, on the 30th January 1909, enhancing the rent to four annas in the rupee in addition to the land revenue and the cesses. This order has led to the present suit.

The Courts below have disagreed on the points arising in the suit, namely, whether the suit is within limitation and whether the plaintiff has established her claim to ownership. We consider it unnecessary to give a finding upon the point of limitation because we are of opinion that the plaintiff's suit must fail on the merits. It will be observed that the entries in the Revenue

(1) 22 B. 718.
(2) 27 B. 284; 5 Bom. L. R. 90.
(3) 25 A. 27; A. W. N. (1902) 171.

BATEMAN v. BATEMAN.

Records of the three Settlements are against the plaintiff and there being a statutory presumption in favour of their correctness, the onus lies heavily on her to prove that they are wrong. The learned Divisional Judge seems to have been of opinion that the fact that the Settlement as to the payment of land revenue was made with Ilahi Bakhsh, proved that he was owner of the land. But we do not think that this circumstance is in any way inconsistent with his status as an occupancy tenant which, as already stated, he described himself to be in his own application of 1859. It appears that the plaintiff has not so far paid any rent beyond the land revenue and cesses, but there are occupancy tenants who do not pay any malikana to the landlord beyond the above-mentioned dues and they do not, on account of that fact, acquire the status of a proprietor. These two facts are, in our opinion, wholly insufficient to rebut the strong evidence afforded by the entries in the Revenue Records which have remained unaltered during the last fifty years.

There is another fact which we think goes against the contention of the plaintiff. We find from a copy of the mutation sanctioned on the 15th May 1893 that she executed on the 15th February 1896 a mortgage in favour of her agent, Syad Ali. This mortgage has not been placed on the record by Syad Ali or the plaintiff, but the mutation order clearly shows that the property mortgaged was the occupancy rights in the lands in dispute and that the plaintiff described herself therein as an occupancy tenant. This admission on her part and the omission to bring a regular suit to establish her title as directed by the order in 1875 go to show that she accepted the correctness of the entries in the revenue papers. Having regard to these facts we are of opinion that the Divisional Judge was wrong in holding that the plaintiff had established her case. We accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance. Plaintiff must pay the costs of the appellants throughout the litigation.

Decree set aside.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

MATRIMONIAL SUIT No. 21 OF 1913.

March 13, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chitty.

M. E. BATEMAN—PETITIONER

versus

G. E. BATEMAN AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Divorce—Dissolution of marriage—Petition by husband—Parties of Indian domicile—Wife, security for costs of—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 4.

In a case for the dissolution of marriage brought by a husband against his wife, where the parties are of Indian domicile and so subject to section 4 of the Indian Succession Act and where the wife has no separate property or means of her own, the Court can order the husband to give security for his wife's costs of the suit.

Proby v. Proby, 5 C. 357; 5 C. L.R. 1; 5 Ind. Jur. 248, Young v. Young, 23 C. 916 note, Thomas v. Thomas, 23 C. 913, Thomson v. Thomson, 14 C. 480, Watling v. Watling, (unreported), William Parry Jahans v. Alexandria Louise Jahans, 36 C. W. N. 414, Mayhew v Mayhew, 19 B. 293, referred.

Mr. Langford James, for the Respondent.

Mr. P. L. Buckland, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner, M. E. Bateman, prays for a dissolution of his marriage with the respondent, G. E. Bateman, on the ground of her adultery with the co-respondent, A. S. Nicachi. The present application is presented by the respondent, asking that the petitioner may be required to give security for a sum to meet her costs of suit. The parties are domiciled in this country, and it is conceded that the petitioner's income is Rs. 450 a month and that he is at present making his wife an allowance of Rs. 75 a month. It is not suggested that she has any separate property or means of her own. The application is resisted by the petitioner, and his Counsel relies on the case of Proby v. Proby (1). In that case it was held that such an order should be made under special circumstances only; but I do not read that judgment as altogether debarring this Court from the exercise of the discretion which it must undoubtedly exercise in deciding applications of this nature. The principle in Proby v. Proby (1) was followed, though not without some hesitation and reservation, by Pigot, J., in Young v. Young (2) and by Ameer Ali, J., without comment in Thomas v. Thomas (3). It was distinguished by Trevelyan, J., in Thomson v. Thomson (4) and was accepted by

(1) 5 C 357; 5 C. L. R. 1; 5 Ind. Jur 248.
(2) 23 C. 916 note.
(3) 23 C. 913.
(4) 14 C. 580.

Pugh, J., in the case of Watling v. Watling, unreported, but that was a petition by the wife against the husband, in which somewhat different considerations might arise. The case of William Parry Jahans v. Alexandria Louise Jahans (5) is no authority for either contention, as the learned Judge expressed no opinion on the point. It is noteworthy that by the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the reason underlying the decision in Proby v. Proby (1) has been removed. Notwithstanding the passing of that Act, the rule still obtains in England that, generally speaking, the husband will be required to provide for the wife's costs. This was pointed out by Farran, J., in Mayhew v. Mayhew (6). From inquiries I find that security has been ordered in a very large number of cases in this Court notwithstanding the ruling in Proby v. Proby (1). Indeed it would appear that such orders are still rather the rule than the exception. It is true that in many of such cases there may have been no contest. This appears to me to be eminently a case in which such an order should be passed. To withhold it might be equivalent to shutting out the wife's defence altogether. I accordingly order that within a fortnight from this date the petitioner do furnish security to the satisfaction of the Registrar for a sum of Rs. 400 to meet the costs of the respondent. The petitioner must pay the respondent's costs of this application.

Attorneys for the Petitioner:—Messrs. Watkins & Co.

Attorneys for the Respondent:—Messrs. Leslie & Hinds.

(5) 6 C. W. N. 414.

(6) 19 B. 293.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1574 OF 1912.

October 21, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

RUKMANI SUNDARAMMAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

MUTHAMMAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS Nos. 1 TO 4—RESPONDENTS.

Minor's property—Sale by guardian—Consideration partly for legal necessity partly not—Suit to set aside sale, when to be decreed—Conditions—Partition, if allowed between alienee and minor.

If in a suit by a minor to recover possession of the properties alienated by his guardian, it is proved that a substantial portion of the purchase-money was not required for the minor's interests or benefit, the whole sale should be set aside on condition of the minor paying to the purchaser the remaining portion, but if a very substantial portion of the purchase-money was utilised for purposes binding on the minor, the sale should be upheld and the minor given a decree for recovery of the small portion of the purchase-money not utilised for his benefit.

Kaliappa Gounden v. Deivasigamani Pillai, 18 Ind. Cas. 27; (1913) M. W. N. 795, Thalagara Rammanne v. Kalagare Gangayya, 26 Ind. Cas. 178; 27 M L. J. 132, followed.

In such a case there can be no decree for partition between an alienee and a minor who has attained full age in respect of land sold by the guardian of the minor.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 225 of 1909, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Conjeevaram, in Original Suit No. 368 of 1907.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. R. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff is a widow who was still a minor when this suit was brought by her next friend in the year 1907. Her father as guardian sold certain properties for Rs. 1,425 about $3\frac{1}{2}$ months before this suit was brought, that is on the 25th January 1907. The sale was made to the 3rd defendant. The suit was for the recovery of possession of the properties so sold to the 3rd defendant as well as certain other properties. In this second appeal, we are only concerned with the properties sold to the 3rd defendant. The plaintiff is the appellant in this second appeal.

The lower Appellate Court found that the plaintiff's father had no necessity to sell the entire properties, i. e., 4 acres of wet land and 4 acres of dry land, and that the sale of the said properties was not beneficial to the minor's interests. The District Judge's findings are (a) that only Rs. 680 was required to discharge the antecedent debts left by the minor's husband and to meet the plaintiff's husband's sister's marriage expenses, (b) that a sale of one-half of the properties mentioned in Exhibit I would have been sufficient to meet those necessities. On the above findings the sale under Exhibit I was set aside as regards one-half of the properties sold under it. The learned District Judge gave the following directions in his decree in addition to the provisions in the decree of the District Munsif: (a) The plaintiff do recover from the defendants one-half of the lands sold by the plaintiff's father to the 3rd defendant under Exhibit I (excluding item I of the B schedule which, though included in the sale-deed, was stated by the 3rd defendant to have been included in his sale-deed by mistake and which was decreed wholly to the plaintiff by the District Munsif); (b) that the plaintiff be declared liable to pay maintenance to the 1st defendant; (c) that the division of the lands into two shares do take effect in June and July 1907, and (d) that the mesne profits be determined at the time of execution.

The contentions urged before us by Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar for the plaintiff are (1) that the lower Court erred in its declaration as regards the plaintiff's liability to grant maintenance to the 1st defendant as the question did not arise for consideration in the present suit, (2) that on the view of the lower Appellate Court that only a portion of the consideration for Exhibit I was required in the interest of the minor plaintiff, the lower Appellate Court ought to have only directed the re-payment of the same to the 3rd defendant but ought not to have upheld the sale as regards one-half of the properties.

The first contention is clearly right, as the questions whether the 1st defendant was entitled to claim maintenance from the plaintiff, the extent of that claim and whether it has been already satisfied either wholly or in part—these questions have nothing to do with the present suit which was brought by the plaintiff as her husband's heir for possession of the properties illegally enjoyed by the defendants.

As regards the other contention, the respondent's learned Vakil has been unable to refer us to any precedent in support of the course taken by the District Judge, namely, the setting aside of a sale-deed executed by a minor's guardian so far as a portion of the properties contained in such sale-deed is concerned, upholding the sale as regards the other portion contained in the same sale-deed. In Kaliappa Gounden v. Deivasigamani Pillai (1) Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., held that, where a minor whose lands were sold for Rs. 850 benefited only to the extent of Rs. 300 by the sale, the sale should be set aside in its entirety and the minor should be decreed possession of the property conditionally on his paying the Rs. 300 to the purchaser. In Thalagara Rammanne v. Kalagare Gangayya (2), Miller and Tyabji, JJ., held that where a sale effected under two conveyances for Rs. 1,300 by a Hindu widow was supported by necessity to the extent of Rs. 1,022, the purchaser was entitled to retain the lands conveyed under both sale-deeds, directing him however to pay the reversioners the balance of Rs. 278 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the death of the widow. It will be seen from these and similar precedents that according to the circumstances, the relief granted to the plaintiff takes either of two shapes, namely, either the whole sale complained of is set aside, on condition of the plaintiff's paying to the purchaser that portion of the purchase-money which was utilised for purposes binding on the plaintiff, or the plaintiff, while refused the relief of setting aside the sale, is given a decree for that portion of the purchase-money which was not utilised for his benefit. Where a substantial portion of the purchase-money was not required for the plaintiff's interests or benefit, the whole sale is set aside on condition of the plaintiff's paying to the purchaser the remaining portion. Where, however, a very substantial portion of the purchase-money was utilised for purposes binding on the plaintiff, the sale is upheld, but the plaintiff is given a decree for recovery of the small portion of the purchase-money not utilised for his benefit.

In the present case, the learned District Judge finds that only Rs. 680 of the Rs. 1,425 mentioned in Exhibit I as the purchase-money was required and utilised for purposes beneficial to or binding on the plaintiff. In arriving at the figure Rs. 680, the District Judge seems to have committed a slight arithmetical error, into which he was apparently led by the admission of the plaintiff's own Vakil who argued the case before the District Judge. In paragraph 3 of his judgment the learned District Judge says that Rs. 1,425 is made up of (1) a debt of Rs. 160 to the Town Bank, (2) a debt of Rs. 125 to one Venkatarama Sastri, (3) Rs. 220 for the expenses of the forthcoming marriage of the sister of the plaintiff's husband and (4) Rs. 415 said to be due on accounts to the 2nd defendant, and he professes to take these four figures from the consideration portion of the sale-deed Exhibit I (besides a sum of Rs. 525 for which a pro-note was executed). But turning to that consideration portion, I find that it is not Rs. 220, but only Rs. 200, which is mentioned as required for the expenses of the forthcoming marriage of the sister of the plaintiff's husband. The lower Appellate Court makes up this Rs. 680 evidently thus: (1) due to the Town Bank Rs. 160, (2) due to one Venkatarama Sastri Rs. 125, (3) required for marriage expenses Rs. 220 and (4) due to 2nd defendant on accounts (Rs. 415 the figure arrived at on the accounts minus Rs. 231 barred) Rs. 184. Total Rs. 689 or roughly Rs. 680. If we substitute Rs. 200 for Rs. 220, the correct figure is Rs. 669. The 1st to 3rd respondents in their memorandum of objections contend that the lower Appellate Court's finding that only Rs. 184 of the sum of Rs. 415 was not barred by limitation is erroneous.

(1) 18 Ind. Cas. 27; (1913) M. W. N. 795.
(2) 26 Ind. Cas. 178, 27 M. L. J. 132.

I think this contention is sound. Rupees 415 is the sum due on the accounts only after deducting Rs. 93 given up by the 2nd defendant, husband of the 3rd defendant. The arbitrator's award shows that Rs. 508 is the real sum due on the accounts and that Rs. 415 is arrived at after deducting the Rs. 93 given up by the 2nd defendant. The Rs. 231 barred by limitation is a part of this total sum of Rs. 508 and not merely a part of the balance of Rs. 415 arrived at by deducting Rs. 93 out of Rs. 508. The plaintiff gave up Rs. 93, therefore, out of the whole Rs. 508 and hence the sum due to him on the accounts excluding what is barred by limitation, is Rs. 508 minus Rs. 231 or Rs. 277, and not Rs. 415 minus Rs. 231 or Rs. 184 only. Hence the correct amount is Rs. 160 plus Rs. 125 plus Rs. 277 or Rs. 762 and not merely Rs. 680 or Rs. 669.

It appears from the evidence that the balance of the purchase-money (Rs. 1,425 minus 762 i. e., Rs. 663) was not even paid in cash by the 2nd and 3rd defendants to the plaintiff's guardian, but a pro-note seems to have been executed for Rs. 525 to him. I do not think that in these circumstances the purchaser is entitled to have the sale confirmed. But I think that the sale should be wholly set aside on condition of plaintiff's paying Rs. 762 within three months (to be paid to the 2nd and 3rd defendants).

As regards the memorandum of objections, it embodies three conditions: (1) that the whole sale to the 3rd defendant should be upheld in its entirety, (2) that not only Rs. 184 but Rs. 277 should be held to be the sum due under the accounts even excluding the Rs. 231 barred, (3) that as an arbitrator has held that Rs. 415 was due on the accounts, the lower Courts should have held that Rs. 415 was so due even though Rs. 142 (Rs. 231 minus Rs. 93) out of the said Rs. 415 was barred by limitation.

For the reasons already given, I think that the whole sale should be set aside and hence the first contention could not be allowed. The second contention must be upheld. As regards the third contention, the only matter referred to arbitration was what sum was due on the accounts as they stood and not what sum was legally due by the plaintiff to the 3rd defendant on the accounts. The arbitrator refused to go into the question of the bar of limitation and he deducted Rs. 93 out of Rs. 508, not because it was part of the sum of Rs. 231 barred by limitation, but because the 2nd defendant gave it up at the time of Exhibit I.

In the result, in supersession of the lower Court's decree the plaintiff will be given a decree (1) for possession unconditionally of item I in the B schedule, (2) for possession of the other items in the B schedule on condition that she pays into Court within three months from this date the sum of Rs. 762 to be paid to the defendants Nos. 2 and 4, (3) that on her becoming so entitled to possession she be also given a supplemental decree for mesne profits, after due inquiry from the date of payment of Rs. 762 into Court till delivery in execution, from the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as regards lands other than item 1, (4) that she get mesne profits from the 5th defendant on item 1 for the period claimed in the plaint to be determined by a supplemental decree, (5) that the 5th defendant do pay proportionate costs in the District Munsif's Court to the plaintiff as found in the District Munsif's decree and (6) that plaintiff do bear her own costs in other respects as also defendants Nos. 2 and 3. It is declared that in the pro-note for Rs. 525 standing in plaintiff's father's name, plaintiff has no interest whatever.

NAPIER, J.—I entirely concur in my learned brother's view that there can be no decree for partition between an alienee and a minor who has attained full age, in respect of land sold by the guardian of the minor. There is not a trace of the exercise of such a jurisdiction by the Court of Chancery nor in the two decisions of the Privy Council Hanoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj Koomwaree (3) and Lalla Bunseedhur v. Kunwar Bindeseree Dutt Singh (4). In the latter case the Board laid down that where there is an innocent purchaser, the Court exercising equitable jurisdiction may withhold its hand (in which case, of course, the remedy of the minor would be against the guardian), but "where the alienee has failed to relieve himself of the burden which the law casts upon him of showing that he had good grounds for supposing that the transaction was for the benefit of the estate, then the instrument cannot be supported." The only remaining question is, on what terms is the Court to intervene in the minor's favour? In the case above quoted the Board decided that restoring the property to the respondent on the terms of paying to the appellant what may be justly due to him was a more equitable course than what was proposed in that case on behalf of the alienee. I take that in the view of the Board that is the proper method. In this case it is obvious that an alienee who in respect of part of the purchase-money gave personal security instead of cash cannot have thought that the transaction was for the benefit of the estate. The lower Appellate Court has found that Rs. 680 out of the Rs. 1,425 was required and utilised for purposes binding on the minor. There is no finding that any larger sum could be allowed on the ground that the alienee had good reason for believing it to be required, and in fact not much more could be claimed as Rs. 680 added to Rs. 525, the amount of the promissory-note, is Rs. 1,205 as against the total consideration of Rs. 1,425. Speaking for myself I should accept the figure of Rs. 680, but my learned brother has seen his way to go into the question of the correctness of the figures and though I have doubts whether we have any jurisdiction to do anything of the sort [vide the decision of the Privy Council in Ravi Veeraraghavulu v. Sri Raja Bomma Devara Venkata Narasimha Naidu Bahadur (5)] I will not differ from him and I, therefore, concur in the decree set out in the judgment just delivered.

Appeal allowed.

(3) 6 M. I. A 393; 18 W. R. 81; 19 E. R. 147; Sevestre 253 n; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 29; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 552.

(4) 10 M I.A. 454; 19 E. R. 1044; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 167.

(5) 25 Ind. Cas. 305; (1914) M. W. N. 695; 16 M. L. T 262; 1 L. W. 779; 27 M. L. J. 451; 20 C. L. J. 375; 37 M. 443; 19 C. W. N. 97; 16 Bom. L. R 853.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1330 OF 1912.

October 31, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Johnstone and Mr. Justice Shadi Lal.

ATA MUHAMMAD KHAN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Musammat JIWANI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Succession - Presumption — Onus — Barki Sayads of Basti Pirdad Khan, Jullundur District—Daughters, whether exclude nephews.

The presumption according to Customary Law being in favour of the exclusion of a daughter by a near collateral, the onus is on the daughter to prove an exception to this rule.

Among Barki Sayads of Basti Pirdad Khan, Jullundhur District, a daughter succeeds to the ancestral estate of the father to the exclusion of his nephews.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Ambala Division, dated the 1st May 1911, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, first Class, Jullundur, dated the 3rd October 1910, dismissing the claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., and Sheikh Umar Bakhsh, for the Appellant.

ATA MUHAMMAD KHAN v. JIWANI.

Mr. Fazl-i Hussian, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to succession to the estate of one Alaf Khan, a Barki Sayad of Basti Pirdad Khan, one of the several bastis in the neighbourhood of the town of Jullundur. The property, which is the subject-matter of the litigation, is a house and the contest is between Alaf Khan's daughters, who are in possession thereof, and his nephew, Ata Muhammad, whose suit for possession has been dismissed by both the Courts. The learned Divisional Judge has found, and the finding has not been challenged before us, that the property is ancestral qua the plaintiffs, and both the Courts have concurred in holding that in the tribe of the parties a custom by which a nephew is excluded by a daughter from succession to the ancestral immoveable property of a deceased proprietor, has been established. The Courts below have, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

From the decree dismissing his suit, the plaintiff has preferred a further appeal to this Court, and we have heard the case argued at length by Mr. Muhammad Shafi for the appellant and Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain for the respondents, and have arrived at the conclusion that the judgments and decrees of the lower Courts are correct and that this appeal must be dismissed.

The parties are admittedly governed by custom and the sole question, which requires determination in this appeal, is whether by custom obtaining among Barki Sayads of Basti Pirdad Khan a daughter is entitled to succeed to her father's ancestral property to the exclusion of her father's nephew. According to the rule of the Customary Law generally applicable to agricultural tribes in this province, the presumption, at the outset, is in favour of the exclusion of a daughter by a near collateral and the onus is on the daughter to prove an exception to this rule. We have carefully examined the evidence, both oral and documentary, and are of opinion that there is ample material on the record to justify an affirmative finding in favour of the custom set up by the respondents.

To start with, the Riwaj-i-am is in favour of the defendants-respondents. According to this document (1) in two tribes, i.e., Arains and Sheikh Ansaris, daughters, in the absence of the sons, can succeed under written authority of their father and without such written authority, daughters are only to be excluded by collaterals up to the 5th degree, but (2) in the two tribes—Afghan Lodhi and Sayad Barki (i.e., the tribe of the present parties), daughters succeed in the absence of male issue to the exclusion of all collaterals without written authority from their father. Judging from the manner in which the customs of the different tribes are stated and differentiated, we are inclined to attach very great weight to this record of custom. This entry in the Riwaj-i-am has, moreover, a special value as it gives expression ante litem motam to the opinion of males in favour of the rights of females; vide the observations of a Division Bench of this Court in Achhar Singh v. Mehtab Singh (1). Further, it is to be borne in mind that the tribe is an endogamous one and though the record does not clearly show whether the defendants in the present case are married in the family, the fact that two of them are married in this Basti, the Sayads of which are descended from a common ancestor, lends support to the allegation that their husbands are collaterals of their father.

In these circumstances, we are inclined to take the view that, in accordance with the principle enunciated in several judgments of this Court [vide, inter alia, Hem Raj v. Sabiba (2); Sheran v. Sharman (3)], the entry in the Riwaj-i-am, standing by itself, would be quite sufficient to shift the onus on to the plaintiff. But in the present case, the defendants have also adduced several instances in support of their right of succession which have been set out in extenso in the judgment of the Court of first instance. Without going outside the family of the parties, we find there are five clear instances in this family in which daughters have succeeded to the property of their fathers to the exclusion of the nephews. They are as follows :—(1) Musammat Daulat Bibi, the grandmother of the plaintiff and the mother of the deceased Alaf Khan, inherited the estate of her father, Kadar Dad Khan, in the presence of the latter's nephews. (2) Musammat Piar Bano, her first cousin, succeeded to her father to the exclusion of the nephews, Hayat Khan and Sher Dad. (3) Musammat Piar Bano's daughter, Musammat Umran, succeeded after her in the presence of near collaterals. (4) Musammats Chanan and Sahib Bibi succeeded to the property of their father, Mirza Ali Khan, in the presence of his nephew, Abas Ali Khan. (5) Musammat Gul Bibi and her two sisters inherited the estate of their father, Mohkam-ud-Din to the exclusion of his nephews. The extracts from the pedigree-tables set out in the judgment of the learned Divisional Judge and other oral and documentary evidence clearly established the fact that in the above cases daughters succeeded in preference to nephews.

(1) 81 P. R. 1907; 134 P. L. R. 1908.
(2) 116 P. R. 1901; 178 P. L. R. 1901.
(3) 117 P. R. 1901; 182 P. L. R. 1901.

The Riwaj-i-am, supported by these instances in the plaintiff's family, is, in our opinion, quite sufficient to prove the case of the defendants, and we do not think it necessary to labour the point by noticing other instances which have occurred among Barki Sayads of other Bastis and which have been detailed in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge. We must, however, mention here an unreported judgment of this Court which was not cited before us by the learned Counsel for the parties, but which has an important bearing on the present case. In the case of Azmat Ali and others v. Musammats Abdan and Umra (Case No. 906 of 1866) the plaintiffs, who were nephews and grand-nephews of a deceased proprietor, contested the right of his widow to make a gift of his estate to his daughter's son. It was held by the Commissioner of Jullundur, after an inquiry on remand and by this Court on appeal, that the gift was valid. This judgment is cited with approval in Bunyad Ali v. Faiz Muhammad (4) and seems to support the case set up by the defendants.

The defendants have thus made out a very strong case and there is absolutely no rebuttal thereof by the plaintiff. A few instances were, it seems, relied upon by him before the lower Courts, but they were, on examination, found to have no bearing on the issue between the parties. In this Court, the learned Counsel for the appellant has not even referred to them and we must, therefore, assume that they do not support his contention. We accordingly find that the defendants have satisfactorily proved that, in the tribe of Barki Sayads of Basti Pirdad Khan, a daughter succeeds to the ancestral estate of her father to the exclusion of his nephews. We, therefore, affirm the decree of the Divisional Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(4) 173 P. R. 1889.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 256 OF 1912.

May 7, 1914.

Present:—Sir Henry Richards, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Tudball.

DURGA PRASAD PANDE AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

FATEH BAHADUR SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Pre-emption—Custom—A share of a mahal confiscated by Government—Custom already prevailing in the mahal, whether affected by confiscation—"Karibi wa khandani," whether a widow related through a female is.

The confiscation of a share in a mahal by the Government does not affect the custom of pre-emption which was in existence prior to the confiscation, and the grantee of the confiscated share has a right of pre-emption as against a stranger.

Where there is a preferential claim of pre-emption on the ground of the pre-emptor being both "karibi wa khandani" with the vendor, a Hindu widow whose relationship with the vendor is through a female and who is 12 degrees removed from the vendor, is not karibi wa khandani and has no preferential right.

First appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge of Gorakhpur, dated 11th April 1912.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sunder Lal, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Jang Bahadur Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This and the connected Appeal No. 257 of 1912 arise out of two pre-emption suits brought by rival pre-emptors to secure property in the village of Khartam Sarai, which was transferred by the defendant, Fateh Bahadur Singh, on the 8th of November 1910, to the second defendant, Pandit Govind Prasad.

The appellants in the present appeal are the plaintiffs, Durga Prasad Pande and Ganga Prasad Pande. Their case is that there is a custom of pre-emption prevailing in the village under which they have a right to pre-empt the property sold as against the vendee, Pandit Govind Prasad, who is an entire stranger to the village community. Musammat Adhar Kunwari, the plaintiff in the connected suit, is a co-sharer also in the mahal. She also pleaded the existence of a custom of pre-emption and claimed that she had a right preferential to that of the other plaintiffs, Durga Prasad and Ganga Prasad. Each set of plaintiffs was made a defendant to the other parties' suit.

The Court below has dismissed the suit of Durga Prasad Pande and Ganga Prasad Pande, on the ground that though there is a custom of pre-emption existing in the village, it is a custom which is enforcible only among the co-sharers owning 12 annas out of 16 annas in the mahal, that, therefore, these plaintiffs have no right whatever. as they own the other 4-annas share and that Musammat Adhar Kunwari has a right to pre-empt the whole. It came to a conclusion as to the true sale consideration and gave Musammat Adhar Kunwari a decree for possession conditional on the payment of the amount fixed within a certain period. Durga Prasad Pande and Ganga Prasad Pande have appealed in both cases. The vendee, Pandit Govind Prasad, has not appealed against the decree passed in favour of Musammat Adhar Kunwari. It is pleaded on behalf of the present appellants that the finding of the Court below that a custom of pre-emption does not extend to the owners of the 4 annas owned by these two appellants is incorrect, and that the evidence clearly shows that the custom applies to the whole village. They accept the amount of consideration found to be correct by the Court below, and they plead that Musammat Adhar Kunwari has no right to pre-emption in preference to their own; but they as co-sharers in the same thok with the vendor have a right preferential to her.

In the year 1833 when a settlement was made in the village, the whole village was owned by two branches of a family of Kayasthas. In the Wajib-ul-arz drawn up that year in clause 10 it was clearly set forth that a custom of pre-emption existed in the village under which no co-sharer could transfer to an outsider without first offering the property to the co-sharers of the village. The village consisted of two thoks. each of 8 annas. One thok was owned by Bhia Chitan Baksh and the other thok (Bakht Rai) by other members of the family, whose property was in the hands of mortgagees, Sarabjit Rai and others. At the time of the Mutiny, owing to rebellion on the part of Banke Behari Lal and another (two of the co-sharers owning a 4-annas share in one of the thoks) Government confiscated their 4-annas undivided share. The Wajib-ul-arz of the Settlement of 1860 shows that prior to that Settlement Government had bestowed this confiscated 4-annas share upon one Ram Prokash Pande. In the Wajib-ul-arz, at the commencement, are entered the names of the four co-sharers who were members of the Kayastha family, but in the opening preamble there is also mention made of Ram Prokash Tande and the fact of the grant to him by the Government. In paragraph 7 the co-sharers set forth that " We Kunj Behari, Ram Prokash and Bhia Suraj Bali Singh have been appointed lambardars by common consent." In paragraph 16 the co-sharers set forth the manner in which they collected the rents of the village. In clause 6 is set forth the custom of pre-emption. Under it if a co-sharer wishes to transfer his share, he was bound to offer it first of all to the co-sharers of the village before making any such transfer. The custom, it would seem, is exactly the same as set forth in the Wajib-ul-arz of 1833. There cannot be any doubt whatsoever that Ram Prokash Pande was a co-sharer at the time of that Settlement and that he was a party to the Settlement.

We next come to what is known as the zamima khewat drawn up in the year 1884 (at the last Settlement of the district). The 4-annas share which had been granted to Ram Prokash Pande was at that time in the hands of his descendants. In clause 2 of the zamima khewat is set forth a custom of pre-emption giving every co-sharer a right to transfer his share, subject to the condition that the first right of purchase will vest in one who is a near co-sharer and belongs to the family of the vendor; that the next right would vest in the co-sharer in the patti and the third, in the co-sharers in other pattis. It will be noticed that this custom is an amplification of the simple custom which was set out at the two former Settlements. It will also be noticed that it gives a prior right to a co-sharer who is a member of the same family as the vendor. At this Settlement the co-parcenary body consisted of the Brahmans who owned a 4-annas share and the Kayastha who owned the remaining 12-annas share. The village still consists of two thoks of 8-annas each. The property which is the subject-matter of this suit is in that 8-annas thok in which the Brahmans own a 4-annas share. The share owned by Musammat Adhar Kunwari is in the other 8-annas thok in which the vendor has no share. The Court below has held, and, the same plea has been maintained before us, that by reason of the confiscation of the property of Chail Behari Lal and Banke Behari Lal the custom of pre-emption which was in existence prior to the confiscation, no longer applied to the ownership of the 4-annas share, and, therefore, when the Government granted this property to Ram Prokash Pande, Ram Prokash had no right of pre-emption whatsoever under the custom in any portion of the remaining 12-annas share. In the circumstances of the present case we do not think there is any force in this contention. In the year 1860 when Ram Prokash was a co-sharer in the village, the custom was set forth in exactly the same manner as it had been in the year 1833. In the year 1884 when the custom was again set forth but with considerably more detail, the Brahmans were still co-sharers in the village and the fact that the prior right of pre-emption was given to the co-sharers of the same family, is a strong indication that when that zamima khewat was dictated by the co-sharers, the latter contemplated that property owned by members of the Brahman family ought to be transferred, and should go primarily, to another member of that family. In the present case the vendor was a member of the Kayastha family whose property had never been confiscated and whose property was still within the custom. The Brahman pre-emptors are co-sharers in the village and they come well within the custom as set out in the Wajib-ul-arz. In this view, in our opinion, the plaintiffs' claim as against the vendee, who admittedly is an entire stranger, ought to have been decreed subject to the right of the rival pre-emptor.

In regard to the contest between the rival pre-emptors, the question is which, if either of them, has a prior right to pre-empt. Ganga Prasad Pande and Durga Prasad Pande are co-sharers in the same thok as the vendor. Musammat Adhar Kunwari as noted already is a co-sharer in the other thok. She claims preference on the ground that she is both "karibi wa khandani" with the vendor. She put forth her own pedigree which is printed at page 20 of the respondents' book. Assuming it to be correct, on her own showing she is 12 degrees removed from the vendor, and such relationship as exists between them is through a female, the daughter of Lalji, the son of the common ancestor Kesri Singh. As ordinarily understood she could hardly be called a khandani, but even assuming that the word has been used loosely, it would be impossible to say that she was karibi, being at least 12 degrees removed from the vendor. In our opinion she has failed to show that she has a preferential right, and as she is a co-sharer in another thok her rights are inferior to those of the appellants, Durga Prasad and Ganga Prasad.

The result of the appeal will, therefore, be that the claim of Durga Prasad and Ganga Prasad Pande for possession of the property sold is decreed conditional on their paying the sum of Rs. 6,066-7-0 into Court within a period of three months from to-day's date. If they so deposit the money they will recover their costs in all Courts. On the other hand if they fail to fulfil the condition, their suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Courts and in case of their default, Musammat Adhar Kunwari will have a further period of one month from the end of the period allowed to Ganga Parsad and Durga Prasad within which to deposit the sum of Rs. 6,200, which sum she had offered to pay to the vendee, if she wishes to take the property. If she fails to pay within the time allowed, her suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Courts. If she deposits the amount, then she will get her costs in the Court below from the vendee.

Decree varied.

CHARAGH DIN v. AHMAD DIN.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 416 OF 1910.

October 15, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shah Din and Mr. Justice Scott-Smith.

CHARAGH DIN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

AHMAD DIN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Specific performance—Agreement to sell—Subsequent sale to third party—Notice.

Where A and B agreed to sell a house to the plaintiff, receiving a certain sum as earnest money, and subsequently sold their respective shares in the house to C, who was proved to have notice of the agreement:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession and for registration of the sale-deed

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 6th January 1910, decreeing claim in part.

Pandit Rambhaj Datta, for the Appellant.

Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain and Moulvi Ahmad Din, for Charagh Din, Malak Muhammad Hussain, for Ahmad Din, and Lala Tirath Ram, for Mehr Din, Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the suit out of which this appeal arises are given clearly in the judgment of the lower Court. Briefly they are as follows. Ahmad Din and Mehr Din, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, agreed to sell a certain house to the plaintiff under written agreements, dated the 16th January and 15th June 1906. When the first agreement was written they received Rs. 700 as earnest money and agreed to take the balance, Rs. 5,300, within ten months. A penalty of Rs. 500 was provided for non-performance of the contract of sale. When the second agreement was written, a further advance of Rs. 300 was received by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and they agreed to sell the house within two months and the penalty for non-performance was raised to Rs. 1,000. At the time when the agreements were executed, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had a suit pending in regard to the house with one Musammat Mohlan, and the result of the suit was that she got one-third of the house and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 the remaining two-thirds in equal shares. On the 15th of July 1908 Mehr Din sold his share to Charagh Din, defendant No. 3, for Rs. 3,000, and on the 22nd of August 1908 Ahmad Din sold his share to one Mehraj Din for Rs. 2,500. On the 7th of September 1908 Meharj Din sold this share also to Charagh Din, defendant No. 3. In this way Charagh Din became vendee of two-thirds of the house, and Charagh Din, plaintiff, has now brought this suit against Mehr Din, Ahmad Din and Charagh Din for possession after specific performance of his agreements with the two first named. He asked that he should be given this relief on payment of Rs. 4,000, but at the same time he expressed his willingness to pay Rs. 6,000 if so ordered by the Court.

The lower Court has held that Charagh Din, defendant No. 3, was a bona fide purchaser without notice of the agreement to sell to the plaintiff, and gave plaintiff a decree against Ahmad Din and Mehr Din for Rs. 1,000, earnest money, and Rs. 500, compensation for non-performance of their agreements to sell. Plaintiff has now appealed to this Court and has again asked for the specific performance of the agreements and for possession as against all the defendants.

Plaintiff produced a good deal of evidence upon the third issue, which dealt with the question whether the defendant No. 3 had notice of the agreement to sell to the plaintiff when he bought the shares of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. This is the only point which has been argued before us. Admad Din, defendant No. 1, gave evidence in support of the plaintiff and so did Bassu, Haji Allah Bakhsh, Muhammad Sadiq, Muhammad Bakhsh and Mahtab. The lower Court has brushed aside their evidence in a somewhat summary manner. It mentions one slight discrepancy between the statement of Haji Allah Bakhsh and that of Muhammad Sadiq and then says, "On consideration of this evidence I am of opinion that it is most unreliable." We have perused the evidence carefully and we can find no reason for disbelieving Ahmad Din, Bassu and Haji Allah Bakhsh. Bassu and Haji Allah Bakhsh agree as to the time of the conversation to which they depose. If their evidence be true, it shows that Charagh Din, defendant No. 3, knew perfectly well that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had agreed to sell the house to the plaintiff. There is nothing in the evidence of Bassu and Haji Allah Bakhsh to show that they were interested in the plaintiff, or hostile to the defendants, and we can find no reason for rejecting their evidence.

The learned District Judge has not stated on what grounds he considers their evidence unreliable. In regard to Ahmad Din also we cannot find any reason for disbelieving his evidence. He has all along admitted executing the agreements on behalf of the plaintiff, whereas Mehr Din has lied in saying that he did not execute them. We do not at all believe Mehr Din's statement that he put his thumb-mark on the agreement of the 16th of January 1906 under the impression that it was a simple bond for Rs. 700.

The lower Court is of opinion that the sale-deed by Ahmad Din to Mehraj Din seems to show that Meharj Din had knowledge of the agreement to sell to the plaintiff, but the sale-deeds by Mehr Din and Mehraj Din in favour of Charagh Din bear the opposite indication, if any. In regard to the sale-deed of Mehr Din in favour of Charagh Din, printed at page 6 of the paper-book, we find that the details of the consideration are suspicious. It was recited in the deed that Rs. 300 had been previously received as earnestmoney, that Rs. 2,000 had been received before the Registering Officer in currency notes, and that the remaining Rs. 700 had been left with the vendee by way of deposit for settlement with the creditors. The names of these creditors are not given and it has not been explained in any way why such a sum was left with the vendee for payment to the creditors. It is certainly unusual when a person sells property to leave part of the price in deposit with the vendee for payment of unsecured debts due to third parties. We could understand such a sum being left for payment to prior encumbrancers, if any. If Charagh Din, vendee, were aware of the agreement of Mehr Din and Ahmad Din to sell to the plaintiff and also of the fact that they had received from him Rs. 1,000 by way of earnest money, then it is easy to understand why this Rs. 700 was left in deposit with him. It is quite possible that the other Rs. 300 said to have been received as earnest money was never paid and this sum and the other sum of Rs. 700 may well have been retained by the vendee in order to meet any claim which might be made by the plaintiff. The oral evidence as to Charagh Din, defendant No. 3's conversations with certain witnesses and his attempts to get the other defendants to sell the house to him instead of the plaintiff appears to us quite natural and probable. We do not think it at all likely that Mehr Din and Ahmad Din sold the property to Charagh Din, defendant No. 3, without the latter being fully aware of their agreement to sell to the plaintiff.

We hold, therefore, that it is proved that Charagh Din, defendant No. 3, had notice of the agreement to sell to the plaintiff. We, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Court we give plaintiff a decree for possession of two-thirds of the house as claimed on payment of Rs. 4,000, less Rs. 1,000, previously paid, and for registration of the sale-deed in his favour by defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The Rs. 3,000 will be paid to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who will themselves settle with defendant No. 3. Plaintiff's costs in both the Courts will be borne by all three defendants.

Appeal accepted.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1123 OF 1912.

August 5, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee and Mr. Justice Walmsley.

KANAI LAL GHOSE AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

BESIR PRAMANIK AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 93, 94, 95, 99—Common manager, appointment of, for part of estate, whether legal—Common manager, whether can be appointed without complying with formalities of the Act—Illegal appointment, effect of—Permanent lease granted by common manager without sanction of Judge, whether valid.

The Bengal Tenancy Act does not authorize the appointment of a common manager of a part of an estate.

An order of the District Judge making the appointment of a common manager is illegal if the formalities provided by section 95 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are not complied with and, therefore, a common manager so appointed does not acquire the statutory powers conferred on a common manager duly appointed under the Act.

KANAI LAL GHOSE v. BESIR PRAMANIK.

A permanent lease granted by a common manager without the sanction of the District Judge is invalid

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Pabna and Bogra, dated 5th February 1912, affirming that of the Sub-Judge, first Court at Pabna, dated 10th May 1911.

Babus Brojolal Chackerbutty and Jotindra Nath Lahiri, for the Appellants.

Babu Soroshi Charan Mitra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment of the defendants, on the ground that they had been holding the disputed lands under a chakran tenure and that they had refused to render the services on the performance of which the continuance of this tenure depended. The defendants, amongst other things, contended that the suit was incompetent on the ground that it had been brought by the common manager who had not been appointed in accordance with law. Both the lower Courts have decreed the suit. In second appeal before us, it is contended by the learned Vakil for the appellants that the suit is incompetent and ought to be dismissed. Their principal grounds before us: The first ground is that the common manager who was the first plaintiff in this case was appointed in respect of a part of an estate and, therefore, was not competently appointed under the Bengal Tenancy Act. Secondly, he contends that the appointment was not in accordance with law, because all the formalities required by the law for the appointment of a common manager under section 95 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had not been observed. Thirdly, it is contended that the permanent lease granted, for the common manager in favour of the plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 11 was illegally granted in that it was not with the sanction of the District Judge. There are also other grounds taken but it is not necessary to go into them. We think it is sufficient for the disposal of this appeal to consider any one of these three grounds. On the first ground it is provided by section 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that when any dispute exists between the co-owners of an estate or tenure as to the management thereof, the District Judge may direct a notice to be served on all the co-owners etc., etc. Then section 95 also in clause (a) seems to indicate that the appointment is in respect of the estate. Section 99 also seems to contemplate that the appointment must be in respect of an estate or tenure. It is contended by the learned Vakil for the respondent that if the appointment may be made in respect of the whole of an estate, it may also be in respect of a part of an estate. The word "estate", however, is defined in the Act. Section 3, sub-section 1, says that the word "estate" means "land included under one entry in any of the general registers of revenue-paying lands and revenue-free lands prepared and maintained under the law for the time being in force by the Collector of a district etc., etc." It is admitted that in this case the appointment was in respect of a part only of estate No. 30. It appears that the co-sharers were in separate and peaceful possession of certain villages with regard to which there was no dispute. The dispute was confined to what was called the ijmali portion of the estate. There was a prayer for the appointment of a common manager in respect of the ijmali portion of the estate and the appointment was made accordingly. We think that the Bengal Tenancy Act does not authorize the appointment of a common manager of a part of an estate and we are supported in this view by the judgment of Rampini and Mookerjee, JJ., in the case of Indu Bhusan Bose v. Annapurna Mitra (1). With regard to the second ground, the application for the appointment of a common manager was made under section 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The notices required by that section were served, but no order seems to have been made under section 94 i.e., no order was made by the District Judge directing the co-owners to appoint a common manager. It is contended, however, that the order of the 21st of March 1907 does comply with this part of section 94. The order is, "I find the appointment of a common manager is necessary in this case. I order accordingly, that a common manager be appointed to supervise the works of the estate to which this petition relates." Now if this had been an order under section 94, there would have been a direction to the co-owners to make an appointment, which there is not in this order, and nextly, if this had been an order under section 94, the next order would not have been and could not have been on the next day, i.e., on the 22nd of March. Section 95 provides that "if the co-owners do not, within such period, not being less than one month after the making of an order under the last foregoing section, as the District Judge may fix in this behalf * * * *, the District Judge may, unless it is shown to his satisfaction that there is a prospect of a satisfactory arrangement being made within a reasonable time, direct that the estate or tenure be managed by the Court of Wards in any case in which the Court of Wards consents to undertake the management thereof; or in any case appoint a manager." There was no interval more than that of one day between the two orders and, therefore, there was no compliance with section 95 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. These formalities not having been complied with, we think that the order of the learned Judge making the appointment of the common manager was illegal and we are supported in this view of the case by the case of Ganoda Kanta Roy v. Probhabati Dasi (2). That was a case of an appointment by consent of parties and the learned Judges are reported to have said: "It is apparent that that was an order by consent of parties; in other words, it was an appointment by consent of parties, its validity, as it seems to us, resting entirely upon the consent of the parties, and upon nothing else, and not upon the statutory powers given to the District Judge by the Act, because the Act only gives the District Judge power where the formalities prescribed by the Act have been gone through, notices have been given and the periods fixed have elapsed, and the parties have not appointed a common manager." We think, therefore, that the appointment made in this case not being after the formalities required by the Act had been observed, was not competent and would not give the common manager so appointed the statutory power under the Act. Coming to the third ground, we find that in the order appointing the common manager it was provided in clause 6 that "he will not settle lands in Kaimi Patni or otherwise without the permission and instruction of the managing proprietors who will be appointed annually at a meeting of the owners to be held at Demra." It seems that such an appointment was made although we do not find much discussion on the point. It appears, however, that upon the proposal being made for the permanent settlement of the disputed land, an objection was made by some of the co-sharers and at the same time the manager applied for the sanction of the learned Judge. The learned Judge, however, thought that no sanction was necessary and that the permission of the managing committee was sufficient. Rule 3 of the High Court Rules framed under section 100 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that "no Manager shall have the power to sell or mortgage any property nor shall he grant or renew a lease for any period exceeding three years without the express sanction of the District Judge." The present lease, however, was granted without the express sanction of the District Judge and was, therefore, invalid. On these grounds, therefore, we think that the present suit was incompetent and ought to have been dismissed and it is, therefore, dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

(1) 6 C. L. J. 216.

Appeal allowed; Suit dismissed.

(2) 20 C. 881.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 64 OF 1913.

November 13, 1914.

Present:—Sir Henry Richards, KT., Chief Justice, and Justice Sir P. C. Banerji, KT.

BADRI PRASHAD—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Thakurain GAMBHIR KUNWAR AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

*Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss 68, 71—Proof of document—Only living attesting witness denying execution—*Pardanashin lady, dealings with, how conducted.

Where the only living attesting witness of a document was illiterate and on being examined denied its execution:

Held, that the document could be proved by other evidence.

In case of dealings with the pardanashin ladies, it is very important to see that such ladies understand what they are doing. It is also most important to see whether there was real consideration. It is not necessary that a lady should have actually signed a bond with her own hand. If she was illiterate she could not sign it. It is sufficient to find that the bond was executed in her name by some one whom she permitted to do so.

First appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Mainpuri, dated the 7th October 1912.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sunder Lal (with him Dr. S. N. Sen), for the Appellant.

Mr. Sahwny, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought for foreclosure of a mortgage by way of conditional sale. The sum alleged to be due on foot of the mortgage is Rs. 12,557 and the mortgage is dated the 7th of January 1896. The principal defendant was one Thakurain Gambhir Kunwar, the alleged mortgagor. The other defendants were the representatives of a person who was alleged to be a prior mortgagee of the said property. The principal defendant pleaded that she did not execute the document sued on, that she received no consideration, that she was a pardanashin lady and that if any document had been executed on her behalf, she was not bound by it. The other defendants did not appear. The Court below has dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Hence the present appeal.

The alleged mortgage will be found printed at page 20 of the appellant's book. It commences by a recital of the ownership of Musammat Gambhir Kunwar, and states that the property was already mortgaged to one Ganpat Gopal to secure a sum of Rs. 1,500 with interest at 14½ annas per cent. per mensem and that it would be desirable to pay off that debt as the rate of interest was high. It further recites that Government revenue and irrigation charges were due. The property then purports to have been hypothecated to secure Rs. 3,625. Rs. 3,000 were left in the hands of the mortgagee for payment of the debt due to Ganpat Gopal, Rs. 580 were left to pay the revenue and irrigation charges, Rs. 45 was taken in cash to pay the expenses of the mortgage and the stamp paper, fee, etc. Six names appear as marginal witnesses. There is an endorsement on the document which shows that it was presented for registration on the 8th of January 1896, but stating that the document had not been signed by the Musammat. The Sub-Registrar himself evidently went to the house of the mortgagor, for there is a further endorsement, dated the 8th of January 1896, from which it appears that he had gone to the house but there being no identifying witnesses, he could not register the document and returned it to the plaintiff. A third endorsement shows that on the 16th of January 1896 the Musammat came to the Tahsil (which was the Registration Office) in a dooli, that she was there identified by her own brother, one Thakur Prasad, and by another person of the name of Khaman Singh who was her karinda, both of whom were known to Kampta Prasad, a petition-writer, and to Shib Dayal, the patwari, who were known to the Sub-Registrar. According to the endorsement the Musammat admitted the execution and completion of the document and acknowledged that she had received the amount. The sum of Rs. 579-7-3 in cash was received by her in the presence of the Sub-Registrar. It further appears from the endorsement (which is by no means unusual) that the money was thereupon deposited for the purpose of paying the Government charges. The latter document which is recited in the mortgage, is dated the 21st of May 1889. This document has been abundantly proved by a number of witnesses including a witness who was very hostile to the plaintiff, namely, Chaudhri Raghbir Singh, a marginal witness. It is produced by the plaintiff with an endorsement upon it, dated the 21st of January 1896, showing that the full amount due upon it had been paid by the plaintiff to one Ram Kishore, whose son-in-law the nominal mortgagee was. Evidently it was because it was not the nominal mortgagee who had given the endorsement that the defendants of the second party were added as parties. The learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment says: "It is clear from the evidence on the record that Thakurain Gambhir Kunwar is a pardanashin lady and at the time of the execution of the bond in suit she was only 26 or 27 years of age and her brother Thakur Prasad is three or four years younger to her. Under these circumstances it is for the plaintiff to prove by satisfactory evidence that the lady had independent advice, that she fully understood the bond and was perfectly aware of what she was undertaking and that she actually executed the bond and got the consideration." No doubt in the case of dealings with pardanashin ladies, it is very important to see that such ladies understand what they are doing. It is also most important to see whether there was real consideration. It was not necessary, in our opinion, that the lady should actually sign the bond with her own hand. If she was illiterate she could not sign it. It is sufficient for the Court to find that the bond was executed in her name by some one whom she permitted to do so. In the present case her name is affixed to the bond in the handwriting of her brother, Thakur Prasad. With regard to "independent advice" and to the lady understanding the bond, if we were to come to the conclusion that there was an outstanding debt due on the earlier bond and that that debt was discharged and that the revenue and irrigation charges were due and paid, we think that the transaction was of a very simple nature which could be easily understood by the lady.

A consideration of the evidence leaves in our mind no doubt whatever that the earlier bond of the 21st of May 1889 was outstanding, that it was a genuine bond and that it was duly discharged by the plaintiff. We have no doubt further that the revenue and irrigation charges were due and discharged. The learned Subordinate Judge has come to no conclusion inconsistent with this view.

The endorsement in the bond clearly shows that on the 16th of January 1896 some woman, who was identified to the Sub-Registrar in a satisfactory way as the defendant, admitted the execution of the bond and the receipt of consideration. Thakur Prasad, the brother of the lady, was called as a witness by the plaintiff. It was impossible to avoid this. It is clear that he was a hostile witness, but he had to admit that he signed the bond in no less than four places. He gives a lame excuse that he did not understand what he was doing and the learned Subordinate Judge says: "I do not think this version of his is true. There must have been something else." If we are right in the conclusion that the prior mortgage was oustanding and was discharged by the plaintiff, the probability of the Musammat having executed the bond in suit is great. Five out of the six marginal witnesses are dead and the plaintiff was obliged to call the only surviving witness, namely Subol Singh. He said that he was illiterate, that he did not know Musammat Gambhir Kunwar, that he did not attest any document executed by her. It is true that his name in the document is not in his hand—writing; it could not be, because he is illiterate. His statement that he did not know the Musammat is clearly false, because he himself later on admits that she was his paternal aunt. It, of course, lay on the plaintiff to prove the execution of the document. It must be borne in mind, however that no defence was specially pleaded that the document was not attested in accordance with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. Section 68 of of the Evidence Act provides:—"If a document is required by law to be attested, it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution, if there be an attesting witness alive, and subject to the process of the Court and capable of giving evidence." Section 71 further provides that "if the attesting witness denies...the execution of the document, its execution may be proved by other evidence." Badri Prasad complied with the law in this respect. He called the only surviving witness, who denied that he had been a witness to the document. He proved himself that the Musammat executed the document in his presence and in the presence of the marginal witnesses whose names appear in it. There is no doubt some little confusion as to the place where the document was signed on behalf of the lady. This is not altogether surprising after the lapse of time. It must also be borne in mind that the lady herself has never thought fit to go into the witness-box or give evidence on commission and deny the execution of the document, nor has any other evidence been given to show that there was any legal defect in the execution of the document. We have not the smallest doubt on the evidence that the Musammat knew all about the bond, that the bond was intended to wipe out the debt on the prior bond and to pay the Government charges that were due. We have not the least doubt that her brother signed the document on her behalf (she being illitarate) with her consent and approval. We have not the least doubt that the transaction was a bona fide transaction. The only matter about which we have any hesitation is the question whether or not the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act were complied with. On this question we again point out that there was no special defence of th s nature set up in the Court below and that while the evidence of the plaintiff may not be absolutely satisfactory, no rebutting evidence was given on behalf of the defendant. We think that it would not be just that we should decide against the plaintiff on this technical ground, which was not pleaded nor proved and was not a ground upon which the learned Subordinate Judge decided against the plaintiff. As we have said before, Badri Prasad proved prima facie the due execution and attestation of the bond in suit. He also produced two witnesses who proved the execution of the document by the lady at the Registration Office. As we have said above, a woman appeared before the Sub-Registrar who was identified by Thakur Prasad, the brother of Gambhir Kunwar. Thakur Prasad admitted his signature below the endorsement as to identification. It is most unlikely that he would have identified the woman unless she was in fact his sister, Gambhir Kunwar.

We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and decree the plaintiff's claim with costs and direct that unless the amount claimed is paid with costs in this Court and in the Court below and interest at the stipulated rate within six months from this date, the right of redemption of the defendant will be foreclosed and the plaintiff will be entitled to possession. The costs of this Court will include fees on the higher scale. The decree will be drawn up in the usual form.

Appeal allowed.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 103 OF 1913.

July 1, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Kendall, A. J. C.

SHEO DAT SINGH AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

Musammat SIDHAU KUNWAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VII, r. 14—Documents filed with plaint or written statement, party filing not permitted to resile therefrom—Bona fide mistake.

If a party to a suit files a document making it a part of the plaint or written statement with the object of relying on it, he cannot be permitted to resile therefrom afterwards, without at least proving that it was filed owing to a bona fide mistake and that he had not intended to use it.

Chandra Kunwar v. Chaudhri Narpat Singh, 29 A. 184; 11 C. W. N. 321; 4 A. L. J. 102; 5 C. L. J. 115; 17 M. L. J. 103; 2 M. L. T. 109; 9 Bom. L R. 267 (P. C.); 34 I. A. 27, referred to, Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareli, dated 10th December 1912, upholding that of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated 12th September 1912.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, as reversioners to the estate of the deceased Sital Singh, brought this suit against the widows of Sital Singh and his brother for a declaration that the deed of gift executed by Sital Singh's widow (Sidhao Kuar) along with Sirtaj Kuar would be null and void as against them after her death. They filed a pedigree which, in paragraph 1 of the plaint they stated, should be deemed to be a part of that plaint. They included some transferees also as defendants. The defendants denied the pedigre which was set up by the plaintiffs, and denied that the plaintiffs were the reversionary heirs of Sital Singh. The plaint was filed on the 29th April 1912; and the 22nd of May was fixed for issues. On that date the defendants filed a written statement recording denials as above. On the same date the defendants filed certain documents on which they intended to rely, under Order XIII, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Among them was a paper which purported to be a copy of a pedigree filed in the Settlement Court in 1866. That document the plaintiffs denied. Issues were duly fixed on that date. On the 6th June the plaintiffs filed an application to the effect that the pedigree which they had filed as part of the plaint was incorrect, and asked for permission to correct it in the manner they set out in the application. This was treated as an application for leave to amend the plaint, and notice was issued to the other party for the 19th June. On the 18th June, the plaintiffs filed an application to the effect that they now admitted the previously denied pedigree, which had been filed by the defendants and which they now adopted as their own. The Court noted that that pedigree was only up to 1866. On the 19th June, therefore, the plaintiffs, having brought the pedigree up to date, filed it in Court; and the question of permission being granted to them to amend their plaint, was considered; and on the 4th July, permission was granted. On the 1st August, the defendants filed an application to the effect that the mukhtar-am had filed that pedigree by mistake and asked for leave to withdraw it, and objecting that it was not signed by any one and was of no value. The case procedeeed; and the plaintiffs eventually failed to prove that they were reversioners, much less that they were the nearest reversioners. The suit was dismissed, and their appeal has also been dismissed.

Appeal is laid in this Court, on the grounds that the defendants-respondents are estopped from denying the pedigree filed by their own mukhtar; and that they could not deny the pedigree, as it had been filed during the time of Settlement between the predecessors of the parties in the suit; and that it was not necessary for a party to prove its case by filing another copy of a document which had been already filed by the opposite party. On the above grounds it was argued that it ought to have been held that by virtue of the pedigree filed by the defendants on the 22nd of May, the plaintiffs had succeeded in proving that they were the nearest reversioners to the estate of Sital Singh deceased. Reliance is had in this Court on a Privy Council ruling in Chandra Kunwar v. Chaudhri Narpat Singh (1), or rather on English precedents there quoted. There is no doubt that it has been repeatedly held in England that express admissions of a party to a suit, or admissions implied by his conduct, are evidence, and strong evidence against him. Their Lordships quoted from the leading English precedents at pages 194-195 of the ruling under review. The question is not free from difficulty. Had the defendants included this pedigree in their written statement or filed one in the manner adopted by the plaintiffs, desiring it to be taken as part of their written statement, I do not think they could have been permitted afterwards to resile therefrom, without at least proving that the pedigree they quoted was filed owing to a bona fide mistake and that they had not intended to use it. But the pedigree in question was not filed with the written statement; nor in the written statement is there any reference whatever to any such pedigree. The burden of proof was not upon the defendants at that time to prove Sital Singh's pedigree, but upon the plaintiffs to prove the pedigree on which they relied; and so it cannot be confidently presumed that the defendants had filed the pedigree, intending to rely upon it in proof of their case. The plaintiffs at once denied the accuracy of that pedigree, so that that document, unless the defendants set out to prove it, would not have remained upon the record but would have been returned to the person presenting it under Order XIII, rule 7. It was in fact a superfluous document which it was not necessary for the defendants to produce and which, the burden of proof not being on them, they would not be setting out to prove. According to the rules of this Court, this document and the other documents were attached to a fly-list; but there is not set out in that fly-list, or elsewhere, the object with which the document is given in evidence, and it is quite fair to say that that document was quite possibly simply handed in, not to show its own accuracy, but to show that it differed from the pedigree which the plaintiffs were setting out to prove, and in order to render more difficult the plaintiffs' task of substantiating their pedigree. In the particular circumstances of the case I am of opinion that the filing of this pedigree cannot at all be taken as an express admission of the defendants of its accuracy nor can any such admission be confidently implied. It is objected that it is hard on the plaintiffs to put them to proof of the pedigree, which the opposite party filed. The plaintiffs, however, to my mind are not entitled to much sympathy. They filed a pedigree with their plaint, and that plaint, which included the pedigree, they duly verified as laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure. They in effect swore to its accuracy. They made efforts later on to alter this pedigree by the substitution of other names, and then finally they threw overboard the pedigree, which they had in this manner duly authenti ated, in favour of the paper which they found upon the record, which had been filed by the defendants, the accuracy of which they had themselves denied and the purpose of whose filing is not unequivocally clear. In the circumstances the lower Courts acted properly in putting them to proof of this pedigree on which they proposed to rely. As to the procedure adopted by the Courts below, the plaintiffs were not in the least taken by surprise; for they did set out to prove their relationship to Sital Singh by oral evidence; and in this I agree with the lower Courts that they entirely failed. To enable them to succeed in this suit, it was necessary not only that they should prove that they were reversioners to the estate of Sital Singh, but that they were the nearest reversioners. The oral evidence as to relationships to several generations back was perfectly worthless.

(7) 29 A. 184; 11 C. W. N. 321; 4 A. L. J. 102; 5 C. L. J. 115; 17 M. L. J. 103; 2 M. L. T. 109; 9 Bom. L. R. 267 (P. C.); 34 I. A. 27.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed. In the circumstances let the parties bear their own costs in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 78 OF 1913.

December 7, 1914.

Present:—Sir Charles Fox, KT., Chief Judge, and Justice Sir Henry Hartnoll, KT.

AHMED MOOLA DAWOOD AND ANOTHER —DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

Musammat FATIMA BEE BEE—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Probate and Adminisiration Act (V of 1881), s. 78 —Administration bond—Surety's liability, suit to enforce—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 68.

A suit to enforce the liability of a surety under an administration bond is barred under Article 68 of the Limitation Act, 1908, if not brought within three years of the breach of a condition contained in the bond.

Messrs. Coltman and Alexander, for the Appellants.

Mr. Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Ebrahim Sahib Khateeb died intestate at Mecca in or before 1880, leaving property in Rangoon. His widow and children continued to live at Mecca after his death. In January 1899 his eldest son Mohamed applied to the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon for Letters of Administration to his father's estate, and letters were granted to him. He signed an administration bond as required by section 78 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, for Rs. 80,000. Ahmed Moola Dawood and Mohamed Ebrahim Hoosein Munsoor signed it as his sureties. The latter has since been declared an insolvent and is represented in this appeal by the Official Assignee. Two days after the date of letters, Mohamed filed a petition representing that the only assets of the estate consisted of some house property in Rangoon and that he was unable to administer the estate without selling or mortgaging this property. He asked for leave to be granted to him under section 90 of the Act to sell or mortgage it. This application was granted without any inquiry. The result shows what may happen when such applications are granted without very careful and full inquiry as to the necessity for selling the immoveable property which has devolved upon members of a family. The property had apparently been for many years the chief source of income of the family, and Mohamed could have carried out duties as Administrator by executing a conveyance of the property to the heirs. If that had been done, there would have been less opportunity for Mohamed to commit the fraud he subsequently committed. In 1903 he sold for nearly three lakhs of rupees property which in his application for Letters of Administration was valued at Rs. 40,000 only. It was plainly his duty to distribute the purchase-money among the heirs within a reasonable time, but he did not do so. The plaintiff, who is one of his sisters, came from Mecca to Rangoon and in 1910 instituted a suit against Mohamed for an account and an administration of the father's estate. In that suit Mohamed was held liable to pay the other heirs over three lakhs rupees, of which over fifty-six thousand rupees was payable to the plaintiff. This amount not having been paid, she applied to the Court to assign to her the administration bond with a view to proceeding against the sureties under it. It was assigned to her on the 22nd March 1912.

She filed the suit out of which this appeal arises on the 4th September 1912 and in it she sought to recover from the sureties the amount mentioned in the bond. The plaint states that the cause of action arose on the 11th September 1911, which is the date of the decree in the suit she brought against Mohamed. The case has been disposed of on the point of limitation, which the original Court decided in favour of the plaintiff. The solvent surety and the Official Assignee appeal against the decision.

The question of whether the suit was barred by limitation, must depend upon what Article of the Indian Limitation Act applies to it. The bond follows a well-known English form in which the obligors first bind themselves to pay a certain amount of money to the obligee, but the latter portion says that in certain events the obligation to pay the amount shall be void. The latter portion of the bond now in question is as follows :—

"The engagement of this bond is such that if Mohamed Ebrahim Sahib Khateeb, the person appointed by the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon, under the Probate and Administration Act V of 1881, to be the Administrator of the estate of Ebrahim Sahib Khateeb deceased, who died at Mecca in Arabia on or about the 9th May 1880, intestate do make a true inventory of all the estate of the said deceased which has or shall come to his possession, power or knowledge and do exhibit the same unto the said Court on or before the 18th January 1900, and the same estate and all the other estate of the said deceased at the time of his decease, which at any time after shall come into possession of the said Mohamed Ebrahim Sahib Khateeb, do administer according to law, that is to say, do pay the debts which he owed at his decease and further do render a true account of his said administration whenever by law required to do, and the residue of the said estate do pay unto such person or persons as shall be entitled thereto under the said Act * * * *, then this obligation to be void or else to remain in full force."

The last seven words contemplate that the bond shall remain in force for ever if the Administrator does not do the acts previously mentioned as relieving him and the securities from the obligation to pay the amount of the bond, but the Limitation Act makes no special provision for administration bonds and consequently, one of the Articles of it must apply to a suit on it. Articles 68 and 80 of the first division of the first Schedule to the Act have been referred to, but as Article 68 exactly meets the case of such a bond no other Article need be considered. Under Article 68 three years is the limitation period for a suit on a bond subject to a condition, the period begins to run from the time when the condition is broken.

It is clear from the explanation of the word "bond" in section 2 of the Act that the bond in the present case is a bond subject to a condition provided for in Article 68.

The first of the conditions of the bond which was broken by Mohamed, the Administrator, was that contemplating his filing an inventory within a year of the grant of Letters of Administration, so that the first breach was on the 19th January 1900, another breach was in 1903 when he had in his hands moneys of the estate which he could and should have distributed amongst the heirs, but did not do so. Consequently the suit of the plaintiff was long time-barred when brought. The application of Article 68 to administration bonds may be attended with results which the Legislature could scarcely have contemplated, but in the absence of any special provision for such bonds remaining in force for as long as an administrator does not do his duty, the plain provision of the law as it stands must be applied to them. The appeal is allowed and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs. She is also ordered to pay the appellants' costs of this appeal—one set only.

Appeal allowed.

MUTHU PILLAI v. MARIA SANDANAM PILLAI.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 36 OF 1914.

October 23, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri.

MUTHU PILLAI—DEFENDANT No. 1—PETITIONER

versus

MARIA SANDANAM PILLAI AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT No. 2—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Payment of principal—Handwriting of person making payment necessary—Payment of interest need not be in handwriting of person making payment.

A part payment of the principal of a debt should be in the handwriting of the person making the payment, but this rule does not apply to payments of interest.

Santishwar Mahanta v. Lakhikanta Mahanta, 35 C. 813, 13 C.W.N. 177, Lodd Govindass v. Rukmani Bhai, 21 Ind. Cas. 302; 14 M. L. T. 310; 1 L. W. 529, followed.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in Summary Case No. 948 of 1913, dated the 30th September, 1913.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for Mr. K. V. Krishnasawmy Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. E. Sankara Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It is clear from the case of Santishwar Mahanta v. Lakhikanta Mahanta (1) and the case of Lodd Govindass v. Rukmani Bhai (2) that so far as principal is concerned, the writing should be in the hand of the debtor. This does not apply to payments of interest.

The endorsements recite that sums were paid on account of principal and interest due on the promissory note. They show clearly that sums were paid from time to time on account of interest and there is no reason to suppose that the recital is not correct.

The suit is not barred.

The petition is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

(1) 35 C. 813; 13 C. W. N. 177.
(2) 21 Ind. Cas. 302; 14 M. L. T. 310; 1 L. W. 529.

PARMESHWAR DAT v. ANARDAN DAT.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1652 OF 1913.

November 26, 1914.

Present:—Sir Henry Richards, Kt., Chief Justice, and Justice Sir P. C. Banerji, Kt.

PARMESHWAR DAT—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

ANARDAN DAT—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage—Benamidar, whether can sue.

A person who is named in a mortgage-deed as mortgagee is entitled to sue upon the bond, even if he is a benamidar.

Yad Ram v. Umrao Singh, 21 A. 380; A. W. N. (1899) 130, followed.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Cawnpore, dated the 15th of September 1913.

FACTS.—This was a suit on a mortgage bond, dated 22nd March 1900, for recovery of the amount due under it. Among the many defences, raised in the suit, there was a defence that the plaintiff could not sue as he was not the owner, but one Bhaiyalal was the owner. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit, holding that it was immaterial as to who was the real owner of the bond and that the rights of third persons could not be adjudicated upon in that suit. On appeal, the District Judge held that the plaintiff could not sue as he was not the owner.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. D. R. Sawhny, for the Appellant:—The lower Court is wrong in its view that a benamidar cannot sue in his own name. It was so held in Nand Kishore Lal v. Ahmad Ata (1); Yad Ram v. Umrao Singh (2).

The mortgage-deed is in the name of the plaintiff. The question as to whether the plaintiff is the owner or Bhaiyalal is the owner or as to the person who advanced the money, is a question which does not concern the defendants. Moreover, Bhaiyalal appeared as a witness for the plaintiff and raised no objection to the decree being passed in the plaintiff's favour.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Respondent:—The question to be considered is as to whether the suit was brought on behalf of the original owner or for the benefit of the real owner. The benamidar can sue, but he can sue only with the consent of the beneficial owner. This is a point which has not been yet decided.

(1) 18 A. 69; A. W. N. (1895) 160.
(2) 21 A. 380; A. W. N. (1899) 130.

[RICHARDS, C. J.—The original owner was a witness and was present in Court. The sole question is, "would it be a good discharge to the defendant?"]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit on foot of a mortgage, dated the 22nd of March 1900. Various pleas were taken, but the Court of first instance decided in favour of the plaintiff and granted a decree. On appeal the learned District Judge reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and dismissed the plaintiff's suit, on the sole ground that one Bhaiyalal was the real owner of the bond and that the plaintiff was merely a benamidar for him. It seems to us that the view of the District Judge was not correct. The alleged beneficial owner, Bhaiyayal, was actually produced as a witness for the plaintiff. He raised no objection whatever to the decree being made in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant never alleged that Bhaiyalal had made any claim, or raised any objection, to the amount of the bond being paid to the plaintiff. The plaintiff is the person named in the mortgage and was clearly entitled to sue even if he was the benamidar. This was held in the case of Yad Ram v Umrao Singh (2). There cannot be the least doubt that the plaintiff could have given a perfectly valid discharge to the defendant if he had paid up the amount of the bond; and if the Court grants a decree to the plaintiff it is quite clear that Bhaiyalal could never sue again, even if we assume the finding of the lower Appellate Court to be correct that Bhaiyalal was in fact the real owner of the bond. We think that the view taken by the Court of first instance on this point, namely that the question of the ownership of the bond did not arise under the circumstances of the present case, was correct. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case to the lower Appellate Court with directions to re-admit the appeal upon its original number on the file and to proceed to hear and determine the same according to law. The costs of both sides will be costs in the cause. The deficiency in the Court-fee in the lower Appellate Court of Rs. 5 due by the defendant must be made good before the appeal is heard. If that amount is not paid within a time to be fixed by the Court, the appeal to that Court by the defendant ought to be dismissed.

Appeal allowed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

REFERRED CASE No. 2 OF 1914.

April 30, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Wallis and Mr. Justice Ayling.

CHULLILE PEETIKAYIL NAMMAD—JUDGMENT-CREDITOR

versus

E. OTHENAM NAMBIAR—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR.

E. CHEELA—CLAIMANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 46—Attachment—Simple mortgage-debt—Mortgagee in possession—Mode of attachment.

A debt secured by a simple mortgage should be attached under Order XXI, rule 46, Civil Procedure Code. The fact of the mortgagee being in possession, actual or constructive, of the mortgaged property makes no difference.

Case stated under Order XLVI, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, by the District Munsif, Cannanore, whether attachment of mortgage debts for decrees in Small Cause suits should be made under Order XXI, rule 46, Civil Procedure Code, or under Order XXI, rule 54, Civil Procedure Code.

FACTS appear from the following reference made by the Munsif:—

* * * * *

"2. In execution (Second Civil Execution Petition No. 1068 of 1912) of the decree in Small Cause Suit No. 1650 of 1912 on the file of this Court, the decree-holder has attached and seeks to sell what he has described as the judgment-debtor's right to the mortgage amount and interest due under a panayom. It is admitted that the real right of the judgment-debtor is kanom, there being a lease back to the mortgagor. The term of the lease has expired, but the mortgagor is still holding over. The attachment was made under Order XXI, rule 46, as a debt not secured by a negotiable instrument. The decree has not been transferred to the original side for execution. Under these circumstances the question arises, and a co-mortgagee as claimant in Second Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 38 of 1913 raises it, whether the mortgage right has been rightly attached under Order XXI, rule 46, or ought to have been attached as immoveable property under rule 54. Nataraja Aiyar v. South India Bank, Limited (1) is an authority for the proposition that a debt secured by a hypothecation bond or a simple mortgage should be attached under rule 46 as "a debt not secured by a negotiable instrument." The principal authorities on the point have been referred to there. But in none of these [except in the case reported as Baldeo Dhanrup Marvadi v. Ramchandra Balwant Kulkarni (2)from the report of which it does not appear in what right the mortgagor continued in possession] the question appears to have arisen as to the mode of attachment of mortgages with possession and any observations as to such mortgages were only obiter. In the present case though the mortgagee is not in actual possession, he is in constructive possession through his tenant; the mortgagor, and is now entitled to actual possession.

"3. For our purpose mortgages may be divided into two classes :—

(i) Mortgages which do not give to the mortgagee a right to possession.

(ii) Mortgages which give such right

(a) and the mortgagee is put in actual possession, or

(b) the mortgagor takes back the property on lease from the mortgagee and thus continues in possession (1) whether the term of the lease has expired, or (2) not.

"4. The case under consideration falls under II (b) (1). To allow the decree-holder to attach the mortgage-debt would only result in benefit to the mortgagor and as has been observed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, Chief Justice, in a case in which it was necessary to decide whether purchase in Court auction of the mortgage debt would carry with it the mortgage security, "to benefit him is no part of any one's scheme." Taravadi Bholanath v. Bai Kashi (3).

"5. After the decision of the Madras High Court the practice as to attachment and sale of hypothecation debts does not matter. I understand that the practice has been uniform in this Court to attach and sell kanom rights as immoveable property. I am of opinion that this practice is correct, but in view of the obiter dicta in the cases referred to in the Madras cases above quoted and the absence of an express decision of the Madras High Court upon the point, I have reasonable doubts in the matter and beg to submit the following question for the opinion of the Hon'ble High Court :—

'Whether under the circumstances aforesaid the decree-holder was right in attaching the mortgage-debt as one not secured by a negotiable instrument under Order XXI, rule 46, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, or whether he ought to have attached it as immoveable property under Order XXI, rule 54, after getting the decree transferred to the original side."

* * * * *

* * * * *

JUDGMENT.—We are not prepared to differ from the decision in Nataraja Aiyar v. South India Bank, Limited (1) where all the authorities are considered, and are of opinion that the fact of the mortgagee being in possession, actual or constructive, of the mortgaged property makes no difference. The answer to the first question is in the affirmative.

Reference answered accordingly.

(1) 13 Ind. Cas. 91; 37 M. 51; 22 M. L. J. 105; 10 M. L T. 503; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 590.

(2) 19 B. 121.

(3) 26 B. 305; 4 Bom. L. R. 18.

KANTI VENKANNA v. CHELIKANI RAMA ROW GARU.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 323 OF 1313.

August 26, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Spencer.

KANTI VENKANNA—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

Sri Rajah CHELIKANI RAMA ROW GARU AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 3 (5)—Alienee of part of melvaram interest, whether landholder—Tenants under such alienee, whether ryots —Ejectment, suit for—Jurisdiction.

An alienee in perpetuity of a portion of a zemindar's melvaram interest in land, becomes a "landholder" within the meaning of section 3 (5) of the Estates Land Act and the tenants under him "ryots" though the land itself may not be an "estate" within the meaning of section 3 (2) of the Estates Land Act.

Proceedings to eject tenants from such land lies only in a Revenue Court.

Sivini Appalanarasimhulu v. Murada Sanyasi, 17 Ind. Cas. 120; Sri Brindavana Chandra Harischandra v. Ramayya, 25 Ind. Cas. 664; 26 M. L. J. 600; 1 L. W. 486; Tungala Mallanna v. Gottumukkala Ramaraju, 23 Ind. Cas. 531; (1914) M. W. N. 345; 15 M. L. T. 401; Baptis Missionary Society v. Ratnakaro; Patro, 12 Ind. Cas. 777; (1911) 2 M. W. N 517, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry, in Appeal Suit No. 178 of 1912, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Peddapur, in Original Suit No. 606 of 1909.

Messrs. M. O. Parthasarathi Aiyangar and V. Ramesam, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—We are of opinion that in construing Exhibit B as granting only the kudivaram interest in the lands to the plaintiff's ancestor, the lower Courts misconstrued that document.

That document clearly alienates in perpetuity Rs. 125 of the annual melvaram income in favour of the grantee under it and that grantee had thereafter, not to pay the Rs. 300 which was "the rent legally due upon it" (see definition of ryot in section 3, clause 15, of the Estates Land Act), but had to pay only the favourable kattubadi kist of Rs. 175. Being the owner of a part of the melvaram right in the lands which formed part of the estate ryoti lands, he became owner of part of the estate, though the part owned by him did not itself come under the definition of "estate" in section 3, clause (2). The ratio of the decisions in Civil Revision Petition No. 895 of 1910; Second Appeal No. 168 of 1912; Sivini Appalanarasimhulu v. Murada Sanyasi (1); Sri Brindavanachandra Harischandra v. Ramayya (2); Tungala Mallanna v. Gottumukkala Ramaraju (3) is that a person may not be the owner of an "estate" owing to the lands, of which he is the owner, not coming under the definition of the word "estate", but he may yet be a landholder within the definition of section 3, clause (5), as owning the melvaram of a portion of an estate. In the case of Baptis Missionary Society v. Ratnakaro Patro (4) the definition of landholder is not referred to and considered in the judgment.

The plaintiffs being thus landholders, tenants holding ryoti lands under them for purposes of agriculture are ryots and cannot be ejected except by proceedings in a Revenue Court under the Estates Land Act (sections 151 to 153).

The lower Court's decisions are reversed and the plaint will be returned to be presented to the proper Court. The plaintiffs must pay defendant's costs in all Courts.

SPENCER, J.—It is clear from the grant, Exhibit B, and from the facts found by the lower Courts, that the land in the enjoyment of the plaintiffs is not an estate falling under section 3 (2) of the Estates Land Act, as the grant had not been recognised by the British Government and as it did not comprise one or more whole villages. It further, did not fall under the definition in clause (e).

But it was undeniably a part of a permanently settled estate and, therefore, if plaintiffs come within the definition of "landholder" in section 3 (5), the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court over a suit to eject a ryot was not ousted. Following Sri Brindavana Chandra Harischandra Raja v. Ramayya(2) to which I was a party, I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

Appeal allowed.

(1) 17 Ind. Cas. 120.

(2) 25 Ind. Cas. 664; 26 M. L. J. 600; 1 L. W. 486.

(3) 23 Ind. Cas. 531; (1914) M. W. N. 345; 15 M. L. T. 401.

(4) 12 Ind. Cas. 777; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 517.

BAIKUNTA GUI v. LAL CHAND SAMANTA.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1619 OF 1913.

July 17, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Fletcher and Mr. Justice Richardson.

BAIKUNTA GUI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

LAL CHAND SAMANTA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19 Mortgage by all members of joint Hindu family—Acknowledgment by karta alone, whether sufficient to keep alive debt—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 6.

Where a joint Hindu family property was mortgaged jointly by all members of the family not for a family purpose but only to secure a particular sum of money, the mere fact that one of the joint mortgagors had made an acknowledgment, if it turns out that he happens to be the karta of the joint Hindu family, would not be sufficient to keep alive the debt. Narayana Ayyar v. Venkataramana Ayyar, 25 M. 220 (F. B.), followed.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Midnapore, dated the 22nd February 1913, modifying that of the Munsif of Ghatal, dated 30th April 1912.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Bepin Behary Ghose, for the Appellants.

Babu Atul Krishna Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of the second Court of Midnapore, dated the 22nd February 1913, modifying the decision of the Munsif of Ghatal.

The plaintiffs who are the appellants before us got a mortgage from the defendants. The property having been brought to sale, as I understand, the plaintiffs applied for an order under Order XXXIV, rule 6, to enable them to recover the balance due on the mortgage from the defendants. The defendants set up a plea of limitation. The plaintiffs relied, in reply to that, on certain payments which had been made on the mortgage by one Gobardhan, who is said to be the karta of the joint Hindu family which the defendants are said to have composed. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court is, in some respects, not very clear. But so far as I can gather, what the learned Judge finds is this: first of all, he is not satisfied whether the parties did in fact form a joint Hindu family, secondly, he is not satisfied that Gobardhan made the payments as karta of the joint Hindu family, so as to bind the other members of the family. The money, he considers according to the case set up by Sukhoda, the gomasta of the plaintiff, had come out of the so-called ejmali paddy business. Whether the ejmali paddy business formed the part of the ancestral or joint estate of the defendants we do not know; and the learned Judge seems to have doubted whether the money did, in fact, come out of the joint family property.

The case has been argued before us on the fact that the karta is, from the very nature of his position, the authorised agent of each and every member of the joint Hindu family, so as to be able to make a payment of the interest to keep the debts alive. Whether that is so or not, if it were found that the borrowing had been made in respect of the joint family estate, that would be one case. In the present case, although the probabilities point to the fact that the borrowing was made for family purposes, there is nothing to show that the execution of the mortgage by all the members was, in fact, a mortgage of the property for purposes of the family. All we can say is that it was a mortgage by these various joint contractors to secure a particular sum of money. If that is so, as pointed out by the Full Bench in the case of Narayana Ayyar v. Venkataramana Ayyar (1), the mere fact that one of the joint contractors had made an acknowledgment, if it turns out that he happens to be the karta of the joint Hindu family, would not be sufficient to keep alive the debt. I think, on the whole, that the findings of fact in this case are too strong for the appellants. I am not satisfied, in my own mind, however, that the plaintiffs had not originally the right on their side. This being a second appeal, we are bound by the findings of fact, and the findings, although not so clearly expressed as one might wish them to be, seem to me fatal to the case of the plaintiffs.

The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 25 M. 220 (F. B.).

JAI RAM v. SARDAR SINGH.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 802 OF 1911.

May 20, 1913.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shah Din.

JAI RAM—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

SARDAR SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Alienation—Hindu Law—Brahmins of Dheriala Saigan village, Gujar Khan Tahsil, Rawalpindi District—Burden of proof—Ordinary test—Shifting of onus.

To determine whether Brahmins living in a village are governed by custom or Hindu Law, ordinarily one most important test is whether the Brahmins in question are a compact village community or at least a compact section of the village community. In such cases there is a strong presumption in favour of custom.

Bishen Das v. Ram Dhan, 7 Ind. Cas. 483; 63 P. R. 1910; 100 P. W. R. 1910; 112 P. L. R. 1910, concurred.

A village was founded a very long time ago by the ancestors of Brahmins, got Saigan, that from the date of its foundation the majority of the proprietors had been Brahmins of this got, that the Brahmins had from the very beginning constituted a compact village community, that out of 800 or 900 persons living in the village some 600 or 700 were Brahmins, that there was no birt in this village, that Brahmins did not perform any priestly functions, though a good many of them had taken to service, that such of the Brahmins who were not in service depended for their livelihood entirely upon agriculture, that the income of those who were in service was supplemented by their income as land owners, and that so far as regards succession they were not governed by Hindu Law, as among them daughters were excluded:

Held, that in view of these facts the initial presumption that the Brahmins in this village were governed in matters of alienation of ancestral landed property by Hindu Law and not by custom, was sufficiently rebutted and the onus was shifted on to the party who asserted that in matters of alienations they were governed by their personal law and that their powers of alienation were not restricted as those of agricultural tribes.

Ram Chand v. Thakar Das, 94 P. R. 1907; 29 P. L. R 1908, Hira Nand v. Hari Chand, 4 Ind. Cas. 687; 125 P. R 1908; 10 P. L. R. 1909; 182 P. W. R. 1908; Devi Ditta Singh v. Dropti, 2 Ind. Cas. 940; 56 P. R. 1909; 129 P. L. R. 1909; 96 P. W. R. 1909; Dalo v. Mohlu, 3 Ind. Cas. 593; 87 P. R. 1909; 131 P. L. R. 1909; 105 P. W. R. 1909; Daswandi v. Mahant Krishen Dev, 9 Ind. Cas. 841; 34 P R 1911; 109 P. L. R. 1911; 119 P. W. R. 1911; Musammat Maya v. Gurdit Singh, 4 Ind. Cas. 947; 1 P. R. 1910; 145 P. L. R. 1909; 128 P. W. R. 1909; Fakir Chand v. Ram Chand, 13 Ind. Cas. 709; 128 P. L. R. 1912; 62 P. W. R. 1912, referred to.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Rawalpindi Division, dated the 25th April 1911.

Bhagat Gobind Das, for the Appellant.

Bava Sewa Ram Singh, for Rai Bahadur Lala Sukh Dial, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection has been urged in this case by the Pleader for the respondents that since the Divisional Judge has dismissed the plaintiff's suit and the value of the suit calculated at thirty times the jama is below Rs. 250, no further appeal lay to this Court under the unamended Punjab Courts Act. As the Munsif passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for possession of part of the land on payment of Rs. 600, I hold, following Kishan Chand v. Taj-ud-Din (1), that a further appeal was competent to this Court. The preliminary objection is, therefore, overruled.

The sole question for decision in this appeal is whether the parties to this suit, who are Brahmin proprietors of Mauza Dheriala Saigan, Tahsil Gujar Khan, District Rawalpindi, are governed in matters of alienation of ancestral landed property by Hindu Law or by custom. The Subordinate Judge held that they were governed by custom and not by their personal law, while the Divisional Judge has come to a contrary conclusion. After hearing the Pleaders on both sides and carefully considering the evidence on the record, I think that the view of the Subordinate Judge is correct. A reference to the history and constitution of Mauza Dheriala Saigan, in which the parties reside and in which the land in dispute is situate, shows that this village was founded a very long time ago by the ancestors of the Brahmins, got Saigan, that from the date of its foundation the majority of the proprietors have been Brahmins of this got, that since the first Regular Settlement the village has consisted of two tarafs, taraf Brahminan and taraf Zamindaran, and that the Brahmins have from the very beginning constituted a compact village community. The evidence of the Patwari shows that of the total area of the village, 1268 ghumaons, taraf Brahminan contains 707 ghumaos and taraf Zamindaran 543 ghumaons. There are four Lambardars of the village, of whom three are Brahmins and one a Muhammadan, the latter being

(1) 1 Ind. Cas. 870; 23 P. R. 1909; 197 P. L. R. 1908; 37 P. W. R. 1909.

Lambardar of taraf Zemindaran. The Patwari also says that the population is about 800 or 900 souls, of whom 600 or 700 are Brahmins. It is also in evidence that there is no birt in this village and that the Brahmins do not perform any priestly functions, though a good many of them have taken to service. It appears that such of the Brahmin proprietors as are not in service depend for their livelihood entirely upon agriculture, and that the income of those who are in service is supplemented by their income as land-owners. It is further shown that so far as regards the rules of succession, the Brahmins of this village are not governed by Hindu Law, as among them admittedly daughters are excluded by collaterals from inheritance.

In view of the facts stated above, it seems to me that the initial presumption that the parties in this case being Brahmins were governed by Hindu Law and not by custom, has been sufficiently rebutted, and that the onus has been shifted on to the party who asserts that in matters of alienation the Brahmins of this village are governed by their personal law. The appellant's Pleader has cited Ram Chand v. Thakar Das (2); Hira Nand v. Hari Chand (3); Devi Ditta Singh v. Dropti (4) Dalo v. Mohlu (5); Bishen Dass v. Ram Dhan (6) and Daswandi v. Mahant Krishen Dev (7). On the other hand, the respondents' Pleader has relied mainly on Hira Nand v. Hari Chand (3); Musammat Maya v. Gurdit Singh (8) and Second Appeal No. 926 of 1910 [Fakir Chand v. Ram Chand (9)] decided by this Court on the 9th February 1912. I have carefully considered all these rulings, and it seems to me that the facts which have been proved in the present case fully justify the conclusion that the Brahmins of Mauza Dheriala Saigan are governed by custom and not by Hindu Law, and that in matters of alienation their powers are subject to the same restrictions as those of agricultural tribes in other parts of the Rawalpindi District. In regard to cases relating to agricultural land owned by Brahmins in this Province, I agree with the observations of Johnstone, J., in Bishen Dass v. Ram Dhan (6) that "ordinarily one most important test is whether the Brahmins in question are a compact village community or at least a compact section of the village community. In such cases there is a strong presumption in favour of custom".

For the reasons given above I hold that the parties in this case are governed by custom and not by Hindu Law, and that the sale in dispute, so far as it relates to ancestral land, must be held to be invalid unless it is shown to have been made for consideration and legal necessity. Both the Courts below have found that full consideration passed under the sale in question; but whereas the Subordinate Judge has held that of the consideration money only Rs. 600 was raised for legal necessity, the Divisional Judge has not dealt with this point because upon his view of the case, the question of legal necessity for the sale did not arise at all. Holding as I do that legal necessity for the sale of the ancestral land must be proved, I must accept this appeal and setting aside the decree of the Divisional Judge, I send the case back under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for a decision of the question as to how much of the sale consideration was covered by legal necessity in this case. The appellant will get his costs in this Court against the contesting respondents.

Appeal accepted; Case returned.

(2) 94 P. R. 1907; 29 P. L. R. 1908.

(3) 4 Ind. Cas. 687; 125 P. R. 1908; 10 P. L.R. 1909; 182 P. L. R. 1908.

(4) 2 Ind. Cas. 940; 56 P. R. 1909; 129 P. L. R. 1909; 96 P. W. R. 1909.

(5) 3 Ind. Cas. 593; 87 P. R. 1909; 131 P. L.R. 1909; 105 P. W. R. 1909.

(6) 7 Ind. Cas. 483; 63 P. R. 1910; 100 P. W. R. 1910; 112 P. L. R. 1909.

(7) 9 Ind. Cas. 841; 34 P. R. 1911; 109 L.P. R. 1911; 119 P. W. R. 1911.

(8) 4 Ind. Cas. 947; 1 P. R. 1910; 145 P. L. R. 1909; 128 P. W. R. 1909.

(9) 13 Ind. Cas. 709; 62 P. W. R. 1912; 128 P. L. R. 1912.

SUNDARAMMA v. KAMAKOTIAH.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 855 OF 1912.

August 27, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

SUNDARAMMA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

KAMAKOTIAH AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS Nos. 3 AND 4—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Partition—Presumption—Certain properties left joint, whether co-parcenary right retained in those properties.

When there is a partition in a joint Hindu family, the presumption is that it is a complete partition in status and of all the properties. If certain properties were left undivided, there is no presumption that the co-parcenary right is retained in those properties.

Gaurishankar Parabhuram v. Atmaram Rajaram, 18 B. 611, Vaidyanatha Aiyar v. Aiyasami Aiyar, 1 Ind. Cas. 408; 32 M. 191; 19 M. L. J. 94; 5 M. L. T. 49, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 185 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Chittoor, in Original Suit No. 618 of 1909.

Messrs. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar and R. Rangasami Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Respondents.

This second appeal and Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 2594 of 1912 to admit in evidence a partition list coming on for hearing on the 4th April 1913, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The District Munsif should have decided whether the partition list tendered was admissible in evidence or not. He is directed to return a finding whether this document is admissible. He may receive fresh evidence on this question.

The finding will be submitted within six weeks from this date, and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Munsif of Chittoor submitted the following

FINDING.—The case has been remanded by the High Court for a finding on the following question:—

Whether the partition list tendered is admissible in evidence.

2. The partition deed is badly torn. A translation thereof is printed at pages 13 to 20 of the printed papers (documents). It appears from the list that the partition was commenced on 25th July 1871 and that it was completed on 17th August 1871. The last paragraph at page 20 shows that the document is a partition deed, though it is signed only by three of the four members of the family and a share is allotted to Subbayyar's son, Munusami Iyer, who has not signed the document.

3. The plaintiff has further examined the plaintiff's sixth witness, Viraraghava Aiyar, mainly to show that the family had no other land in Chinna Thottalam, that it was punja land at the time of division and that the land was included in the document now in question. The witness says that he signed the list but this does not seem to be correct. No other oral evidence has been adduced.

4. The document in question is governed by Article 39 of the General Stamp Act XVIII of 1869 and is subject to a stamp duty of Rs. 16 and a penalty of Rs. 160-0-0. It is not clear why the Deputy Collector, to whom the document was sent impounded, has not collected the stamp duty leviable thereon and such penalty as he may think fit to levy. It has been argued that the partition was completed before the lists were prepared and that the lists need not, therefore, be stamped, relying on the case reported as Nihal Chand v. David Sassoon & Co. (1). But the document is clearly a partition deed and further, the lists were drawn up in the present case on the dates on which the properties were divided.

5. Further, the document requires registration under section 17 of the Indian Registration Act VIII of 1871; for, from Exhibits D, E, F, G and H filed in the suit, it is clear that the value of each share exceeded Rs. 100. I find, therefore, that the document is not admissble in evidence as it has not been registered.

This second appeal and Civil Miscellanous Petition No. 2594 of 1912 coming on for hearing on the 12th January 1914, after the receipt of the above finding, the Court made the following mark for identification (M) is not inadmissible for want of registration, Act II of 1884. It is admissible in evidence on payment of penalty, which the appellant undertakes to pay if the Subordinate Judge finds the document genuine and requires to be stamped. If it is admitted, then the finding that if Ramiah was in possession it was the possession of a co-parcener on behalf of himself and defendants Nos. 3 and 4, cannot be supported. We will, therefore, direct the Subordinate Judge to submit a revised finding on the question whether the plaintiff's husband had been in possession for the statutory period and whether he had acquired title by such possession, after receiving the document in evidence, if genuine, and on payment of the penalty if required. Fresh evidence may be received.

ORDER.—The partition deed which we

(1) 15 Ind. Cas. 28; 231 P. W. R. 1912; 229 P. L. R. 1912.

The finding should be submitted within six weeks from the date of this order, and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the above order, the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot submitted the following

FINDING.— * * * * *

So, there had not been adverse possession on plaintiff's husband's part in my opinion, i.e., possessien adverse to defendants Nos. 3 and 4, for the statutory period for him to have acquired a valid title thereby. I accordingly find the point in the negative.

This second appeal coming on again for hearing after receipt of the above finding, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—We accept the finding that the plaintiff's husband Ramayya did not acquire the property by exclusive possession.

It is argued by the appellant's Pleader that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for joint possession to the extent of her deceased husband's interest in the property. Mr. Venkatachari contends that, as the property was left joint property when the rest of the properties were divided, the husband's interest survived to the respondents by survivorship, and he relies upon Gavrishankar Parabhuram v. Atmaram Rajaram (2). When there is a partition, the presumption is that it is a complete partition in status and of all the properties. If certain properties were left undivided, there is no presumption that the co-parcenary right is retained in those properties. See Vaidyanatha Aiyar v. Aiyasamy Aiyar (3). Moreover in this case the Judge finds that there was a division in interest and the husband and his brothers were co-owners, though in another place he casually refers to one of them as a co-parcener.

We, therefore, declare that the plaintiff is entitled to the interest in the property to which her husband was entitled and decree that she be restored to joint possession. The parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

(2) 18 B. 6.1,

(3) 1 Ind. Cas. 408; 32 M. 191; 19 M. L. J. 94; 5 M. L. T. 49.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 786 OF 1913.

December 4, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Tudball.

RAGHUBAR CHARAN—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

KRISHEN BALDEO—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 164 (2)—Suit for profits—Liability of lambardar to account—Burden of proof.

It is the duty of a lambardar to maintain accounts of collection and disbursement. The fact that the village patwari maintains accounts does not exonerate the lambardar or free him from his duty of maintaining his accounts.

In a suit for profits against a lambardar, once the liability to account has been admitted by the defendant or held proved against him, it is the duty of the Court trying the suit to call upon the defendant to file his accounts and to produce his books and prove his accounts.

The initial burden on the plaintiff is to prove that the defendant lambardar is liable to account. This shifts the burden on to the lambardar to prove the accounts. When this has been done, it is open to the plaintiff to prove that there are uncollected items which would not have remained uncollected but for the negligence or misconduct of the defendant.

RAGHUBAR CHARAN v. KRISHEN BALDEO.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Cawnpore, dated 4th April 1913.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Appellant.

Mr. Harendra Krishna Mukerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a simple suit for profits. When this appeal came before a learned Judge of this Court, he decided one issue and remitted another for a finding by the Court below. That Court has now found that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that any items of the income remained uncollected by the lambardar.

The first Court granted a decree for profits calculated on the collections as recorded in the patwari's papers.

The following table shows the demand and the collections recorded by the patwari :—

Year.	Demand.	Collections
1315	141 15 8	47 14 3
1316	624 2 0	132 2 0
1317	624 10 0	390 0 0

The lower Appellate Court calculated profits on the figures in the demand column and decreed accordingly.

This Court then remitted the issue noted above.

Now this is a suit against a lambardar who acts as the agent of the co-sharers in the management of the village. It is his duty as lambardar to maintain accounts. In a suit of this nature once the liability to account has been admitted by the defendant or held proved against him, it is the duty of the Court trying the suit to call upon the defendant to file his accounts and to produce his books and prove his accounts.

The fact that the village patwari maintains accounts does not exonerate the lambardar or free him from his duty of maintaining his accounts. He, no doubt, is bound to furnish true information to the patwari to enable the latter to maintain his books, but the patwari is not and cannot be always present when the lambardar makes collections and it is a mistake to look upon the patwari's accounts as the lambardar's own accounts.

To proceed, when the lambardar has furnished accounts, it is open to the other side to challenge them. The Court then goes into the matter and settles the accounts and should then calculate the profits on what it considers to be on the evidence, the correct figures showing actual receipts and disbursements.

There is an exception to this. In section 164 (2) it is laid down that the Court may not only award a share of the profits actually collected, but also a share in such sum as the plaintiff may prove to have remained uncollected owing to the negligence or misconduct of the lambardar.

It must be noted that this refers only to such sum as may remain actually uncollected.

This section does not throw on the plaintiff the burden of proving the accounts. The initial burden on the plaintiff is to prove that the defendant lambardar is liable to account. This shifts the burden then on the lambardar to prove the accounts. When this has been done, it is open to the plaintiff to prove that there are uncollected items which would not have remained uncollected but for the negligence or misconduct of the defendant.

Now in the present case, it was the plaintiff's plea in the beginning (vide the plaint) and all through the suit that the accounts in the patwari's books were untrue or incorrect, that the defendant who is his brother and on bad terms with him, has intentionally not had recorded in the patwari's books the sums which he has actually collected.

Now the figures quoted above as recorded in the patwari's books rouse the greatest suspicion that this charge is correct. The year 1315 Fasli was, no doubt, a famine year and this explains the low demand and low collections, though the Cawnpore District was not a famine district and is canal-irrigated. But in regard to the years 1316 and 1317 Faslis there is no explanation offered for the low collections recorded in the patwari's books. It has been alleged by the patwari that the defendant neither sued nor distrained for any rents in these years. The burden is, therefore, heavy on the defendant lambardar to produce and prove his accounts.

I see that he has not attempted to do anything of the sort, but neither of the Courts below called on him to produce his accounts and prove them and the patwari's evidence is practically the only evidence.

In my opinion the case should go back to the Court of first instance for re-trial. The Court should call upon the defendant to produce and prove his accounts and allow the plaintiff an opportunity of challenging them. It may be necessary to appoint a Commissioner to make a local inquiry from the tenantry if either party demands it. If the defendant refuses or fails to produce his accounts, then the Court may be justified in presuming that the lambardar has collected the whole of the income and decreeing accordingly; but the circumstances of each case must receive due consideration and weight. If accounts are furnished and the Court comes to a decision as to the amount actually collected, then it may have to consider those items which have remained uncollected by reason of the negligence or misconduct of the lambardar, if the plaintiff raises the plea and gives evidence thereon.

I, therefore, allow this appeal. I set aside the decrees of the Courts below and remand the suit to the Court of first instance through the lower Appellate Court, with direction to re-admit the suit on its original number and to proceed to hear and determine it according to law in view of the remarks made above. Costs here and heretofore will be costs in the cause and will abide the result.

Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed; Suit remanded.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 494 OF 1912.

October 23, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Stuart, A. J. C.

BAKKHA SINGH AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

GAYA DIN SINGH AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), s. 9, cl. (2)—Pre-emption, right of—Sharer in mahal being related to vendor, preferential right of, over sharer not so related.

Where certain lands held in under-proprietary tenure, situate in a village consisting of only one mahal, within the meaning of section 9 of Act XVIII of 1876, were sold to persons who owned a proprietary share in the village but were not related to the vendor, and a suit for pre-emption was instituted by the appellants who not only owned a proprietary share in the village but were also related to the vendors:

Held, that the appellants could claim pre-emption as co-sharers in the mahal under clause (2) and as they were related to the vendors while the vendees were not so related the appellants had a right preferential to that possessed by the vendees.

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated 22nd August 1912, upholding that of the Munsif of South Lucknow, dated 19th May 1912.

Mr. Manmohan Nath Chak, for the Appellants.

Babus Gokul Parshad and Lachman Parshad Varma, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Bhago Singh owned a 4-pies 16-krants share in Sathwara. He sold this share to Sardar Singh in 1873 transferring to the vendee a complete proprietary title in the share with the exception of an area of 5 bighas 6 biswas. He transferred to the vendee the rights of a superior proprietor over the latter area, and retained the rights of an under-proprietor with regard to the same. The under-proprietary rights in this area were subsequently inherited by Lau Singh, who transferred them by sale to Gaya Din Singh, son of Sardar Singh, and Mata Din Singh. The two latter have a share of 9 pies and 12 krants in the village. This share includes the share of 4 pies and 16 krants already mentioned as having been purchased by Sardar Singh. Gaya Din Singh and Mata Din Singh are not related to Lau Singh. Bakkha Singh and Ghisyawan Singh who own a share of 1 anna 7 pies and BAKKHA SINGH v. GAYA DIN SINGH.

4 krants in the village, claim to exercise a right of pre emption over the 5 bighas and 6 biswas in question. They are related to Lau Singh. I find that in Sathwara there is only one mahal within the meaning of section 9, Act XVIII of 1876, and that there are no sub-divisions of the village within the meaning of the same section. The learned District Judge rejected the appellants' claim on the grounds that, as the property was an under-proprietary tenure, the right of pre-emption went in the first place to co-sharers in the under-proprietary tenure, and in their absence to its superior proprietor, and, inasmuch as the plaintiffs were neither co-sharers in the under-proprietary tenure nor its superior proprietors, they had no right of pre-emption. The present appeal is preferred.

The learned District Judge based his finding mainly upon the decision of Ashraf-un-nissa v. Parbhu Narain (1) in which Young, J. C., interpreted section 9 of Act XVIII of 1876 to mean that the right of pre-emption existed in favour, firstly, of co-sharers of the patti of the tenure (i.e., proprietary or under-proprietary as the case may be) in which the property in dispute is comprised, secondly, of co-sharers of the whole mahal, and, thirdly, of members of the proprietary body (if the community is a proprietary body) and of members of the under-proprietary body (if the community is an under-proprietary body). He decided that in the case of an under-proprietary tenure the under-proprietary body was to be held to be an entity absolutely separate from and unconnected with the body of superior proprietors and that membership of the one body gave no claim to pre-empt the property of the other body, except in so far as was permitted by the provisions of clause 4 of the section.

The general principle of that decision supports the view taken by the learned District Judge. But the learned District Judge omitted to note that the view taken by Mr. Young was dissented from in the later case of Drigbijae Singh v. Court of Wards, Ramnagar Estate, District Gonda and Rup Ram (2) after reference to the Hon'ble High Court of Allahabad. The latter decision does not, it is true, deal explicitly with clauses 1 and 2, but it differs definitely from the view taken by Mr. Young in certain other previous cases, and accepts the principle that in case of the existence of an under-proprietary body the persons composing that body form together with the persons composing the proprietary body one entity, of which the under-proprietary body is a part, and that the two bodies are not separate entities. The final determination of this principle renders the decision of the particular point in this appeal less difficult. The provisions of clause 1 have, of course, no application, but, as the co-sharers in the village, which in this instance consists of one mahal, include co-sharers in the proprietary-body the appellants can claim pre-emption as co-sharers in the mahal under clause 2, and, as they are related to the vendors and the vendees are not related to the vendors, the appellants have a right preferential to that possessed by the vendees. The fact that the vendees are not strangers does not help them [Mahabir Prasad v. Ram Jiwan Lal (3)]. The parties have in the course of argument agreed that the sum of Rs. 500 should be fixed as the amount to be paid for exercise of the right of pre-emption in the event of the Court finding that such a right exists.

I, therefore, decree this appeal and direct that the appellants be awarded possession of the 5 bighas and 6 biswas in question, conditional on their paying Rs. 500 into the Court of the Munsif, South Lucknow, within three months from the date of this decree. If this payment be made, the contesting respondents shall pay their own costs and those of the appellants in all Courts. If this payment be not made within the period fixed, the suit will stand dismissed, and the appellants will pay their own costs and those of the contesting respondents in all Courts.

Appeal decreed.

(1) Select Case No. 140.
(2) 5 O. C. 266.
(3) 8 Ind. Cas. 272; 13 O. C. 260.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1835 OF 1912.

October 17, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chevis and Mr. Justice Shadi Lal.

TIRATH SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

RAM CHAND—PLAINTIFF AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 23, O. XLIII, r. 1 (u)—Rejection of plaint by first Court—Order of Appellate Court setting aside order of rejection and remanding case for trial on merits, appeal from, whether competent.

An order of an Appellate Court setting aside an order of the Court of first instance rejecting a plaint and directing it to proceed with the trial of the suit on the merits, is not an order under Order XLI, rule 23, and is not appealable under Order XLIII, rule 1 (u).

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Shahpur Division, dated the 4th October 1912, reversing that of the District Judge, Jhang, dated the 21st June 1912, and remanding the case to the first Court.

Mr. Kirkpatrick, for the Appellants.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—(1*st August* 1914).—The hearing of this appeal was concluded on the 22nd July 1914 and the judgment was reserved. We subsequently discovered that there was a judgment of the Calcutta High Court reported as Braja Lal Mitra v. Upendra Krishna Mitra(1), which laid down that the order of the Appellate Court setting aside the order of the Court of first instance rejecting the plaint and directing it to proceed with the trial of the suit on the merits does not come under Order XLI, rule 23, and that no appeal lies therefrom. This ruling is on all fours with the present case and as it was not cited by the Advocate for the respondent, Mr. Kirkpatrick had no opportunity to meet it. We, therefore, brought it to the notice of the learned gentlemen engaged in the appeal and intimated to them that we would like to hear further arguments on the question whether an appeal in this case is competent.

No suitable date before the vacation could be fixed. We, therefore, adjourn the hearing to Saturday the 17th October 1914 when the case will come up before us as a Special Bench.

JUDGMENT.—Our order of the 1st August 1914 shall be read as part of this judgment. The learned Counsel for the appellants admits that the judgment in Braja Lal Mitra v. Upendra Krishna Mitra (1) is directly applicable to the facts of this case and that there is no point of distinction between the two cases. Following that judgment, we hold that the order of the Divisional Judge setting aside the order of the District Judge rejecting the plaint and directing him to proceed with the trial of the suit on the merits, is not an order under Order XLI, rule 23, and that it is not appealable under Order XLIII, rule 1 (u).

We accordingly dismiss the appeal but having regard to the fact that the judgment of the Calcutta High Court was not cited by the learned Advocate for the respondents and to the circumstances of the case, we direct the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 6 C. L. J. 214.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 926 OF 1912.

February 24, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar.

M. SUBBAYYA—DEFENDANT—PETITIONER

versus

M. RACHAYYA AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 96—Suit based on contract decreed by Civil Court having jurisdiction over place of formation of contract—Place of contract transferred after decree to another Civil Court—What Court authorised to hear appeal from decree—Jurisdiction.

In a suit based on a contract, one day after a decree was passed by the Civil Court within whose jurisdiction the place of formation of the contract was situated, that place was added to the jurisdiction of another Civil Court:

Held, that an appeal against the decree would lie to the Appellate Court authorised to hear appeals from the latter Civil Court, and not to the Appellate Court authorised to hear appeals from the former Civil Court which had passed the decree.

Petition, under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order in Appeal No. 72 of SUBBAYYA v. RACHAYYA.

1902, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Madanapalle, in Original Suit No. 299 of 1910.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—The District Munsif of Madanapalle passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff in Original Suit No. 299 of 1910 on the 30th of March 1911. The contract which gave rise to the litigation was made in Kadiri, which was at the time of the suit within the jurisdiction of the Madanapalle District Munsif. The scheme for the re-distribution of districts came into force on the 1st of April 1911, by which Kadiri was added to the jurisdiction of the District Munsif of Penukonda. From Madanapalle appeals lie to the District Judge of Cuddapah; from Penukonda to the District Judge of Bellary. The defendant filed the appeal in the District Court of Bellary on the 26th of June 1911 against the decision in Original Suit No. 299 of 1910. The District Judge held that the appeal lay to the Cuddapah District Court, and returned it for presentation accordingly. The District Judge of Cuddapah on the appeal being presented to him came to the conclusion that he had no jurisdiction. This revision is against the said order.

There is no Madras decision directly bearing on the matter. Section 13 of the Madras Civil Courts Act gives no indication regarding the appellate forum; section 96 of the Code of Civil Procedure says that an appeal "shall lie to the Court authorised to hear appeals." The question is whether that Appellate Court is one which had jurisdiction when the suit was decided or at the time when the appeal came to be presented. Two cases relating to execution of decrees in which the question was whether the Court which passed the decree or the Court to which territorial jurisdiction was assigned subsequently should entertain applications, came up for consideration before the High Court. In Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1), the learned Judges were of opinion that loss of territorial jurisdiction ipso facto effected a transfer of venue. This view derives support from the actual order that was made in Alagappa Mudaliyar v. Thiyagaraja Mudaliyar (2). There are only two cases in the other High Courts. The decision in Allah Dei Begam v. Kesri Mal (3), which is to the effect that appeals lie to the Court to which the territory is added is based on the construction of the language of section 17 of the North-Western Provinces Civil Courts Act. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Harabati v. Satyabadi Behara (4) came to a similar conclusion on the interpretation of the language of the special Statute and of the notification of the Government bearing on it. I do not find any direct English decision on the point. But in American Encyclopædia, Volume II, page 965, it is stated that the "jurisdiction of the cause is not transferred to the appellate tribunal until, under the particular laws prevailing, the appeal is perfected." The above discussion shows that the Legislature in India favours the view that the original Court should have no jurisdiction when the place where the contract was made is taken away from its limits. The law in America is in consonance with this principle. I must hold on the authorities referred to by me that the appeal lay to the District Court of Bellary. I am aware that the convenience of the litigants will not be advanced by this conclusion. In case the Appellate Court should either remand the case for fresh disposal or ask for a finding upon new issues, it is desirable that the case should go back to the Munsif who heard it originally. If the appeal is heard by the Bellary District Judge in this case, he will have no power to send the case down to the District Munsif of Madanapalle. But in matters of procedure uniformity is of the essence of the administration of justice and as it has been held already that in regard to applications for execution the Court which decided the suit ceases to have jurisdiction by the transfer of territory, the decision in this case should be that the appeal lies to the District Judge of Bellary as Kadiri is part of the Bellary District.

The appeal will be sent to that Court to be disposed of according to law.

Revision allowed.

(1) 22 Ind. Cas. 899; (1914) M. W. N. 205; 1 L. W. 251; 26 M. L. J. 189; 37 M. 462

(2) 7 Ind. Cas. 864; (1910) M. W. N. 477; 8 M. L. T. 299.

(3) 28 A. 93; A. W. N. (1905) 199; 2 A. L. J. 576.

(4) 34 C. 636; 5 C. L. J. 550.

RUPAN SINGH v. CHAMPA LAL.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1022 OF 1913.
November 19, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Chamier and Mr. Justice Piggott.
RUPAN SINGH—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus
CHAMPA LAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Transferof Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 51, 63, 72—Improvement—Mortgagor and mortgagee—Mortgage of kacha house—Pacca double-storied house built on kacha house falling down—Mortgagor, liability of.

A kacha one-storied house was usufructuarily mortgaged for Rs. 400. The mortgagee built a pacca room in place of a kacha room that had fallen down and over the new room he built a second storey and put up a pacca staircase to communicate with the upper storey. The whole construction cost him about Rs. 300:

Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to recover from the mortgagor the cost of the new room on the ground floor, as its construction was covered by section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Held, further that the mortgagee was not entitled to recover the cost of the upper storey and the staircase as they were built by him for his own convenience and comfort without any necessity and without the mortgagor's desire or consent.

Rahamatullah Beg v. Yusuf Ali, 16 Ind. Cas. 635; 10 A. L. J. 124, Shepard v. Jones, (1882) 21 Ch. D. 469; 47 L. T. 604; 21 W. R. 308, distinguished.

Arunachella Chetti v. Sithayi Ammal, 19 M. 327, Sammo v. Abdul Wahid, A. W. N (1883) 208, referred to.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Benares, dated 6th May 1913.

FACTS.—Champa Lal, a subsequent mortgagee, brought the suit for redemption against Rupan Singh, the defendant-appellant, claiming to be entitled to redeem on payment of the principal amount of the mortgage. The defendant refused to allow redemption without payment of a sum which he had spent on repairs and improvements and payment of taxes. The first Court disallowed these sums and decreed the suit. On appeal, the District Judge allowed an item spent on the re-building of a room and confirmed the first Court's decree in other respects. The defendant appealed to the High Court and the plaintiffs filed cross-objections.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellant:—The lower Appellate Court omitted to award interest on the amount allowed to us. We must get that, as the mortgage-deed provides for payment of interest and also because we are entitled under the general law as laid down in section 72, Transfer Property Act.

We must also get the amount spent on payment of taxes. We were occupying the house and were bound to pay the taxes under the Muncipality Rules.

We are also entitled to get the money which we spent on the staircase and the room in the upper story. The finding is that they are lasting and permanent. They must also increase the saleable value. They are also reasonable as the amount found to have been spent on them is Rs. 160 nearly, which would be about one-third of the mortgage-money. In deciding whether constructions are reasonable or not, the amount spent on the constructions and the customs and feelings of the parties must be looked at. Here the mortgagee is a Hindu and Hindus require privacy. As the room in the upper story was built for privacy, it must be held to be reasonable and necessary.

Money can be claimed for improvements and additions. I rely on Rahamatullah Beg v. Yusuf Ali (1); Durga Singh v. Naurang Singh (2); Shepard v. Jones (3); Sandon v. Hooper (4); Ghose on Mortgage (4th Edition), pages 546, 547; Coote on Mortgages (8th Edition), page 1232, paragraph 2324; Fisher on Mortgage (6th Edition), paragraph 1783.

Improvements are allowed on the ground that the mortgagor should not have the benefit of something which he does not pay for, and to enable the mortgagee to enjoy the property comfortably. I submit that the mortgagor has no right to retain and enjoy the improvements without paying for it.

The ruling reported as Arunachella Chetti v. Sithayi Ammal (5) was very wide in its terms, and was doubted in Ghosh's Mortgage, page 549. The ruling reported as Sammo v. Abdul Wahid (6). does not show whether it was under the Transfer of Property Act. In any case, we should be allowed to remove the materials.

(1) 16 Ind. Cas. 635; 10 A. L. J. 124.
(2) 17 A. 282; A. W. N. (1895) 69.
(3) (1882) 21 Ch. D. 469; 47 L.T. 604; 21 W. R. 308.
(4) (1843) 6 Beav. 246; 49 E. R. 820; 12 L. J. Ch. 309; 63 R. R 72; Affirmed on Appeal 14 L. J. Ch. 120
(5) 19 M. 327.
(6) A. W. N. (1883) 208.

RUPAN SINGH v. CHAMPA LAL.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerjee, for the Respondents:—The finding is that the constructions were unreasonable and were made without the mortgagor's consent. The mortgagee is, therefore, not entitled to be paid for such constructions. This view found fovour in Sammo v. Abdul Wahid (6) and Arunachella Chetti v. Sethayi Ammal (5).

The mortgagee had no right to make such constructions as to make it impossible for the mortgagor to redeem. He is in effect trying to "unprove the mortgagor out of his estate."

It has been laid down in all the rulings relied on by the other side that the expenses should be reasonable. The finding in this case is against the appellant. So he cannot recover these items.

The Transfer of Property Act is framed to meet all contingencies and the mortgagee cannot get any charges not allowed by the Transfer of Property Act.

The amount spent on re-building the room which had fallen down should also not have been allowed. The mortgagee should not have built a pacca room in place of the kacha room. He should have re-built it in the same way. Such a construction cannot come under section 72 (b), Transfer of Property Act.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad in reply:—The question as to whether construction allowed for comes under section 72 (b) is a finding of fact and cannot be questioned here.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage of a house in the city of Benares made to secure payment of a sum of Rs. 400. While in possession of the property, the mortgagee who is the appellant before us built a pacca room in place of a kacha room that had fallen down and over the new room he built a second story and he put up a pacca staircase to communicate with the upper story. The new ground floor room cost Rs. 147-6-0, the upper room cost Rs. 113 and the staircase cost Rs. 46-8-6. The mortgagee claims to be entitled to these three sums upon redemption of the mortgage, also to a small sum paid by him for taxes. The first Court disallowed the mortgagee's claim to these sums and gave the plaintiff-respondent a sum for redemption on payment of Rs. 400 only. On appeal the District Judge allowed the costs of the ground floor room but disallowed the other items. The mortgagee has appealed to this Court regarding the items disallowed and there is a cross-objection regarding the cost of the ground floor room.

Taking the cross-objection first, we think that the District Judge was clearly right in allowing the cost of the new room on the ground floor, the original room had fallen down and the mortgagee was entitled to re-build it otherwise the house would have become uninhabitable. We think that this item is covered by section 72 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act as an expense properly incurred for the preservation of the property. We cannot agree with the argument of the plaintiff-respondent that the mortgagee was bound to re-build the room with kacha materials. He was entitled to re-build it in a more substantial manner and so as to avoid constant expense over repairs, and we do not think that the sum spent on the work is excessive.

The upper story and staircase were built by the mortgagee for his own convenience and comfort without any necessity and without the mortgagor's desire or consent. They alter the whole character of the house and are certainly not covered by any of the provisions of section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act. If regarded as accessions to the property acquired at the expense of the mortgagee, they were not necessary to preserve the property from destruction or made with the consent of the mortgagor and as they cannot be separated from the rest of the property without detriment to it, the mortgagor is not bound to pay the cost of them under section 63 of the Act. The mortgagee contends that section 63 is inapplicable and that apart from section 72 or any other provision of the Act, he is entitled to be recouped the cost of the upper story and staircase on the ground that they are lasting improvements reasonably made for the benefit of the property which added to the selling value thereof. He relies upon the decision of Banerji, J., in Rahamatullah Beg v. Yusuf Ali (1) in which he followed and applied the decision of the Court of Appeal in Shepard v. Jones (3). That was not a suit for redemption at all, but a suit for an account from a mortgagee, who had exercised his power of sale, of the application of the proceeds of that sale and what was allowed was a sum of Rs. 100 spent in deepening a well in premises used as a brewery and worth Rs. 5,000. What the Court actually held was that if the money was spent on what turned out on inquiry to be a lasting and permanent improvement and it was found that the value of the property had been enhanced to the extent of the money laid out, the mortgagor could not have the benefit of it without paying for the outlay. All the members of the Court lay stress on the consideration that not only must the improvement be lasting and permanent but the expenditure incurred must be reasonable. They throw no doubt whatever on the rule applied in many previous cases that a mortgagor must not be improved out of his property. Assuming for the moment that we are entitled to go outside section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act and apply the decision of Shepard v. Jones (3) to their case, we find nothing in that decision which in any way helps the appellant-mortgagee. We think that the mortgagee had no right whatever to add an upper story to the house for his own benefit and at the expense of the mortgagor and considering the value of the original house, we cannot hold that the expense incurred was reasonable. The principal sum secured was Rs. 400, but the mortgagee has claimed to be paid about Rs. 300 for additions, improvements etc., made without any reference to the mortgagor. Nothing in the decision of Banerji, J., or of the Court of Appeal in the cases cited above justifies such a claim as this.

Further, we are of opinion that the claim made by the mortgagee cannot be allowed unless it comes within section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act. That was the view taken by the Madras High Court in Arunachella Chetti v. Sethayi Ammal (5), and in Sammo v. Abdul Wahid (6) this Court refused to allow a mortgagee the cost of additions to the mortgage property made without the consent of the mortgagor. It is not, however, clear that the latter case was governed by the Transfer of Property Act. The case of Shepard v. Jones (3) had not been decided by the Court of Appeal when the Transfer of Property Act was passed, but there were many other published decisions on the subject including the case of Sandon v. Hooper (4) which is referred to by Banerji, J., in the course of his judgment. Nothing is said in the Act about compensation for improvements and we think that the Legislature advisedly refrained from including in the Act any provision which would enable a mortgagee without consent of the mortgagor to add to and improve or alter the property. Such a power in the hand of the ordinary mortgagee in this country would obviously lead to much litigation and the Legislature was, we think, well advised in restricting the powers of the mortgagee within narrow limits.

The Court below refused to allow interest on the sum of Rs. 147-6-0 and omitted to deal with the claim on account of taxes paid by the mortgagee. We allow interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem from April 20th, 1911, up to the date of redemption on the sum of Rs. 147-6-0 and by consent of the plaintiff-respondent, we allow a sum of Rs. 8-9-0 on account of taxes paid by the mortgagee. To this extent and as regards costs the appeal is allowed. The cross-objection is dismissed. The plaintiff respondent and defendant-appellant will pay and receive proportionate costs throughout. Other parties will pay their own costs.

Appeal partly allowed.

COURT OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE, UNITED PROVINCES.

REVENUE REVISION PETITION No. 32 OF 1912-13 OF BARA BANKI DISTRICT.

April 14, 1914.

Present:—Sir Duncan Colvin Baillie, S. M.

Thakur SUBKARAN SINGH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

RAGHUBANS AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4 (3)—Abatement of appeal—Death of one of respondents—Legal representatives of deceased respondent not brought upon record—Respondent, deceased, abatement only as against.

Where one of the respondents dies and his heirs are not made parties to the appeal, the appeal does not abate as a whole but simply as against the deceased respondent, and the decree passed in appeal holds good as against those respondents who are represented before the Appellate Court.

HAYAT KHATUN v. SHARM KHATUN.

Raj Chunder Sen v. Ganga Das Seal, 31 C. 487; 1 A. L. J. 145; 8 C. W. N. 442; 31 I. A 71; 14 M. L. J. 147 (P. C.), distinguished from.

Appeal from the decree of the Officiating Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 2nd May, 1913, reversing that of the Deputy Commissioner, Bara Banki, dated 19th August 1912, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Bara Banki, dated 5th October 1911.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath, for the Appellants.

Mr. Babu Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was for resumption of a muafi held by the respondent. The Commissioner held that section 107H applied and ordered that rent should be paid by the respondent as an under-proprietor. Two objections are taken in appeal. First, that inasmuch as one of the plaintiffs, Pirthi Singh, died after the decision of the Deputy Commissioner and before that of the Commissioner and as his heirs had not been made parties to the appeal before the Commissioner, the appeal had abated. I am referred to a Privy Council decision reported as Raj Chunder Sen v. Ganga Das Seal (1). The law however, in the present Civil Procedure Code is different from the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code as it stood when that decision was pronounced. The law now only provides that a suit abates as against the deceased party and there is nobody here to represent Pirthi Singh. If appearance had been made on his behalf, I should have directed that the lower Court should inquire whether there was not sufficient reason for extending the period of six months allowed for substitution of the representatives of the deceased; but as Pirthi Singh is not represented it is unnecessary to go into this question. The decree certainly holds good as against the persons who were represented in the Commissioner's Court.

The second objection is that it is not shown that there were two successors to the original grantee. The Commissioner relied on the record that Bhawani, the eldest brother of the respondent, is first shown as having held the holding. After him, the name of Basant was entered at the second Settlement and now the name of Raghubans was entered apparently as the result of the partition. It is claimed that all three were members of a joint Hindu family and that there was no succession at all, that all were from the beginning joint owners and took the shares of the deceased brothers by survivorship. This argument would prevail so far as the question of the succession of Basant to Bhawani and Raghubans to Basant is concerned, but there is no doubt whatsoever left in my mind that this is a pre-annexation muafi and, therefore, the question of succession is to my mind not one of importance.

The appeal is dismissed with costs on the appellant.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 31 C. 487 (P. C.); 1 A. L. J. 145; 8 C. W. N 2 31 I. A. 71; 14 M. L. J. 147.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 282 OF 1914.

June 18, 1914.

Present:—Sir Alfred Kensington, KT., Chief Judge.

Musammat HAYAT KHATUN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

Musammat SHARM KHATUN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 8, 16—Application to be appointed guardian—Interference in family affairs—Court, duty of.

A Court should refuse to take proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act when they involve an unnecessary interference with family arrangements which are quite satisfactory.

As a general rule far less harm is done by leaving people to manage the affairs of their children in their own way than by attempting to do it for them through the agency of a District Court.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Muzaffargarh, dated the 12th of January 1914.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This case is a good instance of the unnecessary trouble caused by the District Courts in many cases through uncalled-for interference with family affairs under the Guardians and Wards Act. The following pedigree explains matters :

Ahmad Bakhsh is said to have left some 200 bighas which have been recorded as owned half and half by the two sons by different wives.

These two women (both present) are apparently on good terms, notwithstanding the fact that the first wife, Ghulam Fatima, has re-married within the village.

There is apparently not the smallest reason why any one should interfere in the affairs of the family. Peasant women of this class, not observing any sort of pardah, are quite well able to look after the interests of their own children. The probability is that they will do so better than any one else.

However on the 1st November 1913 Musammat Hayat Khatun, sister of Ahmad Bakhsh, chose to apply for guardianship of the persons and property of all four of his children, as being her nephews and nieces. Seeing that the mothers of these children were alive, the Court should have at once rejected the application.

The result of taking action was, that on the 12th December 1913 a further application was made by Hassan Bakhsh (brother of Musammat Ghulam Fatima's second husband) asking that he should be appointed guardian of that woman's child, Ghulam Muhammad, as being his prospective father-in-law.

Then on the 12th January 1914 the District Judge passed the extraordinary order now under appeal. It professes to have been made by consent, but there is nothing on record to support this, and if the parties consented they can hardly have understood what they were doing. The arrangement made is that besides certain complicated orders about moveables which go much beyond the legitimate scope of the Court's authority, the management of the property is made over to a Hindu lambardar on certain indefinite terms as to remuneration.

From this order Musammat Hayat Khatun and Hassan Bakhsh have appealed, while the women Ghulam Fatima and Sharm Khatun are equally vehement against it as respondents. There can clearly have never been any real agreement of parties, and all unite in saying that the making over of the family property to a Hindu as a paid manager was the last thing they desired.

The whole arrangement is quite indefensible, both as to the land and as to certain arbitrary orders about the women's ornaments, some of which the Court ordered to be sold by auction and others to be held on security, and as to the sale of certain cattle left by Ahmad Bakhsh. There is no valid excuse for any sort of interference by the Court, even although Musammat Ghulam Fatima has done what is probably the best thing she could do by re-marrying the uncle of the girl to whom her son is betrothed.

Counsel for Musammat Hayat Khatun recognises that the best thing for all concerned is that proceedings under the Act should be dropped altogether. His own client no longer presses her application for guardianship and in this she is well advised, as the only possible result would be an endless series of family disputes. It is much to be regretted that she should have started the complication by an ill-considered application, and still more that a District Judge of experience should have taken the matter up under the Act. As a general rule far less harm is done by leaving people to manage the affairs of their children in their own way than by attempting to do it for them through the agency of a District Court. There was here not even a prima facie case for interference.

The appeal is accepted. The order of 12th January 1914 is set aside in toto. The applications for guardianship are dismissed in respect of both the persons and property of the minors. If any steps have been taken by the Court in pursuance of the order of 12th January they will be re-traced as far as possible, and all concerned will be relegated so far as can be done to the positions held by them before these proceedings were started.

Appeal accepted.

KAILASA v. RAGHUBAR.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 124 OF 1913.

July 8, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Kendall, A. J. C.

Musammat KAILASA AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

RAGHUBAR—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Declaratory suit, maintainability of, where paternity of an illegitimate son is denied—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488—Order for maintenance of an illegitimate son.

Defendant No. 1 brought a claim for maintenance in the Magistrate's Court under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, against the plaintiff whom she averred to be the father of her illegitimate son, defendant No. 2. She obtained an order for maintenance. Basing his cause of action upon that order, the plaintiff brought the present suit for a declaration that the defendant No. 2 is not his son and that he had never an illicit connection with the defendant No. 1:

Held, that the suit for a declaration that defendant No. 2 was not an illegitimate son of the plaintiff was maintainable.

Subhudra v. Basdeo Dube, 18 A. 29; A. W. N. (1895) 147, Waryam Singh v. Musammat Premon, 50 P.R. 1901, 158 P. L. R. 1901; Musammat Bakhan v. Ala Bakhsh, 26 P. R. 1903; 100 P. L. R. 1903, distinguished Chinnasami Mudaliar v. Ambalavana Mudaliar, 29 M. 48; Deraje Malinga Naika v. Marati Kaveri, 30 M. 400; 2 M L. T. 344, referred to.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated 27th February 1913, reversing that of the Munsif of Fatehpur, dated 12th November 1912.

Mr. E. Mannel, for the Appellants.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Defendant No. 1 brought a claim for maintenance in the Magistrate's Court under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, against the plaintiff whom she averred to be the father of her illegitimate son, defendant No. 2. She obtained an order for maintenance at Rs. 3 a month on the 11th of May 1912. Basing his cause of action upon that order, the plaintiff has brought this present suit for a declaration that the defendant No. 2 is not his son and that he had never an illicit connection with the defendant No. 1.

The Court of first instance held that the suit was cognizable by the Civil Court; but it found that the plaintiff had not proved his case and it dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff being the appellant, the question of jurisdiction was not raised in the lower Appellate Court. That Court found on the evidence that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. It allowed the appeal and decreed the suit as brought.

The defendants have appealed to this Court on the ground that the relief prayed for could not be granted by a Civil Court and that the plaintiff was merely seeking to set aside the order of the Magistrate. It is also pleaded that a full and legal inference has not been drawn from the evidence of the appellants. This latter point has not been argued; and it is quite clear that the lower Appellate Court, presuming that it was properly raised in the appeal, was perfectly entitled upon the evidence which was before it to come to the finding at which it arrived.

As to the question of jurisdiction, the appellants rely upon the ruling of the Allahabad High Court reported as Subhudra v. Basdeo Dube (1), which professes to follow an old Calcutta ruling. In that case, too, the plaintiff had had an order passed against him under section 488 for maintenance to a certain woman and to her child, of whom he was found to be the father. The Court of first instance had found that it had no jurisdiction, and the lower Appellate Court had taken a contrary view and had remanded the suit. In the High Court it was said: "These reliefs are not reliefs which a Civil Court can grant, especially under the circumstances of this case;" and "what the respondent seeks to do is to set aside the maintenance orders as passed by the Magistrate who had full jurisdiction to pass them, and to declare that they are of no force." The suit was, therefore, dismissed. In Subad Domni v. Katiram Dome (2), the ruling on which the Allahabad Court relied, a Magistrate had made an order that a certain man should provide for two children, his sons. A suit was brought by that man before a Munsif, who passed an order to the effect that the plaintiff was not the father of the second child. On this the Judicial Commissioner of Assam referred the Magistrate's order to the High Court to be set aside. The High Court recorded its opinion that the decree of the Civil Court could not affect the order of the Magistrate, "even if the Civil Court had jurisdiction, which it has not, to make a declaratory order as to the paternity of the child in question." The appellants further rely upon the obiter dictum of the learned Judges who decided the case of Ghana Kanta Mohanta v. Gereli (3). In that case a Hindu woman had applied under section 488 for maintenance of her illegitimate minor son, but the Magistrate had refused her application. A civil suit was then brought for a declaration that the child was the child of the defendant and for a decree for maintenance at Rs. 15 per annum. The Civil Court had decreed the claim; and the High Court, in dismissing the appeal, said that if the Magistrate had made an order granting maintenance, the paternity of the child being established, possibly a suit would not lie in a Civil Court to set aside that order. The decisions of the Allahabad High Court and the obiter dictum of the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court dealt with the question of a civil suit to set aside an order of maintenance passed by a competent Criminal Court. The present I hold not to be such a suit. It is argued for the appellants that if the plaintiff succeed in obtaining a declaration that defendant No. 2 is not his illegitimate son, he will go with that declaration to the Magistrate and will endeavour to get the order for maintenance cancelled. That is as it may be; but I cannot at all hold that a suit like the present must be held, because it is founded upon the Magistrate's order, to be directed in intention, though not in words, against that order. No person can come for a declaration in a Civil Court under the Specific Relief Act on mere speculative grounds. He will have no cause of action, on which a Court in its discretion will give him a decree, until there is some infringement or threatened infringement of some right; but if a cloud is cast upon that right he will be entitled to sue for a declaration to remove that cloud. In the present instance the plaintiff has been saddled, by the finding of the Magistrate, with an illegitimate child, of which he says he is not the father. Such a legal character necessarily carries with it rights and obligations above and beyond the one obligation, to provide the maintenance for that child which the Magistrate has ordered. It is by that order that the cloud has been cast upon his legal character; and it is for that reason that he must base his cause of action upon that order. He does not seek to set it aside. A case similar to the present one is reported in Deraje Malinga Naika v. Marati Kaveri (4). Reference was there made to the Allahabad case to which I have referred above; but the learned Judges differentiated that case on the same ground on which I have differentiated it above, namely, that the learned Judges had treated it as a suit in which the plaintiff sought to have the maintenance order set aside. In this case it was held that the suit would lie. The Judges say: "We see no reason why a suit claiming the declaration for which the plaintiff asks is not maintainable." In Chinnasami Mudaliar v. Ambalavana Mudaliar (5) the plaintiff was allowed to sue for and obtained a declaration that the defendant had not been adopted by him: while in the two cases reported as Waryam Singh v. Musammat Premon (6) and Musammat Bakhan v. Ala Bakhsh (7) the plaintiff was allowed to sue for and obtained a declaration that the defendant was not her husband.

(1) 18 A. 29; A. W. N. (1895) 147.
(2) 20 W. R. Cr. 58.

I entirely fail to see why this suit for a declaration that defendant No. 2 is not an illegitimate son of the plaintiff is not maintainable. The other relief, namely, a declaration that the plaintiff never had any illicit connection with the defendant No. 1 is not a relief which ought to be granted.

I, therefore, allow the appeal thus far that only the declaration that defendant No. 2 is not the illegitimate son of the plaintiff will stand. In the circumstances of the case I order that the appellants do bear their own costs and pay the costs of the plaintiff-respondent throughout.

Appeal allowed.

(3) 2 Ind. Cas. 550; 32 C. 479; 13 C. W. N. 150.

(4) 30 M. 400; 2 M. L. T. 344.

(5) 29 M. 48.

(6) 50 P. R. 1901; 158 P. L. R. 1901.

(7) 26 P. R. 1903; 100 P. L. R. 1903.

LAKSHMINARAYANA AIYAR v. ULAGAMMAL.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 1403 AND 1404 OF 1912.

December 2, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Hannay.

LAKSHMINARAYANA AIYAR—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT NO. 2—APPELLANT (IN BOTH)

versus

IN SECOND APPEAL NO. 1403 OF 1912.

ULAGAMMAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

IN SECOND APPEAL NO. 1404 OF 1912.

PICHAI PILLAI, NOW A MAJOR, AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Redemption, right of—Equity of redemption sold in Court auction - Purchaser not getting symbolical delivery, effect of—Equity of redemption purchased by mortgagee, effect of—Adverse possession of interest in land—Hindu Law—Alienation by widow—Consent of next reversioner to alienation given in course of suit, effect of.

In 1873 the equity of redemption in an usufructuarily mortgaged property, which was in the possession of the mortgagee, was sold in execution of a money-decree against the mortgagor, but the auction-purchaser did not get symbolical delivery of the incorporeal right purchased by him. In 1893 the mortgagee purchased the equity of redemption from the heir of the auction-purchaser. In 1909 the plaintiff purchased the equity of redemption from the heir of the heir of the mortgagor and sued for redemption:

Held, that, by purchasing the equity of redemption from the auction-purchaser, the mortgagee became the full owner of the property and that the plaintiff had no right to claim redemption.

Held, also, that the fact that the auction-purchaser of the equity of redemption did not get symbolical delivery of the incorporeal right purchased by him, did not vest back that right in the mortgagor-judgment-debtor.

There can be no adverse possession of any interest in land by a person who is not deriving any benefit whatever during the period of the alleged adverse possession.

The consent of the next reversioner to a Hindu widow's alienation if given in the course of a suit, and not at the time of the alienation, is not sufficient to pass full title to the alienee.

Amirtolall Bose v. Rajoneekant Mitter, 2 I. A. 113; 15 B. L. R. 10; 23 W. R. 214, followed.

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court of Tinnevelly, in Appeal Suits Nos. 301 and 302 of 1911, preferred against those of the District Munsif of Ambasamudram, in Original Suits Nos. 261 and 373 of 1910.

Mr. S. Ramaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. Kuppusawmy Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—These two second appeals have arisen out of two connected cross-suits. Lakshminarayana Aiyar is the plaintiff in the principal suit. His suit was for redemption of a mortgage (the deed being dated 15th November 1865) for Rs. 514. The suit was for the redemption, not of the entirety of the mortgaged properties, but only of a definite half share on payment of half of the mortgage amount, that is, Rs. 257 out of the Rs. 514. The facts are a little complicated, but for the purposes of this judgment it is only necessary to state the following.

Sivapiramanayagam Pillai was the owner of the half share in dispute. One Samikolathur Aiyar purchased Sivapiramanayagam Pillai's half share in the equity of redemption in Court auction in 1873 held in execution of a money-decree, after attaching the property subject to Ponnappa Pillai's mortgage of 1865. The mortgagee (Ponnappa Pillai) purchased the equity of redemption from Samikolathur Aiyar's son, Subbaiyar, in 1893. Now the plaintiff ignoring this purchase by the mortgagee, Ponnappa Pillai, of the equity of redemption (which purchase prima facie put an end to the mortgage and made Ponnappa Pillai the full owner of the plaint half share), brought this suit to redeem, basing his title on the fact that the heir of the heir of Sivapiramanayagam Pillai sold that equity of redemption in 1909 to the plaintiff's vendor. It is clear from the above statement of facts that Sivapiramanayagam Pillai's heir's heir had, prima facie, no right to claim any title in the equity of redemption after it had been sold away to Samikolathur Sami Aiyar in 1873 in Court auction. The ingenious contention put forward on behalf of the plaintiff is that, though Samikolathur Aiyar purchased the equity of redemption in 1873, he did not get symbolical delivery of that incorporeal right and hence the mortgagor, Sivapiramanayagam Pillai and his heirs got back the title to the equity of redemption on the lapse of twelve years from Samikolathur Aiyar's Court auction-purchase in the year 1873.

It should be remembered that the actual possession was in the mortgagee, Ponnappa Pillai, all along. The contention that a judgment-debtor who had only an incorporeal right and had not actual possession of the land and whose incorporeal rights were sold away in Court-auction, gets back title to those incorporeal rights if the Court auction-purchaser does not get symbolical delivery, is a rather startling proposition and no authority was cited in support of it. If I understood the appellant's (plaintiff's) Vakil, Mr. S. Ramaswami Aiyar, aright, he seemed to contend that the incorporeal right which was vested in the judgment-debtor continued to remain in his possession owing to the Court auction-purchaser not getting symbolical delivery of it, that it so remained in his possession adversely to the Court auction-purchaser and that by twelve years' adverse possession, the judgment-debtor got back that incorporeal right. I can understand adverse possession of land by actual possession or by the receipt of rents. But adverse possession of any interest in land by a person who is not deriving any benefit whatever during the period of the alleged adverse possession is, I must confess, rather unintelligible to me. A purchaser in Court auction even of tangible immoveable property is not bound to take delivery of the property purchased, but if the judgment-debtor was in actual possession thereof and if the Court auction-purchaser allowed the judgment-debtor to remain in possession for twelve years, then he would be barred by limitation from afterwards claiming possession. If the judgment-debtor was not in actual possession but was receiving rent from his tenants and if the Court auction-purchaser allowed the judgment-debtor to be receiving rents from the tenants for twelve years after the purchase, then also the Court auction-purchaser would be ordinarily barred from getting possession under his title as Court auction-purchaser. He could, however, succeed in a suit for possession if brought within twelve years, though he has not applied under Order XXI, rule 95, and Order XXI, rule 96, for possession through Court. But if the judgment-debtor himself is neither in actual possession nor was receiving any benefit from the land, from a tenant or other person in actual possession, I am unable to see how the judgment-debtor could be enjoying any right in such cases adversely to the Court auction-purchaser. Even in the case of a tenant who was paying rent to the judgment-debtor, the Court auction-purchaser could persuade such tenant to attorn to him without obtaining symbolical delivery of the property under Order XXI, rule 96, and the judgment-debtor thereafter could have no opportunity to claim the enjoyment of any adverse right in the property against the Court auction-purchaser. Mr. Ramaswamy Aiyar's argument, if accepted, would run counter to Article 137 of the Limitation Act which gives twelve years to the purchaser of an incorporeal right, not from the date of the sale but from the date when the judgment-debtor becomes "first enabled to possession." In the present case, the Court auction-purchaser's not applying for symbolical delivery of the equity of redemption purchased by him cannot enable the judgment-debtor to put forward the claim that he continued in adverse possession of the intangible right as mortgagor, though he was not deriving the slightest tangible profit from the mortgaged lands which were in the possession of the usufructuary mortgagee. In the result, the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

In the connected Second Appeal No. 1404 of 1912, the plaintiffs are the daughter's sons of the mortgagee, Ponnappa Pillai. It has been decided in the connected suit that Ponnappa Pillai, by purchase of the equity of redemption in 1893 from Samikolathur Aiyar's son Subbaiyar, became the full owner of the plaint property. The plaintiffs' suit is for a declaration of their title to the property as purchasers from Ponnappa Pillai's son's widow and heir. The 2nd defendant in this suit is the plaintiff Lakshminarayanier in the cross-suit. His defence based on the alleged loss by Samikolathur Aiyar of the title to the equity of redemption by adverse possession of the original mortgagor has been just now found against, and he is the appellant in the second appeal, the plaintiffs' suit for declaration having been decreed in the lower Courts. The 2nd defendant (appellant) having thus no legs of his own to stand upon, his learned Vakil, Mr. S. RamasamiAiyar, contended that the plaintiff's purchase from the 4th defendant (a qualified owner, who is the widow of Ponnappa Pillai's son), cannot entitle him to full ownership and that the plaintiffs' suit for declaration of title must, therefore, fail. The lower Courts gave such a declaration because the plaintiffs were the next male reversioners of Ponnappa Pillai's son, the last male owner. But the learned Vakil argues that though they may be the next male reversioners, there is a female reversioner, the 3rd defendant's (Ponnappa Pillai's) widow, mother of the last owner (Ponnappa Pillai's son), still alive who intervenes between the 4th defendant and the plaintiffs. The lower Appellate Court held that though the 3rd defendant is the next reversioner, she gave her consent in the course of the trial of the cross-suit to the Court's treating the sale by her daughter-in-law, the 4th defendant, in favour of her (3rd defendant's) daughter's sons (the plaintiffs) as valid against the 3rd defendant also and hence that there was nothing in the 2nd defendant's objection. Having regard, however, to the Privy Council case in Amritolal Bose v. Rajoneekant Mitter (1), it is doubtful whether the 3rd defendant's consent given in the course of the suit will make the alienation by the 4th defendant pass. full title to the plaintiffs. But I think that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who have been found to have no title whatever, can have no legal interest in the plaint property which could enable them to contest the lower Appellate Court's decree in the plaintiffs' favour, even if that decree is too widely worded in favour of the plaintiffs. We would, therefore, dismiss this second appeal also.

HANNAY, J.—I agree.

Appeals dismissed.

(1) 2 I. A. 113; 15 B. L. R. 10; 23 W. R. 215.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 23 OF 1911.

October 26, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shah Din and Mr. Justice Scott-Smith.

BHIM SINGH—DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

versus

JOT RAM, MINOR, THROUGH NATHWA—PLAINTIFF AND NEKI, MORTGAGOR—DEFENDANT No. 2—RESPONDENTS.

Alienation—Legal necessity—Onus—Just debts, payment of, by mortgagee—Mortgagee, right of, to recover.

In a suit by a reversioner for a declaration that the mortgage-deeds executed by the plaintiff's brother in favour of a certain person, being without consideration and legal necessity, shall not affect his reversionary rights, the onus of proving legal necessity for the alienations lies upon the mortgagee and if the mortgagee fails to establish his position he is entitled to credit only in respect of such portion of the mortgage-money as was applied towards the liquidation of the mortgagor's "just debts" due to third parties.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Delhi Division, at Delhi, dated the 14th October 1910, varying that of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 12th April 1910, dismissing the claim.

Mehta Bahadar Chand, for the Appellant.

Pandit Ram Bhaj Datta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This Appeal No. 23 of 1911 and Civil Appeal No. 342 of 1911 are cross-appeals and they will both be dealt with in one judgment. The plaintiff, Jot Ram, and defendant No. 2, Neki, are real brothers. On the 20th July 1906 Neki executed two mortgage-deeds, one for Rs. 4,000 and the other for Rs. 1,000, in favour of defendant No. 1, Bhim Singh, in respect of 150 bighas of land situate in village Kurari Suleman Nagar, Tahsil Delhi. On the 18th October 1908 Jot Ram brought the present suit against Bhim Singh and Neki for a declaration that the said mortgages of 20th July 1906 had been made without consideration and legal necessity and that they shall not affect his rights of reversion in respect of the land mortgaged. The District Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the mortgages in question had been effected by Neki for consideration and legal necessity, but on appeal the Additional Divisional Judge held that legal necessity for the mortgages had been proved only to the extent of Rs. 3,200 out of the total consideration of Rs. 5,000 and he, therefore, granted the plaintiff a decree, declaring that his reversionary rights in the mortgaged property shall not be affected by the mortgagor's dispute except to the extent of Rs. 3,200.

Both the plaintiff, Jot Ram, and the mortgagee-defendant, Bhim Singh, have preferred cross-appeals to this Court. We have carefully gone through the evidence on the record and have heard the Pleaders for both parties; and the conclusion we have come to is that legal necessity for the mortgages in dispute has been established only to the extent of Rs. 2,200 and that the rest of the consideration to the mortgages must be disallowed. Admittedly, the onus of proving legal necessity for the alienations in suit rests upon the mortgagee, Bhim Singh, and he has tried to discharge that onus by showing (1) that the whole sum of Rs. 5,000 advanced by him to Neki went towards the liquidation of his antecedent debts, and (2) that assuming that the whole of the said amount was not so applied, legal necessity must be held to have existed for raising that amount by mortgage, inasmuch as before advancing the money to Neki he had satisfied himself by proper inquiry that Neki owed to third parties debts amounting to upwards of Rs. 5,000 and had lent him the money for the liquidation of those debts, there being no obligation upon him to see to the application of the money.

In our opinion Bhim Singh has failed to establish this position. He has no doubt stated on oath that he made inquiries from certain creditors of Neki, whose names he has mentioned, as regards the debts that were due to them by Neki; but we cannot accept his statement on this point. He has not been able to give the amounts of the debts due to those creditors, nor has he stated the circumstances under which those debts had been incurred. Not a single one of the creditors of Neki who have been produced in Court as Bhim Singh's witnesses can say that any inquiry was made by Bhim Singh regarding the debts due by Neki; and we have no hesitation in holding that Bhim Singh made no inquiry whatever in respect of those debts.

It appears from the record that Neki began to borrow money in 1897, as deposed to by Sheo Ram, D. W. No. 5. In 1901 he entered upon a course of extravagance and commenced dealings with a number of money-lenders simultaneously, with the result that in five years he ran up large debts, the loans being advanced to him by about half a dozen professional money-lenders both in his own village and in neighbouring villages. The total amount of debts due by him in 1906 exceeded Rs. 5,000, but there is not the least doubt that the greater portion of the money borrowed by him was spent by him on non-necessary purposes and in leading a life of wasteful extravagance. In the deeds of mortgage executed by him in favour of Bhim Singh no antecedent debts are specified, and it is clear that Bhim Singh is entitled to credit only in respect of such portion of the mortgage-money as was applied towards the liquidation of Neki's "just debts" due to third parties. [Devi Ditta Singh v Saudagar Singh (1).]

The debts due by Neki to his antecedent creditors, Arjan, Sheo Ram, Kesho Ram, Udmi and Ram Gopal amounted roughly to Rs. 2,000; and upon careful consideration of their evidence and of the evidence produced by the plaintiff we are of opinion that half of that amount, Rs. 1,000, may reasonably be taken to represent the total amount of the just debts due to these creditors. The debt due to Harkishan Das, Rs. 1,200, has been admitted to have been a just debt; and, therefore, the aggregate amount of the just antecedent debts, which were paid off by Bhim Singh and which he was justified in paying, is Rs. 2,200 and no more. The mortgages in dispute were thus valid only to the extent of Rs. 2,200 and the rest of the consideration money must be disallowed as having been advanced without legal necessity.

For the foregoing reasons, we dismiss Bhim Singh's appeal (No. 23 of 1911), and accepting Jot Ram's cross-appeal (No. 342 of 1911) we reduce the amount allowed by the Additional Divisional Judge to the mortgagee from Rs. 3,200 to Rs. 2,200. We direct that the parties pay their own costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed; Cross-appeal accepted.

(1) 65 P. R. 1900; P. L. R. 1900 p. 322.

PONAKA BALARAMI REDDI v. HAZI MAHOMED ABDUL AZIZ.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.
CIVIL APPEAL No. 213 OF 1911.
March 11, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Tyabji and
Mr. Justice Spencer.
PONAKA BALARAMI REDDI AND OTHERS
—PLAINTIFFS Nos. 1, 2, 4 AND 5—APPELLANTS
versus
HAZI MAHOMED ABDUL AZIZ
BADSHAH SAHIB AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 278, 283—Attachment of property, objection to, by three claimants—Joint order setting aside attachment—Opinion adverse to one claimant, effect of—Claims to attachment, decision on, principle of.

The attachment of a property was objected to by three different objectors on different grounds. The first objector claimed to be a bona fide purchaser before attachment, the second claimed to be a mortgagee, while the third claimed that the property had devolved upon him by survivorship under Hindu Law. The Court accepted the contention of the third objector and held that the grounds relied upon by the first objector were not well-founded. But all the same it raised the attachment of the property by one joint order dealing with all objection petitions:

Held, that as the order raised the attachment, it was not against the first objector and that it could not be interpreted as against him simplybecause the Court had expressed an opinion that his grounds were not well founded.

Object of proceedings under section 283 etc., explained.

Appeal from the decree of the District Court of Nellore in Original Suit No. 25 of 1909.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyengar, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Subramania Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

TYABJI, J.—The plaintiffs and defendants are rival claimants for the ownership of the property which is referred to in the plaint. The plaintiffs claim that they are entitled to it under a sale dated 27th July 1901; the defendants claim to be purchasers in a Court sale in execution of a decree.

The learned District Judge has held that the plaintiffs are barred from suing on their title by the operation of section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882. He held that the plaintiffs were parties against whom an order (which is Exhibit II in the case) had been passed in previous execution proceedings in 1903 and that the suit not having been brought within one year from those proceedings, it is barred under Article 11 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act.

Exhibit II was an order passed in Civil Miscellaneous Petitions Nos. 440 and 451 of 1903 by the District Judge of Nellore on the 22nd September 1903. The order was that the attachment sought to be raised by the petitioners should be raised. It would, therefore, appear that Exhibit II cannot be interpreted as being an order against the plaintiffs within the meaning of section 283. Exhibit II did that which the plaintiffs then desired to be done, namely, that the attachment should be raised. It is true that in the course of Exhibit II the learned Judge expressed an opinion adverse to the grounds on which the plaintiffs then relied, and he, no doubt, came to the conclusion that those grounds were not well-founded. That does not make the plaintiffs "the party against whom an order was passed under sections 280, 281 or 282", for as I have said the order was that the attachment should be raised. The order in Exhibit II must, on the face of it, be construed as one joint order dealing with the two petitions for the attachment being raised. It cannot be construed on the basis of its being three orders. It may be conceded that if the Judge had, in fact, desired to pass three distinct orders, one on the contention of each of the two petitioners, and a third on the contention of the then 4th defendant, in that case the order he would have passed on the plaintiffs' petition would have been against their claims. The contention on behalf of the defendants is that the interpretation of Exhibit II, to which I have first referred, is not correct. In this connection certain proceedings in the High Court of a later date are relied upon by the respondent. These proceedings were considered irrelevant by the lower Court but have been admitted by the consent of both sides before us. These proceedings, it is argued, preclude us from putting on Exhibit II the interpretation which I have just stated: alternatively it is said that other Judges of this Court have already interpreted Exhibit II with reference to points now arising and that we ought not to take a different view. Before I can deal with this argument, it will be necessary to state somewhat fully the facts out of which the present appeal arises. I shall as far as possible speak of the plaintiffs and defendants, meaning thereby the present plaintiffs and the present defendants, irrespective of their designation in the previous proceedings.

The property in question belonged to four families, from whom the plaintiffs or their predecessors-in-title (to all of whom I shall refer as the plaintiffs) claim to have purchased under the sale-deed, dated 27th July 1901. The first and second defendants obtained a decree, it is alleged, against Narasa Reddy representing one of the four families to whom the property, according to the plaintiffs, originally belonged. In execution of that decree the property was attached in April 1903; and the plaintiffs then put in a claim petition, Miscellaneous Petition No. 451, objecting to that attachment and claiming that the property belonged to them and not to the judgment-debtor. There was another petition, Miscellaneous Petition No. 440, by persons claiming to be the mortgagees of the property and claiming that the attachment should be subject to their mortgage claims. Both those petitions were dealt with at the same time by the District Judge in Exhiblt II. At the hearing of those petitions one Ragava Reddy also objected to the attachment. He belonged to and apparently represented the other of the four families, and claimed that the attachment should be raised, because the property was joint family property and previous to the attachment it had, by the law of survivorship, passed out of the ownership of the judgment-debtor (then deceased) and devolved upon himself. This contention was accepted by the learned District Judge who disposed of the claim in Exhibit II. But from Exhibit II it also appears, as I have already had occasion to say, that the plaintiffs did not in the opinion of the learned Judge make out their claim to be considered as the bona fide purchasers of the property attached. In the order the opinion was also expressed on the other hand that the other petitioners were entitled to rely upon the mortgage put forward by them. In the result he passed one order, namely, that the attachment should be raised. Against that order an appeal was taken to the High Court, being Appeal against Order No. 3 of 1904. To that appeal neither of the two petitioners were parties, the learned Judges (Davies and Sankaran Nair, JJ.) after stating that fact said that the order raising the attachment was set aside "so far as the 4th defendant was concerned." This order cannot, therefore, be said to affect the rights of the present plaintiffs as they stood prior to the appeal. If I am right, therefore, in holding that the order under Exhibit II must be considered to be one joint order to the effect that the attachment should be raised, then that order, so far as the plaintiffs are concerned, was not affected by judgment in Appeal against Order No. 3 of 1904. That judgment is dated the 4th October 1904. After that judgment the execution was proceeded with. There was an application for a warrant of sale in pursuance of which finally the property was sold on the 5th of October 1909. But in the meantime the plaintiffs put in a petition, Miscellaneous Petition No. 441 of 1906, applying that the sale should be stopped. They relied upon Exhibit II which, they claimed, was final and conclusive as regards their rights, because the defendants had not within a year thereof instituted a suit for setting aside the order raising the attachment. This contention of the plaintiffs was, on the 18th of July 1906, accepted by the then District Judge and he decided that the defendants' application for sale must be dismissed. In other words, he held that the sale could not be proceeded with. Against that order of the District Judge, Civil Revision Petition No. 549 of 1906 was put in. The petition was dealt with in the first instance by Mr. Justice Wallis on the 12th February 1908. According to Mr. Justice Wallis's view, Exhibit II ought to be construed as three orders and it ought to be construed as including an order that the present plaintiffs had no claim to the property; in other words that they were parties against whom such an order was passed as is referred to in section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code. The logical result of Mr. Justice Wallis's interpretation of Exhibit II would be not only (1) that the sale could not then have been stopped by the plaintiffs, but (2) it might also imply that the plaintiffs' rights, if any, in the property were lost by the fact that they had not instituted a suit within a year of Exhibit II. If that interpretation of Exhibit II is correct and if both the results to which I have referred must follow from that interpretation, then, of course, the plaintiffs must fail in their present suit. Even on Wallis, J.'s construction of Exhibit II Mr. S. Sreenivasa Aiyengar argues that the suit is not barred. For reasons which I shall indicate later, it is unnecessary in my view to deal with that construction of Exhibit II and with Mr. S. Sreenivasa Aiyengar's argument on this basis. There was an appeal from Mr. Justice Wallis's judgment and in that appeal Mr. Justice Miller and Mr. Justice Pinhey decided on the 7th September 1908, that the question whether or not the plaintiffs had lost their right to establish their claim to the property by a suit by their having failed to do so within a year of Exhibit II, was a question which it was unnecessary to decide in those proceedings. They held further that the defendants were not bound to institute a suit within a year of Exhibit II. On that point and so far as the further defendants in those proceedings were concerned, it seems to me that there could not be any question that the sale could proceed after the judgment of Davies and Sankaran Nair, JJ., allowing the appeal and permitting the sale to be proceeded with. However that be, the question whether the plaintiffs were barred from putting forward a claim on the basis of the sale-deed to them dated the 27th of July 1901 was expressly not decided by the Court of Appeal, and it is clear that the question was not before them which we have to decide, viz., whether it was for the plaintiffs to institute a suit under section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code within a year after Exhibit II. All they had to consider was whether it was for the defendants to institute a suit. It is true that they agree with Wallis, J.'s view that the effect of Exhibit II was to disallow the claim of the plaintiffs. But that view was expressed in considering whether the effect of Exhibit II was to necessitate a suit by the defendants under section 283. On the other hand they expressly refer to the question whether the plaintiffs should put in a claim petition in the sale proceedings and decline to consider the appeal as such a claim. There is no doubt that the question is complicated by the fact that Exhibit II was one joint order dealing really with three claims, and by the further fact that in the appeal to the High Court against that order the plaintiffs were not parties and yet the order was reversed. Though the plaintiffs were interested in having it confirmed, yet the order was reversed and the plaintiffs were not bound by the reversal, as their rights would not be affected by proceedings to which they were not parties.

Before considering whether owing to these proceedings I ought to take a view different from that which I have expressed as appearing to me to be the prima facie interpretation of Exhibit II, or whether the effect of Exhibit II was modified by any of the proceedings to which I have referred, I think it necessary to consider some of the decisions to which we have been referred.

The general principle underlying those decisions, as I understand it, seems to be governed by the fact that the proceedings under section 278 and the following sections which are referred to in section 283, are primarily for the purpose of dealing with attachments in execution proceedings.

In so far as any decision on the claims of parties other than the judgment-debtor is necessary for the continuance of the execution proceedings, that decision has to be promptly given by the authorities entrusted with the execution proceedings in the exercise rather of administrative than judicial functions; and in so far as on their decision the execution proceedings are carried out, the parties who are affected by their decision have a short period of limitation within which that decision can be contested. The decisions during the course of the execution are necessary for the execution proceedings being carried through and it is necessary that such proceedings shall not be delayed, nor their effect kept in suspense, after they have been acted upon. If, however, for any reason the execution proceedings are not pursued to their end, and if the parties are, owing to the arrest of such proceedings, left in the same state in which they were prior to the attachment, then the whole of the proceedings arising out of the attachment and the claim petition are, so to say, wiped out, and the petitioner is not concerned with what may have been incidentally held with a view to that being effected which ultimately was not given effect to, though it may be cessation of the attachment and the execution proceedings following it was not brought about by circumstances controlled by the unsuccessful claimants.

This seems to me to be the principle on which Ibrahimbhai v. Kabulabhai (1); Gopal Purshotam v. Bai Divali (2); Krishna Prasad Roy v. Bipin Behary Roy (3) and Kedar Nath v. Rakhal Das (4) were decided. Thus in Ibrahimbhai v. Kabulabhai (1) the attachment was withdrawn though on the application not of the claimant but of another person, and it was held that the attachment being withdrawn it was unnecessary for the plaintiff to institute a suit : as the object of the suit would have been to get the property released from attachment and that object had already been effected, though through the agency of other parties. That decision was followed in Gopal Purshotam v. Bai Divali (2) and it was there laid down that the withdrawal of the attachment re-placed the parties in status quo ante. The principle on which the case of Umesh Chunder Roy v. Raj Bullubh Sen(5) proceeded seems to me to have been the same. In that case it is stated at page 281: " But it appears that no sale was held, because the judgment-debtor paid off the amount of the decree. The effect of that was that the attachment ceased; and any right which the plaintiff's mother acquired by purchase, even though pending the attachment, became valid, and nothing having occurred to injure her right, if any, she had no occasion to bring any suit. The Judge of the Court below says, that the fact that the decree in execution of which the property was attached was paid off by the judgment-debtor makes no difference whatever. In this view, we think that he is mistaken. The payment by the judgment-debtor of the decretal amount did away with the necessity for a sale, and the attachment being withdrawn, the purchased right of the plaintiff's mother stood good." See also Kedar Nath v. Rakhal Das (4).

In this connection I think it necessary to deal with a remark in Koyyana Chittemma v. Doosy Gavaramma (6), which may seem to be inconsistent with the principle that I consider to underlie the decisions. There in dealing with an argument which the Court did not accept, it was said at page 228: "The argument was that the decree having been eventually satisfied there was no reason for the plaintiffs to bring a suit, and the fact that it was not satisfied until after the expiration of a year from the date of the order was immaterial. The contention was that the order was only conclusive against the plaintiffs, if they failed to bring a suit so as to bar them from denying the right of the judgment-creditor to sell the land which he had attached and the right of a purchaser claiming under a sale in execution proceedings." And then later on at page 229 the Court deals with this contention in the following terms: " We are of opinion, however, that the payment off not having been made within a year after the date of the order, the order is conclusive as between the claimants (the plaintiffs) and the defendants. To hold otherwise would lead to uncertainty of title and would be inconsistent with the policy of the Legislature in prescribing a short period of limitation for suits by parties against whom an order has been made in claim proceedings. To hold that the right of an unsuccessful claimant to bring a suit remains in a state of suspended animation for an indefinite period after the expiration of a year from the date of the order against him, liable to be revived at any moment by the payment off of the amount of the decree, would lead to great inconvenience. On the facts of the case we are of opinion that the order under section 283 was conclusive as between the plaintiffs and the defendants, and the order of the lower Appellate Court cannot be supported on the ground that it was not."

There, no doubt, it was held that, if a claim petition is decided against the petitioner and that decision is not questioned by a suit instituted within a year, then the petitioner's right to the property is barred notwithstanding that as a matter of fact the attachment may not be proceeded with. But in that case there was a decision directly against the claimant and the decision was that the attachment should continue and that the execution should proceed. In this state of circumstances it may well have seemed to the Court that it is not permitted to the unsuccessful claimant to wait and see

(1) 13 B. 72.
(2) 18 B. 241.
(3) 31 C. 228.
(4) 15 C. 674.
(5) 8 C. 279; 10 C. L. R. 204.
(6) 29 M. 225; 16 M. L. J. 136.

whether the execution is proceeded with: nor is the one year's period of limitation necessarily made subject to active steps being taken for proceeding with the execution by sale of the property or otherwise; and that, on the other hand, the attaching creditor and the other parties concerned may well think that the decision will not be questioned by the unsuccessful claimant after the lapse of a year following the decision that the claimant had no right to intervene and that the execution proceedings may continue irrespective of any hindrance on the part of the unsuccessful claimant. I need only say with regard to this decision that the main fact on which it proceeds, namely, a decision in the claim petition that the execution may proceed irrespective of the petitioner's alleged claim, does not exist in the present case. I do not think on the other hand that it was intended that the principle on which the cases to which I have referred were decided, should be disregarded. On the contrary those cases were carefully considered and distinguished and if I am right in extracting the principle that I have extracted from those cases, then it seems to me that the case of Koyyana Chittemma v. Doosy Gavaramma (6) does not apply to the circumstances with which we have to deal under Exhibit II in so far as the present question is concerned.

For these reasons I consider that on principle no less than on the construction of Exhibit II, it ought to be held that after execution proceedings were arrested by that order those parties, who were instrumental in getting the proceedings arrested, were not bound by reason of any opinion expressed in Exhibit II to institute a suit for the purpose of contesting the correctness of that opinion. I am also of opinion that the judgments of Davies and Sankaran Nair, JJ., and of Miller and Pinhey, JJ., do not affect the position of the plaintiffs as regards the present suit. There being no order against the plaintiffs in Exhibit II, the suit is not barred, and it must be remanded to the lower Court for being disposed of on the merits in accordance with law. The costs will be costs in the cause.

SPENCER, J.—I agree.

Case remanded.

COURT OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE, UNITED PROVINCES.

REVENUE REVISION PETITION No. 41 OF 1912-13 OF BARA BANKI DISTRICT.

April 15, 1914.

Present:—Sir Duncan Colvin Baillie, S. M., and Mr. G. A. Tweedy, J. M.

BENI MADHO—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

KANHAIYA LAL—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 107G—Grove-holder, nature of, tenure of—Resumption—Groves not held as muafi at Settlement—Assessment of rent—Certified copy of extract from Settlement Record, mistake in, allegation as to—Deputy Commissioner, duty of—Settlement Records to be referred to.

The tenure of a grove-holder is liable to resumption on the expiry of the term during which the land remains grove.

Plots held at the time of the Settlement as groves, and not as muafi, ought to be assessed to rent under section 107G of the Oudh Rent Act when they are brought under cultivation.

Where it is alleged before a Deputy Commissioner that there is a mistake in a certified copy of an extract from the Settlement Records, he ought to refer to the original records in order to ascertain the truth in the allegation.

Appeal from the decree of the Officiating Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 2nd July 1913, upholding the order of the Deputy Commissioner, Bara Banki, dated 22nd January 1913, modifying that of the Assistant Collector, Bara Banki, dated 19th November 1912.

FACTS.—In a resumption suit, the defendant contended that he was under section 107H of the Oudh Rent Act entitled to under-proprietary rights in respect of three plots, viz., Nos. 294, 295 and 579. Out of these Nos. 294 and 295 were entered at the time of the First Regular Settlement as groves in the possession of one Tulshi Das, who was alleged by the defendant to have been his predecessor; but the name of Tulshi Das was not entered in the Wajib-ul-arz, as were those of other persons, as muafidar or grantee. The lower Courts, therefore, presumed that these two plots were held on ordinary grove tenure at the time of the Settlement, and finding that they were now brought under cultivation, assessed them to rent under section 107G of the Oudh Rent Act. The remaining No. 579 was shown in a certified copy produced by the defendant as corresponding to old No. 522, and this No. 522 did not stand in the name of Tulshi Das at the time of the Settlement. The old No. 523, however, did so stand as part of his muafi. Thus the defendant contended that there had been a mistake in the copy issued to him and that the new No. 579 really corresponded with the old No. 523. But his contention was disregarded and he was in respect of this plot also declared to be an ordinary tenant under the provisions of section 107G of the Oudh Rent Act. The defendant then brought his contention forward in appeal before the Board.

Mr. P. N. Rozdon, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M.—The appeal relates to three numbers. Two numbers, 294 and 295, were never included in the appellant's muafi and were held by him as grove. The tenure of a grove-holder is one which is liable to resumption on the expiry of the term during which the land remains grove and it cannot be inferred that the appellant had any rights other than those of an ordinary grove-holder. In regard to these numbers the lower Courts rightly assessed rent. There remains another number, No. 579, which in the copy produced before the Court of first instance is shown as corresponding to No. 522, which was not in the appellant's name at the First Regular Settlement. The appellant alleges that there has been a mistake in the copy and that it really corresponds with No. 523 which was at the First Settlement part of his muafi. He brought this matter to the notice of the Deputy Commissioner, but the Deputy Commissioner, recording that the areas did not exactly agree, said that the appellant had given no proof of the correspondence of old No. 523 with new No. 579. This order was upheld on appeal by the Commissioner. This is not the way in which a Deputy Commissioner in Oudh is expected to deal with this case. The Settlement Records were close to him and a brief reference to them would have shown whether there had been a mistake in the copy or not. I consider that the Deputy Commissioner should have referred to the Settlement Record to ascertain what the correct number corresponding to No. 579 was. The appellant, in this Court, produces his Settlement parcha which shows No. 523 as corresponding to No. 579 and there appears to be little or no doubt that No. 523 is the really corresponding number, but as the respondent wishes it, I agree to the matter being referred back to the district for a report.

TWEEDY, J. M.—I agree that the case should go back for further evidence and a report under rule 25.

Report called for.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS APPEAL No. 76 OF 1911.

January 23, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Miller and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

SOWCAR SAHANADA GOVINDA DOSS AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

RAJAH VENKATA PERUMAL RAJAH, MINOR, BY HIS NEXT FRIEND, MR. W. A. VARADHACHARIAR—PLAINTIFF No. 3—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 142, 144—Adverse possession—Purchaser at Court sale delivered formal possession by proclamation of property under tenants—Burden of proof that purchaser was not in possession.

In 1881 a village was leased for a term of 10 years. The lease was to terminate on the last day of June 1891. In 1885 the lessor mortgaged the village. In 1887 the mortgagee sued on his mortgage and obtained a decree. In 1889 he purchased the village in execution of his decree and on 7th May 1890, when the property was still in the possession of the lessees, the purchaser obtained possession of the reversion by proclamation. In 1903 the successor of the lessor sued the purchaser for recovery of possession of the village on the ground that the property, being dedicated to a temple, was trust property and that consequently the auction-sale was void:

Held, that whether Article 142 or Article 144 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act applied, the suit was barred inasmuch as the purchaser was in possession of the village adversely to the temple from May 1890.

Where a purchaser at a Court auction-sale had obtained through Court as full and complete a possession as was possible under the circumstances, strong evidence was required to show that the auction-purchaser was not in possession and did not collect the rent of the property.

Appeal from the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of North Arcot, in Original Suit No. 2 of 1910, (Original Suit No. 1 of 1907, on the file of the District Court of North Arcot).

Messrs. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar and S. Ramaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, J.—The suit was instituted in 1903 by the Rajah of Karvetnagar through a next friend, an officer of the Court of Wards, to recover possession, on behalf of the temple of Sri Venugopalasami in Karvetnagar, of the village of Konasamudram which, according to the plaint, was given to the temple on the 29th of August 1808 by a sanad of that date. The present Rajah has after the institution of the suit taken over the zemindari from the Court of Wards and continues the suit himself. In 1881 a lease of the village for a term of 10 years terminating on the last day of June 1891 was given by the then Rajah to two persons whom I may call the lessees, at a rental of Rs. 4,000 a year which was to be credited in payment of sums due to them on mortgages executed by the Rajah. The Rajah is admittedly hereditary Dharmakarta of the temple of Sri Venugopalasami, but the money borrowed on the mortgages was not for the purposes of the temple but for his own private use.

2. In 1885 Konasamudram and another village were mortgaged by a simple mortgage to the father of the defendants,—I may call him the purchaser—and in 1887 he sued on the mortgage and obtained an ex parte decree on the 1st of April of that year.

3. The property was attached in execution of the decree, and was brought to sale in August 1889 and purchased by the mortgagee; the judgment-debtor attempted to get the sale set aside alleging, inter alia, that the property sold, the Konasamudram village, was "Tanakha" of the Sri Venugopalasami Temple and some other temples. The District Judge in March 1890 dismissed the application, and the High Court dismissed the appeal from his order, observing as regards the allegation that the property was temple property, that that point ought to have been raised in the suit. The judgment of the High Court was on the 16th April 1891, but the sale was confirmed in April 1890 after the District Judge's order, and possession was delivered by proclamation on the 7th of May 1890 to the purchaser who, as I have said, was the mortgagee himself.

4. In 1891 the Rajah's mother sued the purchaser to recover the village from him on behalf of the temple, but her suit, Original Suit No. 9 of 1891, was dismissed by the District Judge who held that on the facts stated in the plaint she had no cause of action. From this decision no appeal was preferred, and the purchaser and after him his sons remained in possession of the village until this suit was filed on the 30th of June 1903.

5. The Subordinate Judge has decreed the plaintiff's claim; holding that the village was granted to the temple and is in possession of the Rajah in his capacity of hereditary Dharmakarta, and consequently that its alienation was unlawful and the Rajah as Dharmakarta can recover possession of it.

6. He also dealt with several pleas in bar of the claim, deciding them all against the defendants. Of these pleas the only ones argued before us are those which raise questions of limitation, res judicata, and bona fide purchase without notice.

7. I will deal first with the plea of limitation. For the appellants it is claimed that Article 142 of the first Schedule of the Limitation Act applies and that the plaintiff is bound to show that he was not dispossessed twelve years before the institution of the suit, while the respondent contends that the defendants must show adverse possession for 12 years if they want to bar the suit. In the Court below some other provisions of the Limitation Act were relied on, but before us no argument was based on them.

8. As the evidence stands, it is not very important to decide which of the two Articles, 142 or 144, is applicable to the case, but I am unable to see any reason why Article 142 should not be applied if it is necessary to apply it.

9. For the appellants it was contended, as in the lower Court, that the Dharmakarta lost possession at the date of the lease, i.e., in 1881: the lease was given by the Rajah not as Dharmakarta but as zemindar, and the lessees did not, therefore, hold under the Dharmakarta but adversely to him. The Subordinate Judge has rejected this contention and, I think, has rightly rejected it. As Dharmakarta the Rajah could lawfully grant a lease for a term of years, and though he did not grant the lease as Dharmakarta and put the proceeds into his own pocket and not into the temple chest that makes no difference; the grant of the lease was lawful and the possession of the lessees was lawful; their right to possession may be referred to the right of the Dharmakarta to give them possession and his misappropriation of the rent does not affect their possession.

10. The real question is, it seems to me, a question of fact. Possession was transferred by proclamation after the Court sale, and from the date of proclamation the purchaser, it is contended, obtained possession of the reversion, the term of the lease being then unexpired. The proclamation of possession was made, it will be remembered, on the 7th of May 1890, and the term continued until the 30th of June 1891. The suit was instituted on the 30th of June 1903. It is not denied by Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar that, although possession of the reversion was transferred on the 7th of May 1890 to the purchaser, still if the Rajah continues to receive the rent from the lessees, he must be held to have re-taken possession in spite of the Court, and if he continued to receive all the rent due up to the end of the term, he must be said to have been in possession on the 30th of June 1891 and, therefore, within twelve years of the suit. Mr. Govindaraghava Iyer contended that though the proclamation of the 7th of May 1890 transferred the possession of the Rajah to the purchaser, it did not transfer that of the Dharmakarta. As Dharmakarta the Rajah continued in possession: the fallacy in the argument seems to lie in the claim that a man can be in and out or partly in and partly out of possession at the same time: though turned out by the Court as Rajah, the plaintiff may no doubt still have had a right to remain in possession as Dharmakarta, but the right to possession is not possession.

11. Mr. Govindaraghava Iyer also contended that inasmuch as the lessee could not by any act of his own make his possession adverse to his lessor, the payment of rent, if any, to the purchaser cannot make any difference. This is really irrelevant because the lessee's possession is not in question: the question is whether the possession of the Rajah ceased before the expiry of the term. The Court certainly took it from him by its proclamation and unless he re-acquired it by receipt of rent, he has lost it.

12. The lessees had undertaken to pay to the temple a sum of Rs. 1,500 annually out of the rent of Rs. 4,000 for the last four years of the term, and the accounts now produced by the Rajah from his Devastanam office are intended to prove that rents were received up to July 1891.

[After discussing evidence on the question his Lordship proceeded as follows:—]

17. I have dealt with all the evidence to which our attention was called on behalf of the plaintiff and it cannot be said to prove satisfactorily that anything was paid to the Rajah by the lessees for rent falling due after the date of transfer of possession. The defendants do not show that their father received rent before June 1891; they do not produce their father's accounts, but it is perhaps unfair to draw any inference against them from this fact, as the matter was over 12 years old at the date of the trial and so far as the lessees were concerned had been entirely closed. There was no debt due to the Sowcar which would require the preservation of the account relating to it, or its being brought up into the accounts of succeeding years.

18. There is the evidence of defendants' 2nd witness who swears that the lessees were asked by him to pay the rent for the last year of their term to the Sowcar, i.e., the purchaser, and that they agreed to settle with the Sowcar directly; he does not personally know if they actually paid anything. This evidence is supported by the prima facie probability that the Sowcar having obtained possession would demand the rent, and that the lessees after the Court's proclamation would not have paid the Rajah anything. They might have withheld payment from both sides, but there is no evidence as to that: the Rajah's mother sued in March 1891 to recover the village for the temple, but before that time there is no apparent reason why the lessees should have refused payment to the purchaser. I think then there is sufficient evidence to show that the Rajah lost possession before the 30th of June 1891; and that is sufficient to bar the suit for possession.

19. It is not so clear that the purchaser received any rent before the end of June 1891, but he had the possession given him by the Court in 1890, and that will, I think, be possession adverse to the Rajah, it not being shown that rent falling due subsequent to that date was paid to the Rajah or any one else. The fact, if it be a fact, that the lessees did not pay their rent until after the end of June 1891, will not make the purchaser's possession any the less adverse to the Rajah.

20. The suit is, therefore, in my opinion, barred by limitation.

21. It is, however, desirable in view of the probability that the case may be taken to a higher Court that we should decide also the principal issues in the suit, that it is to say, those dealing with the question whether the village was granted to the temple and so became trust property in the Rajah's hands and the mortgage and sale were, therefore, inoperative as against the trust.

[After discussing some evidence his Lordship proceeded as follows:—]

24. Now there is no evidence as to what is the accepted signification of the word "Tanakha" in the registers and accounts of the Karvetnagar Zemindari, if I except the statement of plaintiff's 7th witness that in the zemindari it generally means 'giving away' a statement on which I do not think much reliance can be placed and which Mr. Govindaraghava Iyer did not ask us to accept as of great value. From Wilson's Glossary and other dictionaries which have been shown to us I gather that the word might be used to indicate a permanent assignment of the revenue of a village to a particular purpose, but that is not its necessary signification, and it may equally well connote a temporary order allotting or assigning, in the non-technical meaning of that word, certain income to a certain purpose for convenience and for such time as convenience may support the arrangement. It certainly does not necessarily import a permanent grant.

25. Here we have the fact that the Rajah was himself the hereditary Dharmakarta of the Venugopalasawmi temple and the Shamlat institutions, and there seems nothing unreasonable or improbable in the view that he may have found it more convenient to allot the income of the village of Konasamudram to the temple than to make appropriation from the rusum collections. Perhaps indeed the very fact that he was Dharmakarta as well as zemindar renders it less probable, because less necessary, that he would make permanent grants out of the zemindari land. It was his business to keep the temples going, but not necessarily to endow them for that purpose—and if the collection of rusums failed, it may be that he would not have been at all bound to supplement the income of the institution from his own revenues.

I am not prepared in these circumstances to infer from the use of the word "Tanakha" that there was a grant to the temple: I do not rely on the fact that neither Punyam nor Konasamudram villages appear as Devadayam grants at the Inam Settlement instituted by the British Government. It may be that neither of these villages was allotted to the temples before the Permanent Settlement. Exhibit CC is not clear on this point and there is no other evidence.

[After discussing further evidence his Lordship proceeded as follows:—]

30. There is in this case a good deal more evidence in favour of the plaintiff than was found in Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen(1). We have the separate appropriation of rents and the description of the villages over a long period. But even so, I doubt, having regard to the ambiguity of the word "Tanakha" and "Jari" and to the Rajah's position in respect of the temples, whether we can properly be said to have here that very clear and strong evidence which their Lordships in that case held 'ought to exist' to enable the plaintiff to discharge the burden which lies upon him, the burden in the present case of proving that the Melvaram of the village of Konasamudram was inalienably conferred upon the temple of Sri Venugopalasami Varu and the connected temples in Karvetnagar to sustain the worship in those institutions. Upon the whole, though not without some doubt, I think the evidence is insufficient to discharge the burden. In the absence of an express grant there is nothing inconsistent with a temporary appropriation of the rents of the village, an appropriation which it has been found convenient to allow to continue for a long period until the money was wanted for other purposes. I would for this reason as well as upon the ground of limitation allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in both Courts.

(1) 2 C. 341 (P. C.); 4 I. A. 52.

31. It is unnecessary in this view of the case to decide the other two questions argued. The argument on the plea of res judicata was confined to the effect of the decision of the District Judge in the Suit No. 9 of 1891 instituted on behalf of the temple by the Rajah's mother to recover the same village. The District Judge held that on the facts stated in the plaint—the District Judge speaks of the allegations on the pleadings, but the earlier part of paragraph 16 of his judgment shows that he is referring only to the plaint—the plaintiff had no cause of action: the temple, it appeared to him, was in the plaint alleged to be a private institution and the funds provided for its upkeep were at the disposal of the Rajah. It is, as I have said, unnecessary to decide whether in these circumstances the present suit by the plaintiff is barred or not.

32. The other question is whether the defendant's father as a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the trust is entitled to retain the village inspite of the trust. The finding that there is no trust renders it unnecessary to decide this question either.

TYABJI, J.—I agree in the judgment prepared by my learned colleague which I have the benefit of reading. The facts leading up to this appeal are set out in that judgment and I need not repeat them.

The first question with which I propose to deal is whether the village of Konasamudram appertains to the Sri Venugopalasami temple as alleged by the plaintiff.

[After discussing the documentary evidence on the point his Lordship concluded as follows :—]

After considering the whole of the evidence adduced in this suit with reference to the dedication of the village, I have come to the conclusion that the village of Konasamudram was not dedicated to the Venugopalasami temple and that, therefore, the sale to the defendants' predecessors-in-title was a valid sale.

The next point with which I shall deal is whether the suit is barred by limitation. I agree that the suit is barred. The defendants' father purchased the village on the 8th August 1889 at a Court-auction held in execution of his mortgage-decree, and possession was transferred to him in May 1890. Exhibit VI is the sale certificate, dated 24th April 1890, and Exhibit VI (a) is the receipt for possession, dated the 7th May 1890. At the date of Exhibit VI (a) the village was in the actual possession of ijaradars to whom the property had been leased by the zemindar. It is contended for the plaintiffs that the purchaser did not obtain possession of the village in May 1890, nor until the lease had expired. As against this, we have the fact that under the decree of the Court the auction-purchaser was purported to be put into such possession as could be given to him in May 1890; and strong evidence would be required to show that inspite of the execution proceedings the defendant did not obtain as full and complete a possession as was possible under the circumstances.

The plaintiff contends that as a matter of fact after the date of Exhibit VI (a) rent was paid by the ijaradars to the zemindar as trustee of the temple and not to the defendants or their predecessors-in-title ; and for this contention reliance is mainly placed on Exhibit X2 which is a memorandum of account. The heading of Exhibit X2 is as follows : "List showing details of amounts received from 1887 to September 1890, on account of Devastanam dues paid by Konduru Venkataraju and others lessees of Konasamudram." The item in Exhibit X2 relied upon by the plaintiff is for Rs. 250 bearing date the 16th July 1890. Exhibit X2, is referred to in the evidence of the fourth witness for the plaintiff and Exhibits X and XI show how it came into being. It seems to me that the item in Exhibit X2 for Rs. 250 is not a genuine one. It is unexplained why this item should be credited to the Vikruti year, 1890 of the Christian Era, when, as a matter of fact, the rent for the previous year 1889 was not fully discharged. That it was not fully discharged is shown by the fact that a total of only Rs. 4,000 is shown as having been received at the foot of the account. The rent being at the rate of Rs. 1,500 per year, the total amount due for the three years 1887, 1888 and 1889 would be Rs. 4,500. This fact connected with the facts to which I have alluded before makes it extremely improbable that the sum of Rs. 250 should have been paid and accepted as rent for the Vikruti year, 1890.

Similar remarks apply to the entry for Rs. 100 in Exhibit Y2 which entry, however, does not refer to the period in respect of which the sum was received. Exhibit Z might show that, as a matter of fact, some portion of the rent was recovered after the transfer of possession to the defendants' father but that might well refer to the rent due for the period anterior to the purchase by the defendants' father.

It was argued that inspite of these facts, the village must be presumed to be in the possession of the trustee so long as the ijara continued. But it seems to me that there is nothing to prevent possession of the lands being transferred by the tenants being made to attorn to the transferee, and if, as a matter of fact, the rent is recovered by the transferee, he has obtained complete possession of the lands.

In this connection it should be mentioned that there is no evidence that the rent of Konasamudram was collected immediately after the date of Exhibit VI (a) by the auction-purchaser, the present defendants' father. The absence of such evidence was explained by the fact that the person who actually purchased the village in the auction-sale and through whom the present defendant claims it, has died and it is difficult to trace the accounts at this time so long after the events. This explanation seems to me to be not unreasonble, and in any event it must be for the plaintiff to prove, that inspite of the auction sale and of the formal delivery of possession to him by Exhibit VI (a), the rent was collected by the plaintiff and not by the auction-purchaser: it is admitted that at the present moment the sons of the auction-purchaser are in possession. Their possession can be most reasonably traced to the auction-purchase: no circumstances are proved from which their possession can be referred except to the auction-purchase; and if their possession is to be referred to the auction-purchaser, it must prima facie be referred also to Exhibit VI (a).

I am, therefore, of opinion that the defendant was in possession of the village adversely to the temple as from May 1890. There was some discussion as to the Article of the Limitation Act that must apply. On behalf of the appellant Articles 134, 142 and 144 were suggested as the Articles that must apply; the respondent's Pleader suggested Article 144. In any case if the defendants or their predecessors-in-title have been holding the land adversely to the temple since May 1890, the present suit was barred by limitation.

Two other points were argued before us on behalf of the appellant, namely, that the appellant was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of any trust, and secondly that the suit was barred by the doctrine of res judicata. It is unnecessary to deal with these points in view of the opinion that I have formed as regards the two questions with which I have dealt.

I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

COURT OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE, UNITED PROVINCES.

REVENUE REVISION PETITION No. 12 OF 1912-13 OF BAHRAICH DISTRICT.

April 20, 1914.

Present:—Sir Duncan Colvin Baillie, S. M., and Mr. G. A. Tweedy, J. M.

RAM PRASAD AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

SARJOO—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Registration of lease necessary—Lessee cannot save his ejectment by relying upon lease registration of which compulsory.

A lessee cannot resist his ejectment by relying upon the lease which secures him in possession for an indefinite period and the registration of which is thus compulsory, inasmuch as the unregistered lease does not under law affect the land it relates to.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 19th May 1913, upholding that of the Assistant Collector, Bahraich, dated 24th January 1913.

RATTI RAM v. KUNDAN LAL.

Babu Aditya Prasad, for the Appellants.
Mr. G. H. Thomas, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M.—(April 7th, 1914.)—The appellants had a lease from the Kapurthala Estate in which theland in question is included. They executed in favour of the respondent a document which, in my opinion, is clearly a sub-lease, in which they agree that the respondent should hold the land now in question at the rent due to the Kapurthala Estate and for as long as the lease was in the name of the appellatns or of their descendants. The document was executed on tamped paper, but was not registered. The Court of first instance held that registration was not required, that the agreement was binding, and cancelled the notice of ejectment issued by the appellants. This judgment was upheld by the Commissioner who simply records that the appellants were bound by their own agreement. The Commissioner does not refer to the question of registration, but this question is not one which can, according to law, be dismissed from consideration. If registration is necessary, the law prohibits a Court from holding that an unregistered agreement in any way affects the land to which it relates. In my opinion, registration is necessary. The leases which are by order of the Local Government exempt from the necessity for registration, are leases for a term not exceeding five years and for a rent not exceeding 50. Now this lease is not for a term not exceeding five years. It is a lease which secures the respondent in possession for an indefinite period. It is not, in my opinion, exempt under the order of the Local Government. The parties to the agreement themselves recognized that it was one to be registered as the document contains provision for registration. This being so, it does not affect the land and the respondent cannot rely on it to resist ejectment. I would allow this appeal, cancel the order of the Commissioner and the Court of first instance, with costs on the respondent throughout.

TWEEDY, J. M.—I concur.

Appeal allowed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 41 OF 1911.

April 27, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Johnstone and Mr. Justice Shadi Lal.

RATTI RAM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

KUNDAN LAL, REPRESENTATIVE OF SHEO KARAN DAS, DECEASED, AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 908), s, 21—Jurisdiction—Suit instituted in wrong Court—Consequent failure of justice—Alterations in procedure—Retrospective effect.

Where a suit was instituted in the Court of the District Judge, Lyallpur, for recovery of the balance due to plaintiffs on account of certain transactions carried out by defendants as plaintiffs' commission agents at Karachi, it being alleged that the agreement by the defendants to act as plaintiffs' agents was entered into at Lyallpur:

Held, that as the plaintiffs had failed to prove the alleged contract, the Lyallpur Court had no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the claim of the plaintiffs;

(2) that alterations in procedure being always retrospective, section 21, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, applied even though the suit was instituted in 1906; and the objection as to the place of suing could not be allowed, because there had been no consequent failure of justice.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Lyallpur, dated the 5th of December 1910, decreeing claim for Rs. 4,416-7-0.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Appellants.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a dispute between two mercantile firms in respect of money due on certain transactions between them. The plaintiffs carry on their business at Lyallpur under the name and style of "Sheo Karan Das-Har Karan Das", and the defendants' firm called "Ratti Ram-Ram Bhagat" have their business at Karachi. It appears that the plaintiffs were employed to purchase goods at Lyallpur as commission agents of the defendants and send them to the latter at Karachi. The present suit, however, relates entirely to transactions connected with the sale of goods at Karachi by the defendants as plaintiffs' commission agents.

According to the plaintiffs these transactions began in pursuance of a contract which was entered into at Lyallpur at the time of the visit of Daya Mal, one of the defendants, when it was agreed that the plaintiffs would send their goods to the defendants at Karachi and the latter after deducting the commission money due to them would remit the balance of the price to the former at Lyallpur.

The plaintiffs claimed that the amount to which they were entitled as the result of the account between the parties was Rs. 5,669-12-0 and filed a suit for the recovery thereof. The defendants, though admitting the sale of the plaintiffs' goods as commission agents, denied the formation of the contract at Lyallpur and pleaded that the Court there had no jurisdiction to try the suit. They also disputed the correctness of the amount sued for by the plaintiffs and claimed set-off for certain items which were not admitted by the other side. The District Judge, Mirza Zafar Ali, decided, by an order, dated the 24th August 1906, that the Lyallpur Court had jurisdiction to try the suit and his successor, Mr. Brasher, passed on the 15th December 1910 a decree for Rs. 4,416-7-0 in favour of the plaintiffs.

The defendants have preferred an appeal to this Court and the plaintiffs have filed cross-objections against the finding of the District Judge as to certain items disallowed by him. In the appeal, the main question for decision is whether the District Judge of Lyallpur was competent to try the suit and, if not, whether the decree should be set aside on the ground of defect of territorial jurisdiction and the plaint returned to the plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court.

It is clear that the sole reason for instituting the suit in the Lyallpur Court is the contract of agency alleged to have been entered into between the plaintiffs and Daya Mal at the former's shop at Lyallpur. It is not disputed that Daya Mal was at Lyallpur on or about the date of the alleged contract, but the defendants deny the formation of any such contract.

We have, therefore, to see whether the plaintiffs have succeeded in establishing their contention. The contract was not reduced to writing and the evidence in support of it consists of the statements of Sheo Narain, one of the plaintiffs, Dewan Chand and Ramji Lal. But Sheo Narain admits that during the period when the goods were consigned to Karachi, the plaintiffs had at that place at first their servant Bansi Lal and subsequently their partners Ram Rattan and Hira Lal. He further admits that at least some of the consignments were sent to Hira Lal and not to the defendants. If the defendants had been appointed commission agents on the terms alleged by the plaintiffs the consignments should have, in our opinion, been sent to the defendants. These admissions lend colour to the defendants' contention that the contract of the agency was made by Hira Lal at Karachi and that he received the goods and arranged for their sale through the agency of the defendants. We have read the evidence of Diwan Chand and Ramji Lal and consider it unreliable and wholly insufficient to prove the contract set up by the plaintiffs. The letter referred to in the order of the District Judge by which the defendants offered to remit to plaintiffs the price of goods in advance, does not appear to apply to the transactions in dispute. The plaintiffs allege that in pursuance of the contract accounts were submitted to them at Lyallpur by the defendants and this allegation, if substantiated, would be a strong piece of evidence in favour of the plaintiffs' contention. But the learned Advocate for the respondents admitted that he was unable to cite any evidence in support of it. It was pointed out to him that if the defendants became the agents of the plaintiffs from the date of the contract as alleged in the plaint, there would be entries in the account books of the plaintiffs showing the payment or credit of commission fee to the defendants and that entries of that character would, if proved, be of great help in proving the contract relied upon by the plaintiffs. He, however, expressed his inability to show us any entries relating to commission, because he said he had not studied the accounts.

There is, therefore, absolutely no documentary evidence to prove the contract which is the basis of the jurisdiction of the Lyallpur Court and the oral evidence is, in our opinion, interested and unreliable. It is wholly insufficient to prove the alleged contract. We must, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs have not relieved themselves of the burden which rested on them to prove the existence of the contract, which brought this suit within the cognizance of the Lyallpur Court, and that that Court had not the territorial jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the claim of the plaintiffs.

What then is the effect of this finding on the proceedings taken in the Lyallpur Court? If we were to answer this question by reference to the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, we would have no hesitation in holding that the proceedings are coram non judice and must be set aside and the plaintiffs must be told to go to the proper Court to get an adjudication of their claim. There is, however, an important provision of law introduced for the first time in the Code of 1908 which has a direct bearing upon the issue before us. But the first point which we have to determine is whether this law, which came into force on the 1st of January 1909, can affect a case which was instituted in 1906 prior to the date on which the new Code came into operation.

Section 21 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, which contains the law referred to above, runs as follows :—

"No objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any Appellate or Revisional Court unless such objection was taken in the Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement, and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice."

Now the wording of this section clearly shows that it lays down a rule for the guidance of only the Appellate or Revisional Court and does not influence the Court of first instance in its decision on the question of territorial jurisdiction. When the original Court has given its finding on the matter of jurisdiction and it is re-agitated before a Court of appeal or revision, then the latter Court shall have to consider whether the defect of jurisdiction should or should not be cured by applying its provisions. If, for instance, the plaintiff institutes a suit in the Court of a particular district and fails to substantiate the allegation bringing his case within the cognizance of that Court, the latter cannot, then, invoke the help of section 21 and proceed to hear and determine the suit. In the same way the Appellate Court, if it concurs with the Court of first instance in its finding on jurisdiction adverse to the plaintiff, cannot use the provisions of the section for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction on the original Court and remand the case for decision on the merits. If, on the other hand, the Court of the first instance holds that it has jurisdiction and proceeds to decide the suit on the merits and the Appellate or Revisional Court finds the first Court, though otherwise fully competent to hear the suit, had not the territorial jurisdiction over it, then it has to consider whether the defect can be condoned by applying the principle laid down in section 21. It will, thus, be observed that the only case in which the question of the applicability of the section arises is when the first Court, after giving a finding in the affirmative on the point of jurisdiction, decides the case on the merits and the Appellate or Revisional Court disagrees with that finding, and that the section is meant solely for the guidance of the latter Court. It does not profess to confer jurisdiction on the original Court, but it empowers the higher Court to validate certain proceedings which would otherwise be invalid.

The object of the Legislature in enacting this salutary principle of law is that when the Court of first instance after giving an affirmative finding on jurisdiction takes proceedings on the merits of the case, the latter should not be rendered abortive and all the time and labour spent thereon should not be wasted simply by reason of the fact that the higher Court comes to a contrary finding on the preliminary point of jurisdiction. A similar provision will be found in section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act which is intended to cure the defect of jurisdiction arising from under-valuation of suits or appeals.

Having held that section 21 of the Code of 1908 is intended for use by the Appellate or Revisional Court, we are not aware of any canon of the interpretation of Statutes which will exclude its operation in the present appeal. It is true that the suit was instituted before the Code came into force, but the decree appealed against was passed after it had come into operation. The section was clearly in existence when the appeal was instituted in this Court and it is in existence when the appeal comes on for hearing before us. Are we then sitting as a Court of Appeal, for whose guidance the section was enacted, justified in ignoring its provisions on the sole ground that the litigation commenced in the first Court prior to the date of its coming into operation?

RATTI RAM v. KUNDAN LAL.

It is a well-known rule of law that no person has a vested right in the course of procedure and there is a general principle of the construction of Statutes that alterations in the procedure are always retrospective unless there be some good reason against it. There can be no objection to their having effect immediately, even though they should affect past transactions and the mode of enforcement of vested rights: Vide Jogodanund Singh v. Amrita Lal Sircar (1). We see no valid reason why the Code should not apply to pending proceedings and must, therefore, hold that the present appeal is not excluded from the operation of section 21.

We now proceed to consider whether the appellants have fulfilled both the requirements of the section which are a sine qua non to the success of their objection as to the place of suing. We find that the objection was taken before the settlement of issues and that the first condition has, therefore, been complied with. But we cannot, in the present case, see any failure of justice on account of the suit having been instituted in the Lyallpur Court. The only prejudice alleged by the learned Counsel for the appellants is that his clients have not been able to produce certain evidence which they would have done if the suit had been heard by the Karachi Court. The non-production of evidence was, as will be seen later, due to their negligence and cannot, in our opinion, be attributed to the change of forum. Our conclusion, therefore, is that though the Lyallpur Court had not the jurisdiction to hear the suit, the objection as to the place of suing cannot be allowed because there has been no consequent failure of justice.

Upon the merits of the case there is not much to be said. The learned Counsel for the appellants expressly gave up ground 4 of the appeal and confined his argument to the question of remand for further evidence to enable his clients to prove the items claimed by them by way of set-off. The proceedings on pages 88 and 89 of the printed record show that the plaintiffs closed their evidence on the 26th of January 1910 and that the defendants-appellants were ordered on that day to produce their evidence at the next hearing. Repeated adjournments were subsequently granted to them to produce their witnesses, but they did not examine a single witness. The learned District Judge was, in these circumstances, compelled to pass an order on the 11th of November 1910 refusing any further adjournment of the case for the defendants' evidence. On these facts we have no hesitation in agreeing with the learned Judge of the Court below that the delay was due to the negligence of the defendants. We entertain no doubt that they, if so advised, could have easily produced their account books in support of their claim of set-off and also their witnesses, the majority of whom were either their relatives or their servants. They wanted to delay the decision of the suit and their conduct amounted to an abuse of the process of the Court.

We cannot, therefore, pass an order which will encourage litigants in adopting tactics of this kind and must, therefore, decline to remand the case for recording the evidence of the defendants. This concludes the appeal and as the decree of the District Judge has not been disturbed, the appeal fails and is hereby dismissed.

The cross-objections by the respondents have not been argued before us and we must, consequently, reject them. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, we order that the parties do bear their own costs in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 22 C. 767 at p. 779 (F. B.).

MIR SYED HASAN v. TAIYABA BEGAM.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 54 OF 1911.

April 28, 1913.

Present:—Mr. Piggott, J. C., and Mr. Lindsay, A. J. C.

MIR SYED HASAN AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

Musammat TAIYABA BEGAM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Burden of proof, allocation of, after evidence produced by both parties upon clear and specific issues—Evidence as a whole to be considered—Parties brought on record on their application, names of, striking off—Additional defendants, pleadings and evidence of, not to be expunged from record—Defendants, two sets of—Admission of plaintiff's claim by one set of defendants—Denial of plaintiff's claim by other set of defendants—Relief, separate, not claimable against each set of defendants—Claim of plaintiff not to be decreed against defendants admitting it—Pleadings, object of—Court, duty of, where pleadings vague and unsatisfactory—Attestation of Will—Succession Act (X of 1865*), s.* 50*—Execution of Will—Executant's signature on document, place for, no law as to—Signature for purpose of execution—Re-execution of Will—Will, execution of, includes signature of executant and attestation of witnesses—Adoption itself does not revoke previous Will—Document, construction of—*"Janashin waqaim-muqam," interpretation of—Testamentary character of document—Bequest of talukdari estate—Revocation of previous Will—Estate received under Will, divesting of—Burden of proof, nature of, in case where document set up as having effect of setting aside previous Will—Suspicion in mind of Court to be removed—Execution, both mechanical and intelligent or conscious to be proved—Pleadings, point not stated in, tried to be established—Rebutting evidence, objection as to, not entertainable—Cross-examination, question put in—Admission—Statements of deceased testator or executant, when admissible in evidence—Deceased executant, conduct of, relevancy of—Evidence Act (I of 1872*), ss.* 11, 18, 19 and 21*—Oral evidence as to statements of deceased executant—Cancelled registered document, admissibility in evidence of—Admissions against one's own interest, when lose their force as such—Unregistered document can be referred to for ascertaining executant's state of mind at or about time of its execution.*

Where a suit has gone to trial upon clear and specific issues, in respect of which evidence has been produced by both parties, a Court ought not to pay much heed to the arguments as to the allocation of the burden of proof, or the precise point at which such burden of proof may be said to have shifted to one side or the other in consequence of particular pleadings or admissions or particular items of evidence, but should prefer as a rule simply to consider the evidence as a whole, treating the pleadings of the parties as pieces of evidence relevant under the head of admissions, and endeavouring if possible to arrive at a clear finding upon the questions of fact involved.

On certain persons applying to be added as defendants in a case the Court of first instance, in spite of the plaintiffs' protest, ordered them to be so added. The plaintiffs did not reserve it as a matter which might be called in question, if necessary, later on in appeal from any decree which might be passed in the case, but at once appealed from that order, which even the Appellate Court upheld. These additional defendants were thus brought on the record, entered their pleadings, putting the plaintiffs to proof of their entire case, cross-examined the plaintiffs' witnesses, and tendered evidence of their own. The Court of first instance passed a decree in the case against the plaintiffs, and they again contended on appeal from that decree, on certain new allegations not brought home to the Appellate Court in the previous appeal from the said order, that the present additional defendants ought never to have been brought upon the record, and that not only their pleadings but also the evidence led by them ought to be ignored and excluded from consideration:

Held, that the additional defendants could not be struck off the record at that stage and that their pleadings and the evidence led by them could not be expunged from the record or ignored in arriving at a decision on the facts.

Where there are two sets of defendants and one of those sets admits and the other denies the plaintiffs' claim, and the case is such that no separate reliefs can be granted against each set, the plaintiffs cannot get a decree as against the defendants admitting their claim if they fail to establish their case, which they are bound to prove owing to the pleadings of the other defendants denying their claim.

The sole object of every system of pleadings is that each side may be fully alive to the questions that are about to be argued, in order that they may have an opportunity of bringing forward such evidence as may be appropriate to the issues.

Sayad Muhammad v. Fatteh Muhammad, 22 C. 324; 22 I. A. 4, referred to.

Where the pleadings of a party are vague and unsatisfactory, a Court ought to endeavour to have them clearly specified as far as possible.

A Will, after having been executed but without having been signed by any attesting witness was deposited in a sealed cover at the office of the Sub-Registrar. About ten years later the executant went to the Sub-Registrar's office, took out the Will from the sealed cover and formally presented it for registration as a Will and admitted its execution in the presence of attesting witnesses, and these witnesses as well as the executant himself signed the document in the proper places:

Held (per Piggott, J. C.), that the above proceedings amounted to an attestation of the Will sufficient to satisfy the requirements of section 50 of the Indian Succession Act.

Nitye Gopal Sircar v. Nagendra Nath Mitter Mozumdar, 11 C. 429; Amarendra Nath Chatterjee v. Kashi Nath Chatterjee, 27 C. 169, referred to.

Held, further, (per Piggott, J.C.), that the execution of the Will was not legally complete before the time when it became valid in law in consequence of its attestation by the Sub-Registrar and by the identifying witnesses.

MIR SYED HASAN v. TAIYABA BEGAM.

Held, also (per Piggott, J.C.), that as there is no law as to the precise place on a document where the executant must affix his signature in order that his act in so doing may amount to an execution, the Will in question could be said to have been executed and registered on one and the same day.

Held, lastly (per Lindsay, A. J. C.), that as the execution of a Will included both the signature of acknowledgment by the testator and the attestation of the subscribing witnesses, the Will in question could not be said to have been executed until it was attested by the marginal witnesses.

Anne Casement v. John Williamson Fulton, 3 M. I. A. 395 at p. 406; 5 Moo. P. C. 130; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 293; 70 R. R. 19; 18 E. R. 549; 13 E. R. 439, referred to.

The adoption of a son does not in itself operate to revoke or nullify a valid Will executed by the adoptive father in favour of his wife, any more than the birth of a natural son does.

A document purported to constitute a person the "Janashin wa qaim-maqam" (representative or locum tenens) of the executant and provided that "hamesha bad mere tamam umur talukdari ka anjam deta rahegi" (after the executant's death the person will always attend to or perform all the duties appertaining to talukdar), and that he should represent the executant in the presence of officials, members of the brotherhood, tenants of the estate and others, and on official occasions such as Darbars held by the Lieutenant-Governor and the like. It was contended that these words and expressions considered together might reasonably be interpreted as being of a testamentary character and as implying a bequest of the talukdari estate in that person's favour and thus revoking a Will previously in existence:

Held, that, inasmuch as a revocation in order to be valid and operative as a fresh bequest must be in clear and unambiguous terms, and as words to the effect that the person named in the document in question was merely to be the janashin or locum tenens, the document could not, in the absence of a clear and positive bequest of the estate in his favour, be interpreted as a Will conferring the taluka upon him and to divest the legatee of such estate in whose favour the Will had previously been made.

Where the plaintiffs put forward a document which they contended had the effect of setting aside the Will in favour of the defendant:

Held, that the burden of proof to be laid upon the plaintiffs should be just the same as legally lies upon the propounders of a Will, and more particularly upon the propounders of a Will which has the effect of revoking a Will previously in existence, and that once any circumstances are shown to exist which may reasonably excite proper and well-grounded suspicion in the mind of the Court, a person claiming under such a document is bound to satisfy the Court, not only as to its mechanical execution, but also as to the fact that the executant fully understood the nature and the terms of the deed.

Shunmugaroga Mudali v. Manikka Mudaliar, 3 Ind. Cas. 799; 32 M. 499, 11 Bom. L. R. 1206 (P. C.); 10 C. L. J. 276; 6 M. L. T. 204; 19 M. L. J. 640; 36 I. A. 185, Shama Churn Kundu v. Khettromoni Dasi, 27 C. 521; 4 C. W. N. 501; 27 I. A. 10, referred to.

A party endeavouring to establish a point not specifically stated in his pleadings cannot object to the opposite party's tendering rebutting evidence as regards that point.

If a party's Counsel simply asks a witness in cross-examination as to whether a certain event happened, it cannot be said that that party commits himself to the assertion that such an event actually took place.

In cases of disputed Wills or other dispositions of property, evidence as to statements alleged to have been made by the deceased testator or executant, from which inferences can be drawn as to the execution or otherwise of the documents in dispute or as to the circumstances under which such execution was obtained, is admissible.

Where in a case of a disputed deed of adoption the defendant alleged that the deceased executant had become, shortly after the execution of the deed, aware of its existence, purport and effect, and after having become so aware had taken steps to cancel it or to nullify its effect, the conduct of the executant from the moment that he became admittedly aware of the existence, purport and effect of the deed is not merely a relevant fact, but a very important fact in the case; and the evidence offered by the defendant as to statements made by the executant in the interval of the execution of the deed and his death expressing the view taken by him of the deed after he had known of its existence, or the action which he had conceived himself to have taken regarding it, cannot be excluded as irrelevant, but is admissible under the head of admissions under sections 18, 19 and 21 or section 11 of the Evidence Act.

It is a dangerous thing to admit oral evidence as to statements alleged to have been made by a deceased executant as having the effect of practically cancelling a registered document, unless there are anomalous and suspicious circumstances already in existence.

In ordinary cases the admissions made by a party against his own interest might well be regarded as decisive against him. But in special cases where there exist a variety of circumstances calculated to discount the value of such admissions, those admissions may well be ignored from consideration as being of no effect.

An unregistered document, although inoperative as a deed of transfer of property or the like, can be looked at for a collateral purpose, for instance, to ascertain the executant's state of mind on or about the time that the document was executed.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated 31st October 1910.

Syed Wazir Hasan and Syed Shakinshah Husain, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Rai Sri Ram Bahadur, for Respondent No. 1.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, Babu Ramapat Ram and Sheikh Ali Abbas, for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

MIR SYED HASAN v. TAIYABA BEGAM.

Mr. Muhammad Siddique, for Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J. C.—This was a suit for possession of an estate known as taluka Waira Kazi in the Bahraich District. This estate was granted by the British Government to Mir Muzaffar Husain, whose name was entered at No. 160 in List 1 and No. 63 in List 3 of the lists of talukdars and grantees prepared under the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869). It was transferred by him in the year 1874, by a deed of gift inter vivos duly registered according to law, to his only son Mir Kazim Husain. The latter died without issue on May the 12th, 1894, and his death was immediately followed by a dispute as to the succession to the estate, in which there were at least four distinct parties. One was Musammat Taiyaba Begam, the widow of Mir Kazim Husain; another was Mir Saiyid Ali, the son of one Saiyid Muhammad, a resident of the Agra District, by his marriage with Musammat Sughra Begam, a sister of Musammat Taiyaba Begam above-mentioned. Mir Saiyid Ali claimed the estate as the adopted son of Mir Kazim Husain and set up a deed of adoption dated November the 9th, 1893, and purporting to have been duly registered on November the 14th, 1893. A third claimant was Saiyid Muhammad Hasan whose mother was an own sister of Mir Kazim Husain. The fourth claimant was Karamat Husain, the son of an own brother of Mir Muzaffar Husain, the first holder of the taluka. As a matter of fact Mir Muzaffar Husain had two brothers each of whom left a son, but the estate is one which must descend to a single heir, and the actual claimant appears to have been Karamat Husain as above stated. Under circumstances which I propose to consider more in detail later on, the possession of the estate actually passed into the hands of Musammat Taiyaba Begam and has continued in her hands ever since. Mir Saiyid Ali himself died on September the 1st, 1901, leaving him surviving a brother, Mir Saiyid Hasan. On April the 24th, 1906, the said Mir Saiyid Hasan executed a deed of sale by which he purported to transfer one-half share in the Waira Kazi estate to two persons, Saiyid Muhammad Mehdi Hasan, a resident of Lucknow, and Nawab Ali Khan, a resident of Amroha in the Moradabad District. This deed was registered on the following day, that is to say on April the 25th, 1906, and its avowed purpose was to obtain funds by which Mir Saiyid Hasan might prosecute his claim to recover the Waira Kazi estate from the possession of Musammat Taiyaba Begam. The present suit was instituted on May the 11th, 1906, the original plaintiffs being Mir Saiyid Hasan, Saiyid Muhammad Mehdi Hasan and Nawab Ali Khan above-mentioned. Nawab Ali Khan has since transferred his rights to Saiyid Muhammad Mehdi Hasan, so that the appeal now before us is being prosecuted by Mir Saiyid Hasan, as the alleged rightful heir to the estate on the death of Mir Saiyid Ali, and by Saiyid Muhammad Mehdi Hasan as a speculative purchaser of a half share in the estate on the chance of the other plaintiff being able to make good his claim. The respondents before us are Musammat Taiyaba Begam, the lady in actual possession of the estate, and Saiyid Muhammad Hasan and his sister, Musammat Askari Begam, whose presence on the record has been the subject-matter of much controversy. I have already explained that this Saiyid Muhammad Hasan is the son of an own sister of Mir Kazim Husain. Shortly before the present suit was instituted, another suit had been brought by Saiyid Muhammad Hasan and Musammat Askari Begam in respect of a single item of property, namely a share in a village called Basahiya Patti, which appears as item No. 3 in the list of the properties forming the Waira Kazi estate appended to the plaint in the present suit. Saiyid Muhammad Hasan and his sister alleged that this share in village Basahiya Patti was non-talukdari property and they claimed a portion of the same as heirs of Mir Kazim Hussain under the ordinary Muhammadan Law. They asked that the plaintiffs in the suit now before us should be added as defendants in the suit brought by them for village Basahiya Patti and that they themselves might be added as defendants in the suit now under appeal. This was strongly opposed by the present plaintiffs-appellants, whose position has throughout been that the present suit ought to be fought out as between themselves and Musammat Taiyaba Begam only. They sought to strengthen their position on this point by formally abandoning their claim to the property in village Basahiya Patti, which small item has accordingly been struck out from the list of the property now in suit. Nevertheless the learned Judge of the Court below granted the application of Saiyid Muhammad Hasan and Musammat Askari Begam as regards both the pending suits, and his order to this effect dated September the 3rd, 1906, was at once appealed to this Court by Mir Saiyid Hasan and his co-plaintiff and was made the subject-matter of the two connected Miscellaneous Appeals No. 80 and No. 83 of 1906, disposed of by this Court under an order dated November the 12th, 1906. The effect of that order was to reverse the decision of the Court below as regards the array of parties in the small suit for the property in village Basahiya Patti, but to affirm that decision as regards the main suit for possession of the taluka. The present suit has, therefore, been fought by the plaintiffs as against the original defendant Musammat Taiyaba Begam and the two defendants, Saiyid Muhammad Hasan and Musammat Askari Begam, who were added as such on their own application.

The suit was litigated at enormous length in the Court below and was not decided till the 31st of October 1910, when the learned Subordinate Judge produced an elaborate judgment dealing at length with the 36 issues fixed by him on the pleadings, but finally dismissing the plaintiffs' suit upon a clear finding of fact, namely, that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the execution by Mir Kazim Husain of the alleged deed of adoption in favour of Mir Saiyid Ali, or that Mir Saiyid Ali was in fact the adopted son of Mir Kazim Husain or had succeeded to the Waira Kazi estate on the death of the latter. The learned Judge of the Court below has taken infinite pains over the trial of this suit, but he does not seem to me to have exercised that sort of control over the proceedings which it is desirable that Courts of Justice should exercise, in the interests of the litigants themselves as well as in those of the administration of justice generally. The suit seems to me in fact a bad example of a sort of abuse which has come under my notice on one or two occasions, namely the practice in this Province of Oudh of fighting out suits in which valuable property, and more especially talukdari property, is involved at preposterous length and with an utter disregard of all considerations of time and expense. A number of side issues were allowed to be raised and to be debated at a length altogether out of proportion to their real bearing on the result of the suit; and the right of cross-examination was exercised in the case of some of the witnesses at a length which I can only characterise as an abuse of the procedure of the Court. The result is that it is no easy matter at this stage to disentangle the essential points of the case from the mass of superfluous or irrelevant matter with which they have been overlaid, and that the attention of the Court below was so far distracted from these essentials that on more than one occasion a witness was allowed to leave the box after a lengthy examination without certain questions having been put to him which now appear to have been really necessary and important.

The plaintiff, Mir Saiyid Hasan, has obviously no claim to the Waira Kazi estate as heir of Mir Kazim Husain, his relationship to the latter being limited to the fact that he is a son of a sister of Musammat Taiyaba Begam, widow of Mir Kazim Husain. In order to make out his case, the plaintiff has to satisfy the Court that the property in dispute passed from Mir Kazim Husain to Mir Saiyid Ali and that the latter was in law the rightful owner of the Waira Kazi estate from the death of Mir Kazim Husain on the 12th of May 1894 to his own death on the 1st of September 1901. It is not denied that Mir Kazim Husain had a right, subject to the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), to bequeath the property in dispute by Will, or by adopting a son to bring such adopted son on to the list of heirs in case of intestacy set forth in section 22 of the same Act. The case for the plaintiffs is that Mir Kazim Husain did adopt the late Mir Saiyid Ali by a writing executed and attested and duly registered in the manner required by law. This writing is the deed of adoption, Exhibit 1 on the file, dated November the 9th, 1893, and purporting to have been registered on November the 14th, 1893. Before the plaintiffs' suit can be decreed, the Court must be prepared to hold that this document is the act and deed of Mir Kazim Husain and was registered in accordance with law. The Court below has not only held this not to be proved, but has gone a good deal further, holding in effect that the deed is a forgery and that its registration was brought about by bribing a corrupt Sub-Registrar. One of the main contentions urged upon us in appeal on behalf of the plaintiffs is that no such finding as the above is really open to the Court on the pleadings, that the execution of the document, Exhibit 1, by Mir Kazim Husain should be regarded as an admitted fact and that the only questions really in issue are questions of fraud, coercion or undue influence, the burden of establishing which should be laid upon the defendants.

Where a suit has gone to trial upon clear and specific issues, in respect of which evidence has been produced by both parties, I am ordinarily disposed to be somewhat impatient with regard to arguments as to the allocation of the burden of proof, or the precise point at which such burden of proof may be said to have shifted to one side or the other in consequence of particular pleadings or admissions or particular items of evidence. I should prefer as a rule simply to consider the evidence as a whole, treating the pleadings of the parties as pieces of evidence relevant under the head of admissions, and endeavouring if possible to arrive at a clear finding upon the questions of fact involved. I must, however, deal with the question of the pleadings in the present case at some little length, because it seems to me a very important, if not a vital, part of the appellants' case. There are two distinct questions involved, namely, the pleadings of Musammat Taiyaba Begam, the original defendant in the case, and the position of the second and third defendants, who were brought on the record by order of the Court. It is not denied that the pleadings of the latter simply put the plaintiff to proof of his entire case, including the execution of the deed of adoption, Exhibit 1, as well as its registration and its validity in law. The appellants do not deny this, but it is contended on their behalf that Saiyid Muhammad Hasan and Musammat Askari Begam have no possible claim in law either to the present possession of the Waira Kazi estate or to succession to the same hereafter, that they ought never to have been brought upon the record of the case and that, not only their pleadings but the evidence led by them, ought to be ignored and excluded from consideration. The case for these defendants is that Musammat Taiyaba Begam is at present in possession of the Waira Kazi estate merely as the widow of a deceased talukdar for her life-time only, under clause 7 of section 22 of Act I of 1869, and that after her death the estate must go to such persons as would have been entitled to succeed to the same under the ordinary law in accordance with the provisions of clause 11 of the same section. The parties to this suit are Muhammadans of the Shia sect, and Saiyid Muhammad Hasan and Musammat Askari Begam claim that they would be the next heirs of Mir Kazim Husain under this law after the death of his widow, they being the son and daughter of an own sister of Mir Kazim Husain. In the course of argument before us it was conceded that the estate must go to a single heir and that Musammat Askari Begam could have no claim, at any rate in the life-time of her brother, Saiyid Muhammad Hasan; but it was still contended that Saiyid Muhammad Hasan would be entitled to the estate on the death of Musammat Taiyaba Begam in the event of his surviving her, and that he was rightly brought on the record in order to enable him to defend his reversionary interests. Against this the case for the plaintiffs-appellants is twofold. They contend that the Court below has itself found that Musammat Taiyaba Begam is not in possession of the Waira Kazi estate as the widow of a talukdar under section 22, clause 7, of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), but as a legatee under a Will registered on January the 15th, 1887, which, though it may not be valid as against an adopted son (in case the adoption of Mir Saiyid Ali is proved), would certainly be valid as against the children of Mir Kazim Husain's sister. Obviously, if Musammat Taiyaba Begam is in possession of the Waira Kazi estate, not as heir under an intestacy but as legatee under a valid Will, her title would be an absolute one not limited to her life only, and whatever might be the devolution of the estate after her death the surviving relations of her late husband could have no present interest in the estate, such as was put forward by Saiyid Muhammad Hasan and his sister when they asked to be brought on this record as defendants. In the second place, it is argued on behalf of the appellants that, if Mir Kazim Husain died intestate and without having adopted Mir Saiyid Ali, his estate would descend as an impartible estate according to the rule of primogeniture as understood in the law of England. If so, the rightful heir after the death of Musammat Taiyaba Begam would have to be sought by ascending to Mir Kazim Husain's father and searching amongst the descendants of the latter in the male line. It is suggested that that heir would at this moment be Karamat Husain, the son of a brother of Mir Muzaffar Husain, who was one of the claimants to the estate on the death of Mir Kazim Husain, but is no party to the present suit. Authority for this proposition is sought in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Chandrabhan Singh (1), and apart from this it is contended that the question is placed beyond doubt by the amendments effected in the Oudh Estates Act by the new Act (III of 1910). This latter contention raises a further question whethert the defendant, Saiyid Muhammed Hasan, could be said to have acquired a vested interest in this Waira Kazi estate before the amending Act came into force; while, as regards the Privy Council ruling above referred to, we were asked to consider the remarks of their Lordships with reference to the particular facts of that case and to the old ruling in the case of Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (2), which was at any rate not dissented from in the later case. It seems to me unnecessary to decide the intricate questions of law thus raised, and altogether inexpedient to pronounce any opinion concerning them in the present case. When the Court of first instance brought Saiyid Muhammad Hasan on the record as a defendant, the plaintiffs did not elect to submit to that order and to reserve it as a matter which might be called in question, if necessary, later on in appeal from any decree which might be passed in the case. They exercised their right of appeal under section 588, clause 2, of the former Code of Civil Procedure and brought the question at once before this Court. At the hearing of that appeal it is obvious that the plaintiffs did not raise any of the questions now argued before us. They did not plead a Will in favour of Musammat Taiyaba Begam as putting Saiyid Muhammad Hasan out of Court, because they were at that time denying altogether both the execution and the validity of the Will registered on January the 15th, 1887. This Court was entitled to treat it as an admitted fact, as between the plaintiffs on the one hand and Saiyid Muhammad Hasan on the other, that Musammat Taiyaba Begam's possession was either that of a trespasser without any valid title, or that of the widow of a talukdar who had succeeded under the provisions of section 22, clause 7, of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869) and was in no case that of the legatee of a talukdar. The order passed by this Court on November the 12th, 1906, shows that the case was so regarded. It shows further that no question as to the possible rights of Karamat Husain was raised at that time before this Court, but that it was accepted as an admitted fact that, if Musammat Taiyaba Begam was lawfully in possession for her life-time under section 22, clause 7, aforesaid, then Saiyid Muhammad Hasan would be the eventual heir under clause 11 of the same section. This Court was asked to consider only whether or not under such circumstances Saiyid Muhammad Hasan would be a proper defendant in the case, and this point was decided in his favour and against the plaintiffs. There must be some finality about the decision of a Court on such a point, so far at least as that same Court is concerned. I do not see that we are bound to re-consider the propriety of the order passed by our predecessors on November the 12th, 1906, or that it would be in any way expedient to do so. The fact remains that these defendants have been brought on to the record, have entered their pleadings, have cross-examined the witnesses for the plaintiffs and have tendered evidence of their own. I am clearly of opinion that these matters cannot now be expunged from the record or ignored in arriving at

(1) 7 Ind. Cas. 724; 14 C.W. N. 1010; 12 C.L.J. 303; 8 M. L. T. 273; 7 A. L. J. 1122; 12 Bom. L. R. 1015; 20 M. L. J. 917; 32 A. 599; 13 O.C. 316; 37 I. A. 168.

(2) 5 I. A. 1; 1 C. L. R. 318.

a decision on the facts. Suppose the defendants who were added in accordance with this Court's order had been in a position to produce evidence which satisfied us beyond possibility of doubt that the document, Exhibit 1, was a forgery and that any admissions to the contrary made by Musammat Taiyaba Begam were collusive and obtained from her by improper means, could it be seriously contended that we should be bound nevertheless to decree this suit in favour of the plaintiffs because we thought our learned predecessors had made a mistake in bringing Saiyid Muhammad Hasan on to the record? I thought it right to go into this point carefully, but as a matter of fact my view of the case as a whole would not be seriously affected if I had to consider the evidence on the record with reference only to the pleadings of the first defendant, Musammat Taiyaba Begam. The paragraph of the plaint in which Saiyid Ali's adoption and the execution of the deed, Exhibit 1, were set up as the foundation of the plaintiffs' case was paragraph 2. To this Musammat Taiyaba Begam's reply was that she admitted the fact of Mir Kazim Husain's death without issue and the blood relationship between the plaintiff Mir Saiyid Hasan and the late Mir Saiyid Ali. She then continued: "The rest of the allegations of this paragraph are not admitted, subject to additional pleas." What those additional pleas were, I find, set forth in paragraphs 14, 15, 16 and 17 of the same written statement. It was expressly denied that there had ever been any "valid and lawful adoption" of Mir Saiyid Ali, for that Mir Saiyid Ali ever acquired any good title in law to the Waira Kazi estate. As regards the document, Exhibit 1, the defence set up was threefold:—

(1) That it "was written contrary to the intention of Mir Kazim Husain, at a time when he was in consequence of illness unable to understand the nature and effect of the document."

(2) That it was subsequently cancelled by Mir Kazim Husain and its cancellation was accepted and ratified by Mir Saiyid Ali himself.

(3) That in any case this document could not have the effect of superseding the Will in favour of Musammat Taiyaba Begam duly registered on the 15th of January 1887.

The pleading as regards the factum of execution was obviously vague and unsatisfactory. The plaintiffs in their replication were quick to seize upon it as an implied admission of execution and challenged defendant No. 1 to specify more clearly the grounds upon which she alleged the document to be invalid. The result of this was that, in a later proceeding of February the 5th, 1907, the learned Counsel who represented Musammat Taiyaba Begam made a statement to the following effect :—

"That the execution of the said deed of adoption, dated 9th of November 1903, in favour of Saiyid Ali is not denied by the first defendant, but it is denied that it is valid and subsisting under the law in force in British India."

It is to be observed at the same time that immediately after this, the documentary evidence tendered by the plaintiffs was gone through, and the document, Exhibit 1, was endorsed as denied, without any qualification or any note being made as to there being any difference of pleading on this point between the two sets of defendants. Even as the case then stood, the pleadings of the first defendant were not, in my opinion, sufficiently clear or specific, and it would have been as well if the Court had taken up this point at once and pressed for a clear explanation as to what was intended by this admission of execution and how this admission was to be reconciled with the original plea that the document was contrary to the purpose or intention (khilaf mansha) of Mir Kazim Husain. As it was, the point came up again for consideration on the 14th of March 1897, and there can be no doubt that the first defendant then shifted her ground and did so in a somewhat disingenuous fashion. It was then stated on her behalf that the words "khilaf mansha" in the original written statement were intended to mean that the document was executed without the knowledge of Mir Kazim Husain. This does not appear to be a reasonable translation of the vernacular expression, and in any case the first defendant might well have been pressed to enter some precise and specific pleadings as regards every portion of the document, Exhibit 1, which purports to bear any writing by the pen of Mir Kazim Husain himself. The Court, however, accepted the pleadings as they stood and actually framed amended issues on the 14th of March 1907, on the strength partly of this new pleading as to the meaning of the words "khilaf mansha." On a review of these pleadings as a whole, confused and defective as I think them, it seems to me that the utmost that can be said is that Musammat Taiyaba Begam admitted that Mir Kazim Husain had actually appended his signature to the document, Exhibit 1, but pleaded that he did so without being aware of the nature, contents or effect of the said document. She was never asked to enter any specific pleadings as to the registration of the document, or as to the signatures which purport to be those of Mir Kazim Husain appearing at the foot of the registration endorsements on the back of the document. Considering, however, that those endorsements include express statements to the effect that the document was tendered for registration by Mir Kazim Husain at his own house at Jarwal and execution of the same admitted by him in the presence of the Sub-Registrar, who was personally acquainted with the executant, the plea that the document was written contrary to the intention of Mir Kazim Husain, and the further plea that it was written or executed without his knowledge, necessarily involved a plea that fraud of some sort or other had been committed in connection with the registration of the document as well as in connection with its execution.

I think it advisable to pause at this point to consider the position of the parties with regard to the Will in favour of Musammat Taiyaba Begam, because the existence of this document has, in my opinion, a considerable bearing, not only on the general probabilities of the case as affecting the credibility of the oral evidence, but also on the question of the pleadings, when the Court comes to estimate the nature of the burden of proof to be laid on the plaintiffs in respect of their document, Exhibit 1. On the original pleadings the plaintiffs denied both the execution and the validity of the Will in favour of the first defendant. The evidence as to execution is necessarily scanty, there being no witness now alive to give direct evidence on the point. There can be no doubt, however, that the document before the Court purporting to be the Will of Mir Kazim Husain in favour of Musammat Taiyaba Begam was executed by him and was duly registered; this point was finally conceded and taken for granted in the arguments addressed to us on behalf of all the parties concerned. I find then that on May the 12th, 1877, within three years of his coming into possession of the Waira Kazi estate, Mir Kazim Husain, being then about 45 years of age, executed this Will in favour of his wife, Musammat Taiyaba Begam, then a young woman of 17, and deposited it in a sealed cover at the office of the Sub-Registrar of Lucknow. The Will as thus executed had not been signed by any attesting witness. More than nine years later the fact that an unattested Will thus deposited would not satisfy the requirements of the law, must have been brought to the notice of the testator, and we find that on the 15th of January 1887 Mir Kazim Husain went to the Sub-Registrar's office at Lucknow, took out the Will in question from the sealed cover and formally presented it for registration. It is perhaps worth noticing that the document, as it now stands, not only bears Mir Kazim Husain's signature in the margin at the place where the executant would naturally sign it, but that his signature appears in three places in the body of the deed as attesting erasures or corrections. This fact was noted by the Sub-Registrar in his endorsement; it is not clear whether that official caused these additional signatures to be made when the Will was tendered to him for formal registration, but there seems to me a distinct probability that this is what actually occurred. In any case Mir Kazim Husain presented the document to the Sub-Registrar for registration as a Will and admitted its execution in the presence of three attesting witnesses, and these witnesses, as well as Mir Kazim Husain himself, proceeded to sign the document on the back in the proper places below the registration endorsements. According to the view repeatedly expressed by various Judges of the Calcutta High Court, as for instance in Nitya Gopal Sircar v. Nagendra Nath Mitter

MIR SYED HASAN v. TAIYABA BEGAM.

Mozumdar (3) and Amarendra Nath Chatterjee v. Kashi Nath Chatterjee (4), these proceedings amounted to an attestation of the Will sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the Indian Succession Act, section 50 of Act X of 1865. This view seems to me both good law and good sense, as there cannot be the shadow of a doubt regarding the purpose and intention of Mir Kazim Husain in thus getting the Will registered. He deliberately reaffirmed after an interval of more than 9½ years his intention of making Musammat Taiyaba Begam his legatee. If he did not copy out the Will on to a fresh piece of paper and sign it over again in the presence of the Sub-Registrar and the identifying witnesses, the only possible reason for this was that he did not think it necessary to take the trouble to do so. He undoubtedly signed the paper in two places on the back at the foot of the registration endorsement in the presence of the Sub-Registrar and of the attesting witnesses, and I think it highly probable that he also signed it in three places on the face of the deed at the instance of the Sub-Registrar, where that official noticed certain corrections or alterations in the deed. I say that this is probable, because the corrections or alterations in question have the appearance of being mere rectifications of an original slip of the pen, and I think it unlikely that the idea of attesting them with his signature would have presented itself to Mir Kazim Husain's mind unless his attention was drawn to it by the Sub-Registrar at the time of its formal registration. We thus have in favour of Musammat Taiyaba Begam a Will executed, attested and registered as required by law more than three months before the death of the testator, and, therefore, valid against all the world except for one possible objection to be considered presently. Now it seems to me beyond doubt that the subsequent adoption of Mir Saiyid Ali, if such adoption in fact took place would not in itself operate to revoke or nullify a valid Will, any more than the birth of a natural son would have done. The contention for the plaintiffs, however, a contention which has found favour in the Court below, is that if the factum of adoption were held to be proved in respect of Mir Saiyid Ali, then this Will would ipso facto become inoperative, because it was not registered within one month from the date of its execution. In the second place, it was further contended before us that the deed, Exhibit 1, contains words and expressions which give it the effect of a testamentary disposition in Mir Saiyid Ali's favour; so that, even though the mere execution of a deed of adoption should be held not to have the effect of nullifying the Will, yet the particular document before us is so worded that it has that effect. A question of law is thus raised which strikes at the very root of the plaintiffs' case. If it be decided against them, the great bulk of the record now before us becomes superfluous, and the issues raised regarding the execution and validity of the deed, Exhibit 1, also become superfluous. I do not propose to decide the case on this point alone, because after all that has taken place in the course of this litigation it seems to me very desirable that this Court should, if possible, come to some definite finding on the issues of fact which have been litigated at such enormous length. I am bound to say, however, that the more I have considered the point, the less disposed I feel to accept the position taken up by the learned Judge of the Court below as to the practical cancellation of the Will by the adoption deed, Exhibit 1, if the execution and validity of the latter should be affirmed. It seems to me that the execution of the Will was not legally complete before the 15th of January 1887, when it became valid in law in consequence of its attestation by the Sub-Registrar and by the identifying witnesses. There is, moreover, no law as to the precise place on a document where the executant must affix his signature in order that his act in so doing may amount to an execution and I do not see why the signatures of Mir Kazim Husain to the registration endorsement and his signatures to the corrections on the face of the document (supposing I am right in my belief that these latter were affixed on the 15th January 1887) should not be treated as a re-execution, or as the first valid execution of the document by the act of signing the same in the presence of attesting witnesses. From either of these points of view it would seem that the Will was executed on the 15th January 1887 and was, therefore, registered on the very day of its execution. I have felt more difficulty regarding the arguments addressed to us on behalf of the appellants regarding the actual wording of the deed, Exhibit 1. That document purports to constitute Mir Saiyid Ali, not merely the adopted son but also, the "janashin o qaim muqam" of the executant. Now each of these words may be translated either a "representative" or "locum tenens" or a "successor," so that there is a certain ambiguity involved in the expressions; while a few lines further occur the words "aur hamesha bad mere tamam umur talukdari ke anjam deta rahega," that is to say, the executant provides that after his death Mir Saiyid Ali will attend to or perform all the duties appertaining to a talukdar. I have felt considerable force in the contention on behalf of the appellants that these words and expressions considered together might reasonably be interpreted as being of a testamentary character and as implying a bequest of the talukdari estate in favour of Mir Saiyid Ali. Nevertheless upon full consideration I am not satisfied on this point. There was a previous Will in existence, and if that was to be revoked and a fresh bequest made in favour of another person, I should have expected this to be done in clear and unambiguous terms. There is good reason for supposing, as I shall show presently, that on or about the 14th of November 1893 Mir Kazim Husain was meditating the execution of, and probably did actually execute, (it is at any rate the plaintiffs' case that he did so), another deed making over to Mir Saiyid Ali in very wide terms the management of his estate. If I were satisfied that Mir Kazim Husain in fact executed the document, Exhibit 1, that he did so with full knowledge and understanding of its contents and that he caused it to be duly registered on the 14th November 1893, I should still not feel satisfied that the old gentleman's intention was altogether to annul his Will in favour of Musammat Taiyaba Begam and to disinherit her in favour of Mir Saiyid Ali. I should be disposed to read the ambiguous words "janashin o qaim muqam," as well as the curious expression about performing the duties of a talukdar, in connection with the provisions of the other deed, which the plaintiffs allege to have been also executed on the 14th of November 1893, and with an expression contained in Exhibit 1 itself about representing the executant in the presence of officials, members of the brotherhood, tenants of the estate and others, and on official occasions such as Darbars held by the Lieutenant-Governor and the like. From this point of view the words "janashin o qaim muqam" would be treated as tautological and as meaning no more than "representative and locum tenens," and the presumed intention would be that Saiyid Ali should continue after Mir Kazim Husain's death to perform the public duties attaching to the position of a talukdar while the estate itself went to Musammat Taiyaba Begam in accordance with the Will of January the 15th, 1887. In making these remarks I am, of course, adopting for the moment the plaintiffs' case with regard to the fact of execution and registration. I fully admit the force of the arguments addressed to us that a Muhammadan talukdar could have no possible motive for executing a deed of adoption except for the purpose of effecting thereby a devolution of his estate, and that on the face of it the Will in favour of Musammat Taiyaba Begam gives that lady an absolute estate and not merely an estate for life. To these contenions, however, I would reply, still accepting for the sake of argument the case for the plaintiffs as to the facts of execution and registration, that Mir Kazim Husain might conceivably have acted in the belief that in adopting a son to himself he was also adopting a son to Musammat Taiyaba Begam, that no disagreement was likely to take place between that lady and a young man so deeply indebted to her as was Mir Saiyid Ali, and that he really supposed that the combined effect of the Will of January the 15th, 1887, and the adoption deed of November the 14th, 1893, would be that Musammat Taiyaba Begam would succeed to the estate under the Will, that Mir Saiyid Ali would be her agent and representative during her life-time and would finally succeed himself after her death. I differ, therefore, from the learned Subordinate Judge on this point, and hold that the effect of the deed, Exhibit 1, even if it be proved to have been duly executed and registered, would not be to divest Musammat Taiyaba Begam of the estate which she took on the death of her husband under the Will of January the 15th, 1887.

(3) 11 C. 429.
(4) 27 C. 169.

I paused to consider this point at this stage because of its bearing on the question of the pleadings and of the burden of proof which should, in my opinion, be laid on the plaintiffs in respect of their document, Exhibit 1. I have expressed my opinion that that document, even if fully proved, would not have the effect of setting aside the Will in favour of Musammat Taiyaba Begam, but it must be remembered that it is put forward by the plaintiffs as a document which has that effect. Whatever room for argument there may be about the testamentary character or otherwise of any of the provisions of this deed, the broad fact remains that it is propounded by the plaintiffs as a document the execution of which by Mir Kazim Husain had in law the effect of nullifying the disposition of his estate made by that gentleman under his Will of January the 15th, 1887, and of substituting Mir Saiyid Ali for Musammat Taiyaba Begam as the immediate heir to the estate on the death of Mir Kazim Husain. The burden of proof, therefore, to be laid upon the plaintiffs should, in my opinion, be in no way less than that which the Courts have seen fit to lay upon the propounders of a Will, and more particularly upon the propounders of a Will which has the effect of revoking a Will previously in existence. Once any circumstances are shown to exist which may reasonably excite proper and well-grounded suspicion in the mind of the Court, a person claiming under such a document is bound to satisfy the Court, not only as to its execution, but also as to its representing in fact the mind and deed of the alleged executant. Such cases as those of Shunmugaroya Mudaliar v. Manika Mudaliar (5) and Shama Churn Kundu v. Khettromoni Dasi (6) show the kind of burden of proof which the highest Court of Appeal has laid in analogous circumstances upon the propounders of Wills. That there are circumstances existing in the present case, some of them apparent upon a mere examination of the document itself, calculated to excite grave and reasonable suspicion seems to me quite beyond question. In my opinion this case can only be rightly decided by laying upon the plaintiffs the burden of satisfying the Court, not only as to the mechanical execution by Mir Kazim Husain of this document, Exhibit 1, but also of the fact that he fully understood its nature and its terms, that he intended it to have the effect of divesting Musammat Taiyaba Begam of the right of successson to the Waira Kazi estate upon his death, and that he himself presented it for registration and caused it to be registered with that purpose and intention.

This is a case in which there is a direct conflict of testimony upon essential matters of fact, and more particularly as to what took place at the house of Mir Kazim Husain at Jarwal on the 14th of November 1893. Under these circumstances I think it advisable first of all to consider and discuss a number of facts bearing on the general probabilities of the case, as to which there is either no controversy at all or there is, in my opinion, a clear preponderance of evidence in favour of certain more or less definite conclusions. Mir Saiyid Ali appears to have been born somewhere about the year 1879, A. D., and his mother died when he was two years old. He was then sent for to Jarwal at the instance of Musammat Taiyaba Begam and was brought up by this lady in Mir Kazim Husain's house. It may be noted that, inasmuch as Mir Kazim Husain was not yet 50 years of age at that time and was married to a young wife to whom he was obviously much attached, it would seem prima faice as if he had no reason to abandon the hope of begetting a son of his own. As against this, however, we have clear evidence that Mir Kazim Husain was in bad health for a considerable number of years before his death in 1894, and that his illness was of a nature to affect injuriously his powers of procreation. On the evidence as a whole I am of opinion that, by about the year 1890 at any rate, Mir Kazim Husain had pretty well

(5) 3 Ind. Cas. 799; 32 M. 400; 11 Bom. L. R. 1206 (P. C.); 10 C. L. J. 276; 6 M. L. T. 304; 19 M. L. J. 640; 36 I. A. 185.

(6) 27 C. 521; 4 C. W. N. 501; 27 I. A. 10.

made up his mind that he would never have a child of his own, and I think it not unreasonable to suppose that Musammat Taiyaba Begam herself may have arrived at that conclusion some years earlier. I think it quite established by the evidence that Mir Kazim Hussain was not on good terms with his own family and not likely to contemplate with satisfaction the prospect of his estate devolving after his death, either on his first cousin, Karamat Husain, or on his sister's son, the defendant Saiyid Muhammad Hasan. He was evidently much attached to Musammat Taiyaba Begam and, I should say, a good deal under her influence. The Will in her favour shows that Mir Kazim Husain had quite made up his mind that his estate should pass into her possession after his death rather than into that of any of his own relatives. At the same time I fully appreciate the force of the contention on behalf of the plaintiffs that the way in which Mir Sayid Ali was brought to Jarwal as a mere infant, and his subsequent treatment in the family of Mir Kazim Husain, was such as to raise a certain presumption that the idea of eventually adopting him as a son was present to the minds of the persons concerned for a good many years prior to the date on which an adoption is alleged to have been actually effected. The difficulty to my mind is to make sure how far this idea was Musammat Taiyaba Begam's alone, or was fully shared by Mir Kazim Husain himself, also how far Musammat Taiyaba Begam may have looked upon the possible adoption of Mir Saiyid Ali, not os much as a thing desirable in itself, but as an alternative which it was advisable to keep open to meet certain possible contingencies. On the one hand, one may reasonably presume that this lady would think it a more desirable thing to become absolute owner of the Waira Kazi estate on the death of her husband than to be ousted from that possession by her young nephew. On the other hand, it is not unreasonable to suppose that she may have come to feel a strong affection for this lad whom she had brought up from infancy. Her position as legatee under a Will was in any case precarious, inasmuch as the Will might be revoked at any moment by Mir Kazim Husain in the event of her failing to retain her hold upon that old gentleman's affections. I have no doubt whatever that she would consider the succession to the estate of a lad who was her own nephew and who owed everything to her, as far preferable to that of any of the relatives of her husband, with whom she was more or less at feud. An arrangement which would leave her the estate for life, with Mir Saiyid Ali in the assured position of her appointed heir and successor, would, I have little doubt, appear to her an ideal one. In the month of July 1893 a suit was pending in the Court of the Munsif of Kaisarganj, in which the plaintiff was apparently seeking to fix Mir Kazim Husain with liability for the payment of some small sum of money on the strength of a contract entered into with Mir Saiyid Ali. Mir Kazim Husain was summoned to attend the Munsif's Court for examination, and on the 31st of July 1893 he appeared before that Court and was examined while reclining in his palanquin. His statement is Exhibit A-26 on this record, as to which there has been a good deal of controversy. I am content to note only that Mir Kazim Husain on that occasion stated in very positive terms that it was not true that he had at any time up to that date adopted Mir Saiyid Ali as his son. This document shows, on the one hand, that the notion of Mir Saiyid Ali's adoption was in the air at the time; on the other hand, it not merely emphasises the admitted fact that no actual adoption had yet taken place, but I think it tends to show that there was no clear purpose or intention of effecting such adoption present at that time in Mir Kazim Husain's mind. I must now go back for a moment to the end of January or the beginning of February 1893, when an event took place which has, I am certain, a very considerable bearing on the facts of this case. Mir Saiyid Ali was then married from Mir Kazim's house to a daughter of Saiyid Mehdi Hasan. Considering all the more or less superfluous evidence with which this record has been encumbered, I am bound to say that I feel some surprise that the defendants have not thought it worth their while to get on to the record some fuller and more precise evidence as to the personality of Saiyid Mehdi Hasan, to his career as a Government servant and to his whereabouts during the year 1893, more particularly as to the possibility of his having been present in Jarwal sometime during the early part of November of that year. This much I can take from the record, that he was a taluk-dar, the head of a Muhammadan family in Jarwal, which was more or less a rival to that of Mir Kazim Husain, that he was a Government servant and attained to the position of Subordinate Judge before his service came to an end. This marriage of Mir Saiyid Ali's to this man's daughter may, I think, fairly be regarded as a marriage somewhat above Mir Saiyid Ali's station in life, unless he was to be regarded as an eventual successor to the Waira Kazi taluka. On the one hand it suggests that people likely to know the truth thought it not improbable that he might be adopted by Mir Kazim Husain, or at any rate that he would succeed to the estate later on in the event of its first passing into the hands of Musammat Taiyaba Begam. On the other hand the marriage called into existence a powerful interest (that of Saiyid Mehdi Hasan and his family) in favour of making that adoption an accomplished fact, and, what is more, of making Mir Saiyid Ali's succession to the estate a thing certain and immediate, that is to say, neither postponed to the succession of Musammat Taiyaba Begam nor dependant on the continuance of her favour.

It will be convenient at this point to take up the most important of the various side issues into which this case has diverged and to consider the evidence bearing on Mir Kazim Husain's health, more especially during the year 1893. The only expert medical evidence produced has been on the side of the defendants, who caused to be examined Sitla Din (D. W. No. 1), a medical officer in charge of the hospital maintained by the Kapurthala Estate at Bondi, twenty-four miles from Jarwal, and Ejaz Husain, a physician of Lucknow who was examined and cross-examined at preposterous length on commission. I think there can be no doubt whatever that both these gentlemen attended Mir Kazim Husain in their professional capacity and that their evidence deserves careful consideration. With regard to the rest of the oral evidence bearing on this point the difficulty is simply this, that it is in the main the evidence of witnesses who support the case for their respective parties upon other points of more direct and vital importance. If, for instance, we can feel sure that the witnesses for the plaintiffs who depose to the actual execution of the document, Exhibit 1, are speaking the truth on that point, we must, of course, believe what they say regarding the state of Mir Kazim Husain's health; if, on the other hand, we distrust their evidence on the question of execution, their statements regarding the health of the executant must go overboard along with the rest. Similar remarks apply to such witnesses for the defendants as Manohar Lal (D. W. No. 5) and Muhammad Raza (D. W. No. 2). On the other hand the statements of Thakur Lal Bahadur Singh (D. W No. 14) and Riaz Husan (D.W. No. 18) seem to me less open to objection on this ground, and their evidence does corroborate that of the medical men in important particulars. On the evidence as a whole, there can be no doubt whatever that Mir Kazim Husain suffered from rheumatic fever and syphilitic rheumatism for many years before his death and that his eye-sight was badly affected by cataract. On the question of the eye-sight we reached common ground in the course of arguments up to a certain point. It was admitted on both sides on a review of the evidence that one of Mir Kazim Husain's eyes had been affected by cataract before the year 1889, that it was operated upon in that year by some unqualified practitioner, with the result that he lost the sight of it altogether, and that cataract must have developed itself in his other eye in the course of the years 1890 and 1891. About the month of December 1891 Mir Kazim Husain went to Allahabad and there had his remaining eye operated on for cataract by an English physician, Dr. Hall. Such an operation would presumably not take place until the cataract had reached an advanced stage, that is to say, until the man must have been practically blind for some little time. It is common ground that Dr. Hall's operation was to a certain extent successful, but from this point the parties are definitely at issue. The case for the defendants is that the relief thus afforded proved only temporary and that by the end of 1892, or the beginning of 1893, Mir Kazim Husain sank into total blindness and continued in this condition until his death; the case for the plaintiffs is that a more or less permanent cure was effected and that Mir Kazim Husain could see sufficiently for all practical purposes during the last $2\frac{1}{2}$ years of his life. The chief difficulty which I feel about arriving at a positive conclusion on this point arises out of the question of the pleadings and the difficulties raised at a late stage of the case when the plaintiffs tendered rebutting evidence. I am bound to say that, if Kazim Husain was in fact totally blind on the 14th of November 1893, I should have expected this fact to be definitely stated in the pleadings and to have been put in the forefront of the defendants' case. This was not done, and the utmost that can be said for the defendants is that they disclosed the position they intended to take up on this point more or less gradually in the course of their cross-examination of the plaintiffs' witnesses, so that the plaintiffs ought to have been under no delusion on this point by the time they came to close their case. As regards the exclusion of rebutting evidence, the matter was argued out before us with reference to this and to one or two other points of some importance; it is also referred to in the grounds of appeal to this Court. I felt compelled to put it plainly to the learned Counsel for the appellants whether he did or did not intend to ask for an order of remand for the production of additional evidence under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 27, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The reply received was that the appellants did not desire the case to be remanded for further evidence, or to tender additional evidence before this Court. I can only deal, therefore, with the record as it stands, but if the case for the defendants on this question of blindness is in fact a true one, they would have been wiser to have been more direct and plain-spoken in their pleadings, and I think they need not have objected to some attempt on the part of the plaintiffs to deal with the point in their rebutting evidence. As regards Mir Kazim Husain's general health, I take note of the fact that when he appeared before the Munsif at Kaisarganj at the end of July 1893 he was examined while lying in a palanquin. I note further that, although the Sub-Registrar's office was situated in the town of Jarwal within a few hundred yards of Mir Kazim Husain's house, the registration of the document, Exhibit 1, purports to have been effected on commission at the house of the executant, as is ordinarily done only when an executant is prevented by illness or other sufficient cause from attending at the office. It is also an admitted fact that at the time when the registration purported to be effected, Mir Kazim Husain was lying in an antechamber (deorhi) of his zanana house, a place to which one would not expect a Sub-Registrar or other outsiders to be admitted, unless the man's state of health was such as to make it difficult for him to proceed a short distance to his own male apartments. A half-hearted attempt was made on behalf of the plaintiffs to neutralize this point by suggesting that the mardana house was under repairs, or was being white-washed or something of the sort, but it did not strike them that there was not any force in this suggestion. A few days later, however, Mir Kazim Husain was undoubtedly well enough to travel, for he left Jarwal on November the 19th, 1893, for Lucknow. Nevertheless this journey was that of an invalid in search of proper medical treatment, for it is beyond question that Mir Kazim Husain remained under medical treatment at Lucknow until he returned to Jarwal on March the 11th, 1894. He died, as already noted, two months later, on May the 12th, 1894. I note in this connection that His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces paid a visit to Bahraich early in the year 1894 and held a Darbar there. Mir Kazim Husain was excused attendance at this Darbar, and in support of his application to be so excused he put in a certificate (Exhibit 103 on the record), dated December the 16th, 1893, by Babu Nobin Chandra, a Lucknow physician. This certificate was to the effect that Mir Kazim Husain was in Lucknow under treatment, suffering from chronic rheumatism, and not in a fit state to undertake a railway journey. It is certainly worth noticing that nothing is said in this document about failure of sight, but I am not sure that the point was relevant, for even total blindness might not have been accepted as in itself a sufficient excuse for failure on the part of a talukdar to attend an official Darbar. I may add that it seems to me exceedingly probable that the knowledge of the Lieutenant-Governor's impending visit, and the desire to avoid the necessity of putting in an appearance at a harassing public function at a distance from his home, probably exercised a considerable influence on Mir Kazim Husain's actions in the month of November 1893, not only by prompting him to get away to Lucknow for treatment, but by inclining him to lend a ready ear to the suggestion that he should execute some sort of document which might have the effect of putting Mir Saiyid Ali forward as a "representative or locum tenens," capable of performing in his place any public duties which the Government might consider incumbent on a gentleman holding the position of an Oudh talukdar. The conclusion to which I have arrived on a consideration of the entire evidence on this point is that there is a distinct preponderance of evidence in favour of the defendants' case generally. If the question of Mir Kazim Husain's total blindness had been specifically raised in the pleadings, as I think it ought to have been, or if the plaintiffs had been allowed an opportunity of producing rebutting evidence on the point and had failed to do so, I am bound to say that on the evidence of Sitla Din, Ejaz Husain and Riaz Husain more particularly, considered in connection with the general probabilities and the established facts of the case, I should have been much disposed to hold it proved that Mir Kazim Husain was on the 14th of November 1893 to all intents and purposes a blind man. That he was in a very feeble state of general health, I hold to be fully established. There are indications in the evidence that he would have wished before his departure for Lucknow to pay a visit to the head-quarters of his own estate at Aini, eight miles from Jarwal by road, and that he did not do so because he did not feel himself equal to a road journey of such a distance. There is a clear preponderance of evidence that he had been confined to his house, if not to his zanana quarters, for some time before the 14th of November 1893. As regards his eye-sight I hesitate, for reasons already indicated, to record a finding that he was totally blind, but the impression left on my mind is that the sight of his one remaining eye had been failing him as the beneficial effects of Dr. Hall's operation began to wear off, and that it was in the month of November 1893 in such a condition as to make it highly improbable that Mir Kazim Husain would be able to acquaint himself with the contents of a document by reading it. His eye-sight was in fact, in my opinion, so extremely defective that it would not have been difficult for an unscrupulous person in whom he reposed confidence to practise some such fraud upon him as would be involved in obtaining his signature on two distinct documents while he was under the impression that he was signing one document in two different places.

During Mir Kazim Husain's absence in Lucknow certain transactions took place, mostly in connection with the Lieutenant-Governor's visit already referred to, in which Mir Saiyid Ali was allowed to put himself forward as the adopted son of Mir Kazim Husain and the prospective heir of taluka Waira Kazi. In connection with this part of the case we have the evidence of certain retired officials who were examined on commission, namely, Mr. Parmanand Chaube, a retired Tahsildar, Mr. Hakimuddin a retired Deputy Collector of these Provinces subsequently holding a distinguished position in the State of Bhopal, and Mr. Ehsan-ul-Haqq, who seems to have retired from service as a Naib-Tahsildar after having acted as Tahsildar on one or more occasions. In considering all this evidence it must be borne in mind that Mir Kazim Husain had gone off to Lucknow and left Mir Saiyid Ali in charge of his estate, principally, as I think, in order that he might not be worried with matters connected with the Lieutenant-Governor's visit. The local officials had in any case to look to the gentleman actually managing the Waira Kazi estate for sundry services in connection with the camping arrangements for His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, and they would naturally address themselves to the gentleman whose services they were thus invoking in such polite terms as they might consider likely to be agreeable to him. Moreover, whatever may be the truth about the document, Exhibit 1, it is quite certain that from the 14th of November 1893 there was in existence in the registers of the Sub-Registrar's office at Jarwal a copy of that document entered according to law and purporting to be a deed of adoption in favour of Mir Saiyid Ali duly executed, attested and registered. Whatever had in the meantime become of the original, I have no doubt that Mir Saiyid Ali would have no difficulty about securing a registration copy for such use as he might see fit to make of it, and that the knowledge that such a document was in existence would be common to all the officials at Kaisarganj Tahsil. I attach, therefore, very little importance to the plaintiffs' evidence regarding Mir Saiyid Ali's proceedings during the absence of Mir Kazim Husain in Lucknow, except as showing that he was still hopeful regarding his chances of being able successfully to maintain the position he was taking up as the adopted son of Mir Kazim Husain. In the one document addressed to Mir Saiyid Ali on behalf of the Deputy Commissioner and bearing the signature of that official there is no reference to any adoption, and the privilege granted is merely that of a formal interview with His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor while on tour, a privilege which would, I have no doubt, have been granted to Mir Saiyid Ali as the manager actually in charge of taluka Waira Kazi during the absence of its owner, apart altogether from any question of his alleged status as an adopted son. I do not consider that knowledge of the fact that Mir Saiyid Ali was arrogating this status to himself was brought home to Mir Kazim Husain by any satisfactory evidence.

It will be expedient, however, that I should pause at this point to look through the evidence of the three officials examined on commission.

Mr. Parmanand Chaube never met Mir Kazim Husain at all, and all he really knows is that Mir Saiyid Ali was described to him as the adopted son of Mir Kazim Husain by some of his subordinate officials. His evidence is really worthless. Mr. Ehsan-ul-Haqq began by deposing that Mir Kazim Husain had often told him that he had brought Mir Saiyid Ali up as his own child and that he regarded him as his heir and successor, but it seems to me that the learned Subordinate Judge is substantially right in regarding this witness as having more or less broken down in cross-examination. He made one or two statements which are certainly not true; as for instance that Mir Kazim Husain had not lost the sight of the eye which was operated on by an unqualified practitioner. He admitted that he only saw Mir Kazim Husain once between July 1893 and March 1894, and he subsequently placed this interview in the month of July or August 1893. This would, therefore, be just about the very time that Mir Kazim Husain was repudiating the alleged adoption of Mir Saiyid Ali in the sworn evidence which he gave before the Munsif's Court at Kaisarganj. The witness only spoke of one other specific occasion on which he could remember that he had talked with Mir Kazim Husain about Mir Saiyid Ali's position. This he placed shortly after the operation by what he calls the "native ophthalmist." He says that he then saw Mir Kazim Husain lying very ill at his own house at Jarwal. The latter told him he had no hope of life and begged him to be kind to Mir Saiyid Ali, whom he regarded in every way as his son and who would be his heir after him. I am confident that no statement substantially to this effect was made, or could have been made, to this witness by Mir Kazim Husain at the end of the year 1889 or the beginning of the year 1890. There had been no adoption of Mr. Saiyid Ali up to that date, and if Mir Kazim Husain had died then his estate would have passed to Musammat Taiyaba Begam, under the Will registered at the beginning of 1887. I do not say that the witness is necessarily lying; he may have been carried away by friendly feelings towards Mir Saiyid Ali, or by an honest belief, which had somehow remained in his mind from the days of his official connection with Tahsil Kaisarganj, that there had really been an adoption, and thus have entertained in his own mind and conveyed to the Court an exaggerated and incorrect impression of certain friendly expression regarding Mir Saiyid Ali really used to him by Mir Kazim Husain at or about the time to which he refers. So far as the questions in issue in this case are concerned his evidence seems to me practically worthless. The statement of Mr. Hakimuddin is of more importance and requires to be carefully considered. He was posted to the Bahraich District about the end of the year 1892 and was transferred, apparently in April 1894, though he says it was in March of that year. It is important to notice that he had an interest in Mir Saiyid Ali, because he knew his father and his family at Agra. I think it highly probable that Mir Saiyid Ali regarded this Deputy Collector as a friend at Court, and made the most of his acquaintance with him during the proceedings connected with the Lieutenant-Governor's visit in January and February 1894. So far as Mr. Hakimuddin's evidence relates to that particular matter, and to the alleged admission of Mir Saiyid Ali to the Lieutenant Governor's Darbar in the capacity of adopted son of Mir Kazim Husain, I think it is of no great weight as regards the questions in issue in the present suit, and is almost certainly incorrect in some of its most important details. The statement that Mir Saiyid Ali was put forward for admission at the formal darbar as representing the Waira Kazi estate appears to me improbable and inconsistent with the Deputy Commissioner's letter granting Mir Saiyid Ali a formal interview to which I have already referred. The crux of Mr. Hakimuddin's evidence, however, lies in his deposition as to certain statements said to have been made to him by Mir Kazim Husain. He spoke to one interview at Jarwal during the tour season of 1893. On that occasion he said that Mir Kazim Husain expressed to him his intention of adopting Mir Saiyid Ali. Now this interview must have taken place about the time of, or shortly before, Mir Saiyid Ali's marriage. I can well conceive of it as probable that Mr. Hakimuddin would be interested in the position of a young man with whose family he had a previous acquaintance, and who was about to contract a distinguished marriage into the family of a brother official like Saiyid Mehdi Hasan, and that he might enter into conversation with Mir Kazim Husain as to the young man's future prospects. I think it probable that the witness's memory is not at fault when he says that on this occasion Mir Kazim Husain expressed to him some sort of intention of making Mir Saiyid Ali his adopted son and the eventual successor to his estate. It also seems to me perfectly conceivable that Mir Kazim Husain might make some such remarks, under the circumstances indicated, without having come to any final or positive decision in his own mind, and more particularly without having formed any intention whatsoever of entirely superseding his Will in favour of Musammat Taiyaba Begam by making Mir Saiyid Ali his immediate heir. Another statement made by this witness is more to the point. He says that he had another interview with Mir Kazim Husain at the village of Aini, which is the head-quarters of the Waira Kazi taluka and close to Tahsil Kaisarganj. There, according to the witness, Mir Kazim Husain definitely informed him in the presence of another well-known talukdar of the Bahraich District (since deceased) that he had actually adopted Mir Saiyid Ali by executing a deed of adoption in his favour. In another part of his evidence the witness added that it was in the course of this interview that Mir Kazim Husain expressed an intention of going to Lucknow for treatment. Now it is beyond question that the witness's recollection on this point is inaccurate. The deed, Exhibit 1, is supposed to have been executed on November the 14th, 1893, and Mir Kazim Husain left for Lucknow four days later. No interview between those two dates could possibly be described as having taken place at the beginning of the year 1894. I am further of opinion that it is proved beyond question that Mir Kazim Husain did not go to Aini between the two dates above referred to. From the evidence as a whole, I also gather that he did not go to Aini between the date of his return to Jarwal and the date of his death. From any point of view, therefore, the witness is making a mistake both as to the place and as to the time of the alleged interview. I am not much impressed by the counter-argument strongly urged upon us on behalf of the appellants, that a question put to this witness in cross-examination suggested that the defendants themselves believed that there had been some interview between Mir Kazim Husain and Mr. Hakimuddin at Jarwal in the interval between November the 14th and November the 19th, 1893. To begin with the defendants' Counsel simply put the question, and I do not see that the defendants have in any way committed themselves to the assertion that such an interview actually took place. Moreover, if there is any foundation for the question put by the defendants, the result would be that Mr. Hakim uddin must have remembered that the interview took place at Jarwal and was telling a deliberate falsehood when he placed it at Aini, and is, therefore, to be regarded as an altogether dishonest witness. I do not desire to cast such an imputation on Mr. Hakimuddin, but I am bound to say that the one material point in his evidence seems to me seriously shaken by the fact that his memory must have failed him as to the time and place of the interview to which he deposes. I do not think it possible under the circumstances to place any reliance on his recollection regarding the substance of what passed at the supposed interview. It is quite possible that he carried away with him from the Bahraich District, mainly in consequence of communications which had passed between himself and other officials (perhaps including Saiyid Mehdi Hasan), a strong impression that Mir Saiyid Ali had in fact been adopted, so that when he came to furbish up his memory as to the precise materials upon which that impression was based, a bona fide belief in the justice of the plaintiffs' case led him more or less unconsciously to put a stronger colour on his evidence than the facts would really bear. I cannot, under all these circumstances, regard the statement of this witness as of serious value in support of the plaintiffs' case.

There is other evidence as to matters alleged to have occurred between November the 14th, 1893, and the date of Mir Kazim Husain's death, which is of very considerable importance. The document, Exhibit 1, was first produced before the Revenue Court which was engaged in dealing with the case as to mutation of names in the revenue registers arising out of the dispute which broke out on the death of Mir Kazim Husain. I regard it as one of the cardinal facts in this case, the importance of which must be steadily borne in mind in dealing with the entire evidence, that this document was not then produced from the custody in which one would have expected to find it. The Revenue Court was informed that the deed of adoption had been deposited for safe custody with one Saiyid Abul Hasan, Mujtahid of Lucknow; it was in fact produced in Court from this gentleman's custody and he was examined on commission and made a statement as to the circumstances under which he had become possessed of the document. A certified copy of this statement is Exhibit A7 on the record. I pause to note that Saiyid Abul Hasan was not only a gentleman of authority, as a Mujtahid or high priest of the Shia sect, but was a connection by marriage of the family with whose affairs we are dealing. He had married one Fatima Begam, the daughter of a sister of Musammat Taiyaba Begam, who would, therefore, be a niece of that lady and a first cousin of Mir Saiyid Ali and of the present plaintiff, Mir Saiyid Hasan. The statement made by Saiyid Abul Hasan as a witness is a very brief one and was obviously put together with the strictest possible economy of truth. What he said was that during the second half of a Muhammadan month which would correspond with the period from November the 25th to December the 9th, 1893, one Saiyid Shafi Haider, who is an important personage in this case, being the own brother of Musammat Taiyaba Begam, brought him this document and left it with him in deposit (amanat rakha). He went on to add that when this document was thus entrusted to him, it bore an endorsement on the back to the following effect:—"Inasmuch as this document has been cancelled by a fresh deed of adoption, I am returning this deed to the executant." This curious endorsement purports to be signed by Mir Saiyid Ali, and the venerable Mujtahid began by deposing somewhat doubtfully that from the appearance of the writing he thought this really was Saiyid Ali's signature. He was pressed to be more precise on this point and he then stated that, on the day the deed, Exhibit 1, was entrusted to him, Shafi Haidar and Saiyid Ali came together to his house bringing the document with them, that they had some conversation at his house in his presence but that he was not near enough to them to hear distinctly what they were saying, and that finally Saiyid Ali in his presence wrote the endorsement on the back of the deed to which reference has just been made and affixed his signature to the same. Then he says Shafi Haidar made over the document to his custody, but that nothing further was said to him as to the meaning or purpose of this curious proceeding. From the latter part of his statement it appears that he intended to depose that his own son, Saiyid Muhammad Hadi, had also been present at the interview in the course of which the deed was deposited, and he explained that at the time when he was making this statement the said Muhammad Hadi was absent in Bombay and there was no immediate prospect of his return. A statement to a similar effect was made in the course of the mutation proceedings before the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich by Shafi Haidar, who appears to have been acting as agent or attorney for his sister, Musammat Taiyaba Begam. A copy of this statement is on the record, as Exhibit A-14, and considerable reliance is placed by the plaintiffs on its opening words, which are: "The deed of adoption executed by Kazim Husain on November the 9th, 1893, is with Saiyid Abul Hasan, Mujtahid of Lucknow." He then goes on to make a statement which is clearly inconsistent in its details with that of Saiyid Abul Hasan. According to this story, Kazim Husain went to Lucknow for medical treatment (as we know he did on the 19th of November 1893) with this deed, Exhibit 1, in his possession. He there gave it to Shafi Haidar, telling Shafi Haidar to make it over to Saiyid Abul Hasan. Some days afterwards Kazim Husain told Saiyid Ali to go with Shafi Haidar to the Mujtahid and to write an endorsement on the deed to the effect that it had been returned to the executant. He added that the deed was to be left with Saiyid Abul Hasan to be producible in case of a dispute. Accordingly the deponent Shafi Haider and Mir Saiyid Ali went together to the Mujtahid's house, where Mir Saiyid Ali wrote the endorsement already described, the only other persons present at the time being Saiyid Abdul Husan and his son, Saiyid Muhammad Hadi. The witness went on to depose that there really had been another deed of adoption subsequently executed, but qualified his statement on this point by saying that he knew nothing about it except by hearsay, though he believed such a document had really been executed because he had seen a draft of it. Finally, we have to turn for information on this point to the evidence of Saiyid Muhammad Hadi, who was examined in this case on commission on behalf of the plaintiffs. He said that he remembered that Saiyid Ali and Shafi Haidar came to his father's house bringing this document with them. A conversation took place between the two, which the witness was able to hear and of which he professed to remember some fragments. The document which they had brought with them was not at all fovourable to Musammat Taiyaba Begam and Shafi Haidar was urging upon Mir Saiyid Ali that this document ought to be cancelled and another substitued for it, which should provide for Musammat Taiyaba Begam's interests as well. Mir Saiyid Ali made him swear an oath, presumably to the effect that he really would obtain for him a second deed of adoption, and thereupon Mir Saiyid Ali proceeded to write the endorsement in question and the deed was then handed over to Saiyid Abul Hasan.

This is all the evidence available in respect of this remarkable transaction, and the one thing that can be said about it with any certainty is that the whole truth was not disclosed at the time of the mutation proceedings and has not been disclosed now. It is obvious that something must have been said to the Mujtahid at the time when the document was handed over to him and that this was kept back by Saiyid Abul Hasan when he was examined in 1894, while Saiyid Muhammad Hadi professes not to remember what Shafi Haidar or Saiyid Ali said to his father when they made over the document to him. The whole of Saiyid Muhammad Hadi's cross-examination seems to me more or less unsatisfactory; he says there was a conversation between Shafi Haider and Saiyid Ali which lasted about an hour before the latter consented to write the endorsement. Yet what he professes to recollect of this conversation would not occupy five minutes. Moreover, it stands to reason that Shafi Haidar and Saiyid Ali must either have come to the Mujtahid's house after having thoroughly discussed the matter between themselves and made up their minds as to what was to be done, or they must have come there in order to talk the matter over with the venerable Mujtahid and obtain his advice. The statement of Saiyid Muhammad Hadi is hopelessly at variance with either of these probabilities. To Shafi Haidar's extraordinary statement I may have to return later; for the present I am content to note the inconsistencies between his story and that told by Saiyid Abul Hasan, and that on two distinct points he makes statements the correctness of which is not now asserted by either of the parties before us. It is no one's case that the deed, Exhibit 1, was executed on the 9th of November 1893, the evidence for the plaintiffs being that its execution took place the day on which it was registered, that is to say, on the 14th of November 1893. It is no one's case now that any subsequent deed of adoption was ever executed by Mir Kazim Husain and nothing further has transpired in the evidence regarding the draft which Shafi Haidar professed to have seen. There was considerable argument before us as to the legal effect of the endorsement made by Mir Saiyid Ali, but the only question with which I feel any concern is the bearing of the fact of Mir Saiyid Ali's having consented to make such an endorsement, and the very curious procedure adopted in handing over the document to the custody of Saiyid Abul Hasan, on the question of the genuineness of the document itself and of the credibility of the plaintiffs' evidence as to its due execution and registration. The case for the plaintiffs has been outlined in the evidence of their witness Saiyid Muhammad Hadi. They ask the Court to hold, in the first place, that there is no evidence that Mir Kazim Husain himself had anything to do with the obtaining of this endorsement, or with the handing over of the document to the Mujtahid; in the second place, they suggest that all that took place was that Shafi Haidar was dissatisfied with the effects of the document on his sister's interests, and so contrived to trick or bully his young nephew into some sort of a surrender of the same, assuring him all the time that he would get another document executed in its place. Shafi Haidar's position is in fact one of the difficult points in the entire case. It would appear that he did not ordinarily reside at Jarwal, but at his own family home at Kintaur in the Bara Banki District. He was frequently coming and going between that place and Jarwal; and he was, no doubt, in the confidence of Musammat Taiyaba Begam and the natural protector of her interests. She made him her general attorney by a deed executed immediatly after Mir Kazim Husain's death and he acted for her in the litigation which followed in the Criminal and Revenue Courts. It is fully established by evidence that he was not in Jarwal on November the 14th, 1893, but that he arrived there either on the 15th or on the 16th of November. The evidence for the defendants is that he was angry and disturbed about the alleged execution and registration of the deed, Exhibit 1, and drew the attention of Mir Kazim Husain to the fact. In trying to estimate this man's conduct and his probable motives. I make due allowance for the facts that he was probably astute enought to realize that the Will of January 1887, on the face of it, appeared to confer upon Musammat Taiyaba Begam an absolute estate in the Waira Kazi taluka, and that he might himself succeed to the same after her death if she died intestate, or if Mir Kazim Husain failed to make some other provision for the succession before his own death. Shafi Haidar himself died after the institution of the present suit and before any question could arise as to his examination as a witness. The evidence, as a whole, does not suggest to my mind that he was personally unfriendly to Mir Saiyid Ali, and I have little doubt that, if driven to choose between Mir Saiyid Ali and some member of Mir Kazim Husain's family as eventual heir to the Waira Kazi estate, he would have preferred the former.

In order to deal with this part of the case as a whole, I propose next to consider certain evidence put forward by the defendants with regard to statements alleged to have been made by Mir Kazim Husain in the interval between the 14th of November 1893 and his death. There was a good deal of argument before us as to the admissibility of these statements. It seems to me that in almost every single case to which we were referred in the course of arguments, as bearing on the general principles to be applied in allocating the burden of proof and estimating the value of evidence in connection with disputed Wills or other dispositions of property, evidence was freely admitted with regard to statements alleged to have been made by deceased testators from which inferences could be drawn as to the execution or otherwise of the documents in dispute, or as to the circumstances under which such execution was obtained. The objections taken to the oral evidence, which I am about to consider, would apply equally to the document, Exhibit A26, and to a good deal of other evidence which I find on the record. Personally I have little doubt that the whole of this evidence can be brought in under the head of admissions, under the provisions of sections 18, 19 and 21 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872); but if the correct view should be that these sections apply only to a certain limited class of cases, in which the representative character of a person against whom an alleged admission is sought to be proved is not in dispute, I would still hold the evidence in question to be relevant under the general provisions of section 11 of the Indian Evidence Act. In most cases where the genuineness or validity of a Will is in dispute, it will be found that the case of the party denying the Will is that the alleged executant died without ever having become aware of the existence of the document, or at any rate without ever having become aware of its nature or effect. Now in the present case it was from the very first alleged on behalf of the defendants that Mir Kazim Husain did become aware, shortly after the 14th of November 1893, of the existence, purport and effect of the deed, Exhibit 1, and it was further pleaded that the result of his so becoming aware was that he took such steps as appeared to him under the circumstances necessary and sufficient to cancel it or to nullify its effect. It is obvious that the conduct of Mir Kazim Husain from the moment that he became admittedly aware of the existence, purport and effect of the document, Exhibit 1, is not merely a relevant fact, but a very important fact in the case. The word "conduct" in such a connection as this must, in my opinion, be interpreted very widely; it would obviously include abstinence from taking any action, as such abstinence would be an important point in favour of those asserting the genuineness and validity of the document. Under these circumstances it seems clear to me that the plaintiffs cannot reasonably ask the Court to exclude as irrelevant evidence offered by the defendants of statements made by Mir Kazim Husain expressing the view taken by him of the deed, Exhibit 1, after he knew of its existence, or the action which he conceived himself to have taken regarding it. I note, therefore, the following evidence on behalf of the defendants on this point.

D. W. No. 8, Raghubar Singh, is an elderly gentleman residing at a village about a mile and a half from Jarwal. He speaks to an interview which he had with Mir Kazim Husain some two months before the death of the latter, that is to say, very shortly after his return from Lucknow to Jarwal. He says that Mir Kazim Husain spoke bitterly about the intrigues of Saiyid Haidar Mehdi's family in favour of the daughter who had been married to Mir Saiyid Ali. Through these intrigues, he said, a deed of adoption and a deed investing Saiyid Ali with the management of the Waira Kazi estate had been "prepared in Saiyid Ali's favour without his notice and against his will." He added that he had been to Lucknow to see if he could get rid of these deeds and that he had anyhow succeeded in getting back the deed of adoption. At present he was very ill and did not intend to do anything further in the matter, but if he should recover his health he would see what ought to be done. D. W. No. 14, Thakur Lal Bahadur Singh, is a respectable gentleman fairly well-to-do, an Honorary Magistrate and member of the Bahraich District Board. There seems no doubt that he was on visiting terms with Mir Kazim Husain. He says he saw the latter about a month and a half before his death and that Mir Kazim Husain then told him that, while he was blind and unable to get about, Saiyid Haidar Mehdi's people had instigated Mir Saiyid Ali to obtain from him what he calls "a forged deed of adoption and a supurdnama," and that these deeds were registered without his knowledge. He added that when he came to know about the two deeds, he got them back from Mir Saiyid Ali. A more detailed statement is made by D. W. No. 18, Riaz Husain. He says he saw Mir Kazim Husain in Lucknow early in the year 1894. The latter then complained that while he was sick and blind, Saiyid Ali and his wife's relations had contrived to get a forged deed of adoption registered, and that he was so angry when he came to know about it that he had meditated instituting criminal proceedings, but being dissuaded from doing so by Musammat Taiyaba Begam and Shafi Haidar he had contented himself with getting back the deed and having an endorsement made on the back if it, after which it was entrusted for safe keeping to the Mujtahid Saiyid Abul Hasan. The witness says that Mir Kazim Husain was asking for advice as to whether this proceeding would be sufficient to annul the deed of adoption. The witness, who deposes to Shafi Haidar's return to Jarwal and to what took place when the latter called Mir Kazim Husain's attention to the existence of the alleged deed of adoption, is an old servant of the estate, Muhammad Ali Khan, D. W. No. 24. I have given my best attention to the arguments which were addressed to us on behalf of the appellants against the credibility of these witnesses, and I have endeavoured also to make due allowance in my own mind for the consideration that it is a dangerous thing to admit oral evidence as to statements alleged to have been made by a deceased executant as having the effect of practically cancelling a registered instrument. It seems to me, however, that this evidence requires to be considered in connection with the undoubted facts of the production of the deed in dispute from the custody of the Mujtahid and of the existence thereon of the endorsement already noticed in the hand-writing of Mir Saiyid Ali himself. I lay no great stress on the alleged use by Mir Kazim Husain of the word "forgery." Such an expression, or its equivalent in the vernacular, is frequently used in ordinary talk of a document in connection with which some sort of fraud is alleged to have been perpetrated, quite independently of any question as to whether such fraud amounted to forgery in the legal signification of the term. It seems to me that the evidence for the defendants which I have noticed above is little, if at all, shaken in cross-examination. As regards the witness Riaz Husain in particular, I cannot find that any definite argument was put forward on behalf of the appellants as to why he should be disbelieved. The opinion which I have formed as regards this part of the case is substantially as follows:—that when Shafi Haidar returned to Jarwal on November the 15th or 16th, 1893, he did in fact speak to Mir Kazim Husain about the execution and registration of the deed, Exhibit 1, and remonstrated with him as to the possible effect of that deed on the interests of Musammat Taiyaba Begam. I am not in a position to come to a positive finding as to what Mir Kazim Husain precisely said, either then or afterwards, regarding the execution and registration of this deed, but I hold it to be proved that he did assert then and afterwards that a fraud of some sort had been perpetrated in connection therewith, as the result of a conspiracy by the relatives of Mir Saiyid Ali's wife to which that young man had been induced to lend himself. I do believe that it was at the instance of Mir Kazim Husain and under some sort of pressure from him that Mir Saiyid Ali was induced to write the endorsement, which now appears on the back of the deed, and to hand it over to Saiyid Abul Hasain as a person in whose integrity both parties had the fullest confidence. I do not think that any substantial argument in favour of the plaintiffs is to be drawn from the fact that there was no criminal prosecution instituted against Mir Saiyid Ali, and that he was in fact re-admitted to favour and left in charge of the management of the Waira Kazi estate. Shafi Haidar himself was in a difficulty which will require to be further noticed presently, inasmuch as the signature of his own son, Ali Haidar, appeared in the margin of the disputed deed as one of the attesting witnesses. In any case anything like a criminal prosecution and the interference of the Police would not have suited Musammat Taiyaba Begam or Shafi Haidar, to say nothing of Mir Kazim Husain himself, who in his then state of health would probably have regarded a Police inquiry into a matter so intimately concerning his own family and the possibility of his own appearance as a witness before a Criminal Court with quite invincible repugnance. I think it highly probable that the idea of trying to effect some arrangement by which Musammat Taiyaba Begam should succeed to the property after his death, with Mir Saiyid Ali as her manager and eventual heir and successor, still continued present to Mir Kazim Husain's mind and was favoured by Musammat Taiyaba Begam herself. Whether Shafi Haidar would look favourably on such an arrangement is a different question; but it seems to me that, whatever might be this gentleman's hopes and schemes for the future, it would be necessary for him to walk very warily so as not to injure his sister's interests with Mir Kazim Husain. Mir Saiyid Ali's position under the circumstances would be a fairly strong one, at least strong enough, as I conceive it, to enable him to make his own terms up to a certain point, once it was quite certain that, whatever might happen, Mir Kazim Husain was not going to institute criminal proceedings. I can quite understand his being in a position to bargain for the execution of some further deed in his favour, so modified as to safeguard the interests of Musammat Taiyaba Begam. He was probably quite astute enough to realize that it was at any rate very doubtful whether such an endorsement as that made by him on the reverse of Exhibit 1 could have any legal effect on the validity of the document itself. My conclusion, therefore, is that, after Mir Kazim Husain had had an opportunity of talking over matters with Shafi Haidar, he insisted that a trick of some sort had been played upon him in connection with the deed, Exhibit 1, and that it must be delivered up and cancelled; the endorsement actually written by Mir Saiyid Ali and the handing over of the document to the custody of the Mujtahid were the results of a compromise as to the precise nature of which it seems to me impossible on the evidence as it stands to come to any more definite finding.

A few words may conveniently be said in this place as to the proceedings which followed on the death of Mir Kazim Husain. It was Mir Saiyid Ali himself who, on May the 6th, 1894, laid before the Criminal Court a petition to the effect that Mir Kazim Husain was dying and that a dispute was pending as to the succession to his estate which was extremely likely to result in a breach of the peace. Proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were actually instituted under magisterial orders dated May the 15th, 1894, and May the 28th, 1894. These proceedings were pending when, on June the 23rd, 1894, the estate was attached for arrears of land revenue under the provisions of the Oudh Land Revenue Act. One of the most extraordinary of the side issues in the case relates to a compromise which was patched up between Musammat Taiyaba Begam and Mir Sayid Ali in the course of these criminal proceedings, in respect of which the documents Exhibits A5 and A6 on the record are principal evidence. The Magistrate finally passed an order the effect of which was to refuse to deliver possession to any one, pending the institution of a civil suit to clear up the disputed question of title. It would have been well probably if the parties concerned had never been permitted to evade the terms of this order; but they managed somehow to persuade the Revenue Court of the district to take up the dispute under the provisions of the Land Revenue Act relating to the maintenance and correction of the village papers. The dispute between Mir Saiyid Ali and Musammat Taiyaba Begam then broke out afresh. Mir Saiyid Ali protested, as the plaintiffs have done in the present case, that he had been tricked into the compromise evidenced by Exhibit A5. The Revenue Courts, although they knew that the estate was for the time being under attachment and not in the possession of any one of the claimants and though they had before them the Magistrate's order directing the continuance of the attachment pending the decision of a competent Civil Court, actually proceeded to give a decision on the mutation side in favour of Musammat Taiyaba Begam and this was followed by the handing over to that lady of the possession of the estate. There has been an infinity of controversy both in the Court below and before us on appeal with regard to the compromise arranged between Mir Saiyid Ali and Musammat Taiyaba Begam, its legal effects and its bearing on the other issues in the case. From the point of view which I have taken of the case as a whole, I consider it unnecessary to go into these matters. The broad fact remains that Mir Saiyid Ali acquiesced in the decision of the Revenue Courts and in the handing over of the estate to Musammat Taiyaba Begam, and that up to the time of his death on September the 1st, 1901, he made no further attempt to assert the claim which has now been put forward by his brother as his legal representative. The case for the defendants is that Mir Saiyid Ali's conduct was perfectly natural, because in the first place he had a very poor case on the basis of the adoption deed of November 1893, and in the second place he had entered into an amicable settlement of all pending disputes with Musammat Taiyaba Begam, under which he was enjoying substantial benefits. The case for the plaintiffs is that Mir Saiyid Ali had an unanswerable claim in law under the deed of adoption, and that though he was tricked into putting in a petition of compromise before the Criminal Court, he never in fact entered into any arrangement with Musammat Taiyaba Begam under which he received a single anna by way of compensation for his conduct in refraining from pressing his claim to the ownership of the entire estate. If the latter of these pleas be accepted, the stronger to my mind becomes the inference that Mir Saiyid Ali had no great faith in the strength of any claim which could be put forward by him on the basis of the deed, Exhibit 1. My own opinion on this part of the case is that Mir Saiyid Ali did in fact come to a friendly settlement with Musammat Taiyaba Begam, as he most certainly does appear to have continued on friendly and even intimate terms with her up to the time of his death; but the only result to my mind of accepting the contention put forward on behalf of the appellants regarding the alleged settlement would be to strengthen the presumption against them as to the validity of the deed, Exhibit 1.

I am now in a position to take up the consideration of this document as it stands and the evidence bearing on its alleged execution and registration.

The deed purports to be in the handwriting of one Saiyid Afzal Husain, who signs it at the foot, having dated it the 9th of November 1893 with the corresponding date of the Muhammadan era. In the right hand margin comes first of all the hieroglyph which represents the words "Kazim Husain afi anhu" followed by the words "talukdar baqalam khud," and immediately under this are the words "tabniat nama haza ham ne ba khushi apni likha ba qalam khud," that is to say, "I have written this deed of adoption of my own free will with my own pen." The repetition of the words "ba qalam khud" at the end of this note, without any second signature of Mir Kazim Husain, represents in any case some oversight or clerical error, for it is not suggested that the entire deed was written by Mir Kazim Husain with his own hand: no doubt what the words are intended to imply is that the note (tabniat nama haza ham ne ba khushi apni likha) is in the hand of Mir Kazim Husain. Next to this in order follow the signatures of six witnesses as below: --

1. Saiyid Ali Haider;
2. Saiyid Hifazat Ali;
3. Jafar Ali, resident of Garha Khurd Mahal, Khairabad, District Sultanpur;
4. Sheoratan Lal, resident of Jarwal;
5. Ram Kishen Sah, resident of Naugayan; and
6. Amir Ali.

The signature in each case purports to be by the pen of the attesting witness himself. We may at once pause to consider who all these persons were. The scribe, Afzal Husain, was employed by Mir Saiyid Ali on the recommendation of Saiyid Bakar Mehdi, own brother of Saiyid Haidar Mehdi. He was a brother-in-law of Muhammad Asghar, Sub-Registrar of Jarwal, and seems to have done odd jobs about the Registration Office. Hakim Hifazat Ali was a physician who had been in attendance on the family of Saiyid Haidar Mehdi and was living in Jarwal with a mother-in-law of that gentleman. About Jafar Ali there was a certain amount of controversy and we were referred to correspondence relating to him which passed between Mir Kazim Husain and Mir Saiyid Ali after the departure of the former from Jarwal. I have no doubt that he was sent for by Mir Saiyid Ali and given employment on the Waira Kazi estate very shortly before the execution of the deed in dispute. Amir Ali is proved by the plaintiffs' witness No. 4 to have been a servant of Saiyid Haidar Mehdi. Apparently he was the tutor to a son of the latter. When Jafar Ali himself (P. W. No. 6) was cross-examined about this man, he began by saying that he knew nothing whatever about him. He went on to say that, while Amir Ali was certainly present when the deed, Exhibit 1, was executed, attested and registered, he certainly never saw him at Mir Kazim Husain's house on any other occasion. Sheoratan Lal was an old servant of the Waira Kazi estate but a mere clerk and certainly not a witness of any independent position. Ali Haidar was the son of Shafi Haidar, and seeing that he gave his age as 33 years when he gave evidence in this case, he must have been about 19 in the year 1893. It is in evidence that he arrived in Jarwal on November the 13th, 1893. Ram Kishen Sah was the banker and agent of the Waira Kazi estate. He held certain villages on lease under a contract that he should be responsible for the punctual payment of the land revenue due from the estate. He resided at a village a few miles from Jarwal. Of these witnesses, Amir Ali is dead; his signature on the document has been identified. Sheoratan Lal, Ali Haidar and Jafar Ali have given evidence for the plaintiffs. Ram Kishen Sah was examined on commission on behalf of the defendants. He admitted his signature on the deed in dispute, but said he had taken Mir Saiyid Ali's word for it that Mir Kazim Husain wanted him to sign it, had certainly not been present when Mir Kazim Husain signed the deed or when it was presented for registration, and made a number of other statements supporting the case set up by the defendants. Afzal Husain and Hifazat Ali were alive when this case was pending, and were not examined as witnesses.

A small side issue was raised on this point about which there was considerable controversy. There is no doubt that Afzal Husain was present in the Court below during part of the hearing of the case, that he went away without being examined and that the plaintiffs purported to make various efforts to secure his attendance on later dates but failed to do so. As regards Hifazat Ali also the plaintiffs purported to make various efforts to secure his attendance, but he never appeared before the Court below. The case for the plaintiffs is that they were all along anxious to produce these two witnesses and that the Court below was very hard on them in not allowing them adequate opportunities for making some further attempt to secure their production. As I have already noted in connection with another part of the case, the appellants do not want a remand order for the examination of these witnesses, but they ask the Court not to draw any unfavourable inference against the plaintiffs' case from the fact of their non-appearance. On the other hand, the defendants contend that unfavourable inferences of the strongest kind ought to be drawn, that the plaintiffs never honestly intended to put Hifazat Ali in the witness-box, but kept him back because they were afraid he might break down in cross-examination, more particularly if he were questioned as a physician regarding the state of Mir Kazim Husain's health. As regards Afzal Husain, the defendants contend that all desire on the part of the plaintiffs to produce him as a witness vanished when the defendants produced in Court a certain document, Exhibit B1, which is relied upon as evidence of a bribe or illegal gratification paid by Mir Saiyid Ali to the Sub-Registrar, Asghar Husain. I find it impossible to come to any very positive conclusion on this point, but I am content to say that the mere absence of the evidence of Afzal Husain and Hifazat Ali from the record is from any point of view a very unfortunate thing for the plaintiffs. I have shown that out of the group of witnesses called together to write out and attest this important document, the trial of some connection with the family of Saiyid Haidar Medhi is over three out of the seven, namely Afzal Husain, Hifazat Ali and Amir Ali. Jafar Ali and Sheoratan Lal are mere servants likely to be under the influence of Mir Saiyid Ali, who would find it difficult to refuse compliance with his wishes, if he pressed them to sign some document in the margin on the strength merely of his own assurance that he had seen Mir Kazim Husain execute it and that Kazim Husain wished them to sign it. Ali Haidar was a youth of 19 and not a person of independent position, such as one would have expected to see brought in as attesting witness on such an occasion; on the other hand, if the possibility of a conspiracy to perpetrate a fraud of some sort in connection with the execution and attestation of the document be once admitted, the convenience from the point of view of the conspirators of fettering Shafi Haidar's future liberty of action by drawing his own son into the circle of the conspiracy would be very great indeed. It comes practically to this: on the case put forward by the plaintiffs Ali Haidar would not be a particularly likely witness for this deed, while if there is any truth in the case for the defendants-respondents, he would be the likeliest possible person to be asked to sign the deed, provided it were in any way possible to bribe or coax or trick him into doing it. The one witness with any pretence to an independent position is Ram Kishen Sah, and he has given evidence against the plaintiffs. The next point to be noticed is that the deed was faired out and dated by Afzal Husain on the 9th of November 1893, but according to the evidence it was not executed until five days later. It was not kept back, as it might conceivably have been had the transaction been a genuine one, in order that Mir Kazim Husain might execute it in the presence of the Sub-Registrar, for all the witnesses for the plaintiffs are agreed that its execution and attestation had been completed before the Sub-Registrar arrived. It is difficult to conceive of any reason, therefore, why execution of the document should have been kept back for five days, unless it was that the attendance was considered necessary of attesting witnesses whose services could not have been obtained on November the 9th, 1893. Now the only attesting witnesses who were not in Jarwal on this date, but who had arrived there five days later, were Ram Kishen Sah and Ali Haidar, and these two are beyond question the most important, in different ways, of the attesting witnesses. I think there is great force in the suggestion, which I took from the learned Counsel for the appellants in the course of his replication, that the real reason why the attestation of this deed (and of course its execution, if any execution took place) was deferred to November the 14th, 1893, was that the persons who desired to get the document executed and attested were not prepared to rely upon an adoption deed signed only by Hifazat Ali, Jafar Ali, Sheoratan Lal and Amir Ali, but delayed the execution of their plans until they could secure the attendance of Ali Haidar and Ram Kishen Sah. We were taken through the evidence of Sheoratan Lal, Ali Haidar and Jafar Ali in detail and I have very carefully weighed and considered it. Sheoratan Lal was undoubtedly under the impression that the deed, Exhibit 1, was actually written the same day that it was signed, attested and registered, that is to say, on November the 14th, 1893. The examination of the witnesses was not satisfactory, in spite of the length at which they were cross-examined. Sheoratan Lal was not pressed, as he should have been, with regard to the statements made by him on page 34 of the printed record, or the discrepancy between his evidence and that of the succeeding witnesses might have been put beyond all question, instead of remaining only a matter for reasonable inference. The importance of pressing each and all of the witnesses to say whether they did or did not see Mir Kazim Husain with his own hand writing the words "tabaiat nama haza ham ne ba khushi apni likha ba qalam khud," as they appear in the margin beneath his signature, was not adequately realized. Apart from the point already noticed, there is no particular discrepancy in the evidence. The cross-examination of Sheoratan Lal and Jafar Ali was mainly directed towards showing that they were mere creatures of Mir Saiyid Ali's and that of Ali Haidar, towards showing that about the time when this suit was instituted, he had written letters as a partisan of Musammat Taiyaba Begam's anxious to protect her interests against the machinations of her enemies, and that he had been severely disappointed shortly afterwards when Musammat Taiyaba Begam declined to accept him as her manager and general agent in place of his father, Shafi Haidar, but preferred to place her interests in the hands of Saiyid Muhammad Hasan, the second defendant. The only other witness for the plaintiffs whose evidence is of any particular importance is Mir Sakhawat Abid (P. W. No. 8). The point of his evidence, apart from his deposing as to the general health and capacity of Mir Kazim Husain in the month of November 1893, lies in his statement that he saw Mir Kazim Husain a day or two after the execution of the deed (Exhibit 1) and was informed by him that he had executed a deed of adoption and a supurdnama in favour of Mir Saiyid Ali. I think this witness more or less broke down in cross-examination. He had to admit that the difference in age btween himself and Mir Saiyid Ali was much more considerable than he had at first tried to make out, and that he must in fact have been only about 14 years old in 1893. His evidence looks to me very much the sort of stuff which a learned predecessor of mine was wont to describe as "padding," and altogether valueless. A curious point came out during the examination of the defendants' witness Manohar Lal. The plaintiffs themselves tendered to this witness a certain document, showing him nothing but the signatures, and he deposed that the paper seemed to him to bear a genuine signature of Mir Kazim Husain, as also the signatures of Hifazat Ali, of Manohar Lal (himself), and of Kedar, son of Ram Kishen Sah, as marginal witnesses. This document was finally put on the record as Exhibit 140 and there has been much controversy concerning it. It purports to be executed by Mir Kazim Husain in favour of Mir Saiyid Ali on the 3rd of October 1893, and is drawn up in very wide terms, so as to operate both as a deed of adoption and as a supurdnama or deed making over the management of the Waira Kazi estate to Mir Saiyid Ali. When Manohar Lal was finally shown the deed, he seems to me to have been obviously taken back, but he said no more than that he had no recollection about the matter, though the deed certainly bore his signature. Later on he was taken in hand by the learned Subordinate Judge himself, and in reply to a number of questions he made statements which I can only understand as meaning that he disavowed his original identification of the signature on this document as a genuine signature of Mir Kazim Husain. The learned Subordinate Judge has arrived at a somewhat extraordinary conclusion on the strength of his own examination of this witness. He thinks he has been able to demonstrate that this Manohar Lal could successfully imitate the ordinary signature of Mir Kazim Hussain, and that he must himself have forged that signature as it appears on Exhibit 140, and very probably also the marginal signature and the signatures on the reverse under the registration endorsements of Exhibit 1. This really seems to me somewhat fanciful and hard to reconcile with Manohar Lal's eventual appearance in the witness-box as a witness for the defendants. Considering that he is the only witness who says anything about Exhibit 140, and in view of the peculiar nature of his statement, I do not think that any Court would be justified in holding that document to be satisfactorily proved by his evidence. It seems difficult, however, to let the matter go as that, for the existence of this document and its presence on the record are in themsevles important facts, to which it would be possible to attach some evidential value. The document No. 140 is either a forgery or it is not. If it is, then some one perpetrated the forgery of this deed of adoption in favour of Mir Saiyid Ali on the 3rd of October 1893, but the plot broke down because for some reason or other it was found impossible to get the forged deed registered. If, on the other hand, the deed is so far genuine that it bears a genuine signature of Mir Kazim Husain, we must take it that some persons working in Mir Saiyid Ali's interests succeeded on the 3rd of October 1893 in getting Mir Kazim Husain to write the words "Kazim Husain afianhu talukdar ba qalam khud" in the margin of a document which purported to give Mir Saiyid Ali both the status of an adopted son and full powers of management over the Waira Kazi estate, that this document was attested by Hifazat Ali, Manohar Lal and Kedar, son of Ram Kishen Sah, but that it subsequently proved valueless because the persons interested in obtaining it found it impossible to get it registered. I do not think it is treating the plaintiffs in any way unfairly to look at the case, if only for the sake of argument, in the light of this latter supposition; the plaintiffs assuredly would not prefer the Court to discuss the evidence on the assumption that Mir Kazim Husain's signature as it appears on Exhibit 140 is a forgery. It has been suggested that the only reason why Exhibit 140 was never registered is that it was found to be insufficiently stamped. The argument is that it purports to effect both an adoption and an appointment of the adoptee as manager of the estate, and that for such a purpose two documents bearing respectively a ten-rupee and a fifteen-rupee stamp would be required. It is obvious that the deed, Exhibit 140, could never have been formally tendered for registration, for had it been so tendered the Sub-Registrar must have impounded it under the rules, so that the stamp law might be complied with by the recovery of duty and penalty under the orders of the Collector, after which it would have been registered in due course.

The only suggestion put forward is that it may have been informally shown to the Sub-Registrar and then laid aside on his giving it as his opinion that it was insufficiently stamped. A number of questions present themselves to my mind in this connection. Would a gentleman in Mir Kazim Husain's position, contemplating the execution of a document of such importance, have done so without taking legal advice of any sort or kind; and if it be suggested that he may in fact have taken legal advice, would any qualified lawyer have failed to warn him that the deed as drafted would require a stamp of higher value than ten rupees? Again, if the deed had in fact been drafted under Mir Kazim Husain's directions and executed by him with full knowledge of its contents and in a manner perfectly fair and above board, is it likely that any one would have taken the trouble to consult the Sub-Registrar informally about the question of getting it registered? Would not the next step have been to tender it formally for registration and would not the Sub-Registrar then have been bound to impound the document and to take proper action under the law? If, on the other hand, the deed as it now stands is the outcome of some underhand conspiracy, if it was drafted without Mir Kazim Husain's knowledge and if his signature to it was either forged or obtained by some trick, the next step in the conspiracy would necessarily be to consult the Sub-Registrar privately as to the possibility of getting it registered, and an objection raised under such circumstances to the sufficiency of the stamp duty would obviously upset the whole plan, as far as that particular document was concerned. It is in this connection that it becomes important to consider a further point in the case for the plaintiffs. Their witnesses are agreed that on November the 14th, 1893, Mir Kazim Husain executed and caused to be registered two distinct documents, namely the adoption deed, Exhibit 1, and a supurdnama or deed making over to Mir Saiyid Ali the management of Waira Kazi estate with fairly extensive powers. This latter document has disappeared and what we have on the record as Exhibit 2 is copy of the same obtained from the Registration Department. Another side issue in the case has been the question whether the plaintiffs have been responsible for the disappearance of the original of this Exhibit 2 and whether they could have produced it if they had seen fit. From any point of view the non-prodcution of this original document seems to me very damaging to the plaintiffs' case. I cannot rid my mind of a suspicion, which seems to me fair and reasonable on the evidence as a whole, that the plaintiffs could have produced the original document if they had seen fit to do so. If I could say positively that this was my opinion, there would be an end to the plaintiffs' case, for the only possible motive for keeping it back would be a knowledge on the part of the plaintiffs that a careful comparison of the signatures, the registration endorsements and the like on this document with those appearing on the deed, Exhibit 1, would help the Court to arrive at a correct conclusion as to the nature of the fraud perpetrated in connection with the execution and registration of the two deeds. As the case stands, I can only say that the disappearance of the original of Exhibit 2 is a most unfortunate circumstance for the plaintiffs and that I cannot altogether rid my mind of the suspicions thereby aroused. In this connection I turn back once more to the details of the evidence of Sheoratan Lal, Ali Haidar and Jafar Ali. That of Sheoratan Lal I do not discuss, because it is hopelessly confused by his belief that the drafting of the deed, Exhibit 1, took place on November the 14th, 1893, on the same day as the execution and registration; the best that can be said for the plaintiffs would be that the memory of this witness has failed him. Ali Haidar was examined-in-chief on this point in a manner which seems to me very unsatisfactory. He was not asked to throw back his memory to the events of November the 14th, 1893, and to endeavour to put forward in the form of a connected and detailed narrative his recollection of what took place on that date, from the moment when the attesting witnesses began to assemble in Mir Kazim Husain's room for the purpose of obtaining the execution and the attestation of the deed of adoption and the supurdnama. The very first question put to him on the point was in a form which was rightly objected to by the Counsel for the defendants, and the sequence of events to which this witness intends to depose is difficult to put together from the details given in his examination and cross-examination. He says that on the morning of November the 14th, 1893, Mir Kazim Husain came into the antechamber (or deorhi) of his female apartments and was there joined by the deponent and the scribe and other attesting witnesses of the deed, Exhibit 1. He does not explain who produced the actual document, Exhibit 1, which we know to have been faired out five days previously. He says that Mir Kazim Husain signed this deed in his presence and wrote with his own hand underneath his signature the words already quoted, which purport to show that he was aware of the fact that he was executing a deed of adoption. He himself handed the deed to the deponent and asked him to attest it. After this the deed was attested by Sheoratan Lal, Hifazat Ali, Jafar Ali, Ram Kishen Sah and Amir Ali, who were all present at the time. The supurdnama was then written out by Afzal Husain upon a stamped paper; I do not find that this witness says anything about the draft or other instructions used by Afzal Husain for the purpose. It was then signed by Mir Kazim Husain and attested by some of the witnesses who had previously attested Exhibit 1. The registration copy before us shows that the persons who thus attested the supurdnama were Hifazat Ali, Jafar Ali, Ram Kishen Sah and Sheoratan Lal. Neither Ali Haidar nor Amir Ali purports to have attested this second deed. All this, according to the witness, happened about 9 A.M. and the Sub-Registrar arrived between one and two hours later. The Sub-Registrar proceeded to read over the deed of adoption word for word to Mir Kazim Husain and asked him if he understood it and had executed it, and received his reply in the affirmative. In reply to what was evidently a question especially directed to this point, the witness said further that Mir Kazim Husain had read over the deed to himself before the Sub-Registrar read to him, but he did not particularise whether this took place before or after the arrival of the Sub-Registrar. The formalities necessary to effect the registration of the deed of adoption were then gone through, and after this had been done the supurdnama was read out to Mir Kazim Husain, who suggested a certain alteration therein upon a matter of detail and got that alteration duly carried out. This second document in its turn was then formally registered. The Sub-Registrar proceeded to take from the attesting witnesses an affidavit, of which I shall have something more to say presently. Jafar Ali says that a week prior to the execution of the deed, Exhibit 1, he knew of Kazim Husain's intention to execute a formal deed of adoption in favour of Saiyid Ali, because Kazim Husain had sent for some Hindu Pleader, whose name and residence he was unable to recollect, and had taken his advice on the subject. When the witness himself came into the zanana deohri of Mir Kazim Husain's house, that gentleman was holding in his hands the deed, Exhibit 1, which had been scribed by Afzal Husain some days previously. Mir Kazim Husain then signed the deed and handed it over to the attesting witnesses. The deposition here becomes confused and hesitating, the witness deposing first that the deed was attested by "five or six persons such as sepoys and khidmutgars," but then correcting himself and adding that the deed was attested by Hifazat Ali, Ali Haidar and himself, and also by some other persons whose names he was unable to recollect Mir Kazim Husain then handed to Afzal Husain a draft of the supurdnama and the latter proceeded to fair out upon stamped paper the deed of which Exhibit 2 is a copy. This deed also was executed then and there and attested by "almost all the persons who had attested the deed of adoption." The witness was not even sure whether some one may not have attested the supurdnama who had not attested the deed of adoption. The Sub-Registrar arrived some 2 or $2\frac{1}{2}$ hours later. Mir Kazim Husain handed him the deed of adoption and the Sub-Registrar read it out aloud word for word in the hearing of Mir Kazim Husain and of all the other persons present. Mir Kazim Husain having admitted execution, this deed was registered according to law. The supurdnama was then read out by the Sub-Registrar and Mir Kazim Husain suggested a certain addition, which was duly made by Afzal Husain. The registration of this deed was then completed, after which the Sub-Registrar proceeded to take an affidavit from all the attesting witnesses as to Mir Kazim Husain's bodily and mental health and as to the fact that the deed had been duly executed by him and registered. When shown the deed, Exhibit 1, the witness deposed positively that the words immediately underneath Mir Kazim Husain's signature were written by that gentleman with his own hand in presence of the witness. As to Mir Kazim Husain's reading the document himself with his own eyes the witness was very vague; he said he thought Mir Kazim Husain must have done so, but his statement implies that this was at any rate not done in the presence of the Sub-Registrar. Looking through the cross-examination of this witness, I take note of the following details. The witness admitted that Ram Kishen Sah could not read Urdu. He said he had himself never been in the zanana deorhi before and was never admitted to that room on any other occasion. He deposed that the draft of the supurdnama was taken by Kazim Husain out of the pocket of the tunic which he was wearing. He differs from Haidar Ali as to a detail of time, by saying that the Sub-Registrar arrived only 15 or 20 minutes after the execution and attestation of the supurdnama. The sentence added to the supurdnama, according to this witness, was one reserving to the executant in express terms a right of revocation in case Mir Saiyid Ali should ever do anything to displease him. One more point may conveniently be noticed in this connection. The deed, Exhibit 1, bears in two places what purport to be signatures of Mir Kazim Husain under the two registration endorsements. The first of these is feeble and irregular in a very marked degree, distinctly more so than the signature appearing as that of the executant in the margin, or even than the signature underneath the second registration endorsement. This latter signature as it stands on the paper reads as follows :—"Kazim Husain afianhu ba qalam khud wald Saiyid Muzaffar Husain qaum Saiyid sakin Jarwal pesha talukdari ba qalam khud tarikh chaudah Narambar 1893." It is an extraordinary fact that of all the witnesses for the plaintiffs only Ali Haidar was definitely pressed to say whether the whole of these words as they stand were written by Mir Kazim Husain with his own hand. He replied that only the words "Kazim Husain ba qalam khud" were in the hand-writing of the executant, and as to the rest, he could not say. The learned Subordinate Judge has taken a very strong view as to the effect of this admission. I am myself clearly of opinion that, apart from what Ali Haidar said, no one could possibly believe that the words "wald Saiyid Muzaffar Husain etc.," as they appear on this paper, were written by the same man whose pen had just traced the feeble and faltering signature appearing under the first registration endorsement only a minute or two previously. I am quite persuaded in my own mind that these words were not written by Mir Kazim Husain; my difficulty is to conceive of any possible reason why these words, with their significant repetition of the expression "ba qalam khud", should have been deliberately added by any person acting in good faith to a genuine signature of Mir Kazim Husain. The learned Subordinate Judge says that these words, disowned by the witness Ali Haidar, can only be regarded as a palpable and admitted forgery, and that if these words are a forgery, then the same person who wrote them must also have forged the signature "Mir Kazim Husain ba qalam khud", which immediately precedes them. I might not myself put the point quite so strongly. It is perhaps just conceivable, on the theory of the whole transaction being genuine and above board, that the old man was not equal to writing anything more than his ordinary signature, "Mir Kazim Husain afianhu ba qalam khud," that it was thought advisable to append a formal description of his parentage and residence to his signature under the second registration endorsement and that the person employed to do this, out of pure carelessness, slipped in the expression "ba qalam khud." At the same time I am so far in accordance with the opinion of the Court below that such an explanation as this seems to me improbable in a very high degree. The existence of this endorsement, admittedly not in Mir Kazim Husain's hand-writing, is in itself a matter for grave suspicion, it obviously serves to cast a doubt upon the genuineness of the words "tabniat nama haza kam ne ba khushi apni likha ba qalam khud," as they appear under the signature in the margin. Taken in connection with what seems to me the glaring difference between the form of the signature under the first registration endorsement and that under the second, and still more between the signature under the first registration endorsement and the signature which purports to be that of the executant in the margin of the deed, it arouses in my mind the gravest doubts as to whether the signature in the margin of the deed and the signature under the second registration endorsement are not forgeries out and out. If we had the original of Exhibit 2 before us, it seems to me highly probable that an examination of that paper would either dispel my suspicions or convert them into certainties. My suspicion frankly is that on the 14th of November 1893 Mir Kazim Husain only executed and only presented for registration one single document, namely, the missing original of Exhibit 2, and that it was found possible to bring Exhibit 1 into existence, in part by the use of forgery and in part by getting Mir Kazim Husain to append his feeble and hesitating signature under the first registration endorsement on the back of each of the two deeds, he being at the time under the impression that he was signing two registration endorsements on one and the same paper. My suspicions are at any rate not mitigated by the presence on the record of the plaintiffs' Exhibit 22, which is described as being an affidavit under section 63 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). It commences with a recital by the Sub-Registrar to the effect that Saiyid Kazim Husain presented for registration on the 14th November 1893 a deed of adoption dated November the 9th, 1893, in favour of Saiyid Ali, and that the said Sub-Registrar attended on commission at the house of the executant for the registration of the deed. The document having been presented was read out to the executant and the latter, having heard it read, "admitted it word for word." Then the Sub-Registrar continues: "It seems proper as a precautionary step and to ensure the fact of the deed of adoption having been read out, as well as of the executant's being in good health and proper senses, to take the written statements on oath of the attesting witnesses, so that these statements may be kept on record in the office." To this, apparently as an afterthought, a note has been added that the proceedings relating to the supurdnama are also to be included in the affidavit. Then follows a joint affidavit purporting to be signed by six persons. Five of these are attesting witnesses to the deed Exhibit 1, namely Hifazat Ali, Ali Haidar, Jafar Ali, Sheoratan Lal and Ram Kishen Sah. The signature of the sixth person appears as Afzal Ali in the copy on the record, the paper, Exhibit 22, being the certified copy of an original which has been weeded out and destroyed in the ordinary course of business. This "Afzal Ali" must be either a mistake for Amir Ali or for Afzal Husain, but I do not know that anything particular turns on this. The affidavit is quoted at length in the judgment of the Court below. I note that it again refers to the deed of adoption as being dated the 9th of November 1893, without any suggestion that it was only executed five days later. The deponents then proceed to swear that the deed of adoption was at the time of registration read out word by word to the executant, and that Kazim Husain admitted that writing and execution of the said deed: also that he had himself read through the deed of adoption with his own eyes before admitting the correctness of its contents. A phrase is further inserted to the effect that Saiyid Kazim Husain is in good health and in his proper senses, and at the end comes a note that he caused some additions to be made to the supurdnama, this latter document not having been referred to hitherto in the course of the affidavit. The entire proceeding seems to me a most extraordinary one, as it did to the learned Subordinate Judge. The power given under the Registration Act and the rules contained in the Registration Manual to Sub-Registrars to examine on oath persons appearing before them is provided to be used only in cases when the Sub-Registrar sees reason to doubt the correctness of any statement made to him. The affidavit, Exhibit 22, relates entirely to matters which purport to have taken place before the very eyes of the Sub-Registrar himself, the only exception perhaps lying in the statement as to the executant's being in good health and in his proper senses. If the Sub-Registrar felt any doubts on this latter point he should, in my opinion, have taken other steps for the removal of those doubts; but the obvious purpose and intention of the whole proceeding was to tie down the attesting witnesses so that they might not be able at any future time, without risking a prosecution for perjury, to deny any of the facts set forth in the affidavit. I admit it to be possible that the Sub-Registrar may have thought it expedient to do this out of nervousness and as a special precaution, even though fully satisfied in his own mind of the truth of the facts set forth in the affidavit and the perfect bona fides of the entire transaction. I feel bound to say, however, that, even if there were no other elements of suspicion in this case, the above theory would have seemed to me a somewhat improbable one, and the mere existence of this affidavit would have put me on my guard as to the possibility of there having been some malpractice about the matter. Why should the Sub-Registrar have been so anxious to tie the hands of the witnesses if his own mind was perfectly free from doubt? There is, moreover, to my mind something peculiarly suspicious about the insertion in the affidavit, somewhat out of its natural order, of the curious phrase as to Saiyid Kazim Husain's having looked through the document and perused it with his own eyes. I have pointed out that there is some discrepancy in the oral evidence as to whether Mir Kazim Husain was supposed to have read through the document himself before the arrival of the Sub-Registrar or after. I do not see why under any circumstances, the Sub-Registrar should have thought it necessary to read over the document aloud to the executant, if he was sure that the executant had just read it through himself in his very presence. I have already discussed the question of the state of Mir Kazim Husain's eyesight in the month of November 1893 and recorded my opinion that he was not able at that time to acquaint himself with the contents of a document by reading it. If this finding is correct, the insertion of this particular phrase in the affidavit, Exhibit No. 22, becomes at once a matter for the gravest possible suspicion.

The case for the defendants as to the circumstances under which the regitsration of this document was effected is to be found in the statements of Manohar Lal (D. W. No. 5), Ibad Ali (D. W. No. 3), Muhammad Raza (D. W. No. 2) and in the evidence of Ram Kishen Sah taken on commission. I do not propose to discuss this evidence in detail, partly because I think, the plaintiffs' case fails on its own merits, and partly because a good deal of this evidence is of very doubtful value. The most extraordinary feature of it was the production of the document Exhibit B1. I have no doubt whatever that while this case was pending, the witness Muhammad Raza approached the defendants, disclosed the existence of this document in his possession and in all probability put the document itself and his own evidence up for sale for such price as the defendants might be prepared to pay. He admits himself that the other side tried to get at him, and his account of their attempts to do so and of his proceedings in connection therewith have left an impression upon my mind decidedly unfavourable to his general veracity. The man was a half-brother of Muhammad Asghar, the late Sub-Registrar, and afterwards married that gentleman's widow. He says that he often found the document Exhibit B1 amongst Muhammad Asghar's papers and I am disposed to believe him on this point. The only alternative suggested is that it may have passed into the possession of Ram Kishen Sah and been handed over to the defendants by the latter; but this strikes me as improbable and it is in no way supported by Ram Kishen Sah's own evidence. It is a draft for Rs. 1,000 by Mir Saiyid Ali on Ram Kishen Sah in favour of Saiyid Bakar Mehdi, brother of Saiyid Mehdi Husain, accepted by Ram Kishen Sah and endorsed by the latter with a note to the effect that he would pay it off by instalments. It is dated November the 15th, 1893. The plaintiffs began by denying this document altogether, but ended by admitting it and producing evidence to prove that it presented a perfectly bona fide transaction. Their case is that Mir Saiyid Ali was in urgent need of money to pay in certain arrears of land revenue and that he proposed to borrow the sum of Rs. 1,000 for that purpose from Saiyid Bakar Mehdi, his wife's uncle, and gave the latter an order on Ram Kishen Sah to secure his re-payment. According to the evidence for the defendants the paper cannot possibly represent anything but the pledge or security for a bribe, to be paid hereafter through the agency of Ram Kishen Sah to the Sub-Registrar, Muhammad Asghar, in return for services rendered by him on November the 14th, 1893. The evidence produced regarding this document was various and complicated and represents the most extraordinary of the side issues into which this case diverged. The crux of the matter to my mind lies in the question whether Muhammad Raza is to be believed when he says that this document was found by him amongst Muhammad Asghar's papers. I incline to the opinion that this is a true statement and if so, it is difficult to believe that the document Exhibit B1, can represent anything but an arrangement for the payment of a substantial bribe, with Saiyid Bakar Mehdi occupying the position of a stake-holder in whom both the parties concerned in the iniquitous transaction felt sufficient confidence. I have given my best consideration to the arguments addressed to us on behalf of the appellants to prove the genuineness of the transaction and to the evidence of the witness Saiyid Nadir Husain whom they produced in rebuttal. I think it sufficient to say that this consideration leaves on my mind the impression that the story put forward by the plaintiffs in rebuttal is intrinsically improbable and inadequately supported by evidence. To my mind the two principal points in favour of the defendants to be arrived at on a consideration of their evidence on this point of execution and registration, are the existence of this document, Exhibit B1, discovered amongst the papers of the late Sub-Registrar, and the broad fact that Ram Kishen Sah, now an old man in failing health with no apparent motive for supporting either one side or the other, has chosen to give evidence in favour of the defendants. I think it probable that he has not told the whole truth; he had to account for the presence of his admitted signature in the margin of Exhibit 1 and at the foot of the affidavit, Exhibit 22, and I am not prepared to say that I fully believe his explanation. According to his own story he signed as an attesting witness two important documents which had certainly not been executed in his presence by Mir Kazim Husain, and he did so merely on the strength of Saiyid Ali's verbal assurance that Mir Kazim Husain had signed the papers and wished him to attest his signature. His evidence is certainly open to the suspicion that he may have had a much shrewder idea than he was prepared to admit that a fraud of some sort was being perparated, and that he may at the time have been willing to lend himself to that fraud. I find it difficult altogether to dissociate my view of this man's probable conduct on the 14th of November 1893 from the fact, which the plaintiffs have themselves put forward as part of their case in rebuttal against the document Exhibit B1, that Ram Kishen Sah received few days later a sum of Rs. 4,000 in cash, on what purported to be a loan from Mir Kazim Husain out of reserve funds in that gentleman's possession. The suggestion for the plaintiffs is that the object of this loan was to put Ram Kishen Sah in a position to pay the instalment of revenue at that moment due from the estate, but it was admittedly a good deal in excess of the sum required for payment of land revenue. If, as a matter of fact, Mir Kazim Husain discovered just before his departure for Lucknow that the arrangements which he had made for the payment of the land revenue of his estate through Ram Kishen had broken down, and it is difficult to understand why they should have broken down at that particular moment, and Mir Kazim Husain had, as a matter of fact, in his possession inside his house a reserve of cash more than sufficient to meet the liability, the simplest thing surely would have been to meet the Government demand out of that reserve and to balance Ram Kishen Sah's account accordingly. There was litigation between Ram Kishen Sah and Musammat Taiyaba Begam after Mir Kazim Husain's death in which the question of this alleged loan, and also that of the payments made by Ram Kishen Sah on account of land revenue and his receipts from the villages of which he was lessee, were all gone into and adjusted; this, however, does not prove that the person responsible for arranging this so-called loan of Rs. 4,000 in Ram Kishen Sah's favour did not intend that some substantial portion of it should stick to the fingers of the latter, if everything had gone well and Mir Saiyid Ali had succeeded peaceably to the Waira Kazi estate on the death of Mir Kazim Husain. As regards the witnesses Manohar Lal and Ibad Ali, their evidence lies open, in my opinion, to much the same suspicion as I have suggested in respect of that of Ram Kishen Sah. The real question is whether they are telling the whole truth now, or whether it is not more probable that they knew or suspected more than they are prepared to admit regarding the nature of the transactions which were going on in Ram Kishen Sah's house at Jarwal on November the 14th, 1893, and whether they would not have been prepared to keep their eyes and their mouths shut in the event of those transactions proving completely successful in the establishment of Mir Saiyid Ali's position as heir and successor to Mir Kazim Husain.

Before finally summing up my opinion on this part of the case, it is necessary for me to allude to one more matter and this brings me back to the question which I discussed at the beginning of my judgment, namely Musammat Taiyaba Begam's pleadings. As an admission of a relevent fact by a person likely to know the truth, the plaintiffs are undoubtedly entitled to ask the Court to attach considerable importance to the admission of the execution of the deed Exhibit 1 made on Musammat Taiyaba Begam's behalf in the proceeding of February the 5th, 1907. Over and above this, without going into superfluous detail, I am content to note that other admissions of the genuineness of this document, made by or on behalf of Musammat Taiyaba Begam in the course of various litigations subsequent to the death of Mir Kazim Husain, have been put in evidence and satisfactorily established on behalf of the plaintiffs. In an ordinary case admissions against interest of this sort, proved against a defendant in the position of Musammat Taiyaba Begam, might well be regarded as decisive. The case before us, however, is not an ordinary one and I have already mentioned, in one connection or another, a variety of circumstances calculated to discount the value of such admissions on the part of Musammat Taiyaba Begam. That lady's own position, or rather the position which she was induced to accept, may be gathered from the document A6, which is a petition of compromise presented on her behalf before the Magistrate engaged in hearing the case under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, early in the month of July 1894. It must be borne in mind that Musammat Taiyaba Begam, or rather her agent Shafi Haidar, had previously received from Mir Saiyid Ali the document Exhibit A5, in which that gentleman in express terms admitted the rights of Musammat Taiyaba Begam as heir and successor to Mir Kazim Husain under the Will. He admitted also her actual possession over the estate and accepted for himself the position of her agent or manager. In return for this Musammat Taiyaba Begum was prepared to accept Saiyid Ali as the adopted son of herself and of her husband and to nominate him as her heir and successor, as her representative on public or official occasions and as the manager of her estate. She also undertakes to pay an allowance of Rs. 3,000 per annum to him and to his heirs after him, until such time as the estate itself shall pass to him as a whole. Both parties have led evidence, some of it of a very extraordinary character, as to the negotiations which preceded the compromise embodied in Exhibits A5 and A6 and as to the circumstances under which those documents came to be executed and laid before the Criminal Court. The one thing I am quite sure of is that there must have been negotiations as to which the precise truth will probably never be known. Musammat Taiyaba Begam's affairs were largely in the hands of her brother Shafi Haidar, and as I have already remarked, it is difficult to arrive at a certain conclusion as to this gentleman's motives or objects, or as to the precise extent to which his hands were fettered by the appearance of his own son Ali Haidar as one of the attesting witnesses to Exhibit 1. Whatever the true facts regarding this document may be, it is fairly obvious that, after Mir Kazim Husain had declined to bring the question of its execution or registration before the Criminal Courts, it would have been all but impossible to institute a prosecution after his death, even if it had suited Musammat Taiyaba Begam and Shafi Haidar to do so; yet to denounce it as a forgery without inviting an inquiry by the Police would have put Shafi Haidar in a very curious position. It is clear, moreover, that Musammat Taiyaba Begam was quite prepared to accept Mir Saiyid Ali as her heir, provided that he accepted her title to the present succession to the estate. Under these conditions a compromise was exceedingly probable, and no compromise was possible except on the basis of a more or less explicit acknowledgment of the genuineness of the deed of adoption. Certainly no compromise would have been possible if Musammat Taiyaba Begam and Shafi Haidar had persistently denounced that document as one the execution and registration of which had been effected by forgery or fraud. In this same connection I have to take account of an important argument much pressed upon us on behalf of the appellants, namely that Musammat Taiyaba Begam did not go into the witness-box. She seems in fact to have been absent from India on pilgrimage during the greater part of the time that this suit was pending in the Court below; I have done my best to make all due allowance for these considerations, I admit them to be not without weight, and they form in fact to my mind the strongest portion of the appellants' case. I have, however, given my reasons for declining to accept the admissions made by Musammat Taiyaba Begam as decisive and those reasons seem to me sufficiently to explain her reluctance to tender herself for examination.

Looking through the case before recording my final conclusion, I find one more point which I might perhaps have noticed at an earlier stage, and that is the difference of wording between the deed Exhibit 140, and that of the two deeds Exhibit 1 and Exhibit 2, more especially as regards the powers given to Mir Saiyid Ali as manager or supurdar of the estate. I am disposed to suspect that the persons interested in obtaining these documents from Mir Kazim Husain found it difficult to induce him knowingly to execute, or to cause to be registered, even a supurdnama in as wide terms as they desired. The statement by the witnesses for the plaintiffs, that at the registration of the supurdnama on November the 14th, 1893, Mir Kazim Husain roused himself sufficiently to enter some objection even to the terms of that document and to insist on the insertion of a clause reserving to himself a power of revocation, looks to me very much like a fragment of truth which has been permitted, for obvious reasons, to remain imbedded in the midst of a mass of perjury. I do not overlook the point that according to the registration copy before us, the original of Exhibit 2 referred to the execution of the deed Exhibit 1 and spoke of Mir Saiyid Ali as the adopted son as well as the representative and locum tenens of the executant; this point would only be material if I were prepared to believe the witnesses for the plaintiffs when they depose that the whole of the supurdnama was read over to Mir Kazim Husain at the time of registration. If I believe them on this point I should have no adequate reason for not believing them on a number of others.

I do not conceal from myself the fact that there are difficulties about the view which I am disposed to take regarding the execution of the deed Exhibit 1 and the circumstances of its registration. It may well be argued that, if this deed is in fact the outcome of a conspiracy engineered by persons who could command the services of some one capable of producing a passable imitation of Mir Kazim Husain's ordinary signature when in good health, it might be regarded as superfluous to have recourse to a fraud of the kind involved in my theory of the case. I could say a good deal by way of rejoinder to this argument, but it seems to me unnecessary to go into further detail. The essential conclusion at which I have arrived is that numerous circumstances have been established tending to throw doubt on the genuineness of the deed Exhibit 1 and on the circumstances under which its registration was effected. In view of all those circumstances, I look to the plaintiffs to satisfy me, by evidence which commends itself to my mind as independent, straightforward and reliable, that Mir Kazim Husain with his own hand affixed the signature which appears in the margin of Exhibit 1 and wrote the words which appear underneath that signature, that he tendered the document for registration and admitted its execution with a full knowledge of its contents and effect. The evidence of Sheoratan Lal, Ali Haidar and Jafar Ali fails to satisfy me on these points. I think it highly probable that one of the signatures on the reverse of Exhibit 1 is in fact Mir Kazim Husain's and that a fraud of a particular description was committed, involving the execution and registration of one genuine document, namely the missing original of Exhibit 2; but my finding does not depend necessarily on the accuracy of this theory. I consider Sheoratan Lal, Ali Haidar and Jafar Ali unreliable witnesses and I regard their evidence with profound distrust. On one important point, namely the state of Mir Kazim Husain's eyesight on the 14th of November 1893, I feel convinced that they have deliberately perjured themselves. The surrounding circumstances of the case are, on the whole, much against the plaintiffs, the one substantial point in their favour being the admissions made by or on behalf of Musammat Taiyaba Begam to which I have already referred. Taking the evidence of Sheoratan Lal, Ali Haidar and Jafar Ali as it stands, and reading it in the light of the surrounding circumstances and of the evidence in the case as a whole, I disbelieve those witnesses. I concur in the finding of the Court below that the execution by Mir Kazim Husain of the deed Exhibit 1 and its registration according to law are not proved.

I thought it convenient to discuss in an earlier portion of this judgment the question of the effect of this deed, Exhibit 1, on the Will of January the 15th, 1887, supposing the execution of the former document to be proved. I return for a moment to take up this point again in the light of what I have said since. Even if it were proved (as in my opinion it is not proved) that, not only the signature "Mir Kazim Husain afi anhu" in the margin of Exhibit 1, but the succeeding words, which purport to show that the executant was aware of the fact that he was executing a deed of adoption, were actually written by Mir Kazim Husain with his own pen, I would still dismiss this appeal. I would do so, not only on the ground that the legal effect of the document as it stands is not to supersede or nullify the Will of January the 15th, 1887, but more particularly on the ground that I was not satisfied that Mir Kazim Husain ever intended to revoke that Will or to nullify its provisions, in so far at any rate as they related to the immediate succession of Musammat Taiyaba Begam to the Waira Kazi estate after his death.

If I were satisfied that Mir Kazim Husain in fact executed and caused to be registered the deed Exhibit 1 on 14th of November 1893, I would hold that his object and intention in so doing was to confer upon Mir Saiyid Ali the status of an adopted son and an eventual heir to the estate, while at the same time maintaining his disposition of the estate by Will in favour of Musammat Taiyaba Begam as his immediate successor.

On both these grounds I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

LINDSAY, A. J. C.—I agree generally with the conclusions which have been reached by my learned colleague in his judgment and with the reasons which he has adduced in support of them. But I think it desirable to add a few observations of my own with respect to certain important points in the case. The principal matter for determination is in connection with the execution of the document which constitutes the foundation of the plaintiffs' case. Is it proved that this deed of adoption was duly executed, as alleged, by Kazim Husain on the 14th of November 1893?

Before proceeding to discuss this question, it is proper to consider the nature and the quantity of the proof which should be demanded from a party who claims under a document of the kind in suit. The deed is a deed of adoption purporting to have been executed under the special power conferred upon Muhammadan talukdars in Oudh by the provisions of a special Statute, the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869). The policy of that Act was to prevent the disintegration under the operation of the ordinary Hindu or Muhammadan Law of the estates which were conferred by the British Government in Oudh after the annexation of the Province, and for this purpose it was declared that a Muhammadan should have a right of adoption (a right which he does not possess under his personal law) in order that he might in case of failure of natural issue be able to provide a successor to his estate. A deed of adoption is consequently a deed of a special nature and although it could not be accurately described as being per se a Will, it may nevertheless be properly deemed to be a document of a testamentary character. It is a document which by conferring upon the person in whose favour it is made a definite status places him in the line of succession laid down in section 22 of the Oudh Estates Act, the section which regulates the devolution of talukdari estates in cases of intestacy. In the present instance it is claimed on behalf of the plaintiffs that this deed upon which they rely is not merely a document of a testamentary character in the sense just described, but is so in the stricter sense of the term by virtue of certain language contained in it the effect of which, it is said, is to revoke the Will executed by Kazim Husain in his wife's favour, assuming, that is to say, that this Will is a valid instrument which satisfies the requirements of section 13 of the Oudh

Estates Act (I of 1869). For these reasons it appears to me that in dealing with the question of the proof of execution of this deed of adoption we are justified in placing the plaintiffs in the same position as the Courts assign to a person who comes forward to propound a Will, and in demanding from them the discharge in the same degree of the duty which the Courts impose upon such a person. Indeed the learned Counsel for the appellants has in the course of his arguments assented to this proposition. Now the nature of the duty which rests upon a party setting up a Will has been declared in numerous cases decided both in England and in India, but I shall content myself with a reference to the case of Tyrrell v. Painton (7) decided by the Court of Appeal in England. I take this ruling to lay down the following principles, namely (1) that the onus probandi lies in every case upon the party propounding a Will and he must satisfy the conscience of the Court that the instrument so propounded is the last Will of a free and capable testator, and (2) that in all cases in which circumstances exist which excite the suspicion of the Court, it is for those who propound the Will to remove such suspicion and to prove affirmatively that the testator knew and approved of the contents of the document. It is only where this is done that the onus is thrown on those who oppose the Will to prove fraud, or undue influence, or whatever else they rely on to displace the case made for proving the Will. To quote the words of Davey, L. J. "The principle is that wherever a Will is prepared under circumstances which raise a well-grounded suspicion that it does not express the mind of the testator, the Court ought not to pronounce in favour of it unless that suspicion is removed."

Applying these principles to the case in hand, it is obvious that the duty of the plaintiffs is not fully discharged merely by proving that the deed of adoption bears a genuine signature of Kazim Husain. Even if this point be found in their favour, it is for them to remove any suspicion arising out of the circumstances surrounding the preparation of the instrument, that is to say, any suspicion that the document does not express the mind of Kazim Husain. That circumstances of the nature described do exist in the present case is abundantly clear from the evidence and they have been enumerated and commented upon by my learned colleague in his judgment. I do not propose to touch upon all of them, but content myself with referring to one or two of the more important of them.

In dealing with the events of the 14th November 1893, it is necessary to bear in mind the state of health in which Kazim Husain was at or about that time. There is, of course, a conflict of evidence as to the actual state of his health on that particular date, but at any rate it is clear that Kazim Husain had for many years been afflicted with syphilitic rheumatism and had been under constant medical treatment. It is proved that by reason of this disease he had become practically unable to move about and was to all intents and purposes bed-ridden. He had lost the sight of one eye completely several years before the date in question, and if he had not totally lost the sight of the other (the defendants say he had), it is at any rate a fair inference from the evidence that the remaining eye had lost its power to a substantial extent. I have no doubt whatever that if Kazim Husain could see at all on the 14th November 1893, he could see only with difficulty.

I turn now to the first of the suspicious circumstances upon which I desire to comment, namely, the execution on the 14th of November 1893 of the document which is called a supurdnama in the evidence. According to the certified copy of the document which is on record, it purports to be a "declaration of trust" (istiqrar-i-amanat). It has been pointed out by my colleague in his judgment that the original of this document has not been produced, and so far as the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs goes it cannot, I think, be said that there is any adequate explanation of this failure to produce the original. All we have on this point is to be found in the statements of two witnesses, Muhabbat Husain and Nadir Husain, whose evidence merely amounts to this, that some sort of search was made among Saiyid Ali's papers before the institution of the suit but without success. Muhabbat Husain in his evidence declared that Nadir Husain the other witness, had stated in his presence that the deed had disappeared in the lifetime of Saiyid Ali and was probably in the possession of Taiyaba Begam, but this is not borne out by the statement in Court of Nadir Husain himself.

(7) (1894) Pro. Div. 151; 6 R. 540; 70 L. T. 453; 42 W. R. 343.

Had the original deed been produced, it would have afforded valuable evidence in the light of which we might have been able to decide definitely as to the genuineness of the various signatures of Kazim Husain which appear on the deed of adoption.

However, we must take it that this supurdnama is a document which was presented for registration on the 14th November 1893 and registered in due course. It is said to have been executed on that date and the question arises as to why it was executed. Admittedly its execution was not in any way a matter of necessity, something that was required in order to give full effect to the deed of adoption which had already been prepared. What then was the purpose of its execution? According to the language of the instrument itself the object was to put Saiyid Ali in such control of the estate as would give him the opportunity of acquiring experience in the matter of estate management (ba gharaz husuli-i-qabiliyat wa takmil-i-waqifiyat-i-intezam-i-umur-i-riyasat wa talukdari). Now this is a somewhat extraordinary statement, having regard to the language to be found in the deed of adoption which had been executed, it is said, only a few minutes before. The deed of adoption sets out that Kazim Husain had been training and educating Saiyid Ali from his childhood and that he had made him (Saiyid Ali) an expert in the art of estate management. If this latter statement be true, it is hard to see how there was anything left for Saiyid Ali to learn. It is an admitted fact that Saiyid Ali had been managing the entire estate for more than three years before the time of which we are now speaking, and there is on record a copy of a power-of-attorney (Exhibit A2) executed in favour of Saiyid Ali by Kazim Husain on the 18th June 1890, under which Saiyid Ali had the fullest possible powers of management. It seems to me, therefore, impossible to treat the professed object of this supurdnama as being the real object. It may be, as suggested by my learned colleague, that Kazim Husain had some notion of placing Saiyid Ali in a situation in which he might be able to act as a substitute for himself in the discharge of any formal duties resting upon him as a talukdar, but I find some difficulty in accepting this theory, for I think Kazim Husain must have known well enough that he could not delegate his position as a talukdar without a surrender of his estate. Another curious point about this document is that although it purports to create a trust and to constitute Saiyid Ali a trustee, it makes no mention whatever of the duties which Saiyid Ali was to perform. In this respect it is in remarkable contrast with another document which is on record, namely Exhibit 140, which is said to have been executed by Kazim Husain on the 3rd of October 1893. This deed, as explained in my colleague's judgment, never took effect for want of registration, the story being that the Sub-Registrar had advised that it could not be registered for want of a sufficient stamp. The document cannot, of course, being unregistered, operate as a transfer of property, or as a deed of adoption, but it is permissible to look at its contents in order to ascertain the state of Kazim Husain's mind at or about the time the supurdnama now before us is said to have been executed. In this deed (Exhibit 140) Kazim Husain, after declaring that he has adopted Saiyid Ali, goes on to say that he has divested himself of all responsibility in connection with the estate which he has made over to Saiyid Ali. The document declares that Saiyid Ali is to be responsible, not only for the management of the estate, but also for the payment of the revenue and of all the debts due from the estate, and in addition to this there is a definite direction that Saiyid Ali is to pay him (Kazim Husain) Rs. 5,000 a year for his private expenses. It would seem, therefore, that if on the 3rd October 1893 Kazim Husain was minded to hand over the estate to Saiyid Ali, he was sufficiently alive to the importance of protecting his own interest by imposing definite duties on Saiyid Ali and by securing a respectable income from the property for his own use. And it is certainly a curious fact that in this later deed, said to have been executed a few weeks after, we find no conditions defining the liabilities of Saiyid Ali in his position as a trustee. Altogether I have been unable to find any satisfactory explanation which would account for execution of this supurdnama on the 14th November 1893, and I am still left with the suspicion that the real purpose of its preparation was to provide some evidence of the execution of the deed of adoption. The supurdnama contains a recital that Saiyid Ali had been adopted under a deed written on the 9th November 1893 and registered on the 14th of the same month.

The next matter which excites suspicion and which calls for explanation is the affidavit which was prepared at the time; both deeds were registered on the 14th November. There can be no dispute as to the extraordinary nature of the procedure followed by the Sub-Registrar in this connection. While it is true that section 63 of the Registration Act enables a registering officer to administer an oath to any person whom he may examine under the provisions of the Act and to record his sworn statement, it does not appear that in the present case there was any legitimate occasion for resorting to the power conferred by this section. According to the language of the affidavit it was prepared by way of precaution, in order that there might be on record evidence to show, firstly, that the terms of the deeds had been explained to Kazim Husain by reading them out to him, and, secondly, that Kazim Husain was at that time of sound health and understanding. And so we find a long statement subscribed to by most of the attesting witnesses to the deeds declaring:—

(1) that the adoption deed was read over by Kazim Husain "with his own eyes;"

(2) that the deed was read out to him;

(3) that he admmitted execution;

(4) that he was in good health and in his right senses;

(5) that he caused some additions to be made in the terms of the supurdnama; and

(6) that he had made the signatures underneath the registration endorsements with his own hand.

A clause was added in the affidavit to make it clear that the sworn statement applied both to the registration of the deed of adoption and the supurdnama. So far as the evidence in this case goes the plaintiffs' witnesses are unable to explain why this affidavit was drawn up. All that appears from their statement is that the Sub-Registrar acted of his own motion: it was not suggested to him by Kazim Husain or any one else that there was any need for such a step; and according to them there was no necessity, for the Sub-Registrar himself saw Kazim Husain and was able to satisfy himself by the evidence of his own senses that Kazim Husain knew perfectly well what he was doing. On the other hand the story of Muhammad Raza, a defendants' witness, is to the effect that the Sub-Registrar, having seen Kazim Husain in private, refused to proceed with registration at first, declaring that Kazim Husain was unconscious, and only consented in the end to make the registration after he had been paid or promised a bribe. Muhammad Raza is an unsatisfactory witness, and his evidence to my mind could not safely be accepted without the strongest possible corroboration. But leaving his evidence and that of other defence witnesses out of consideration, can it be said that the plaintiffs have given any convincing explanation of the preparation of this affidavit? The best case that can be made out for them upon this point is that the Sub-Registrar, though not acting within the scope of the law, was nevertheless moved by a bona fide desire to secure reliable evidence of the voluntary execution of an important deed so as to forestall any dispute which might arise thereafter. This explanation might conceivably be accepted were there anything to show that the preparation of the affidavit had been suggested to the Sub-Registrar by Kazim Husain himself or any one acting on his behalf. Kazim Husain himself might well desire that every precaution should be taken in order to prevent the deeds being questioned later, but it is difficult to imagine why the Sub-Registrar, whose only concern at the time was to satisfy himself that the deeds were genuine and had been executed by a person of sound mind, should have gone out of his way of his own accord to obtain the very emphatic declaration of a number of witnesses with respect to matters on which he could have been thoroughly satisfied by his own observation. When all is said that can be said, we still have the undeniable fact that the registering officer was a close neighbour of Kazim Husain and knew him intimately. He must have been well acquainted with Kazim Husain's state of health. If Kazim Husain was on the 14th of November capable of doing all he is represented to have done with respect to the execution and registration of these two deeds, it seems in the highest degree unlikely that the Sub-Registrar would have demanded this evidence of Kazim Husain's mental capacity. After giving this portion of the case my most earnest consideration, I feel unable to rid myself of the suspicion that the registration proceedings of the 14th November 1893 were not honest and above board.

I proceed now to say a few words with respect to the appearance of the deed itself and to consider whether, in regard to the signatures purporting to be those of Kazim Husain which appear upon it, there is any ground for suspecting their genuineness.

My learned colleague has in this connection referred to the case set up on behalf of the principal defendant, Musammat Taiyaba Begam, in the pleadings. There can be no doubt whatever that the proceedings started with an explicit admission on this defendant's behalf that the adoption deed was executed by Kazim Husain. The validity of the deed was not challenged by Taiyaba Begam on the ground that it was a forgery, but on the ground that it was not, in law, of any effect. At a later stage an attempt was made to get rid of the admission relating to execution by putting forward a disingenuous interpretation of the expression "khilaf mansha." The first position had been that the document, though executed by Kazim Husain, had been executed "khilaf mansha," that it is to say, the plea was that the document did not represent the real intention (mansha) of the executant. It was then sought to be made out that the plea first taken amounted to an allegation that the document had been prepared without Kazim Husain's knowledge, the argument being that the expression "khilaf mansah" meant "without knowledge," a sense which it cannot possibly bear. It is, unfortunately, no new experience with us to find cases conducted in this fashion in the subordinate Courts. The sole object of every system of pleading is, as explained by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sayad Muhammad v. Fatteh Muhammad (8), "that each side may be fully alive to the questions that are about to be argued in order that they may have an opportunity of bringing forward such evidence as may be appropriate to the issues;" but from cases which are brought to our notice from time to time, it would appear that the notion here is that the system of pleading has been invented in order to provide an opportunity to a party to embarrass his adversary by unworthy artifices of evasion and equivocation. It would, in the present case, perhaps be unjust to hold Taiyaba Begam responsible for the way in which her case was conducted; she is a pardanashin lady and for reasons which have not been satisfactorily explained, she found it necessary or convenient to withdraw from the jurisdiction of the Court in or about January 1907, before her written statement of defence was lodged in the Court. She took her departure to Turkish Arabia where she remained all the time the case was at trial. But I think it is proper, speaking for myself, to express my condemnation of the manner in which her case was handled by those responsible for its conduct.

But leaving aside the defence set up by Taiyaba Begam, we have it that the other defendants denied execution of the adoption deed by Kazim Husain, and the matter of execution was, therefore, in issue. Coming now to the question of the signatures on the deed of adoption, it would, I think, be difficult to say either way whether any particular one of them was not made by the hand of Kazim Husain. The hieroglyph adopted by Kazim Husain as his form of signature is a peculiar one and its outline would naturally alter with the advance of old age, accompanied by total or partial blindness. But as my learned colleague has pointed out, it is fair to assume that three signatures made by the same person on the same day, two of which must have been made within a minute or two of each other, and the third only an hour or so before, ought to correspond fairly closely in form.

(8) 22 C. 324; 22 I. A. 4.

MIR SYED HASAN v. TAIYABA BEGAM.

Now the signature in the margin of the deed, purporting to have been made by Kazim Husain at the time of executing the deed, is in a bold and clear hand, as are also the words "talukdar ba qalam khud" which immediately follow the signature. Underneath this signature we have certain other words ("tabniyat nama haza hamne ba khushi apni likha ba qalam khud"). The appearance of the writing of these words is peculiar. Some of them would seem to have been the production of a shaky hand, on the other hand the words "apni" and "ba balam khud" are in what might be described as steady writing.

Turning to the two signatures on the back of the deed under the registration endorsement, they differ considerably in character from the marginal signature above described. The signature under the first endorsement is particularly straggling and feeble and presents a marked contrast to the signature in the margin, so marked indeed that it is almost impossible to believe that they were produced by the same hand on the same day and within an hour or so of each other. The fact that there is such a difference between the two signatures is bound to give rise to a grave suspicion as to the genuineness of one or other of them, and this suspicion is not cleared by anything in the evidence.

I have only to mention one other matter in this connection. I have already quoted the words which appear below tho marginal signature, the translation of which is "I have executed this deed of adoption of my own free will." I consider the presence of those words where they are as a circumstance which, apart from all others, would justify a serious doubt as to whether this is an honest document. I cannot in my experience recall any case in which the executant of a deed has recorded a declaration of this kind in the margin. It may be such a course of action is not without precedent, but it is at any rate extremely rare. To my mind the document "protests too much." Indeed the whole of the transactions of the 14th November savour of too much protest. Why do we find the executant at so much pains to declare that he had made the deed of his own free will? Why do we find the affidavit with its emphatic assurances that Kazim Husain read the deed with his own eyes, that the document was read out and explained to him and that Kazim Husain was in full possession of his faculties? Why was the deed read out to him if he was able to read it for himself? And last of all, why was it needful to execute the supurdnama containing a recital to show that a deed of adoption had just been executed? I can only say that all these circumstances taken together have inspired a suspicion which the plaintiffs' evidence has been unable to remove, and I agree, therefore, with my learned colleague that we should not pronounce in favour of the deed of adoption set up by the plaintiffs. I have hitherto said nothing with regard to another curious circumstance in connection with the deed of adoption, namely, the fact that Saiyid Ali on some date between the 25th November and the 9th December made an endorsement on it declaring that it had been cancelled by the execution of another deed of adoption and was being returned to the executant. Strictly speaking, this is not a circumstance attending the execution of the instrument and does not perhaps fall within the category of facts referred to in Tyrrell v. Painton (7) as requiring explanation by the person who propounds the document. But obviously the fact is one of grave importance when we come to examine the probabilities of the case with a view to forming a conclusion as to the genuineness or otherwise of the instrument. It is not necessary for me to refer in detail to the evidence on this part of the case; it has been fully criticised by my learned colleague. It is sufficient to state that such evidence as we have is extremely meagre, and without suggesting that it is untrue, it is fair comment to say that it leaves us with the impression that the whole truth has not been revealed: possibly the witnesses whose statements relate to the writing of this endorsement by Saiyid Ali were not themselves aware of all the facts. Why, if this document of adoption executed by Kazim Husain on the 14th November 1893 was an honest document, did Saiyid Ali make this endorsement upon it within a fortnight or three weeks of its execution? It seems to me that the evidence gives us no convincing answer to that question. On the face of it the endorsement contains two untrue statements of fact, one that a second deed of adoption had been executed, and the other that the document was being returned to the executant. No second deed is proved to have been executed, nor is it the case of either party that there was a second deed. And the document was never returned to the executant, Kazim Husain, after the making of endorsement: it was left in the custody of the Mujtahid, who produced it in Court some ten or eleven months after. The plaintiffs' case with respect to this endorsement is that it was obtained from Saiyid Ali by a trick played upon him by his uncle, Shafi Haidar, who was the own brother of Taiyaba Begam. The defendants' theory is that Kazim Husain got Saiyid Ali to make the endorsement and to hand the document over to the Mujtahid in order to cover up a scandal, and that Shafi Haidar took a part in the transaction because his son Ali Haidar who attested the deed was liable to be implicated if any case of forgery came into the Courts. I cannot say that either of these explanations satisfies me. I do not think that Saiyid Ali was likely to be duped by his uncle whom he regarded as his enemy. On the other hand the evidence fails to satisfy me that Kazim Husain knew anything about the making of this endorsement. The fact remains that Saiyid Ali a few days after the execution of this deed in his favour recorded a statement on the deed that it had been set aside, and that his conduct in so doing is inconsistent with the hypothesis that the deed was an honest one which Kazim Husain had executed of his own free will, and has not been satisfactorily explained. Indeed the whole of the conduct of Saiyid Ali from the time this deed is said to have been executed till the time of his death is difficult to reconcile with the theory that the deed of adoption represented a bona fide transaction. We are told that Saiyid Ali was first deceived into making this endorsement and surrendering the deed. A few months later we find him setting the document up again in the Criminal Court. Then we arrive at a stage of compromise: he comes to terms with Taiyaba Begam and is again deceived by Shafi Haidar, who foists a false document on the Court setting out conditions other than those which were really accepted by the parties. Again the dispute is opened in the mutation proceedings and Saiyid Ali complains of the fraud practised upon him and once more puts forward the deed of adoption. His case is lost in the Revenue Court aud possession is given to Taiyaba Begam, who claimed under her husband's Will. And there the matter ends so far as Saiyid Ali is concerned. He subsides entirely and though he lives for six or seven years after Taiyaba Begam's being put in possession of the estate, he makes no attempt to approach the Civil Courts and ask them to give him the rights out of which he had been defrauded. Surely this supine attitude is incompatible with any honest belief in the mind of Saiyid Ali that he was the lawful owner of the Waira Kazi estate from the time of Kazim Husain's death. With regard to the Will under which Taiyaba Begam claims title to the estate of her deceased husband, I have but little to add to the arguments of my learned colleague. He has described in his judgment how the Will was executed in 1877 and how, after being left in deposit for nearly ten years in the office of the Sub-Registrar of Lucknow, it was taken out and registered on the 15th January 1887 by Kazim Husain in person. It is shown that at the time of registration Kazim Husain admitted in the presence of three witnesses that the Will was his act and deed, that the registration endorsements were signed both by Kazim Husaim and by those witnesses. Assuming that the Will is one to which section 13 of the Oudh Estates Act would apply so as to render it necessary that registration should take place within one month from the date of execution, I am of opinion that this condition was fulfilled. I do not think it can be contended that the Will was "executed" on the 12th May 1877, the date on which Kazim Husain first signed it. Execution of a Will means something more than the act of the testator in affixing his signature to the document, as was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Anne Casement v. John Williamson Fulton (9). At page 406 of the report their Lordships say:—"It (i.e. the word "execute") is employed plainly to designate the whole operation, including both the signature or acknowledgment of the testator and the attestation of the subscribing witnesses, and it is not used at all to designate the testator's part alone."

(9) 3 M. I. A. 395; 5 Moore P. C. 130; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 293; 70 R. R. 19; 18 E. R. 549; 13 E. R. 439.

It appears to me, therefore, that the Will in this case was not executed in the strict sense of the term until the 15th January 1887, and as registration was effected on that very day it must be taken that there was registration within one month from the date of execution.

I agree with the Judicial Commissioner that the Will is a valid Will.

There remains only one other point upon which I desire to comment. It has already been stated that the plaintiffs have claimed for this deed of adoption that it had the effect of revoking any valid Will made by Kazim Husain previous to the date of its execution, and in support of this contention reliance is placed upon those words in the document which declare that Saiyid Ali has been appointed the successor (ja nashin aur qaim muqam) of Kazim Husain, as also upon the other words which set out that Saiyid Ali will discharge the duties of a talukdar after his (Kazim Husain's) death. Section 57 of the Indian Succession Act, which is incorporated in the Oudh Estates Act except in so far as it provides for the revocation of a Will by marriage, lays down that a Will may be revoked by another Will or codicil, or by some writing declaring an intention to revoke the same. Plainly there is no language in this deed of adoption declaring expressly the intention of Kazim Husain to revoke the Will he had already made in his wife's favour, and I am unable to hold that any such intention can be gathered from the expressions in the document upon which the plaintiffs have relied. I cannot think that the description of Saiyid Ali as "ja nashin" and "qaim muqam" contained in a deed of adoption necessarily means that the person so described is to take the property of the executant after his decease. Adoption by itself would not affect the operation of any testamentary disposition already validly made and I should say that the use of the words above-mentioned was intended merely to emphasise the nature of the status which had been conferred upon Saiyid Ali by his being adopted. Adoption brought him within the line of succession laid down in section 22 of the Oudh Estates Act in case Kazim Husain should die intestate, and in this sense Saiyid Ali was potentially the successor of Kazim Husain. As for the other words, it is very difficult to ascribe any definite meaning to them: "aur hamesha bad mere tamam umur talukdari ke anjam deta rahega." Literally translated, they mean, "and after me he will always continue to perform all matters pertaining to the status of a talukdar." It may, of course, be said that Saiyid Ali could not possibly perform the functions of a talukdar without having a talukdar's estate, and there is something to be said for such an argument. At the same time, if Kazim Husain intended to let Saiyid Ali have the estate after his death, nothing could have been easier than for him to say so. Why resort to all this circumlocution and ambiguity?

We may have it that so far back as 1877, Kazim Husain intended that his wife should have the estate absolutely after his decease. That he was still of the same mind nearly ten years later is clear from the fact that he registered the Will in January 1887. We have not been referred to any evidence which would lead us to the belief that Kazim Husain's relations with his wife had so altered, as to render it likely that he would in 1893 have changed his intentions so as to leave his wife without any provision whatsoever; and in these circumstances, we should be slow to infer from vague expressions in the deed of adoption that Kazim Husain definitely intended that his estate should pass to his wife's nephew to the exclusion of his wife, who had claims upon him for her support. I agree accordingly with may learned colleague that, even if the execution of this deed of adoption had been satisfactorily proved, we should still have been unable to decree the plaintiffs claim. The Will in favour of Taiyaba Begam stands good and was not revoked by the deed of adoption which the plaintiffs have put forward. In my opinion the appeal has failed and should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 573 OF 1911.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair and Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar.

ZAMINDAR OF KAPILESWARAPURAM —PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

SECRETARY OF STATE—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Presumption—Implied engagement—Anicut irrigation, construction of, by Goverment—Right of owners of land whose supply is cut off to receive free supply—Cause of action—Government, liability of.

Where on the introduction of the anicut system of irrigation into a certain district, the Government allowed free irrigation from the anicuts to all lands which, owing to the construction of several anicut channels and other works connected therewith, were found to have lost, wholly or partially, their pre-existing sources of supply, the owners of such lands, who did not enter into litigation with the Government for interfering with the old sources of supply and who took the water supplied by the Government from the Government anicuts, must be taken to have accepted the offer of Government in satisfaction of their claims against Government and where the Government supplied water for 37 years, a natural and irresistible presumption arises that there was an implied engagement between the parties for the free supply of water and if the Government interferes with such supply the owners of such lands have a good cause of action against the Government.

Where since a Settlement a land-holder has improved his zemindari and brought a large extent of land under wet cultivation by improving his irrigation sources and where the Government by their new anicut system cut off sources of irrigation supply to those large extents of land, it cannot be said that the Government did not undertake liability to supply water free to all those lands whose then existing irrigation sources were interfered with by the Government's constructions but only to those lands which were irrigated at the Settlement.

JUDGMENT.

SANKARAN NAIR, J.—The appellant is one of the Nuzvid zemindars whose judicial history will be found in Raja Venkata Rao v. Court of Wards (1) and Sri Raja Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Sri Rajah Rangayya Appa Row (2). The zemindar alleged that the defendant, the Secretary of State, constructed in 1863 the Ellore canal to carry the anicut water through the zemindari and thereby obstructed the flow of water into one of his tanks, Voddu Cheruvu, from his other three tanks, and since that time the Government have been supplying him with water free of charge for the cultivation of his lands, about 507 acres 14 cents, which depended on these tanks for their irrigation. From 1889 they allowed water-supply free of charge only for 427 acres 91 cents, and on his appeal from such reduction it was still further reduced to 202 acres 67 cents. He prays for a declaration of his right to the supply of water as before and for certain reliefs consequential on such declaration. The Governmant filed their written statement and issues were framed which covered all the questions of fact relied upon by the plaintiff. But without taking any evidence, the question whether the plaint discloses a cause of action was first argued and decided against the plaintiff.

The Subordinate Judge held that no express "engagement" under Act VII of 1865 having been alleged, all lands irrigated by Ellore canal water must pay cess. The Judge in appeal held that a promise by the Government in 1863 to supply water may perhaps be implied in the plaint, though the issues according to him show that the claim was based on a letter of a Deputy Collector of May 1891, which, it may be remarked, however, is not referred to in the plaint. He was of opinion that unless there was an express agreement, the Government are entitled to levy water-cess at pleasure.

The decisions of the lower Courts go beyond the claim set up by the Government, who concede the plaintiff's right to water free of charge for 200 odd acres in their written statement. The Subordinate Judge states that the plaintiff's Pleader in argument before him relied on a contract with the Government and the Judge states that the plaint apparently implies it. Issues Nos. 1 to 4 were necessary only if an implied agreement formed the basis of the claim. They certainly include it. In these circumstances as the evidence had not been taken and the plaintiff relied only on the facts alleged in the plaint and raised by the issue, an amendment of the plaint setting forth that the plaintiff relied on an "engagement" with Government should have been allowed, if necessary. I do not think the omission to mention it is fatal to the suit. However, to remove any difficulty, we have allowed the plaint to be so amended. The question whether the facts set forth disclose a cause of action has been fully argued before us. As the plaintiff relies upon an "engagement" in 1863 with the Government in the sense in which that term is used in Act VII of 1865, it is necessary to refer to the events which led to the passing of that Act. We assume that the facts on which the plaintiff relies are true. When it was proposed in 1856 or thereabouts to undertake a general survey and re-assessment of the lands in the Madras Presidency, the question arose how those lands irrigated from the Godavari and Kistna anicuts were to be assessed. Till that time the practice in the Presidency when water was supplied from irrigation works was to charge a consolidated wet assessment when water was permanently available and to levy a water-rate only when it was temporarily required for cultivation. The lands were classified as either "irrigated" or "non-irrigated." The Secretary of State suggested that this classification of lands, according as they were capable of irrigation or otherwise from the Government sources, should be abolished and all land should be classified with reference to its soil and productiveness without irrigation; a water-rate being charged when water is used or permanently available.

(1) 2 M. 128 (P. C.); 6 C. L. R. 153; 7 I. A. 38; 3 Suth. P. C. J. 725; 4 Ind. Jur. 138; 3 Shome L. R. 175; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 81.

(2) 29 M. 437; 16 M. L. J. 178.

After a long correspondence which showed that different views were put forward and various difficulties pointed out, among them the practical impossibility of fixing the assessment to which the land which has been long under wet cultivation would be liable as unirrigated land, it was finally resolved to accept the suggestion of the Secretary of State and orders were issued by the Government of Madras on the 12th March 1858, that "a water-cess calculated with reference to the additional irrigation canal communications, drainage and embankments is to be levied invariably on all lands irrigated from the Godavari and Kistna channels from the second year of irrigation, without any reference to whether they are Government lands, inam lands or belonging to proprietors and if in the latter two cases the Acting Collector (Masulipatam) has neglected to take engagements and opposition is made, he is forthwith to stop the supply." These instructions received the sanction of the Secretary of State, and one of his reasons was that this would be the easiest and most equitable mode of obtaining a fair contribution from the zemindars towards the re-payment of the expenditure incurred in the construction of "drainage irrigation and other works undertaken by Government and benefiting the lands of those proprietors as well as of Government." This is how the term "engagement" (see proviso to section 4 of Act VII of 1865, of which the draft bill was then under consideration) was used, so far as I know, for the first time.

These instructions were communicated to the Revenue Board and officials to be carried out.

From this the following conclusions may be deduced.

Water-rate was intended in re-payment of the cost of those irrigation works which supplied the water. It was not intended to assess lands which received their supply from sources, as in this case, completely under the zemindars' control with which the Government had nothing to do. No "engagements" with ryots were contemplated obviously for the reason that it could be included in land revenue, the only mode at that time of recovering the water charge from proprietors, as distinguished from ryots of Government lands was to enter into engagements with them, and if they refused to do so, the remedy suggested was to stop the supply of water. It is clear that the zemindar was not bound to enter into any engagement with Government to take water when he was the owner thereof, as when it was confined in tanks or reservoirs or in virtue of his riparian or easement rights from rivers, it was not open to Government to prevent him from doing so. The Government were not in those cases supplying him with water; nor could they, therefore, stop the supply.

It is probable, therefore, that where the Government continued the supply it was under some engagement.

With reference to these two classes there was no difficulty. In the first class of cases in which the irrigation was carried on without any cost to Government and in exercise of the proprietors' rights of easement by vicinage, of ownership, no water-cess was levied or, in fact, could be claimed. In the second class of cases where irrigation was carried out with water supplied from the anicuts and only by means of Government irrigation works, channels, etc., the Government were entitled to dictate their own terms for the supply of water. If they were not accepted, they were entitled to stop the supply. The result was that, between the construction of the anicut and the passing of the Act of 1865, water was supplied to the proprietors on terms.

There were, however, other cases which it was more difficult to deal with.

Inams were exempted from permanent sanads and the nanja inams were irrigated from Government sources. Similarly where there were zemindaris (and those formed out of havelli lands in which water sources were retained under Government control would be such) which were irrigated from Government sources. As they were entitled to Government water, the following rule for water assessment was passed for their benefit on the 26th October 1861 :—

"Lands granted as nanja inams and fully irrigated accordingly at the Government cost will not be charged with water assessment."

The same rule was applied to zemindars.

There was a fourth class. Water from the Government anicut works was often carried to the ryotwari lands by means of the old channels which passed through zemindaris and were for that purpose improved, enlarged and extended by the Government. The zemindar who obtained his water through these channels naturally claimed the ancient water which flowed through his channels. Some of the Government channels flowed through the tanks or reservoirs which were zemin property, and the zemindar was thus deprived of his tank water. Some channels, as the Ellore canal in the case before us, cut off the supply to the tanks on which the cultivation of zemindari lands depended. It is obvious that the zemindar in all these cases had a just grievance. The Government, however, considered that the water-supply before the days of the anicut was precarious and irregular and they issued the following rule on the 26th October 1861 : —

No. 12. "Such nanja inams as were formerly imperfectly irrigated and have since been fully supplied with water from the anicut works, will be charged at half the above water rates." The rule was made applicable to zemindaris also. There was a proposal sometime afterwards that even the rule which allowed the full supply without any charge should be altered to allow half rate on the ground that there was never any adequate supply before. On account of the strong protest of the Board of Revenue, the Government altered the half rate rule and allowed water free of charge even where the half rate had been levied on lands which "owing to the construction of the several anicut channels and other works connected therewith were found to have lost wholly or partially their pre-existing sources of supply." See Government Order No. 101, Revenue, dated the 16th January 1864. For determining what lands lost their sources of supply, the order states "the real criterion is the rate of assessment which the accounts show the land is liable to." The order further says: "If this indicates the title of the land to water or if other reasonable proof can be adduced, then no charge should be made for irrigation, as the engagement to supply water manifestly implied a full and not an imperfect supply."

There is only one further order to be referred to. The Secretary of State, in considering whether a cultivator should have the option to refuse Government water, said: the 16th January 1864 "with reference to your questien, 'whether the ryot should be allowed the security against an excessive charge which the option of deciding, by a stated period of each year, whether he will have water or not, will give him,' I am clearly of opinion that such option should be permitted. There is little ground for apprehension that the option would be exercised by the cultivator in the way of declining to use the means of irrigation when they are supplied to him at a moderate price, and the possession of it would in no respect limit the right which the Government, acting on your own behalf or on that of the Irrigation Company, must retain, the right of declining to supply any particular tract of country with water, unless the cultivator should be prepared to enter into engagements to take the water at the stipulated rate in such numbers and for such terms of years as might warrant the required outlay. Although few would probably reject the opportunity, yet no compulsion to take the water must be exercised towards the dissentients, and they must in no way be disturbed in the possession of their lands, so long as they desire to hold them, and continue to pay the ordinary rate of assessment."

This despatch makes it clear that the Secretary of State wanted to give the ryots the same option of taking anicut water as the zemindars and inamdars had. This order was communicated by the Madras Government to the officers concerned and it was pointed out by the Government that "as regards lands which have been fitted for irrigation by the owners and have actually been irrigated for at least one season, it may fairly be held that such preparation and acceptance of water imply acquiescence with the usage of the country which does not require any formal engagement." That realy means, in other words, an engagement will be implied between the Government to furnish water and the ryots to receive this supply. In those cases where the water was forced on the ryots, the option was allowed and agreements were directed to be taken from them for any further supply of water. And they added: "The same rule must, of course, apply equally to the holders of lands in zemindaris until the zemindars come to terms with the Government and collected cess." In accordance with those directions rules were framed in 1864 ; the bill which subsequently became Act VII of 1865 was directed to be prepared in accordance with these orders of the Secretary of State. I extract below two of the rules :—

Rule (7).—"Where royts desire to convert dry land into wet, application is to be made to the Collector either directly or through the Tahsildar on or before 31st March, and the Collector will arrange with the Public Works Department for the supply of water. Where the means of irrigation for such land already exist, the ryot shall, as a rule, have the option of continuing or ceasing to use the water at his pleasure, provided that where water is taken, etc." This shows clearly no water-cess was intended where the ryot uses only the means of irrigation he already had.

Rule (10).—"These rules shall apply to zemindari and inam lands except in the case of zemindaris, a composition shall have been made either for fixed yearly payment or according to the quantity of water supplied. Provided always that no charge whatever shall be made under these rules for a single crop for zemindari or inam lands where such lands are proved to have been customarily cultivated with wet crops under old tanks, channels, or by any means of irrigation whatever prior to the construction of anicuts, or to have been charged in the accounts with such a rate of assessment as indubitably indicates the title of such land to water or by the terms of the grant to have been given as nanja inam."

There were thus three circumstances recognized as conferring a right to exemption from water rate otherwise leviable :—

(1) The existence of any means of irrigation, including tanks, channels, whatever prior to the construction of anicuts ;

(2) lands being charged with nanja assessment ; and

(3) the title-deed showing that an inam was granted as nanja.

Two conclusions follow :

That it was not intended to levy any charge on cultivation carried on with any pre-existing source of supply, tanks, channels and rivers ; and that in these instances the Government were only carrying out a legal obligation created by interference with such pre-existing source of supply which would have been enforced by the Courts.

An Act was necessary to collect the cess in the same way as land revenue and perhaps to remove the difficulties that might be caused by taking water through zemindari and inam lands. It was first intended only for the districts which used the Godavari and Kistna water and power was reserved in the original draft to extend it to the other districts. But finally the bill was drafted for the Presidency.

Before considering what the relations of the parties were or whether there was an engagement between the parties at this time, i.e., in 1863 and 1864, I shall finish my review of the proceedings which led to the Act.

In forwarding the draft Act to the Government Pleader, the Government asked his opinion whether it was necessary to specify zemindari and inam lands in order to enforce the special cess "on land newly irrigated from Government sources at Government expense." The opinion of the Government Pleader was in the affirmative and he drafted the section in these terms: "This Act shall extend to all lands held by zemindars or inamdars for the irrigation of which water may be, after the passing of this Act, newly supplied or used from any such river, stream, channel, tank or work as specified in section 1." On its being pointed out that this might preclude the levy of any water-rate for irrigation newly supplied to such land since the construction of the anicut but prior to the passing of the Act and which supply may hereinafter be continued, the Government modified it by omitting the words "after the passing of this Act, newly" and the section then ran in the form in which it was finally passed by the Legislative Council thus: "This Act shall extend to all lands held by zemindars, inamdars or any other description of landholders for the irrigation of which water may be supplied or used from any such river, stream, channel, tank or work as is specified in section 1, provided always that where a zemindar or inamdar by virtue of engagements with the Government is entitled to irrigation free of separate charge, no cess under this Act shall be imposed for water supplied to the extent of such right and no more."

In the case before us, the water is supplied to the lands in suit from a Government source, to wit, Ellore canal and Government anicut works, and, therefore, unless the plaintiff proves the 'engagement' that he sets up, the Government are entitled to levy water tax. The word 'engagement' in the section is no doubt used in the same sense in which it was used in the proceedings to which I have already drawn attention. Now, what was the state of things when the Act was passed? When the Government intercepted the flow of the water from the other three tanks mentioned in the plaint into Voddicheruvu, they undoubtedly inflicted an injury upon the plaintiff, and if the plaintiff had enforced his claim in a Civil Court he would have obtained a decree for compensation payable to him for such interference, which would probably have been a direction to supply him with that water which his tank was usually getting before the interruption or some equivalent compensation. Now, it is not to be presumed that the Government did a wrongful act if the facts are consistent with any other supposition. The natural presumption is that they compensated him in some form. We find that the Government had issued orders that where their irrigation works had interfered with a pre-existing source of supply, water was to be supplied free. We see here there was such interference and the consequent free supply. The orders also show that in other cases water was to be supplied to zemindars under engagements to pay at certain rates. We see here no such payment received or demanded. We further find that even as to the ryotwari lands the Government proceedings directed that engagements should be entered into and that the Government presumed that, when the ryots prepared their lands for irrigation and received water from such irrigation sources, an engagement might be implied. Under these circumstances, unless the free supply of water from 1863 is explained by Government, it appears to me the presumption, not only natural but almost irresistible, is that there was an implied engagement between the parties for the free supply of water. The Judge rightly observers: "the Act was an embodiment of the Government order;" but he holds that "it was for the zamindar to have entered into an engagement with Government as to the extent of irrigation to which he was entitled." In my opinion he is wrong in holding that an express agreement is necessary. That the plaintiff was irrigating the lands in suit with Government water free of charge is clear evidence that he was entitled to water sufficient to irrigate them, either because they were then being irrigated with his tank water or could have been so irrigated or it was only on those conditions that he permitted any interferences with his property.

The Government Pleader contends that, though there may be an engagement, it is only to the effect that the zemindars are entitled to receive from the Government water necessary for the old customary irrigation of their lands, that is to say, they are only entitled to water sufficient to irrigate that area which is entered as wet in the Permanent Settlement accounts, and, in the absence of any allegation in the plaint that the land for which they claim free supply of water is land so entered as wet in the old accounts, the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain the suit. If the argument is that the 'engagement' in 1863 with reference to this estate had reference only to the old Settlement accounts to the knowledge of both the parties, it is open to the Government to plead it and prove the same. That would be an express agreement. Otherwise it cannot be used to limit the plaintiff's claim based on the state of things in 1863. For, the zemindar may have improved the capacity of his tank or increased the area of his wet cultivation since the sanad and the supply of water must have been made to compensate him for his loss then sustained. If the argument is that an 'engagement' referred to is to be implied from the conditions that existed at the date of the permanent sanad, it is not an answer to plaintiff's claim; because, if the facts imply an engagement in 1863 when the supply was obstructed, that there was another engagement in 1802 or afterwards when the permanent sanad was granted, unless it is shown that that is the only engagement which is intended by the Act of 1865, is not material. The section itself is not restricted to any engagement at the time of the Permanent Settlement. And I have no doubt it was open to the parties to enter into any engagement at any time they liked. The plaintiff may be entitled to say that if the old Gudigat wet area according to the Permanent Settlement accounts entitled him to more land than what he now claims, then he should be entitled to the free cultivation of lands to that extent in addition. He may also be entitled to say, if he was getting water sufficient to cultivate more lands than the area he now claims, he is entitled to such quantity of water and cultivate more lands with it, as it is reasonable to presume that the Government could not have intended to deprive a man of his property without compensation. This is apparently the effect of Government Order No. 2416, 17th June 1895, "where the mamul wet areas to be allowed are found of be in excess of the highest recorded areas under wet cultivation in the village concerned, the maximum area irrigable should be allowed." It is unnecessary, however, to consider this question as he makes no such claim in the plaint. The rules, already extracted, in force at the time the Act was passed, support this conclusion. He is entitled to exemption if his pre-existing source of supply is interfered with or if the accounts show a nanja assessment or if the title-deed supports the claim. The one is not exclusive of the others. The Act, as rightly pointed out by the Judge, being only an embodiment, so far as this matter is concerned, of the pre-existing rule, an engagement will be implied if any of these grounds exist. The tanks, if any, in the zemin undoubtedly belonged to the zemindar. The Government lay no claim to them. It is not probable that there was, therefore, any engagement by the Government to supply water for the irrigation of such lands under those tanks. From where could the Government supply such water? Not from these tanks with which they had nothing to do, and it is not shown there was any other source of water-supply. No engagement can, therefore, be implied. An engagement can only be implied in those cases in which it was in the power of the Government to stop the supply of the water claimed or when they undertook to supply such water themselves. Otherwise I see no reason for any implied contract so far as the lands irrigated with any pre-existing source of supply, which did not belong to the Government, are concerned. For these reasons I am unable to accept the Government Pleader's argument that the engagement to be proved has reference only to the wet area as shown in the Permanent Settlement accounts. If, however, it is necessary to prove what the area was so entered, then, the fact that these lands were under cultivation from 1863 to 1889, and it is not shown by the Government that the lands were brought under cultivation only some time after the permanent sanad was granted, would be evidence to show that they were mamul wet even at the date of the Permanent Settlement. The Permanent Settlement accounts are with the Government and if the extent of wet cultivation under these tanks is referred to in those accounts, it is for the Government to produce them, if it is material.

The only case that has been cited in argument before us is against the Government Pleader's contention. Secretary of State v. Kameswaramma (3) was a similar case and the learned Judges, Benson and Miller, JJ., stated the question for decision in these terms: "The question for decision in this appeal is in effect, what is the extent of land in the village of Ravipad which was irrigable from the irrigation works existing before the construction of the Godavari anicut irrigation system?" I entirely agree. It appeared that various accounts showed the various extents of lands under cultivation, but they adopted the greatest area irrigated which, no doubt, showed those lands were capable of irrigation works before the days of the anicut. They did not put the plaintiff to proof of what the Settlement area was. I am, therefore, of opinion that, if the facts relied upon by the plaintiff are proved, a cause of action is disclosed. The Judge is, therefore, directed to return findings on the issues in the case. It will be open to him to direct the Subordinate Judge to submit findings to himself.

Six months are allowed for findings, and seven days for objections.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I concur in the decision just now pronounced by my learned brother, and if I add a few words in my own language, it is merely on account of the importance of the questions involved in this case. This is one of those cases arising out of the Government's having constructed anicut channels and other works connected therewith in the Godavari and Kistna deltas. Some of these channels interfered with the sources of irrigation to the lands of certain landholders or interfered with flow of water to the tanks which formerly supplied water for irrigation to such lands. The proceedings of the Board of Revenue, dated the 11th February 1898, contain the following:—

"When the system of anicut irrigation was introduced into the Godavari and Kistna deltas, Government allowed free irrigation from the anicuts to all lands which, owing to the construction of the several anicut channels and other works connected therewith, were found to have lost, wholly or partially, their pre-existing sources of supply (Government Order No. 101, Revenue, dated 16th January 1864)."

This shows that about 1864, the Government offered to allow free irrigation from the anicuts to such lands as were deprived of their former sources of supply. The owners of such lands who did not enter into litigation with the Government in order to prevent Government fom interfering with the old sources of supply and who took the water supplied by the Government from the Government anicuts, must be taken to have accepted the offer of Government as satisfaction of their claims against Government. The fourth paragraph of the plaint in this case says that the Government supplied the plaintiff's land with water from the year 1863 to Fasli 1900 and that the plaintiff accepted such water. There was, in my opinion, therefore, a clear, completed engagement between the Government and the plaintiff set out in the plaint and hence the plaint shows a good cause of action. Similar suits to this were instituted by the proprietrix of the village of Ravipadu, the proprietor of Chinchinada and by two other proprietors in 1902 in the District Court of Godavari. Mr. Hamnett, the learned District Judge, who decided those suits, acted upon the Government Order of 1864 and found an implied engagement between the Government and the proprietors of those estates and gave effect to the engagement as against the Government. On appeal to the High Court by the Government, it was contended as the very first ground in the appeal memorandum [see the appeal memorandum in Secretary of State v. Kameswaramma (3)] that the District Judge erred in law in finding that there was an implied contract between the plaintiff and the Government to allow free irrigation for the extent of land, the irrigation sources of which had been cut off by the anicut works. The learned Judges (Benson and Miller, JJ.), who decided that appeal and connected Appeals Nos. 183 and 184 of 1904, saw nothing in that contention and begin their judgment at once with the sentence: "The question for decision in this appeal is in effect, what is the extent of land in the village of Ravipad which was irrigable from the irrigation sources existing before the construction of the Godavari anicut irrigation system?" Following the decision in those appeals, we must in this case set aside the decisions of the lower Courts which held that the plaint discloses no cause of action. I may add that in Secretary of State v. Kameswaramma(3) it was assumed that, if there was an engagement between the Government and the proprietor, that engagement was to supply water free of tax on the extent of land which was irrigable from the irrigation works existing just before the construction of the Godavari anicut irrigation works, and not merely on the lands which were irrigable as wet lands at the time of the Permanent Settlement. The contention of the learned Government Pleader before us, that the engagement mentioned in Act VII of 1865, section 1 (a), relates to the engagement at the time of the Permanent Settlement, cannot be accepted in the face of the decision in Secretary of State v. Kameswaramma (3). It seems unreasonable to hold that after a landholder has improved his zemindari and brought between 1802 and 1864 a large extent of land under wet cultivation by improving his irrigation sources, when the Government by their new anicut system cut off the sources of irrigation supply to those large extents of lands, they intended to arrange with the zemindar to supply him water free of charge only to the wet area which existed in 1802, but not to the area which had begun to be permanently cultivated as wet at the time when they constructed the anicut channels. The Government Order of 1864 and the Board's Proceedings of 1898 already referred to are against the contention that the Government did not undertake liability to supply water free to all those lands whose then existing irrigation sources were interfered with by the Government's constructions. In the result I agree in the order proposed by my learned brother.

(3) Appeal No. 182 of 1904.

Case remanded.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS CASE No. 397 OF 1914.

November 23, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chamier and Mr. Justice Piggott.

ANUPA KUER—DECREE-HOLDER—APPLICANT

versus

ACHCHAIHAR SINGH AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Declaratory decree—Revenue Court decree allowing maintenance, enforcement of—Decree—Execution proceedings or suit in Civil Court.

A decree passed by a Revenue Court in accordance with an award entitled a woman to receive a fixed sum as maintenance in half-yearly instalments and provided that if the maintenance was not paid, she might enforce its payment by taking proceedings in a competent Court:

Held, that the decree was merely a declaratory decree as to the right to receive maintenance, and could be enforced by a suit in the Civil Court, and not by an application for execution of the decree.

Reference submitted by the Officiating District Officer of Benares, as per his letter No. 102, dated 13th June 1914.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Applicant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Gokul Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

ORDER.—A suit for ejectment brought by Achchaihar Singh and others against Anupa Kuer in a Revenue Court came up to this Court in second appeal and was settled in accordance with an arbitration award. The award provided that a decree for possession of the land should be passed in favour of Achchaihar Singh and others and that Anupa Kuer should receive from Achchaihar Singh and others 11 maunds odd of grain and Rs. 14 in cash by way of maintenance to be paid in half yearly instalments. Anupa Kuer has now applied to the Revenue Court to execute so much of the decree mentioned above as relates to the maintenance payable to her. The Revenue Court, being doubtful whether it has jurisdiction to entertain this application, has referred this case to this Court under section 195 of the Tenancy Act. The award which is incorporated in the decree of this Court provides that if the maintenance due to Anupa Kuer is not paid she may enforce payment by taking proceedings in a competent Court (ba charajoi adalat majaz hasb-i-zabita). It seems to us that the persons who drew up the award knew that there would be difficulty in executing a decree for maintenance in a Revenue Court and, therefore, instead of providing that enforcement of the decree should be by proceedings in the execution department, they provided that Anupa Kuer should take proceedings in a competent Court. We regard this portion of the decree as merely declaratory of Anupa Kuer's right to receive maintenance. In our opinion she should bring a regular suit in the Civil Court to enforce her right to maintenance. Section 195, sub-section (3), of the Tenancy Act provides: "On any such reference being made, the High Court may order the Court either to proceed with the case, or to return the plaint, application or appeal for presentation to such other Court as it may declare to be competent to try the same." It seems to us that we should not take either of these courses. In our opinion the application for execution should be dismissed. With this expression of opinion we direct that the papers be returned to the Court which has made this reference.

Papers returned.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 121B OF 1913.

January 27, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Mittra, Offg. A. J. C.

RAMCHANDRA—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

Musammat RADHA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Alienation by widow of husband's estate—Interest—Dam dupat, rule of.

As according to Hindu Law recovery of more than double the sum lent on interest is not allowable, the payment of more than double the principal is not a pious duty. Therefore, in Berar where the rule of dam dupat is in force, a Hindu widow is not justified in alienating her husband's property for the payment of a sum over and above double the principal.

Appeal against the decree of the Second Additional District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, dated the 31st March 1913, modifying that of the Mansif, first Class, Amraoti, dated the 30th April 1912.

The Hon'ble Sir Bipin Krishna Bose and r. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

MMr. F. H. Dillon, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the daughter of one Ganaji, whose widow, Musammat Sarja, having re-married in 1904, the plaintiff became entitled to Ganaji's estate. On the 14th September 1889 Ganaji had executed a mortgage-deed in favour of the defendant for Rs. 300 carrying interest at the rate of one rupee eight annas per cent. per mensem. On the 3rd January 1900 Sarja sold the mortgaged field for Rs. 926. It is not dispated that there was legal necessity for rupees seventy borrowed by Sarja herself. As to the balance of Rs. 856, this was the amount due under Ganaji's mortgage-deed. The Courts below have held that as under the rule of dam dupat, which is enforced by the Courts in Berar, only rupees six hundred could have been claimed by the mortgagee, there was no necessity for re-paying Rs. 856 arithmetically due under the mortgage-deed. The plaintiff has been given a decree for possession of the field sold subject to the payment of Rs. 670. The defendant has filed this appeal. The main ground urged is that the widow was justified in paying the full amount due under her husband's mortgage, irrespective of the rule of dam dupat. The argument is based on the analogy of a widow's power to pay a barred debt.

The following cases have been cited before me on behalf of the appellant :—Kondappa v. Subba (1); Chimnaji v. Dinkar (2); Udai Chunder v. Ashutosh Das (3). All these cases recognise that a Hindu widow may alienate property inherited from her deceased husband in order to pay his debts, even though they are barred by the law of limitation, for it is a pious duty on her part to pay such debts. She is also not bound to take advantage of the provisions of a Statute, like the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act, which might enable her to evade the obligations contracted by her husband. Bhau Babaji v. Gopala (4). But these cases do not appear to me to be in point. Here we are dealing with a rule laid down by the Hindu sages themselves limiting the amount recoverable under an agreement to pay interest—not

(1) 13 M. 189.
(2) 11 B. 320.
(3) 21 C. 190.
(4) 11 B. 325.

THOMAS G. G. FRENCH JULIA FRENCH.

an artificial rule created by the Legislature which leaves untouched the moral or religious obligation to pay the debt. What we have to find out is whether the payment of a sum over and above double the amount of the principal is a pious duty on the part of the debtor or his widow. No text expressly bearing on the question has been cited before me, and I am, therefore, not prepared to take a different view from that taken by the Courts below.

In Mandlik's Translation of the Mayukha (Edition of 1880, at page 104), the rule of dam dupat is thus explained. In the first place, there is the following quotation from Manu (Chapter VIII, Sloka 151): "Interest on money received at once (not month by month, or day by day, as it ought) must never be more than double the debt (that is more than the amount of the principal paid at [one and] the same time)." "But in any one transaction where it is realised at various times, more than the highest (allowable) interest may be levied according to Vijnaneswara (Mitakshara, Chapter II, l. 18, page 2) and the other Sampradayikas." In other words, recovery of more than double the principal is not allowable, according to Hindu Law. It is a fair inference that the debtor commits no sin if he re-pays no more than what is allowed under the text of Manu. It must be remembered that the text of Brihaspati relating to the consequences of a debtor not paying his debt speaks only of the sum lent and not of interest, and much less of interest beyond what is allowed by the text of Manu. That text of Brihaspati has been translated as follows :—"He who having incurred a sum lent or the like, does not re-pay it to the owner, will be born hereafter in his creditor's house, a slave, a servant, a woman or a quadruped." On the whole the appellant has failed to make out that the widow was justified in alienating her husband's property for payment of interest in excess of what was legally recoverable under the text of Manu in Berar.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REFERENCE No. 6 OF 1914.

August 28, 1914.

Present:—Sir Basil Scott, KT., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Davar and Mr. Justice Beaman.

THOMAS G. G. FRENCH—PLAINTIFF

versus

JULIA FRENCH—DEFENDANT

Bombay Civil Courts Act (XIV of 1869), s. 16—Suits under Divorce Act for dissolution of marriage, whether District Judge competent to refer to Assistant Judge for decision—Nature of such suits—Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 10.

Section 16 of the Bombay Civil Courts Act does not authorize a District Judge to refer for trial to an Assistant Judge suits under the Divorce Act for dissolution of marriage. Such suits cannot appropriately be described as applications under a special Act. They are suits, but not suits the subject-matter of which is capable of valuation.

Civil reference made by the Assistant Judge of Dharwar.

JUDGMENT.—This is a decree passed by the Assistant Judge of Dharwar for dissolution of marriage under the Divorce Act. The Assistant Judge presumed that he had jurisdiction, believing that the suit had been referred to him for trial by the District Judge under section 16 of the Bombay Civil Courts Act. We have referred to the District Judge and we find that, as a matter of fact, the case was not referred by him to the Assistant Judge, but it seems to have been sent to the latter by the Clerk of the Court, as though it were a mere matter of administrative routine, and the question of referring it under section 16 was never brought before the District Judge at all.

We are of opinion, however, that even if it had been referred by the District Judge to the Assistant Judge, the latter would have had no power to deal with the case under section 16 of the Bombay Civil Courts Act ; for though section 16 empowers the District Judge to refer to the Assistant Judge suits, where the subject-matter does not exceed a certain amount or value, and applications or references under special Acts, it does not, in our opinion, authorise him to refer suits for dissolution of marriage, for we think that such suits cannot be appropriately described as applications under a special Act. They are suits (see sections 4, 6, 7, 8 and 15 of the Divorce Act), but not suits the subject-matter of which is capable of valuation. Being of opinion that section 16 does not authorise any reference to an Assistant Judge to decide a suit under the Divorce Act, we must decline to confirm the decre.

Under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, we set aside the decree which has been passed and remand the case to the District Judge for trial.

Decree set aside; Case remanded.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 226 OF 1913.

November 4, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Lindsay, J. C.

SURAJPAL SINGH—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

GAJRAJ SINGH AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Separation of one member—Jointness of remaining members—Presumption—Burden of proof.

Once it is admitted that one of the members of a joint Hindu family separated, the legal presumption is that there is a complete separation between all the members of the family, and the person who asserts that any members of the family remained joint after the separation, must prove his allegation.

Balabux v. Rukhmabai, 30 C. 725; 5 Bom. L. R. 469; 7 C. W. N. 642; 30 I. A. 130 (P. C.), referred to.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated 28th April 1913, reversing that of the Munsif, Kunda, dated 14th January 1913.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Syed Ali Muhammad, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—This appeal appears to me to be without merit and must be dismissed. The defendant-appellant, Surajpal Singh, was the defendant in the suit which was brought by the two plaintiffs, Gajraj Singh and Mata Bhikh Singh, for possession of a half share in certain property left by one Sampat Singh. In order to understand the nature of the claim it must be stated that there were four brothers, Jagrup Singh, Beni Singh, Bandhu Singh and Sampat Singh. The two plaintiffs in the case are the sons of Jagrup Singh. The defendant, Surajpal Singh, is the grandson of Bandhu Singh. The case set up by the plaintiffs was that Sampat Singh being a separated member of the family, after his death without issue they were entitled to one-half of the property left by him. Surajpal Singh defended the suit. He put up a two-fold defence. In paragraph 7 of the written statement it was said that Beni Singh one of the four brothers, had separated 30 years ago, that Jagrup Singh, another of the brothers, had separated 25 years ago and that Bandau Singh and Sampat Singh, had remained joint. The case, therefore, in this aspect was that Surajpal Singh was entitled to the property of Sampat Singh by right of survivorship. He also set up another case, that he had been adopted by Sampat Singh. The case of adoption failed in the Courts of first instance and was not argued in the lower Appellate Court, nor is it before me for discussion. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the finding that Bandhu Singh and Sampat Singh constituted a joint family. In appeal the Subordinate Judge found that defendant had failed to prove that Bandhu Singh and Sampat Singh were joint. He found that there was evidence to support the plaintiffs' case that Sampat Singh's property was separate. The decree of the first Court was, therefore, reversed and the claim of the plaintiffs was decreed, except with respect to a portion of some house-property. The defendant comes here in second appeal and the correctness of the conclusions of the lower Appellate Court is contested on a variety of grounds.

It is said that there is no evidence on the record of any actual partition ever having taken place between Bandhu Singh and Sampat Singh or any agreement to separate from each other. It is also said that the lower Appellate Court has misunderstood the law as to separation of a joint family. Other points are raised relating to particular items of evidence to which it is said the lower Appellate Court did not devote due attention and to which the learned Subordinate Judge did not attribute the proper weight. On the pleadings the case seems to me to be a perfectly clear one. The defendant, Surajpal Singh, in the seventh paragraph of his written statement having admitted that two brothers of this family had separated, it lay upon him to prove that the other two brothers, Bandhu Singh and Sampat Singh, remained members of a joint family. That this is a correct statement of the law seems to me to be proved by the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balabux v. Rakhmabai (1). At page 736 of the report it is said: "It appears to their Lordships that there is no presumption when one co-parcener separates from the others, that the latter remain united. In many cases it may be necessary, in order to ascertain the share of the outgoing member, to fix the shares which the other co-parceners are or would be entitled to, and in this sense the separation of one is said to be a virtual separation of all. And their Lordships think that an agreement amongst the remaining members of a joint family to remain united.....must be proved like any other fact." On the pleadings as I have referred to them, it lay upon the defendant to prove the case which he was setting up, namely that Bandhu Singh and Sampat Singh had remained joint or had become joint by an agreement after the separation of the two brothers. The lower Appellate Court has stated that the defendant has failed to prove this fact and this being a finding of fact, it is binding on me here in a second appeal. I agree with what has been said in the memorandum of appeal that the Subordinate Judge has not taken a correct view of the Hindu law. In his judgment he states as follows:—" The respondent's Pleader argued that it was not necessary that if one of the members of the family separated all the members will be considered to have separated, and referred to certain rulings, but no one disputes this proposition." This statement of the law does not appear to me to be accurate. From the observations of their Lordships to which I have referred, it seems that once it is admitted that one of the members of the joint family separated, the legal presumption is that there is a complete separation between all the members of the family and the person who asserts that any members of the family remained joint after the separation, must prove his allegation. I have no doubt, therefore, that the decision of the lower Appellate Court in this case is perfectly correct, although perhaps I am not in agreement with all the reasons which the learned Subordinate Judge has given for his decision.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 30 C. 725 (P. C.); 5 Bom. L. R. 469; 7 C. W. N. 642; 30 I. A. 130.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 477 OF 1911.

August 31, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Stanyon, A. J. C.

KHEMCHAND—PLAINTIFT—APPELLANT

versus

MALLOO—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 58 (b), 59, 100—Attestation—Simple mortgage—Charge—Distinction between the two—Deed of mortgage not completed for want of formalities, whether can be used to establish charge—'Rehn,' use of the word, whether sufficient guide to distinguish between mortgage and charge.

The execution of a deed creating a charge can be duly proved by the witnesses who signed it upon the executant's personal acknowledgment of his signature thereon, but such a witnessing is not the attestation of a mortgage-deed within the meaning of section 59, Transfer of Property Act.

The distinction between a simple mortgage and a charge lies in the fact that the mortgage imports, while the charge does not import, an agreement, express or implied, governing the disposal of the property in some way on default being made in payment of the debt.

Where a person enters into a transaction involving a particular statutory obligation, the presumption is that he has impliedly agreed to submit to that obligation.

The statutory obligation of the debtor under a simple mortgage is exactly the same as it is under a charge, namely, an obligation, in default of payment, to have the security sold and the proceeds applied in payment of the debt. The debtor in each case must be presumed to know of his liability as an element of the transaction he enters upon, whether it be a simple mortgage or a charge. But it is necessary to distinguish between an implied agreement to sell and a mere tacit acceptance of a contingent statutory liability to the sale of a security, inasmuch as a statutory obligation to have a security sold in a certain eventuality is not the same thing as a transfer of a right to sell that security on the happening of that eventuality. The form of realising the debt from the security, namely, by sale thereof, is necessarily the same, but where there is no transfer by agreement of the right to sell, that right does not come into existence at the time of the contract. In other words, in the case of a simple mortgage the right to sell the security on default of payment of the debt is created when the mortgage is effected, while in the case of a charge the statutory right and obligation to have the security sold arises only when default in payment of the debt is made and, not till then.

KHEMCHAND v. MALLOO.

Where a document is in terms a deed of mortgage but has not been completed by proper attestation or other formality prescribed by law as indispensable for a valid mortgage, the instrument cannot be used to establish a charge. But where an instrument embodies the true contract between the parties, and is in terms an instrument which only creates a charge, then an erroneous belief of the parties that they have created a simple mortgage, and their conduct in calling it a mortgage and having it attested in that belief, would not affect the true nature and validity of the transaction. In such a case the failure to effect an attestation in the form required for a mortgage would not obstruct the legal enforcement of the charge.

As in vernacular the word 'rehn' is used to denote every form of transaction in which immoveable property is bound as security for the payment of a debt, the name given to a document by the parties is not a sufficient guide as to whether the document creates a mortgage or a charge.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 9th August 1911, reversing that of the Munsif, Hoshangabad, dated the 14th October 1909.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Sir Bipin Krishna Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This case raises the difficulty of distinguishing between a simple mortgage in which there is no express agreement of the mortgagee's right to sell, and a charge as defined in section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. This difficulty is enhanced by the circumstance that the difference between a mortgage and a charge, adopted by the Indian Legislature from English Law, is so little known to the people that no word can be found in the vernacular to signify this technical use of the word charge. Every transaction whereby immoveable property is made security for the payment of money is called by the common name of rahn. It is customary in our Courts, and generally, to translate this word as "mortgage," but there is no other vernacular word which is in use, or which would be likely to be used, to denote a charge under section 100 aforesaid created by agreement of parties.

The document, upon which the present suit is based, is signed by two witnesses whose signatures have been proved. But it has also been proved that these persons did not see Tika touch the pen of the scribe in token of the mark appended thereto being his signature of execution, but merely witnessed his subsequent acknowledgment of execution. In Pandurang v. Balaji (1), it was held by this Court that such a witnessing did not amount to the attestation required by section 52, Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

* * * * * * *

The facts being now beyond dispute, the only questions before me are—

(1) Was the attestation, as made, valid for the purposes of section 59, Transfer of Property Act, 1882?

(2) Is the security, created by the deed in suit, one by way of simple mortgage, as defined in section 58 (b), or a charge, as defined in section 100, of the said enactment? and

(3) If the parties intended to effect a simple mortgage, can the transaction be treated as a charge upon the plaintiff's failure to establish its validity as a mortgage?

With regard to the first of these questions. The case of Pandurang v. Balaji (1) has been the accepted law in these Provinces since 1901, and it was expressly affirmed by this Court in Jhama v. Deobux (2) after considering the conflict of opinions in other High Courts. Under such circumstances I must decline to disturb that law, and I accordingly hold with the lower Appellate Court that the attestation in this case was not such as is required by section 59, Transfer of Property Act, 1882. Therefore, if the deed does not create a charge expressly by its terms, or as a result of the failure of attestation in an intended mortgage, then this appeal must fail.

I now come to the more difficult question whether the transaction embodied in the deed in suit is a simple mortgage or a charge.

In my remanding judgment abovementioned I wrote as follows :—

"The lower Appellate Court has yet to come to a legal finding on the question whether or not there was a valid attestation of the deed which purports to be, and, if duly completed and registered, undoubtedly is, an instrument of simple mortgage."

(1) 14 C. P. L. R. 142.

(2) 2 N. L. R. 10.

KHEMCHAND v. MALLOO.

This observation was more or less obiter, and, in any case, upon a fuller consideration of the matter than was given or was necessary for the purposes of my remand order, I am of opinion that it was incorrect.

In section 58 (b), Act IV of 1882, we have the following definition :—

"Where, without delivering possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgagor binds himself personally to pay the mortgage-money, and agrees, expressly or impliedly, that, in the event of his failing to pay according to his contract, the mortgagee shall have a right to cause the mortgaged property to be sold and the proceeds of sale to be applied, so far as may be necessary, in payment of the mortgage money, the transaction is called a simple mortgage * *."

So much of section 100 of the same enactment as is now relevant runs thus :—

"Where immoveable property of one person is by act of parties * * * * * made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property."

In the Commentaries on the Indian Transfer of Property Act by Messrs. Shephard and Brown, 7th Edition, at page 369, and the Law of Transfer in British India by Dr. Gour, 3rd Edition, at page 1031, this distinction between a mortgage and a charge is stated to lie in the fact that a mortgage imports, and a charge does not import, the transfer of an interest in immoveable property, and support for this view is claimed to exist in some of the decided cases in England and India. But, with due respect, I am doubtful if the words as to the transfer of an interest have any distinctive significance in connection with mortgages. Where a charge is created by agreement between the parties, it would be difficult to understand that there was no transfer of any interest in the property bound as security. It seems to me that the answer to the question mortgage or charge turns in India upon whether there is, or is not, an agreement, express or implied, governing the disposal of the property in some way which comes into existence on default being made in payment of the mortgage-money. In every form of transfer there is a transfer of all or part of the transferor's interest in the property transferred. I have no doubt that the definition is worded as we read it in section 58 so as to distinguish it from the nature and effect of a mortgage under English law. But, in order to be a mortgage, the transaction must in terms satisfy the requirements of section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act. That is to say, that it must govern the disposal of the mortgaged property in one of the several ways described in that section. If it is not either a simple mortgage, a mortgage by conditional sale, a usufructuary mortgage, an English mortgage, or a combination of two or more of these forms, then it is not a mortgage at all. The distinctive characteristics of a simple mortgage are—

(1) non-delivery of possession of the mortgaged property; and

(2) an agreement, express or implied, that, in default of due payment, the mortgagee may sell the mortgaged property and apply the proceeds in payment.

In his said work at page 1034, Dr. Gour has written, "Of all charges, those created by the act of parties are most liable to be mistaken for simple mortgages." And the learned author goes on to say that though it is evident that the Legislature intended to discriminate between the two classes of securities in giving effect to this intention, the Court have often made a distinction without a difference. He, however, concedes that in India it is sometimes difficult to define "when a mortgage ends and a charge begins." This is not quite consistent, however, with the remark at page 1031, that section 100 "now draws a clear distinction between a 'mortgage' and a 'charge.'" In Gobinda Chandra Pal v. Dwarka Nath Pal (3) (the judgment in which can be recognized as the handiwork of that well-known legal author, Caspersz, J.), the following passage occurs at page 843:

"The distinction between a mortgage and a charge is keenly appreciated by an English lawyer, though the inclusion of simple mortgages in the definitions given in section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act has somewhat obliterated the distinction in India. The result has been a divergence of opinion between the High Courts—Khemji Bhagvandas Gujar v. Rama (4), Motiram v. Vital (5),

(3) 35 C. 837; 12 C. W. N. 849; 7 C. L. J. 492.
(4) 10 B. 519.
(5) 13 B. 90.

KHEMCHAND v. MALLOO.

Rangasami v. Muthukumarappa (6), Nabin Chand Naskar v. Raj Coomar Sarkar (7), Pran Nath Sarkar v. Jadu Nath Saha (8), Kishan Lal v. Ganga Ram (9). A charge, which owes its existence to the operation of law, may be easily discovered, such as a rent charge. A charge created for payment of a legacy or annuity or maintenance money by a Will or trust-deed is not difficult to distinguish from a mortgage, but the difficulty that arises in cases of liens created by other acts of parties, specially for payment of debts, must be solved in each case from the terms and expressions used in the instruments creating them and the formalities actually observed in execution. If an instrument is expressly stated to be a mortgage, and gives the power of realization of the mortgage-money by sale of the mortgaged premises, it should be held to be a mortgage. The fact that the necessary formalities of due execution were wanting would not convert the mortgage into a charge. If, on the other hand, the instrument is not on the face of it a mortgage, but simply creates a lien, or directs the realization of money from a particular property, without reference to sale, it creates a charge. Tancred v. Delagoa Bay and East Africa Railway Company (10)."

These remarks appear to me to be a correct statement of the law, subject to this that the name given to the transaction will not be a sufficient guide where the document is written in a vernacular language which makes a customary use of the single word rahn to denote every form of transaction in which immoveable property is bound as security for the payment of a debt.

The distinguishing characteristics of a simple mortgage seem to be those already stated, namely, the non-delivery of possession and the agreement to sell. Where the agreement to sell is expressly stated there is no difficulty. The definition, however, extends to the case of an implied agreement; and this is unfortunate for the cause of clearness, because where a person enters into a transaction involving a particular statutory obligation, it is an easy presumption that he has impliedly agreed to submit thereto. Now the statutory obligation of the debtor under a simple mortgage is exactly the same as it is under a charge, namely, an obligation, in default of payment, to have the security sold and the proceeds applied in payment of the debt. The debtor in each case must be presumed to know of this liability as an element of the transaction he enters upon, whether it be a simple mortgage or a charge. If the mere fact that he possesses this knowledge when he makes his contract, is to justify the conclusion that he impliedly agrees to the sale of the security, then every charge for the purpose of securing a debt is also a simple mortgage, and there can be no transaction between a debtor and creditor of the kind dealt with by section 100, Transfer of Property Act. I do not think that this can have been the intention of the Legislature and, therefore, I am of opinion that it is necessary to distinguish between an implied agreement to sell and a mere tacit acceptance of a contingent statutory liability to a sale of the security. That is to say, that the terms of the agreement between the parties must contain words which point with certainty to the fact that the parties had the sale of the security in default of payment of the debt present before their minds, when making the contract, as a part and consequence thereof. The mere knowledge by the one of his right and by the other of his obligation created by Statute will not suffice. There must be agreement, even though such agreement may be practically superfluous. A statutory obligation to have a security sold in a certain eventuality is not the same thing as a transfer of a right to sell that security made by a mortgagor to a mortgagee. The form of realizing the debt from the security, namely, by sale thereof, is necessarily the same, but where there is no transfer by agreement of the right to sell, that right does not come into existence at the time of the contract. A subsequent transferee of the security, though taking bona fide for valuable consideration, will be postponed to a prior mortgagee to whom a right of sale has already been transferred; but he will not be bound by any mere charge, in which there is nothing but a statutory right and obligation still to arise, to have the security sold: Kishan Lal v. Ganga Ram (9).

(6) 10 M. 509.
(7) 9 C. W. N. 1001.
(8) 32 C. 729; 9 C. W. N. 697.
(9) 13 A. 28; A. W. N. (1890) 216.
(10) (1889) 23 Q. B. D. 239; 58 L. J. Q. B. 459; 61 L. T. 229; 38 W. R. 15.

Applying this reasoning to the present case, it is clear that the document* sued on embodies nothing but a mere lien on the property mentioned therein. It expressly contemplates the possibility of a failure to pay. In a simple mortgage the remedy for such a default would be the grant of a power of sale, expressly, e. g., "You may sell the mortgaged property", or impliedly, e.g. "I will pay out of my own pocket any balance which the sale-proceeds of the mortgaged property may fail to satisfy:" Datto Dudheshvar v. Vithu (11). But the terms in the document now before me are these :—

"I mortgage my absolute occupancy field * * * * and lay down * * * that the same shall stand mortgaged so long as the money is not paid off, * * * If re-payment is not made at the time sitpulated, the interest due shall be added to the principal and I will pay compound interest year after year until liquidation."

I do not think that any agreement that the creditor may sell the land can be implied from these or any words in the deed. I, therefore, hold that the deed in suit creates a charge, and that the execution thereof has been duly proved by the witnesses who signed that deed, upon the personal acknowledgement of his signature thereon made to them by the executant.

In this view of the matter it is not necessary to decide the third of the questions postulated by me above. Nevertheless it may be well to do so. I am of opinion that where a document is in terms a deed of mortgage, but has not been completed by proper attestation or other formality prescribed by law as indispensable for a valid mortgage, the instrument cannot be used to establish a charge. I concur generally in the view propounded in Pran Nath Sarkar v. Jadu Nath Saha (8) and followed in Roy Zuddi Sheikh v. Kali Nath Mookerjee (12); Samoo Patter v. Abdul Sammad Saheb (13)and Narayan v. Lakshmandas (14). But where an instrument embodies the true contract between the parties, and is in terms an instrument which only creates a charge, as defined in section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, then an erroneous belief of the parties that they had created a simple mortgage, and their conduct in calling it a mortgage and having it attested in that belief, would not, in my opinion, affect the true nature and validity of the transaction. In such a case the failure to effect an attestation in the form required for a mortgage would not obstruct the legal enforcement of the charge. This view is in accordance with the principle laid down in Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj Koonweree (15). In the persent case, the plaintiffs appear to have been under the impression that the deed sued on created a simple mortgage, and they claimed to enforce it as such. It so happens that the relief claimed by them, namely, the sale of the security to satisfy the debt, was correctly demanded, being also the legal relief on a charge. But as they have fought the case on erroneous lines, I do not think they should get more than their costs in the first Court.

For the above reasons I allow the appeal, and reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court, I restore the decree of the first Court. I extend the dies datus (11) 20 B. 408 (F. B.).

"* (This) document—a mortgage-deed—(has been) executed in favour of Khemchand, son of Parasram, and Nandlal, son of Khemchand, Malis, residents of Sangakheda Kalan, Tehsil and District Hoshangabad, by Tika, son of Ganesh, caste Mali, resident of Sangakheda, Tehsil and District Hoshangabad, to the following effect: On accounts being made of a previous bond, and after credit given for re-payments, a balance of Rs. 80 British currency has been found due. I will pay interest on this at Rs. 2 per cent. per month. For this money I mortgage my absolute occupancy field No. 60, area 1·98 (acre), rent Rs. 6, situated within Patti 4 of Sangakheda, Tehsil and District Hoshangabad, and lay down in writing that the same shall stand mortgaged so long as the money is not paid off. The agreement as to re-payment is that I will pay up the principal, together with the interest, on Baisakh Sudi 15th, S. 1960. If re-payment is not made at the time stipulated, the interest due shall be added to the principal, and I will pay compound interest year after year untill liquidation. I will take receipts for (such) payments (as) I may make. I will get no credit without a receipt. This bond executed by me is genuine. Mitti Aghan Sudi 11th, S. 1958, dated 22nd December 1901.

"Mark of Tika, son of Ganesh Mali, of Sangakheda (Mark made by touching the pen).

"Written by the pen of Makhulal, Mukhtiar of Sangakheda Kalan, at the instance of Tika Mali."

(12) 33 C. 985; 4 C. L. J. 219.

(13) 31 M. 337.

(14) 7 Bom. L. R. 934.

(15) 6 M. I. A. 393; 18 W. R. 81 note; Sevestre 253*n*; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 29; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 552; 19 E. R. 147.

o the 15th February 1913. Each party will bear his own costs as incurred in the two Appellate Courts.

Appeal allowed.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 10 OF 1914.

September 4, 1914.

Present:—Sir Basil Scott, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Hayward.

SITARAM MORAPPA NAWALE—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

SHRI KHANDOBA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act (XVII of 1879), ss. 3 (w), 10, 53—Suit falling under s. 3 (w)—Revision, who can entertain.

Against the decision of a first Court in a suit falling under section 3 (w) of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, a First Class Subordinate Judge cannot entertain a revision, though a District Judge can do so, under section 53 of the Act.

Second appeal from the order passed by the First Class Subordinate Judge at Satara, in Appeal No. 345 of 1912, reversing the decree passed by and remanding the suit to the Subordinate Judge at Karad, in Suit No. 1883 of 1910.

Mr. M. V. Bhat, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. R. Gharpure, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit falling under section 3 (w) of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. That being so, according to the provisions of section 10 no appeal lay from the decision of the first Court. The appeal, however, has been entertained and disposed of by Mr. Rahurkar, the first Class Subordinate Judge. We think it is clear, having regard to the terms of section 53, that the first Class Subordinate Judge was not authorised to pass any decree or order in a matter which could be entertained under section 53, and if it were necessary to pass any order in revision, such order should have been passed by the District Judge. The most we can do here is to set aside the decree of the first Class Subordinate Judge and remit the application of the appellant from the decision of the first Court to the District Judge, who may, if he thinks fit, treat it as an application in revision under section 53, and pass such order as he thinks necessary under the circumstances. Costs to be dealt with by the District Judge.

Decree set aside; Application remitted.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 518 OF 1912.

October 27, 1913.

Present:—Mr. Mittra, A. J. C.

CHOWBE JAIGOPAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

RAMESHWAR—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Lambardar—Agent—Power to consent to transfer of occupancy holding—Partition proceedings, effect of instituting.

The mere institution of partition proceedings does not put an end to the customary authority of the Lambardar, as representative of the proprietary body, to consent to a transfer by an absolute occupancy tenant of his holding.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 8th July 1912, confirming that of the Munsif, Harda, dated the 13th May 1912.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. R. Pandit, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff has a 5-annas 4-pies share in Mouza Bairagarh and one Sadaseo was owner of the remaining 10-annas 8-pies and lambardar. On the 31st July 1908 the plaintiff applied to the Revenue Authorities for partition of the village. The partition was sanctioned in January 1911 and it took effect from the 1st June 1911. One Gangaram, an absolute occupancy tenant, sold his holding to the defendant on the 31st May 1910. The registered sale-deed bears the attestation of the lambarbar Sadaseo. The plaintiff sues for possession of the holding on the ground that the transfer in favour of the defendant is void as against the plaintiff. The Courts below have dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the transfer was with the consent of the lambardar. The plaintiff has filed this second appeal. The first point taken is that the institution of the partition proceedings put an end to the customary authority of the lambardar. There is no suggestion of fraud or collusion against the lambardar, nor is it the plaintiff's case that the consent to the transfer was improperly given, having regard to the nazarana taken by the lambardar. The plaintiff's sole contention is that he was not consulted. The plaintiff never gave any notice revoking the authority of the lambardar to represent the proprietary body. No ruling has been cited to show that the mere insititution of partition proceedings would put end to the powers of the lambardar. At the date when the consent was given, it was not known to whose share the plot would go. The fact that the plot is now in the plaintiff's patti does not entitle him to repudiate the act of the lambardar, unless his customary agency is ipso facto determined by the institution of the partition proceedings. Such a contention is opposed to the ruling of this Court in Ram Chandra v. Tatya (1), where it was held that even after a partition the lambardar does represent the proprietary body for certain purposes. The second ground taken is that the consent to the transfer was a dealing with the property within the meaning of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is unnecessary to consider this point, as on the view I have taken the dealing with the property was one by the plaintiff's agent and it cannot be questioned as against the present defendants. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 19 Ind. Cas. 549; 9 N. L. R. 46.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 30 OF 1912.

September 7, 1914.

Present:—Sir Basil Scott, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Hayward.

RAMDAS GOPALDAS SADHU—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

BALDEVDAS KAUSHALYADAS—DEFENDANT NO. 1—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Succession—Sanyasi—Bairagis, whether can be classed as Sanyasis.

The declared heir of a Sanyasi, under the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law, is a virtuous pupil.

It is doubtful whether the Bairagis can be classed as Sanyasis, because the order of Bairagis is not confined to the members of the twice-born castes.

First appeal from the decision of the Additional first Class Subordinate Judge, at Ahmedabad, in Suit No. 815 of 1910.

Mr. I. N. Mehta (with him Mr. N. N. Mehta), for the Appellant.

Mr. Setlur (with him Mr. N. K. Mehta), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession from the 1st defendant of certain temple properties at Dakore, claiming to be the Pitrai Chela of the deceased Bajrangdas, who was a Mahant of the Dakore temple. The first defendant disputed his claim and called upon the plaintiff to prove the claim he asserted. The parties, it is not disputed, are Bairagis belonging to the sect of Vaishnavas of the Ramanandi class. It has been laid down in Ram Dass Byragee v. Gunga Dass (1) that in that class of Bairagis, on the demise of the superior of the Math, when there is no Chela to succeed, the heads of the Maths ordinarily elect a successor from pupils of some other teacher. (Compare replies 39 and 40 relating to Bairagis, in Borrodaile's Caste and Customs in Gujerat). That has not been done in the present case, nor has the plaintiff proved the existence of any special custom relating to the Dakore Math. It is contended on his behalf that Bajrangdas under whom he claims was a Sanyasi, and that he is entitled by virtue of a certain passage in the Mitakshara, Chapter II, section 8, paragraph 2, to succeed to the property of that Sanyasi. The passage is as follows:—"The heir as to the property of a hermit, of an ascetic, and of a student in theology are, in order (that is, in the reverse order), the preceptor, the virtuous pupil, and the spiritual brother belonging to the same hermitage," and the three following paragraphs make it clear that the expression "in the reverse order" means that the heir of a student in theology is a preceptor, the heir of an ascetic is a virtuous pupil, and the heir of an hermit is a spiritual brother belonging to the same hermitage. But as I understand the argument which has been addressed to us on behalf of the appellant, it is contended that the plaintiff is a spiritual brother of the deceased Bajrangdas, but the deceased Bajrangdas was not a hermit, and, therefore, that class of heirs cannot be resorted to in the present case. Putting the position of Bajrangdas at its highest he was a Sanyasi and, therefore, the declared heir of the Sanyasi under the Mitakshara would be a virtuous pupil. But the plaintiff was not a pupil of Bajrangdas, therefore, he does not take as his heir according to the Mitakshara. It is, however, extremely doubtful whether the Bairagis can be classed as Sanyasis, because the order of Bairagis is not confined to the members of the twice-born castes. As to this, reference may be made to Mitakshara, Prayashchitta, Book III, Chapter IV, clause 201, of the Allahabad translation. It appears to us, therefore, that both on the ground of custom and on the ground of Hindu Law the plaintiff has failed to make out his case. We, therefore, affirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

(1) 3 Agra H. C. R. 295.

Decree affirmed.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 365 OF 1913.

March 2, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Hallifax, A. J. C.

HAIJNATH—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

RAGHUNATH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Surrender of tenancy, who can accept—Agent—Lambardar—Presumption.

It is only the landlord that can accept a surrender or create a tenancy. Where the "landlord" is a body of two or more persons, anything which the landlord is required or authorised to do under the Tenancy Act must be done by the whole proprietary body acting together or by an agent acting on behalf of them all.

The custom of appointing the lambardar as agent by implication and acquiescence is so nearly universal that it may be presumed that the lambardar has been appointed the agent of the proprietary body in every village, until the contrary is shown. But the presumption does not extend to the case of a minor lambardar, nor to that of his guardian.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Raipur, dated the 25th March 1913, reversing that of the Sub-Judge, Raipur, dated the 16th July 1912.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Sir Bepin Krishna Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, Raghunath, who is the respondent here, and the defendant-appellant Haijnath are co-sharers in the village of Mendrakka. There is one other co-sharer, but we are not concerned with him in any way. Haijnath is the lambardar of the village. He is still a minor, and his mother is his legal and actual guardian. The co-sharer Raghunath sued the lambardar and two ordinary tenants of the village for joint possession to the extent of his share in the village, or separate possession of a part, proportionate to his share in the village, of a certain piece of land. He sued Haijnath as a minor and his mother was duly appointed his guardian ad litem. In the plaint he stated that the land had been surrendered, by a person who had been holding it as an ordinary tenant, "to the lambardar, defendant No. 1," and he claimed, therefore, a right to a share in that land proportionate to his share in the village. He went on to say that "the first defendant" let out that land to the other two defendants and made them ordinary tenants thereof on his own authority and without the plaintiff's permission or knowledge. He asserted that "the first defendant had no right or authority whatsoever to transfer to anybody rights or privileges in land belonging jointly to the plaintiff which has been surrendered." He, therefore, made the claim set out above.

The written pleading filed on behalf of the first defendant opens with these words: "The defendant Haijnath files the following written statement." He then went on to admit most of the facts stated in the plaint, but pleaded that the surrender was in consideration of a sum of money "received from this defendant," that he had created the new tenancies with the consent of all the co-sharers, and that in any case he had authority as lambardar to create them without consulting the co-sharers. He further pleaded that "the land in suit was surrendered to this defendant, not in his capacity as lambardar, but in his capacity as a co-sharer and for value," so that for that reason also he had a right to create the new tenancies without consulting the other co-sharers.

The plaintiff replied that if the first defendant had really paid the amount alleged, he was willing to contribute his share of it, but he demanded an account of the nazarana which he believed the defendant had received from the new tenants. He denied that the surrender had been accepted with the consent of the co-sharers and then said, "that as lambardar, the defendant No. 1 can act as agent of the other co-sharers with their consent, and not do acts at his wish without their consent and against their will." In the first Court it was found that the surrender was made to the lambardar represented by his guardian and the new tenancies were created by the same person on the same day. The learned Subordinate Judge went on to hold, on the authority of certain unpublished rulings of this Court, "that in the absence of express repudiation of his authority, the lambardar is the representative of the entire proprietary body in such transactions as accepting of surrender from one tenant and the re-letting to another of tenancy land." Finding that there was in this case an absence of express repudiation of the authority of the lambardar declared before the transaction, he held that the lambardar had acted as agent of the whole proprietary body, and dismissed the suit.

In appeal to the Court of the District Judge the plaintiff pleaded for the first time that the new tenancies had been created not by the lambardar, who was a minor, but by his guardian whose acts were not binding on the other co-sharers. On this point the learned District Judge wrote as follows in his judgment :—"The defendant No. 1 is still a minor and it is admitted that his guardian mother, who is said to have constituted new tenancies was neither the lambardar nor lambardar gomashta. A guardian as such has no power of a lambardar or lambardar gomashta. Truely the plaintiff's claim for possession was not opposed on this ground in the lower Court, but the point involved seems to be purely a question of law and not a mixed question of fact and law. It was never pleaded that there was any lambardar gomashta and that the consent of such a person had been obtained. All that was alleged was that the consent of the other co-sharers had been obtained and this plea has negatived by the lower Court. The correctness of that finding was not challenged for the plaintiff-appellant and that finding stands final. I, therefore, dissenting from the lower Court hold that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were not validly constituted tenants and that the plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to joint possession of the land in suit."

As will appear later, the point raised involved more questions of fact than of law. The decision of them is, however, covered by the plaintiff's own admissions in the first Court. I fail to understand the reference to the lambardar gomashta. Such a person would seem to have about as much to do with the matter as the mukaddam or the kotwar. They all, like the guardian of a minor lambardar or indeed any outsider, are equally capable with the lambardar of being appointed agent of the proprietary body. The only difference is that the implied appointment of the lambardar or the lambardar gomashta is ordinarily very much easier to prove than that of any of the others. In any case, no question of the consent of the lambardar gomashta could possibly arise here. Further, as an alternative to the plea of the express consent of the co-sharers it was very distinctly pleaded that the lambardar had in this case the power to create the tenancies without consulting them. This was stated in the following words:—"This defendant contends that as a lambardar of the village he had power to create tenants in respect of such lands which were surrendered to him in his capacity of lambardar of the village without the consent of the co-sharers." It would seem to be a mere slip that the learned Judge mentioned the plaintiff-appellant in place of the defendant-respondent, as the person who would be likely to object to the finding that the express consent of the co-sharers had not been obtained.

The law on this point is clear and well settled. It is expounded in the rulings of this Court in Pratap Singh v. Umrao Singh (1); Gopal v. Govind (2) and Murlidhar v. Jagannath (3). It is only the landlord that can accept a surrender or create a tenancy. Where "the landlord" is a body of two or more persons, anything which the landlord is required or authorised to do under the Tenancy Act must be done by the whole proprietary body acting together or by an agent acting on behalf of them all. The appointment of this agent need not be express, and it very seldom is. It is customary to appoint the lambardar as agent by implication and acquiescence, and this custom is so nearly universal that it may be presumed that the lambardar has been appointed the agent of the proprietary body in every village, until the contrary is shown. That presumption might perhaps extend to the case of a lambardar gomashta, but no further. It would not cover the case of the guardian of a minor lambardar. Nor can it cover the case of a minor lambardar himself. He could act as agent for the other members of the proprietary body so that his acts would bind them, but he himself would not be bound by them. One member of the proprietary body would thus be unrepresented by the agent.

(1) 11 C. P. L. R. 1.
(2) 13 C. P. L. R. 113.
(3) 23 Ind. Cas. 20; 10 N. L. R. 5.

But though there can be no presumption that any person other than the lambardar has been appointed the agent of the proprietary body, there is nothing to prevent any person in the world being so appointed and when that appointment is admitted or proved, that person will represent the proprietary body and bind it by his acts just as effectively as the lambardar could. In this case the plaintiff has from the very beginning admitted the implied appointment of the lambardar's mother as agent of the proprietary body. This is the matter of fact involved in his plea taken for the first time in the Appellate Court, which the learned Judge of that Court overlooked. The admission seems to me necessarily implied in all the plaintiff's pleas in which he speaks simply of the lambardar and the first defendant, when he sued him as a minor with his mother as his guardian and knew that the surrender was accepted, and the leases granted, by his mother. But even if that could not be called a necessary implication, the admission is to be found made almost expressly in the plea, on which both in the plaint and in all the subsequent stages of the suit he has insisted most, that the surrender made to the guardian of the lambardar was a surrender to the whole proprietary body. By admitting that she was the agent of that body for the purpose of accepting the surrender, he also admitted that she was the agent for the purpose of granting fresh leases.

The leases were, therefore, made by an authorised agent of the whole proprietary body and are valid against all the members of that body. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is, therefore, set aside and that of the first Court dismissing the suit is restored. The plaintiff-respondent will pay all the costs in all three Courts.

Decree set aside.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL SIDE APPEALS NOS. 39 AND 53 OF 1913.

April 17, 1914.

Present:—Sir Charles Arnold White, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Oldfield.

Messrs. CROMPTON AND CO., LTD.,—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Cross-examination — Witness — Serious imputation made against witness but not substantiated—Imputation, whether ought to be withdrawn by Counsel.

In the course of the cross-examination of a witness a very serious suggestion was made, which imputed dishonourable, if not dishonest, conduct to the witness. The suggestion, however, was not substantiated:

Held, that the imputation ought to have been withdrawn.

Appeals against the judgments of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Wallis, dated the 26th February 1913 and 16th April 1913, in the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court.

Mr. Nugent Grant, with him Messrs. Sidney Smith and Branson & Branson, for the Appellants.

The Advocate-General, with him Mr. D. Chamier and the Government Solicitor, for the Respondent.

FACTS.—In this suit the plaintiffs claimed payment for the work done and materials supplied, and damages for the breach of a building contract. Mr. Weston, the Chief Engineer in India, Civil Department, of the plaintiff Company was examined as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff before Mr. Justice Wallis, who tried the case on the original side. The Advocate-General on behalf of the Secretary of State for India put to him certain questions in cross-examination as regards certain documents put in in evidence and made an imputation of forgery against the witness. Mr. Grant, the Counsel for the plaintiff, in re-examination put to the witness if he was a party to the forgery and the witness forcibly denied the charge. Mr. Grant took exception to the imputation before the original Court, but the Advocate-General neither substantiated nor withdrew it. In appeal their Lordships being expressly requested to make some statement on the point expressed the following

OPINION.

WHITE, C. J.—In the course of the Advocate-General's cross-examination of Mr. Weston certain suggestions were made which, Mr. Grant submitted on behalf of Mr. Weston, imputed dishonourable, if not dishonest, conduct to Mr. Weston. These suggestions were not substantiated and this being so, Mr. Grant on behalf of his client formally asked the Advocate-General to withdraw them. The Advocate-General did not do so. We were asked by the Advocate-General and by Mr. Grant to express our opinion as to whether in the circumstances, the Advocate-General ought to have withdrawn the suggestions. One matter was in connection with the alteration of the date at the foot of Exhibit J1. There is a pencil entry at the foot of Exhibit J1, which obviously was originally July 26 and which was altered in pencil into July 27. The suggestion as to this was, so far as I understand it, that July 26 was altered into July 27 so as to identify the specification which, according to the plaintiff's case, was the specification referred to in the Clibborn Contract. No attempt was made to conceal the date as originally written. Mr. Weston said he wrote July 26 in the first instance by mistake. I see no reason to suppose that the alteration, or correction, which Mr. Weston admits he made, was made with any sinister or dishonest intention. It seems to me a matter of small importance, and I am not prepared to say that it was the duty of the Advocate-General formally to withdraw any imputation which he intended to convey in connection with the alteration of July 26th into July 27th. The other matter to which Mr. Grant thought it necessary to call our attention seems to me to be more serious.

It would seem that the original of the specification with reference to which the contract of August 11th (Exhibit K) was signed should be in the possession of Government. This document has not been produced. Mr. Weston sent a copy of this specification to his London office. Exhibit HHH is a copy of the document sent to England. In the copy the letters M. B. (the initials of Mr. Brown) appear under date 11th August 1909, the date of the formal contract (Exhibit K). The suggestion made in the cross-examination of Mr. Weston, as I understand it, was that he was a party to adding these initials to the copy, knowing they did not appear in the original document. The Advocate-General was, of course, cross-examining on specific instructions.

In re-examination Mr. Grant put it to the witness, "It is suggested that you were a party to putting a signature on (the copy sent to England) in order to indicate that the original of which it is said to be a copy was signed by Mr. Brown. Were you a party to a forgery in respect of that?" The witness's answer was, "Certainly not." Mr. Grant's version, put in re-examination, of the imputation which he said the Advocate-General made on his client was not repudiated by the Advocate-General. The imputation, I suppose, is that Mr. Weston sought to manufacture evidence in the plaintiff's favour by adding words to a copy of a document which he sent to his principals in England, which to his knowledge the original document did not not contain. That, of course, is a very serious charge. It may or may not be criminal. It is certainly dishonest. The Advocate-General was not prepared to carry the matter further either by producing the original document or by putting Mr. Brown into the box. In these circumstances Mr. Grant says the Advocate-General ought to have withdrawn the imputation. This raises a question of the ethics of cross-examination of some delicacy and difficulty. My own view is—(we have no authority in the matter and it is only my "pious opinion")—that in all the circumstances and having regard to the character of the litigation and the parties to the suit, the imputation ought to have been withdrawn. I should not have thought it necessary to say anything about this incident if we had not been expressly asked both by the Advocate-General and by Mr. Grant to make some statement on the subject.

OLDFIELD, J.—I concur in this expression of opinion.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 3158 OF 1912.

August 11, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Woodroffe and Mr. Justice Coxe.

GOLAK CHANDRA CHOWDHURY—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

PRABHAT CHANDRA RAY—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Minor—Legal representatives of persons intermeddling with minor's estate—Liability, extent of.

The representatives of persons who had intermeddled with the estate of a minor, are liable to account in respect of the dealings of those whom they represent to the extent of the estate which came to their hands.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Sylhet, dated the 17th July 1912, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court of that place, dated the 29th January 1912.

Mr. Rasul and Babu Jotish Chandra Sircar, for the Appellant.

Babus Basanta Kumar Bose and Prakash Chandra Sircar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—In this case it has been found that after the death of the widow of Bagawan Chandra Ray, Gopi Charan Chowdhury instead of taking up the executorship, caused one Guru Das Goswami appointed an executor to do so and obtained an am-muk tearnama from him in his own name. This swami is described as a guru who lived in the district of Mymensingh. Most of the properties lie in the District of Barisal. Whether this Guru took any part in the administration of the property is not clear. It appears from the judgment that the real person who was administering it was Gopi Charan Chowdhury. It has been found on evidence, which the Subordinate Judge describes as clear and positive, that during the years mentioned in the judgment, Gopi Charan was really managing the affairs of the plaintiff's properties at Gamaitali. He continues: "The evidence adduced in the case, in my opinion, proves beyond doubt that Gopi Charan Chowdhury managed the plaintiff's estate during the period in suit and that several sums of money passed through his hands in the course of his management of that estate. Admittedly he never rendered any account either to the executor, Guru Das Goswami, or to the plaintiff. The defendant No. 5 is admittedly in possession of the assets of Gopi Charan Chowdhury as his heir." He has, therefore, held that as Gopi Charan did not render an account of the moneys that passed through his hands, the appellant who holds his estate must account to the respondent.

As I read the finding of the District Judge, it is this that Guru Das Gowswami was a mere executor by name. The Judge says: "It seems probable that Gopi Charan, fearing to take the responsibility of the executorship himself. put forward Guru Das as the nominal executor, continuing to do the real work himself." He points out further that the question of agent and sub-agent does not arise and that Guru Das was not the agent of the plaintiff during his minority.

The position appears to me to be one in which certain persons, namely, the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 5 or rather the persons whom they represent have been so intermeddling with the estate of the plaintiff, formerly a minor, that they are, I think, liable to account in respect of the dealings of the persons whom they represent to the extent of the estate which came to their hands. The account has been directed to be taken from the 2nd May 1899 to the 1st October 1907, and is in respect of the dealings by Guru Das Goswami and Gopi Charan Chowdhury with the estate during that period.

The appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

COXE, J.—I agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL 163-B OF 1913.

March 31, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Stanyon, A. J. C.

AKOLA GIN COMBINATION—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

NORTHCOTE GINNING FACTORY—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 4—"Persons," meaning of—Repugnant to subject or context—General Clauses Act (X of 1897), s. 3, cl. (39)—Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 2, cl. (13)—Association of more than 20 persons—Acquisition of gain—Registration.

The word "persons" in section 4, Act VI of 1882, denotes individuals and does not include bodies of individuals, whether corporate or not, since any such extended definition would be repugnant to the subject and context of the section.

An association of several firms consisting of more than 20 persons formed with the object of acquiring commercial gain is essentially within the purview of section 4 and requires registration.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Akola, dated the 15th November 1912, confirming that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Akola, dated the 28th July 1911.

Rao Bahadur R. N. Mudholkar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—It is necessary to state the facts of this case. On the 31st December 1908, at Akola in Berar, eighteen companies or firms, carrying on dealings in cotton and possessed of ginning factories, entered into a coalition or syndicate, which they named "The Akola Gin Combination," and drew up a memorandum of agreement, which is Exhibit P-1 on the record of this case. This document is headed "Ginning Combination Agreement, Season 1908-09, 1909-10 and 1910-11." The parties to this agreement are thus described in the memorandum:—

1. The Akola Native Cotton Ginning, Dressing and Spinning Company, Limited.
2. The New East India Press Company, Limited.
3. The Akola Cotton Ginning and Oil Manufacturing Company.
4. The Shrikisandass Shiokisandass Ginning Factory.
5. The Gulabrai Govindram Ginning and Pressing Factory.
6. The Gulabrai Hardayal Ginning Factory.
7. Ticomdas Tejmal Ginning Factory.
8. The Sangwidas Ramchandra Ginning Company.
9. The Khan Bahadur Chingalal Pooransing Ginning Factory.
10. The Manmar Manufacturing Company.
11. The Fakrudin Mulla Motabhai Ginning Factory.
12. The New Chingalal Trimbaklal Ginning Factory.
13. The Ayoobkarim Ginning Factory.
14. The Chingalal Trimbaklal Ginning Factory.
15. The Khatao Makanji and Company.
16. Messrs. Ralli Brothers.
17. The Northcote Ginning Factory.
18. The Guzrath Ginning, Ahmedabad.

The memorandum is a long one and it is only necessary to state the substance of it in this judgment. The object of the association was to work the ginning factories of its members jointly for the benefit of all, so as to prevent competition between them. The conditions laid down may be thus stated:—

(1) Each party was to work his Ginning Factory at Akola from the 13th November 1908 to 30th June 1911 at a gross charge of Rs. 4-1-3 per bojha of cotton ginned, the weight of each bojha being 280 lbs., avoirdupois, and the quantity ginned being entered up in the account books of each factory.

(2) Each factory to be entitled to charge Rs. 2-5-3 per bojha as expenses of ginning and the balance of Rs. 1-12-0 per bojha to be paid into the pool or General Fund of the association. These rates are declared to be subject to alteration.

(3) Correct accounts of cotton ginned and money received to be kept by each party and to be open to inspection by all other parties. The weights and scales of each party, to be under similar surveillance by the others. The pool account for each month to be submitted by the 15th of the succeeding month, and all payments into the pool to be made within 15 days of the issue of the pool account. Any factory in default to be subject to a fine of Rs. 5 per day in arrears, such fines also going to the pool.

"(4) Each party to furnish accounts to every other weekly, weighments of bojhas being made daily, and the aggregate weigh of each week's ginning to be sent every Saturday to Messrs. Ralli Brothers. Default in this respect to be punishable with a fine of Rs. 5 for each day of delay, and every such fine to go to the pool.

(5) All bad debts, insolvency or failure of its customers to be borne by the factory concerned, such factory being liable to subscribe to the pool according to the weight of cotton actually ginned by it, and regardless of its own realization of charges for doing the work.

(6) Payments into the pool to be made monthly, collections being made by Messrs. Ralli Brothers' Agency at Akola, who are to divide and pay the same in proper shares to all the parties and who are expressly empowered to do all acts necessary for giving proper effect to this arrangement.

(7) All factories to be kept ready for work, but any one or more of the parties, on giving a fortnight's notice of such intention, to be entitled to close his or their factory, and dispense with the staff or staffs, for any period during the continuance of the agreement.

(8) Each party to be responsible for the cost of maintaining and working his own factory and to have no claim on the association for that purpose.

(9) In the event of a new ginning factory being set up, the agreement to remain in force only till reviewed by a meeting of the parties.

(10) No party, during the continuance of the agreement, to increase or reduce the number of his gins working at Akola, or to remove the same to places working in competition with Akola: but removal to places not working in competition with Akola, made with the previous consent of all parties, to be adjusted by reduction of the pool share of such party.

(11) Each party to supply to the others, if so required, details of his ginning machinery.

(12) The General Fund to be divisible into 739 shares, that being the number of gins, and the shares allotted to each being as stated in the memorandum of agreement.

(13) In the event of any injury to the ginning plant of any factory causing disablement of a gin for more than 12 hours, written notice of the block to be given to all other parties within 12 hours: and repair and resumption of work to be similarly notified.

(14) If any gin should become permanently disabled, a proportionate reduction in the pool share of its owner to be made.

(15) Any damage to machinery capable of repair to be promptly repaired at the cost of its owner, and if carried out with due diligence, such owner's right to his full share of the pool not to be affected thereby: but undue delay in repairing to involve forfeiture of share.

(16) In the event of any share being forfeited under the agreement, the same to be divided pro rata among the remaining share-holders.

(17) Meetings of the association to be called and conducted as laid down. (It is not necessary to produce details).

(18) Any dispute among the parties to be referred to arbitration. (Details given.)

(19) Out of the working expenses allowance of Rs. 2-5-3 per bojha, each party to pay six pies per bojha to any charity which commends itself to him."

One R. B. Deo Rao Winayek Digambar was appointed the Secretary and Treasurer of this syndicate, which, however, was not registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1882. Party No. 17, the Northcote Ginning Factory, failed to pay into the pool the money payable by it under the above Articles of Association, and became indebted to the Combination to the extent of Rs. 10,214-2-7 for the season 1908-09, comprising the period between the 13th November 1908 and 30th June, 1909. Being pressed for this money, Khatao Hemraj Bhate, the proprietor of the Northcote Ginning Factory, executed a bond for the above sum in favour of R. B. Deo Rao Winayek Digambar qua Secretary and Treasurer of the Combination, stipulating to pay the same as below:—

	Rs.	A.	P.
On the 31st May 1910 ...	3,404	11	10
On the 31st May 1911 ...	3,404	11	10
On the 31st May 1912 ...	3,404	11	11
TOTAL ...	10,214	2	7

This bond was executed on the 27th August 1909. Default was made in payment of the first instalment, and on the 10th December 1910, the Akola Ginning Combination by its above named Secretary and Treasurer filed the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, adding interest at 9 per cent. per annum to the original debt, and claiming Rs. 3,563-1-8] with costs and future interest. On the single ground that the plaintiff represents an Association prohibited by section 4 of the Indian Companies Act, 1882, the Sub-Judge of Akola dismissed the suit on the 28th July 1911, and for the same reason this decision was upheld by the District Judge of West Berar on the 15th November 1912. The plaintiff has, therefore, made this second appeal. During the pendency of the litigation the defendant Khatao Hemraj Bhate died, and Musammat Premabai, the widow of Nathoo Dharamsey Bhate, has been substituted as his legal representative. Owing apparently to a translator's mis-spelling, the name of the defendant's factory has been erroneously entered as the "North Coat" (instead of Northcote) Ginning Factory. This error must be corrected by the Courts below.

The case was well argued before me on behalf of the appellant; but neither in this Court nor in the lower Appellate Court was any appearance entered by or on behalf of the respondent.

The Courts below have applied to this case] section 4 of the Indian Companies Act, 1882, which reads as follows:—

"No Company, Association or Partnership consisting of more than ten persons shall be formed for the purpose of carrying on the business of banking, unless it is registered as a Company under this Act, or is formed in pursuance of an Act of Parliament or some other Act of the Governor-General in Council, or by Royal Charter or Letters Patent; and no Company, Association or Partnership consisting of more than twenty presons shall be formed for the purpose of carrying on any other business that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the Company, Association or Partnership, or by the individual member thereof, unless it is registered as a Company under this Act, or is formed in pursuance of some other Act or of Letters Patent."

The Courts below have held—

(1) that the Akola Gin Combination consists of more than twenty persons;

(2) that it was formed for the purpose of carrying on a business that has for its object the acquisition of gain by its members; and

(3) that, therefore, it is an Association prohibited by law, unless registered.

These findings are contested categorically in this appeal, it being urged (1) that each of the firms or factories forming the Combination is only one person for the the purposes of section 4, Act VI of 1882, and (2) that the acquisition of gain is not the object of the business carried on by the Combination, but a mere distribution among subscribers of the money subscribed by them to a pool. It will be expedient to decide each of these questions separately.

First then as regards the meaning of the word 'persons' in section 4 aforesaid. No definition is given in the Act itself, and the learned Advocate for the appellant claims, therefore, to apply section 3, clause (39), of the General Clauses Act, 1897, which reads thus:—

"3. In this Act, and in all Acts of the Governor-General in Council and Regulations made after the commencement of this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

* * * *

(39) 'person' shall include any Company or Association or body of individuals, whether incorporated or not."

This provision of law undoubtedly applies to assist interpretation of the word 'persons' in section 4, Act VI of 1882. Therefore, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, the word will include Companies or Associations of individuals, and any number not exceeding twenty of such Companies or Associations may form a combination without registration under the Act to carry on any business other than banking.

But I am very clearly of opinion that both in the subject of the Indian Companies Act, 1882, and in the context of section 4 thereof, there is something repugnant to the interpretation of the word 'person' as meaning anything more than a single human being. The subject of the Act is the making of legal provisions for the conduct of Companies, Associations, or Partnerships, formed of individuals, and the Act of 1882 at least did not contemplate the association of several Companies into one corporate body. I do not lose sight of the fact that in the recently enacted Indian Companies Act, 1913—which became law on the 27th March 1913— a further step has been taken. In the definition of "private company" given in section 2, clause (13), of this enactment we read:

"Provided that, where two or more persons hold one or more shares in a Company jointly, they shall, for the purposes of this definition, be considered as a single member.

But it seems to me that this only strengthens my view that the Legislature used the wrod 'persons' to represent individuals and not bodies of individuals. A single member is expressly made to include joint persons in one particular case, but persons remain individuals even in the new Act.

Then let us look at the context of section 4, Act VI of 1882. The members thereof are expressly referred to as individuals in the words "the acquisition of gain by the Company, Association or Partnership, or by the individual members thereof." The section does not contemplate any members who are not individuals: and of the meaning of individual there can be no doubt. Even in the definition of 'person' in the General Clauses Act, relied on by the appellant, the word 'individuals' is used to denote single human beings.

It would defeat the object of the Legislature in enacting section 4 aforesaid if the word 'persons' was interpreted to include corporations; because it is obvious that an indefinite number of individuals might associate for banking or other mercantile business without registration, by the simple device of previously forming themselves into "bodies," whether incorporated or not.

I hold, therefore, that the word "persons" in section 4, Act VI of 1882, denotes individuals, and does not include bodies of individuals whether corporate or not, since any such extended definition would be repugnant to the subject and context of the section.

Next, I have to decide whether this Combination was one which worked for gain. I am of opinion that this question also must be answered in the affirmative. Several authorities, both English and Indian, have been quoted in connection with this question, and I proceed to consider them.

In In re London Marine Insurance Association (1), it was held that a mutual assurance society, the object whereof was not to make profits, but solely to indemnify against losses from the risks insured against, must be taken to be a vaild Association, though unregistered, inasmuch as a winding-up order had been passed beyond which the Court could not go. This case is clearly not in point. In Ex parte Day, In re Day (2) a species of mutual benefit society, the members of which made small weekly payments, which when they amounted to a certain fixed sum were called a share, the funds of the society being lent out at interest to the members, was held to be illegal because unregistered as a company. In In re South Wales Atlantic Steamship Company (3), a Company for establishing a service of steamers, formed with more than twenty members, was held to have no legal existence for want of registration. In Smith v. Anderson (4), an Associtaion of more than twenty certificate-holders in an investment trust, being unregistered under the Companies Act, was held by the Master of the Rolls to be illegal; but this decision was overruled by the Court of Appeal which decided that the object of the deed of settlement was not to authorize the carrying on of a business within the meaning of section 4 of the Companies Act, 1862, but to provide for the management of a trust fund; and that, supposing the deed to authorize the carrying on of a business, such business was merely subsidiary, not forming any substantial part of the object of the Association; and was, moreover, carried on only by the trustees who were less than twenty in number. The ruling in Sykes v. Beadon (5) was disapproved, and that in In re Arthur Average Association; Ex parte Cory (6) doubted by the Court of Appeal.

(1) 8 Eq. 176; 20 L. T. 943; 17 W. R. 784.
(2) 1 Ch. D. 699; 45 L. J. Bk. 53.
(3) 2 Ch. D. 763; 46 L. J. Ch. 177; 35 L. T. 294.
(4) 15 Ch. D. 247; 50 L. J. Ch. 39; 43 L. T. 329; 29 W. R. 21.
(5) 11 Ch. D. 170; 48 L. J. Ch. 522; 40 L. T. 243; 27 W. R. 464.
(6) 10 Ch. 542; 44 L. J. Ch. 569; 32 L. T. 713; 23 W. R. 939.

In Jennings v. Hammond (7), a society of more than twenty members, being unregistered as a Company, was held to be illegal, the object of the society being to raise, by monthly subscriptions and payments payable by the members in respect of their shares, a fund for the purpose of making advances to members. It was also held that a promissory note given by a member to the trustee of the society, to secure a sum of money advanced to such member under the rules of the society, w s invalid and no action could be maintained thereon. In In re Padstow Total Loss and Collision Assurance Association (8), an unregistered Mutual Marine Insurance Association, by the rules of which it was provided that all persons who effected an insurance with the Association should be members, was held illegal: and that decision was approved in Shaw v. Benson (9), in which the Court of Appeal held that a loan society consisting of more than twenty members, the objects of which were to form a fund from which money might be advanced to enable share-holders to build or purchase a dwelling-house or other buildings or to lend money to each other on approved personal security, was an Association having for its object the acquisition of gain, and illegal unless registered. In In re Thomas, Ex parte Poppleton (10), an unregistered money club of more than twenty members was held to be nonetheless illegal because its business was carried on by a committee of seven members as agents of the society. Crowther v. Thorley (11) was distinguished. In In re Siddall (12) it was held, following Crowther v. Thorley (11) and Wigfield v. Potter (13), that an unregistered Association of more than twenty persons formed for the object of purchasing a free-hold estate and re-selling it in allotments to members of the Association was not made illegal by the Companies Act, 1862, section 4. In In re Ilfracombe Permanent Mutual Benefit Building Society (14), a building society which comprised more than twenty members and was never incorporated, was held to require registration under the Companies Act, 1862.

I next examine the Indian Authorities, the language of the law in England and India being substantially the same. In Kraal v. Whymper (15), it was decided that the subscribers to a General Family Pension Fund are not a Company, and the business of investing that fund and applying it in the payment of pensions was held not to be a business for the acquisition of gain within the meaning of section 4, Indian Companies Act. But in Ramasami v. Nagendrayyan (16), where more than twenty persons subscribed a fund from which loans were made to individual members, the Association was held to be illegal for want of registration as a Company. A similar view was taken by the same High Court in Madras Hindu Mutual Benefit Permanent Fund v. Ragava Chetti (17), the object of the Association being to lend money to members. In Panchena v. Gadinhare (18), the ticket-holders in a lottery were held not to be an Association governed by the Indian Companies Act. In Neelamega Sastri v. Appiah Sastri (19), where a chit fund was organized by two persons but subscribed to by more than twenty, who however entered into no contract with each other, it was held that there was no application of the Companies Act. In Bipul Chandra v. Hazi Nasib Ali (20), a partnership of more than twenty persons with the single license of an elephant-catching business, such partners having no voice in the management of the business and no liability inter se but merely being sub-sharers in the profits gained by the licensee, were held not to be a Company requiring registration.

It seems clear from the language of section 4 of the Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882) —and the remark equally applies to the present Act—and from the authorities

(7) 9 Q. B. D. 255; 51 L. J. Q. B. 493; 31 W. R. 40.
(8) 20 Ch. D. 137; 51 L. J. Ch. 344; 45 L. T. 774; 30 W. R. 326.
(9) 11 Q. B. D. 563; 52 L. J. Q. B. 575.
(10) 14 Q. B. D. 379; 54 L. J. Q. B. 336; 51 L. T. 602; 33 W. R. 583.
(11) 32 W. R. 330; 50 L. T. 43; 48 J P. 292.
(12) 29 Ch. D. 1; 54 L. J. Ch. 682; 52 L. T. 114; 33 W. R. 509.
(13) 45 L. T (N. S.) 612; 46 J. P. 485.
(14) (1901) 1 Ch. 102; 70 L. J. Ch. 66; 84 L. T. 146; 17 T. L. R. 44.
(15) 17 C. 786.
(16) 19 M. 31; 5 M. L. J. 237.
(17) 19 M. 200
(18) 20 M. 68; 7 M. L. J. 26.
(19) 29 M. 477; 16 M. L. J. 385; 1 M. L. T. 237.
(20) 1 Ind. Cas. 655; 13 C. W. N. 638.

cited, that to constitute an Association within the meaning of that section, there must be—

(1) a legal relation between more than twenty persons, giving rise to joint rights or obligations or mutual rights and duties; and

(2) the object of the Association must be to carry on business for the acquisition of gain for the benefit of the Association as a whole, or of individual members thereof.

In the present case I have already held that the Association comprised more than twenty persons, and the Articles drawn up by them make it plain that their contract gave them joint rights and obligations as well as mutual rights and duties. Then, what was the object of the Association? It was clearly to promote the business and enlarge the profits of ginning by stifling competition, and thereby securing a fixed rate—fixed by the syndicate according to its own views—which all persons seeking to have their cotton ginned in Akola would have to pay. The Association aimed at getting a monopoly of all the ginning business in Akola: and by a special clause the appearance of a competitor outside the 'ring' was to be the immediate cause of a re-consideration of the position. The whole transaction represents a ring formed for commercial gain—a gain in which every member was to participate, and which was secured by associating so as to eliminate competition in the rates of ginning. It does not seem to me to be open to serious argument that such an Association is essentially within the purview of section 4 of the Indian Companies Act. I hold accordingly.

That being so, no suit can be maintained on a bond given by one of the members to the Secretary of the Association, and the suit has been rightly dismissed. This appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 828 OF 1913.

October 27, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri.

AMBALAVANA PANDARA SANNADHI, THROUGH HIS AUTHORISED AGENT, DAKSHINAM KARWAR VYTHILINGA THAMBIRAN—PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER

versus

KUPPACHI JANAKI AMMAL—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 63—Translation of grant contained in official letter, whether public record—Secondary evidence—Admission in evidence—Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 2.

The translation of a grant contained in a latter from one official to another does not come within the provisions of section 63 of the Evidence Act and so cannot be admitted as secondary evidence of the grant.

Adusumulli Suryanarayana v. Acchutta Potanna, 22 Ind. Cas. 339; 26 M. L. J. 99; 15 M. L. T. 268, Kidambi Jagannathacharyulu v. Pidipiti Kutumbarayudu, 25 Ind. Cas. 891; 27 M. L. J. 233, referred to.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevelly, in Small Cause Suit No. 2102 of 1912.

Mr. S. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Ramasami Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question is whether the petitioner is the holder of both the varams, so as to take the case out of the Estates Land Act and confer jurisdiction on Civil Courts. There can be little doubt that the ordinary presumption is that the grant was only of the Melvaram, [Adusumulli Suryanarayana v. Acchutta Potanna (1)].

It is argued that Exhibit D shows that both the varams were granted. The original grant is not forthcoming, but Exhibit D, which is a letter from the Collector to the Board, contains a translation of what was produced before him as the original grant. The question is whether the translation contained in a letter from one official to another can be admitted as evidence of the terms of the original grant. It does not come within the provisions of section 63 of the Indian Evidence Act and so cannot be admitted as secondary evidence.

As the Collector simply gives a translation of a document which was produced before him and as there is nothing except his opinion that it "seemed to be" genuine, it cannot be said that the letter Exhibit D set out any facts within his personal knowledge so as to make it admissible as proof of the terms of the original grant.

(1) 22 Ind. Cas. 339; 26 M. L. J. 99; 15 M. L. T. 268.

It is argued that it must be presumed that the plaintiff was the owner of the Kudivaram and that it is for the defendant to show that he was not the owner of the Kudivaram at the time of the grant. Reliance has been placed on Kidambi Jagannathacharyulu v. Pidipiti Kutumbarayudu (2). The Subordinate Judge finds that the Kudivaram right was not owned by Ragho Pandit or his successors-in-title in 1808 or subsequently. He presumes that it was not in them before 1808 or at the time of the grant. I cannot say he was not entitled to find that the Kudivaram was not shown to have been in the grantee at the date of the grant.

The Subordinate Judge is of opinion that Exhibit D does not show that both the varams were granted. As I do not think Exhibit D can be used to show the terms of the original grant, it is unnecessary to consider this question.

The petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

(2) 25 Ind. Cas. 891; 27 M. L. J. 233.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER NO. 486 OF 1912.

May 18, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chapman and Mr. Justice Mullick.

Sheikh NEAMATULLA—DEFENDANT NO. 1—APPELLANT

versus

Sheikh BAJIULLA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Ejectment suit—Denial of landlord's sole title—Fresh suit for declaration against alleged landlord and tenant, if barred—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 25—Denial of landlord's title, when operates as forfeiture.

Where in a suit brought by an occupancy raiyat to eject an under-raiyat, it was held that the former was not the sole landlord, and then another suit was brought by the occupancy raiyat against the under-raiyat and the alleged co-sharer landlord for a declaration of right to the full share of the holding:

Held, that as between the occupancy raiyat and the under-raiyat, the question whether the former was the sole landlord of the holding was directly and substantially in issue in the previous ejectment suit, and under section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, a decision on that issue must be held to be res judicata as between them, but that the section did not stand in the way of a declaratory decree against the alleged co-sharer landlord.

Where a tenant does not deny the whole title of his landlord but sets up the right of a third party as co-sharer, there can be no forfeiture.

Srimati Mallika Dassi v. Makham Lal Chowdhury, 9 C. W. N. 928, followed.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge of Rangpur, dated 13th August 1912, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court, at Gaibanda, dated the 19th September 1911.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Z. R. Zahed, Counsel, and Mr. A. K. Fuzlul Huq, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff alleges that he is an occupancy raiyat and that defendant No. 1 is his under-raiyat. In 1905 the plaintiff sued this defendant in ejectment. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was not the 16-annas owner of the holding and set up the right of one Halu Sheikh as the plaintiff's co-sharer. One of the issues in that ejectment suit was, are the plaintiffs sole landlords in respect to the land in suit, if not, can they eject the defendants? The Court found that the plaintiff was not the sole landlord and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs now sue the heirs of Halu Sheikh and defendant No. 1 for declaration of their 16-annas title to the holding, and they also ask for khas possession alleging that defendant No. 1 has forfeited his tenancy by his denial of the plaintiffs' title in the ejectment suit. The Munsif held, firstly, that there was no forfeiture, and secondly, that the suit was barred by res judicata. On appeal before the District Judge the suit was remanded, the Judge being of opinion that the previous decision in the ejectment suit did not operate as res judicata and that there should be a re-trial of the issue relating to forfeiture.

Against this decree the defendant No. 1 prefers the present second appeal. With regard to the question of forfeiture, we think it is settled law that where a tenant does not deny the whole title of his landlord but sets up the right of a third party as co-sharer, there can be no forfeiture. The case of Srimati Mallika Dassi v. Makham Lal Chowdhury (1) is authority for this proposition. The learned District Judge was, therefore, wrong in ordering a re-trial of this issue. The question of res judicata is a more difficult one. As between the defendant No. 1 and the plaintiffs the question whether the plaintiffs were the sole landlords of the holding was directly and substantially in issue in the ejectment suit and under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, a decision on that issue must be held to be res judicata as betweeen these parties. In this suit, therefore, the plaintiffs are not entitled to a declaration as against the defendant No. 1 that they are 16-annas owners of the holding. Therefore, so far as the defendant No. 1 is concerned he must be dismissed from the suit.

There remains the question whether, as against defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the alleged co-sharers of the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs are entitled to a declaratory decree in respect of their share. We think section 11 does not stand in their way for this purpose, and it is within the discretion of the Court to give the declaration such as the plaintiffs require, if the Court is satisfied that it should do so under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. We think, therefore, that the remand order should stand and the case go back for disposal of the issues affecting the defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

The defendant No. 1 will get his costs in this Court. The costs of the remaining Courts will abide the result. We asses the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

Order varied.

(1) 9 C. W. N. 928.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 113 OF 1914.

November 25, 1914.

Present:—Justice Sir George Knox, KT.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY—DEFENDANTS—PETITIONERS

versus

BINDA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20 (c)—Cause of action arising in part—Jurisdiction.

The plaintiff contracted with the defendant Company for carriage of grain and seed from Cawnpore to Jagganath Ghat via Howrah. He paid for the conveyance of several consignments certain sums of money which, he subsequently discovered, were in excess of what he should have paid. He sued for the recovery of the excess sum at Cawnpore:

Held, that the cause of action having arisen in part at Cawnpore, the Cawnpore Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

Revision against the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge of Cawnpore, dated 9th March 1914.

Mr. Ladli Prasad Zutshi, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Kailas Nath, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this application has arisen was brought by one Binda. Binda had contracted with the East Indian Railway Company, defendants in the Court of first instance, for the carriage of grain and seed from Cawnpore to Jagganath Ghat via Howrah. He paid for the conveyance of several consignments certain sums of money based upon a special rate, which was provided by the Company for the carriage of grain and seeds and which is known by the technical term of maund rate as opposed to another rate known as waggon rate. Apparently after he had paid the money, he discovered that the charge would have been lower if he had contracted with the Railway Company to carry consignments of grain at the rate known as waggon rate. He accordingly brought the present suit, asking for a refund of the amount which had been overcharged so far as a portion of the line of the defendant Railway Company was concerned. The consignments had to travel over the Railway of the defendant Company and also over the Eastern Bengal Railway. For the carriage of the consignments over that portion which belonged to the Eastern Bengal Railway he made no claim. He sued in the Court of Small Causes at Cawnpore. That Court granted him a decree in part for Rs. 165-9-6, out of the claim which had been laid at Rs. 214-1-11. It is now contended before me that the Court of Small Causes at Cawnpore had no jurisdiction to entertain this suit, and the Railway Company base this contention upon a decision of this Court in Amolak Ram v. Bombay, Baroda & Central India Railway Company (High Court Decisions on Indian Railway Cases by Teruvenkata Chariar, page 477). In answer the learned Vakil who appears for Binda refers me to the change which has taken place in section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is no doubt that that section is considerably changed from what it was in the former Code of Civil Procedure. The portion which concerns the present case is clause (c) of section 20 of the present Code. In the old Code clause (a), section 17, ran thus: "The cause of action arises." In the present Code the words now used are: "The cause of action, wholly or in part, arises." The case of Amolak Ram v. Bombay, Baroda & Central India Railway Company was a case decided under the Code which was in force in the year 1888. Looking to the argument and reasoning given in that judgment, I am of opinion that that case would have been differently decided if it had been a case brought under the new Code. I find that the Court at Cawnpore had jurisdiction to entertain the suit inasmuch as the cause of action, at any rate in part, had arisen in Cawnpore. This being so, the plea of want of jurisdiction fails.

With reference to the second contention that the plaintiff is not entitled to alter the contract which he originally made with the defendant company, as this is a Small Cause Court case, I am not prepared to interfere. The application is dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 408 OF 1912.

September 8, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C.

RAJMAN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

BRAHM SURAT—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Mahant of math or sangat, right to acquire property by—Subsequent treatment of property, effect of—Endowment, sufficient evidence of.

A Mahant of a math or sangat, though required to observe celebacy, is not disqualified from acquiring property for his own personal benefit if he has funds of his own.

The evidence afforded by the subsequent treatment of the property for several generations by the parties concerned may in certain cases be legitimately used for determining the nature of the interest sought to be created.

Where there was no sufficient evidence to establish that the particular property in dispute was purchased from the income of the sangat or was dedicated to it by the founder of the sangat after his purchase and the succession to the property had not been consistent with its being endowed property:

Held, that the land in dispute did not form part of the endowed property.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated 13th June 1912, upholding that of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated 23rd March 1912.

Mr. J. K. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Babu Salig Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to groves Nos. 675, 726 and 757 Khasra, which were purchased by Madho Das, a Fakir of the Nanakshahi sect, sometime between 1883 and 1900. It appears that Madho Das had founded a sangat for the ownership of the Granth or the sacred book of the Sikhs and for the maintenance and shelter of the Sadhus of that sect at Bhikhapur. The Granth was formally installed there by Mahants of the same sect, who had come from Allahabad for the purpose in the Nawabi time, and the sangat was maintained thereafter by Madho Das as a public religious institution for the benefit of the people of the Nanakshahi sect and of others who might like to avail themselves of it. Subsequent to the foundation of the sangat, Madho Das acquired certain properties, including the groves now in dispute, and the question for consideration in this case is whether those groves were endowed properties and whether the successors of Madho Das had any right to transfer or alienate the same. Madho Das died nine years ago, leaving three disciples, Brahma Tej, Brahma Bali and Brahma Kishen. Brahma Tej was blind and had a disciple named Brahma Sagar, who is a defendant to this suit. His contention is that according to the direction of Madho Das he was to get 10 bighas 5 biswas of land, comprising the groves in dispute, after his death; that mutation of names was effected in his name on the death of Madho Das and that he had a right to transfer the same. The Courts below found that the land in dispute formed part of the endowed property and that the alienations made by Brahma Sagar were invalid and unenforceable.

The sale-deeds of the disputed property stand in the name of Madho Das, who is described in some of them as Baba Madho Das Fakir, Nanakshahi, residing at sangat Bhikhapur, and in others as Mahant Madho Dass Fakir, Nanakshahi, residing at that sangat. The Courts below held that the purchases were made from the income of the sangat or, in other words, from the offerings made there, but no direct evidence was produced on that point. In Ganga Das v. Basant Das (1), where a grant was made to the Mahant of a sangat and the village granted had passed from Mahant to Mahant for the last 150 years, it was held that there was a strong presumption that the grant was intended for the support of the sangat and not for the private benefit of the grantee. The evidence afforded by the subsequent treatment of the property for several generations by the parties concerned may in certain cases be legitimately used for determining the nature of the interest sought to be created [Mahant Puran Atal v. Darshan Das (2)]. But a Mahant of a math or sangat though required to observe celebacy is not disqualified from acquiring property for his own personal benefit if he has funds of his own. There are no circumstances indicating that the purchase was made for the benefit of the sangat. On the death of Madho Das, his disciple, Brahma Kishen, was installed as a Mahant by the Mahants of the other Nanakshahi sangats elsewhere, but the property in dispute was entered in the revenue papers in the name of Brahma Sagar on the statements of the disciples of Madho Das, including Brahma Kishen, the predecessor-in-office of the plaintiff, who admitted that Madho Das had given it to Brahma Sagar in lieu of his services. The conduct of Madho Das, the founder of the sangat, in giving this property to Brahma Sagar shows that he treated it as his separate property. In Sree Mahant Kishora Dossjee v. Coimbatore Spinning and Weaving Co., Limited (3) it was held that there was no presumption that money paid by the Mahant of a math for the purchase of certain shares belonged to the math and the onus lay upon the person, who alleged that it belonged to the math, to prove the same. There is no sufficient evidence in this case to establish that the particular property in dispute was purchased from the income of the sangat or was dedicated to it by the founder of the sangat after his purchase.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the plaintiff's claim dismissed in respect of groves Nos. 675, 726 and 757 Khasra and the profits appertaining thereto with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

(1) 2 O. C. 319.

(2) 14 Ind. Cas. 698; 9 A. L. J. 709; 34 A. 168.

(3) 12 M. L. J. 439; 26 M. 79.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1128 OF 1913.

October 14, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ayling and Mr. Justice Hannay.

RAMASAMI IYER—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

SRIRANGARAJA IYENGAR—DEFENDANT No. 2—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 211 and Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 12, difference between—Future mesne profits—Res judicata—First suit for possession and future profits under old Code—Possession alone decreed after new Code—Second suit for mesne profits for same period, maintainability of—Res judicata pleaded in first Court as regards part of claim—Plea taken as to whole claim in appeal—Decree dismissing whole suit in appeal, if legal.

RAMASAMI IYER v. SRIRANGARAJA IYENGAR.

Under section 211 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), the grant of future mesne profits was purely discretionary with the Courts and could not be claimed as of right and no cause of action would accrue in respect of them. But under Order XX, rule 12, of the new Code (Act V of 1908) the Court's power to direct an inquiry into future mesne profits is put on a par with its power to pass a decree for possession or past mesne profits, and there is nothing in the latter to indicate that the one relief is more a matter of discretion and less of right than the other.

Kuppusamy Aiyar v. Venktaramier, 15 M. L. J. 462, (F. B.), distinguished.

Where, therefore, a plaintiff in 1907 sued for possession of certain lands and for future mesne profits from date of plaint till delivery of possession and possession only was decreed and no mesne profits were awarded:

Held, that a subsequent suit for mesne profits for the same period was barred by res judicata.

Where in the above suit the defendant in his written statement pleaded that the matter was res judicata as regards the claim for mesne profits up to the date of the decree in the first suit, but in the memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court pleaded that the whole claim was barred and the District Judge, accepting the plea, dismissed the whole suit:

Held, that, subject to the limitations set forth in Order XX, rule 12 (c), the mesne porfits for the period subsequent to the date of decree in the first suit stood on the same footing as those accruing during the pendency of the said suit and that the District Judge was quite justified in dismissing the whole suit.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 172 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Tirumangalam, in Original Suit No. 239 of 1911.

FACTS.—The plaintiff originally instituted Original Suit No. 408 of 1907 in the Court of the District Munsif of Tirumangalam for possession of certain lands and for future mesne profits from date of plaint till delivery of possession. On 12th April 1910 he got a decree for possession only. This decree was confirmed on appeal and also on second appeal. He then brought the present suit (Original Suit No. 239 of 1911) in the same Court for recovery of the mesne profits not granted by the previous decree. The defendant contended that the matter was res judicata as regards the profits up to the date of the previous decree. The District Munsif decreed the plaintiff's claim. On appeal the defendant contended that the whole suit was barred by res judicata by reason of the previous decision. The District Judge, agreeing with the defendant's contention, dismissed the whole suit. The plaintiff thereupon preferred this second appeal.

Mr. K. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, for Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Appellant :— The suit is clearly not barred by res judicata by reason of the previous decision. Kuppusamy Aiyar v. Venkataramier (1). In any event the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for mesne profits subsequent to the date of the decree in the prior suit, as the defendant never contested that portion of the claim in the Court of first instance. The action of the District Judge in allowing the defendant to raise that plea for the first time in appeal is clearly illegal.

Mr. S. Varadachariar, for Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Respondent :— The case of Kuppusamy Aiyar v. Venkataramier (1) cited for the appellant does not apply, that being a decision under section 211 of the old Code. The present Order XX, rule 12, departs from section 211 (old Code) and gives the Court the same power as to future mesne profits as it had in respect of past profits. The decree in the prior suit not having given future mesne profits which were expressly claimed, the claim ought to be deemed to have been refused and so the matter is clearly res judicata. The mesne profits for the period subsequent to the date of decree in the first suit stood on the same footing as that for the anterior period and the District Judge was quite justified in dismissing the whole suit.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought a suit (Original Suit No. 408 of 1907 on the file of the District Munsif of Tirumangalam) for possession of certain lands, and for future mesne profits from the date of plaint till delivery of possession. He got a decree, dated 12th April 1910, for possession only, which was confirmed on appeal and second appeal. His present suit (Original Suit No. 239 of 1911) is for mesne profits from 1907 to 1910 : and the sole question for disposal is whether this claim is res judicata by reason of the decree in Original Suit No. 408 of 1907 which did not award mesne profits for this same period, though they were sued for. The appellant relies on a Full Bench decision of this Court [Kuppusamy Aiyar v. Venkataramier (1)]. This would undoubtedly be conclusive on the point, but for the changes introduced into the present Code of Civil Procedure which, as it seems to us, place the matter on a totally different footing.

(1) 15 M. L. J. 462 (F. B).

The basis of the decision in that case was that under the old Code the plaintiff could not ask for future mesne profits as of right, and could not be said to have a cause of action in respect of them : if the Court gave him a decree for them, it was in the exercise of a purely discretionary power conferred by section 211 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882.

Now in the new Code, section 211 disappears altogether and in Order XX, rule 12, the power of the Court to direct an inquiry into future mesne profits is put on precisely the same footing as the power of the Court to pass a decree for possession or for past mesne profits. There is nothing to indicate that the one relief is more a matter of discretion and less of right than the others : and it could hardly be contended that where past mesne profits have been sued for, and not decreed, in a previous suit, a subsequent suit for the same past mesne profits would lie.

In our opinion, the Full Bench ruling above quoted had reference to the provisions of the law then in force and is not applicable to the case before us.

We observe that in his written statement, the respondent only pleaded that the matter was res judicata so far as mesne profits up to 12th April 1910 were concerned; although he asked for the dismissal of the suit altogether. In his appeal memorandum to the District Court, however, he pleaded (paragraph 6) that the whole claim was "not entertainable as res judicata." Mesne profits after 12th April 1910 (date of the decree in the first suit) stand on just the same footing as those accruing during the pendency of the suit subject to the limitations set forth in Order XX, rule 12 (c), and we think the District Judge was justified in directing the dismissal of the whole suit.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

COURT OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE, UNITED PROVENCES.

REVENUE PETITION No. 18 OF 1913-14 OF KHERI DISTRICT.

March 25, 1914.

Present:—Mr. G. A. Tweedy, J. M.

COURT OF WARDS, ESANGAR ESTATE —DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

GAURI SHANKAR—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Favourable rate of rent, tenant holding at—Ejectment, notice of, contested—Resumption Chapter applicable.

A tenant holding at a favourable rate of rent cannot be ejected by notice. Proceedings under the Resumption Chapter of the Oudh Rent Act must be taken against him.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Lucknow, dated 28th November 1913.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Munshi Harbans Rai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—I agree with the findings of the lower Courts. They have found that the respondent holds at a "favourable rent" and that proceedings under the Resumption Chapter must be taken if appellant wishes to proceed further. It is clear that the rent is a favourable rent when compared with the existing revenue and cesses and if we have to go back to 1877, we have the finding of a competent Court that they held at what was according to the law then in force a "favourable rent." This finding is quite apart from the question of a "special agreement." It has not been shown that their rights under the special agreement are heritable, but their rent is just what it was in 1887 and is, therefore, a "favourable" one. The appeal is dismissed with costs. I may add that the Court of Wards was ill-advised to file this appeal. More care should be taken by District Officers to make absolutely sure of their ground when filing second or third appeal against the decision of the Commissioner.

Appeal dismissed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 573 OF 1913.

December 13, 1913.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shah Din.

BEJA AND OTHERS—CONVICTS—APPELLANTS

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 401—Habitual gang of thieves—Facts necessary to be proved in order to sustain conviction—Evidence of bad character—"Agoo", position of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 49—"Usages of any body of men", whether cover Panchayat's inferences or conclusions—Relevant fact—Evidence as to admission and confession, whether admissible.

In order to sustain a conviction on a charge under section 401, Indian Penal Code, it is necessary to prove

(1) that there existed a gang of persons;

(2) that those persons were associated for the purpose of committing theft or robbery;

(3) that theft or robbery was to be committed habitually; and

(4) that the accused was a member of such gang,

But it is not necessary that each individual member of the gang should be proved to have habitually committed theft in company with the other members. Once it is established that a gang, however small in number, was formed for the purpose of habitually committing theft, all persons who thereafter joined that gang in one or more cases of theft come within the purview of section 401.

The fact that an accused person is of bad character or is reputed to be a thief or a habitual thief is no evidence against him for the purposes of a charge under section 401, Indian Penal Code.

In re Shriram Venkatsami, 6 M. H. C. R. 120; Peera v. Crown, 37 P. R. 1869 Cr.; Afridi v. Empress, 9 P. R. 1880 Cr.; Empress v. Shibba, A. W. N. (1886) 15; Empress v. Jahangira, A. W. N. (1886) 6; Empress v. Kure, A. W. N. (1886) 65; Empress v. Naba Kumar Patnaik, 1 C. W. N. 146; Mankura Pasi v. Queen-Empress, 27 C. 139; 4 C. W. N. 97; Public Prosecutor v. Bonigiri Pottigadu, 2 Ind. Cas. 307; 9 Cr. L. J. 567; 32 M. 179; 5 M. L. T. 100; Walia v. Emperor, 6 Ind. Cas. 492; 11 Cr. L. J. 364; 18 P L. R. 1910; Ghulam Mustafa v. Emperor, 10 Ind. Cas. 833; 68 P. L. R. 1911; 45 P. W. R. 1911 Cr.; 12 Cr. L. J. 260 and Ishar Das v. Emperor, 17 Ind. Cas. 543; 36 P. W. R. 1912 Cr.; 13 Cr. L. J. 799; 258 P. L. R. 1912, referred to.

The agoo (the receiver of stolen property in the interests of theives who form a gang) is a principal member of the gang and is within the purview of section 401.

The words "usages of any body of men", in section 49 of the Evidence Act, do not cover the inferences or conclusions which village punchayats are wont to draw on the basis of their experience from the behaviour of alleged thieves under certain circumstances; and the opinion formed by the members of a panchayat as to the guilt of suspects when the latter decline to prove their innocence in the manner laid down by the panchayat, is not a relevant fact. Evidence as to admissions and promises made by alleged thieves before a panchayat is admissible without there being proof of the actual words used by the suspects before the panchayat.

Appeal from the order of the Magistrate, first Class, Karnal, exercising enhanced powers under section 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code, dated the 22nd May 1913, convicting the appellants.

Mr. Kirkpatrick, for the Appellants.

Mr. Herbert, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.— * * * * * * * * The 40 persons, who had been arrested on suspicion of being the thieves concerned in the very large number of cattle thefts in the district, were then challaned together at the end of January 1913, under section 401, Indian Penal Code, to stand their trial in the Court of Mr. F. L. Brayne, who had been specially invested by the Local Government with powers under section 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code to try these persons. After the case came into Court but before the evidence for the prosecution was begun, the accused persons were divided into three gangs, and each gang was separately tried for an offence under section 401, Indian Penal Code. * * * * In the first case, all the members of gang No. 1 have been convicted by the Magistrate under section 401, Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced to undergo various terms of imprisonment and to pay heavy fines; in the second case, accused No. 11, Umrao Singh, alias Lala, was discharged on the 20th of February 1913 and accused No. 6, Albela, was acquitted, the remaining 10 accused persons being found guilty under section 401 and sentenced to imprisonment and fine; and in the third case, four of the accused persons were acquitted, namely, accused Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 6, and the remaining 8 accused were convicted and sentenced under section 401, Indian Penal Code.

Three separate appeals have been preferred in this Court on behalf of the convicted members of gangs Nos. 1, 2 and 3, respectively, and the three cases have been argued before me most ably and exhaustively by Mr. Kirkpatrick, who has appeared for the appellants in each case, and by Mr. Herbert, who has appeared for the Crown. The arguments have occupied altogether 12 days and every aspect of each of the three cases has been discussed at great length on both sides, and I have carefully gone through the bulky records with Mr. Kirkpatrick and Mr. Herbert, whe have spared no pains to lay before me everything which they considered material to the decision of these appeals. I must express my obligations to these gentlemen for the assistance they have rendered me in unravelling the tangled skein of the evidence relating to certain material points in these cases; and I may also note in this place that some of the statements, which have been prepared under my direction by Mr. Macpherson, Superintendent of Police, who has been present in Court throughout the trial of these appeals, have also proved to be of great use to me in reducing to some sort of order the bewildering details deposed to by the witnesses for the prosecution.

* * * *

It would be convenient to state in this place that the introduction to the three judgments, which extends over no less than 58 manuscript pages, deals mainly with the following points:—

(1) The prevalence of the crime of cattle lifting in the Karnal District since a very long time, the ease with which owing to the physical features of the country the cattle lifters can commit their depredations and escape detection, and the extensive area which is covered by their thieving operations.

(2) The existence in the district of organized bands of cattle lifters and their relations with certain influential men of their fraternity who are called agoos i.e., receivers or passers-on of cattle, who are said to be the mainstay of the gangs and their most active helpers and supporters in times of trouble.

(3) Various ways in which the villagers trace their stolen cattle to the haunts of the thieves and the means which they generally employ for recovering their cattle from the latter without having recourse to the Police or the Law Courts.

(4) The very large part played by what are called panchayats of villagers, improvised for the occasion, in the tracking and recovery of stolen cattle by bringing moral or social pressure to bear upon cattle thieves themselves or on the agoos with whom the thieves are believed to be associated, or by employing threats of a resort to the authorities.

(5) The very great weight which attaches to the conclusions arrived at by the panchayats as to the guilt or innocence of suspected persons in connection with cattle thefts, and the absolute trustworthiness of the evidence given in the present cases by persons who had acted as members of such panchayats.

(6) The identification of stolen cattle at the camping ground in Karnal out of the large herds of cattle which were seized and collected by the Police after the present appellants had been arrested on suspicion in January 1913.

(7) The value of the evidence given by the prosecution witnesses and the cumulative effect of that evidence.

(8) The value as evidence of the alleged admissions made by the appellants or some of them to panchayats on different occasions, and the inferences drawn by the panchayats from their acts or attitudes as regards their guilt or innocence.

* * * *

Reverting now to the 4th, 5th and 8th points noted above, I must say at once that, in my opinion, the Magistrate has gone wrong in attaching too much importance to the proceedings of the Panchayats referred to by the witnesses for the prosecution and has in this connection admitted evidence which is clearly inadmissible. The machinery of the Panchayats is thus described by the Magistrate (page 11), "once the owner of the lost cattle is satisfied that he has found the thief or the agoo, he takes a few friends, including, if possible, one or two influential men of his own or a neighbouring village, and visits him at his village."

* * * *

Mr. Kirkpatrick has referred to these passages in the introduction with a view to show that the Magistrate has seriously erred in admitting as evidence in these cases the opinions of the Panchayats as to the alleged guilt of some of the appellants in connection with certain cattle thefts when, according to the prosecution, on the Panchayats going to them the appellants refused to treat with the Panchayat or to take the oath of innocence or to get another man to take such oath. I think that this contention is correct. Mr. Herbert has relied on section 49 of the Evidence Act in support of his argument that the opinion of the members of the Panchayat in cases such as those referred to by the Magistrate is admissible. I cannot accept this contention. In my opinion the words "usages of any body of men" which occur in section 49, do not cover the inferences or conclusions which Panchayats of the kind mentioned by the Magistrate are wont to draw on the basis of their experience from the behaviour of alleged thieves under certain circumstances; and the opinion formed by the members of the Panchayat as to the guilt of the suspects, when the latter decline to prove their innocence in the manner laid down by the Panchayat, is not a relevant fact under the said section 49. It will be observed that the Magistrate goes much further than Mr. Herbert would go, for whereas under section 49 of the Evidence Act the opinion of the Panchayat, according to the learned Pleader, would only be a relevant fact as to what the usage of the fraternity of the thieves is, the Magistrate holds that that opinion is conclusive of the guilt of the alleged thief or, in other words, is "proof positive that he is in fact guilty." For this view there is no warrant in law; and I, therefore, agree with Mr. Kirkpatrick that the Magistrate is seriously mistaken in treating as evidence, and as evidence of a most valuable kind, the opinion formed as to the guilt of some of the appellants by certain prosecution witnesses when they went to them as members of a Panchayat in connection with an alleged case of cattle theft. I have accordingly treated all such opinions as irrelevant and have excluded them altogether from consideration.

The value of admissions alleged to have been made before the Panchayats by suspected thieves is, of course, a different matter. Mr. Kirkpatrick strenuously contended that, except in cases in which the actual words of an admission of guilt said to have been made by one of the appellants have been proved, evidence as to such admissions having been made before Panchayats is not admissible. The answer to this argument is two-fold. In the first place, we find that very many of the prosecution witnesses have, in each of the three cases, given, if not the actual words, at least the substance of the admissions made before them, which, in my opinion, sufficiently complies with the requirements of the law. In the second place, the evidence given by some of the witnesses does not relate to the actual admissions of guilt, but is only to the effect that the thief concerned admitted that he or his friends or relations had the cattle which were the subject of inquiry and that he promised to restore then. How far such admission and promise can be treated as evidence of the man being actually guilty of theft is another matter, but there can be no doubt that the evidence as to such admissions and promises is admissible without there being proof of the actual words used by the suspect before the Panchayat.

* * * * *

So much for the Magistrate's introduction. Before dealing with the individual cases of the three gangs separately, it would clear the ground to notice briefly the law applicable to them, which is contained in section 401 of the Indian Penal Code. As to the proper interpretation of that section the following authorities were cited before me on both sides: In re Shriram Venkatasami (1); Peera v. Crown (2); Afridi v. Empress (3); Empress v. Shibba (4); Empress v. Jahangira (5); Empress v. Kure (6); Empress v. Naba Kumar Patnaik (7); Mankura Pasi v. Queen-Empress (8); Public Prosecutor v. Bonigiri Pottigadu (9); Walia v. Emperor (10); Ghulam Mustafa v. Emperor (11); Ishar Das v. Emperor (12). I have carefully considered all these rulings and have given every weight to the respective arguments of Mr. Kirkpatrick and Mr. Herbert as to how far the evidence on the record of each of the cases before me is sufficient for proving the necessary ingredients of the offence of which the appellants have been convicted by the Magistrate in the Court below. What the decisions of the various High Courts in fact lay down is this. To sustain a conviction on a charge under section 401, Indian Penal Code, it is necessary to prove (1) that there existed a gang of persons; (2) that those persons were associated

(1) 6 M. H. C. R. 120.
(2) 37 P. R. 1869 Cr.
(3) 9 P. R. 1880 Cr.
(4) A. W. N. (1886); 15.
(5) A. W. N. (1886 ; 16.
(6) A. W N. (1886); 65.
(7) 1 C. W. N. 146
(8) 27 C. 139; 4 C. W. N. 971.
(9) 2 Ind. Cas. 307; 32 M 179; 9 Cr. L. J. 567; 5 M. L. T. 100,
(10) 6 Ind. Cas. 492; 18 P. L. R. 1910; 11 Cr. L. J. 364.
(11) 10 Ind. Cas 833; 68 P. L. R. 1911; 45 P. W. R. 1911 Cr. 12 Cr. L. J. 260.
(12) 17 Ind. Cas. 543; 36 P. W. R. 1912 Cr.; 13 Cr. L. J. 799; 258 P. L. R. 1912.

for the purpose of committing theft or robbery; (3) that theft or robbery was to be committed habitually; (4) that the accused was a member of such gang. The habitual commission of theft necessarily implies an aggregate of acts by some members of the gang or by all of them, but it is not necessary that each individual member of the gang should be proved to have habitually committed theft in company with the other members. Once it is established that a gang, however small in number, was formed for the purpose of habitually committing theft, all persons who thereafter joined that gang in one or more cases of theft come within the purview of section 401. There may be cases in which an accused person would be guilty under section 401 without proof of his having committed even one theft either by himself or in company with the other members of the gang, but in such cases there must be very clear evidence of his membership of the gang and of the fact that the gang consisted of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft. The accused, whether he is himself a thief or not, must belong to a gang of persons who make it their business to commit theft; and though it is not essential for the purpose of conviction under section 401 that the evidence against the accused should show the same degree of particularity, accuracy or fulness of details as to the commission of each individual theft in a series of crimes as is required to support a substantive charge of that crime in a separate prosecution for one act of theft, it is necessary to prove that the person accused was associated with others who were all inspired with the common intention and purpose specified in the section, namely, the habitual commission of thefts. The fact of association and that of the habitual commission of theft have, however, to be proved by evidence which would be admissible according to the Evidence Act and, therefore, evidence of bad character or of general repute such as would be sufficient, for instance, in connection with proceedings under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code is inadmissible against persons who are tried under section 401, Indian Penal Code. The fact that an accused person is of bad character or is reputed to be a thief or a habitual thief is no evidence against him for the purposes of a charge under the aforesaid section [Empress v. Naba Kumar Patnaik (7); Mankur Pasi v. Queen-Empress (8); Public Prosecutor v. Bonigiri Pottigadu (9).]

The gist of Mr. Kirkpatrick's argument was that in none of the three cases before us had it been proved that there was a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft and that the individual appellants belonged to such a gang. The learned Counsel admitted that in order to bring his case within section 401 each individual member of the alleged gang need not have taken part in any single theft committed by the other members thereof; but he insisted that there must be clear proof of association among a reasonable number of persons (according to him generally more than two) for the specific purpose of habitually committing theft; that the association must have direct reference to that purpose and to no other; that the habitual commission of theft by the persons constituting the gang must be established by direct evidence as to the commission of individual thefts by some or by all of them jointly; and that if the fact of the association can be referred to some purpose other than the purpose specified in the section in question, then the mere fact of an accused person having been associated with a number of persons who are all inspired with the illegal intention would not make him liable under the section. In other words, it was contended that even in cases where thefts are proved to have been committed by more than one of the accused persons jointly, it must be shown, for the purposes of section 401, that they were committed, not as isolated thefts for the benefit of the thieves themselves, but for and on behalf of the whole gang who were on their trial under that section. As regards the agoos, whose position in the three gangs has been explained by the Magistrate, it was argued that, on the Magistrate's own showing, they were simply habitual receivers of stolen cattle; and that, although they may have received stolen cattle from the alleged members of the three gangs, such receiving must have been for their own benefit, and they had, therefore, no direct concern with the gang so far as the habitual commission of theft by the gang is concerned. Habitual thieves, if they are associated together for the purpose specified in section 401, may come within its purview, but not habitual receivers of stolen property from those thieves, the case of the latter being specially provided for in section 413 of the Indian Penal Code. The latter part of the argument can be disposed of in a few words. The evidence in these cases, which I shall discuss in its proper place, sufficiently establishes, in my opinion, that the agoo is an important part of the machinery devised by the fraternity of the thieves in the Karnal District for the purpose of carrying on their depredations successfully. It is not correct to say that these agoos receive stolen property for their own benefit and on their own behalf; in some instances they keep the stolen cattle in their own possession, while in others they pass them on into other hands; but whether they adopt the one device or the other, the object in most cases is to have possession of, or control over, the stolen cattle in the interests of the theives who form a gang. Whenever the aggrieved owners succeed in tracing the stolen cattle to the agoo or to any of the other persons to whom he has passed on the cattle, the agoo himself takes a direct and prominent part in the negotiations for the restoration thereof in such a manner as to show by his conduct that he is not protecting his individual interests solely, but that he is moving in the matter as the representative member of a larger group. The evidence in these cases seems to me to show that the agoo, though not himself the thief, is a principal member of the gang of thieves, and but for his existence as part of the organization, the members of the gang would find it risky or difficult to habitually commit the crime of cattle lifting. He is so inextricably mixed up with an organized band of thieves that his alleged individual capacity of receiver of stolen property is indistinguishable from the part he plays in keeping possession of it or in passing it on into safer hands with the primary object of rendering it difficult for the original owners to trace it, the ultimate purpose almost always being to hold the property for the benefit of the thieves as well as of himself. I gather that the chief function of the agoo in connection with the crime of cattle lifting with which we are dealing in these cases, was to afford special facilities for the concealment or disposal of stolen cattle, thus effectually helping in the successful commission of thefts and, on the approach of village Panchayats, to hold negotiations with them as a spokesman of the thieves and, where necessary, to ward off or delay further action by the Panchayats by promising restoration of cattle and sometimes actually restoring them to the real owners. If this much be established by the evidence, I do not see how it can be rightly argued that the agoo is simply and solely a habitual receiver of stolen cattle, and that even if he has constant dealings with individual thieves or groups of thieves his case cannot fall within the purview of section 401, Indian Penal Code. As I have said above, in order to sustain a charge under that section it is not necessary that an accused person should have committed a single act of theft himself: all that is essential is that he should belong to a group of persons who are associted for the purpose of habitually committing theft. And this is precisely what, in my opinion, has been proved to be the position of the three appellants who have been convicted as the agoos of the three gangs in these cases.

As regards the first branch of Mr. Kirkpatrick's agrument, the prosecution have, of course, to prove that each of the appellants belonged to a gang of persons and that those persons were associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft. As laid down in Public Prosecutor v. Bonigiri Pottigadu(9): "The associating and the purpose of the association may be proved by direct evidence, such as evidence that the accused, or the accused and others, met and determined to join together for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity.....In the absence of direct evidence the associating and the purpose of the association may be established by proof of acts from which they may be reasonably inferred." It is proof of this latter character that the prosecution claim to have adduced in these cases, and it is a question in each case as to whether that proof is sufficient for the convictions of the appellants in that case under section 401, Indian Penal Code.

* * * * *

Before discussing the evidence in regard to each appellant, I may note in this place that Umrao Singh alias Lala, Lambardar of Imritpur Kalan, who was challaned as accused No. 11 in gang No. 2, was, at the request of the Public Prosecutor, discharged by the Magistrate on the 20th February 1913 (see page 3 of the record in the case of gang No. 2). On the 12th of March, i.e., about three weeks after he had been discharged, Lala was examined as a witness for the prosecution, first in case No. 1 which is the subject of the present appeal, and thereafter in case No. 2. His cross-examination was reserved, and it was not until the 5th of April that he was cross-examined by the defence in both the cases. Some reliance has been placed by the Magistrate on Lala's evidence in both the cases in respect of matters as to which that evidence has been corroborated by independent evidence. Mr. Kirkpatrick for the appellants has taken strong exception to the procedure of the prosecution in relation to Lala. He has urged that if the prosecution intended to examine Lala as a prosecution witness and his discharge in case No. 2 was procured simply with that end in view, his statement should have been taken down immediately after he was discharged. Instead of that, he was examined about three weeks later, and it is reasonable to presume that in the meantine he had been persuaded and tutored by the prosecution to give evidence on material points in their favour. In fact, the learned Counsel suggested that the prosecution must have won him over to their side and ascertained what he was going to say in their favour before asking the Magistrate to discharge him. This suggestion is not borne out by anything in the Police papers, as there is no trace of any statement having been made by Lala before the Police until after he had been discharged by the Magistrate. I think, however, that it was necessary in the ends of justice to examine Lala as a witness soon after he was discharged, and the fact that he was not so examined does, to a certain extent, detract from the value of his evidence. His evidence, however, cannot be wholly ignored in a case of this kind, and wherever it is corroborated in material particulars by independent evidence, it should, I think, be accepted as reliable.

* * * * *

No. 3, Munnakka. The evidence proves that this man is separate from his father, Beja, and has nothing to do with the Bahlolpur baras. The only owners who live jointly with Beja are Moola and Kabiz, and in order to make Munnakka liable as a member of Beja's gang very satisfactory evidence of his association with his father and brothers or with some of the other appellants in the habitual commission of thefts must be forthcoming. In my opinion there is no such evidence on the record. There is only one case against him alone, and of the eight cases which are said to be proved against him as showing his association with his father and his brother, I find that the evidence regarding cases Nos. 57, 102 and 104 is not very convincing so far as Munnakka's alleged share in the thefts is concerned. Beja figures prominently in those cases, and the mere presence of Munnakka when the Panchayats went to Beja does not necessarily establish the association of Munnakka with his father or his other brothers. I, therefore, hold that it is not proved that Munnakka belonged to this gang.

* * * * *

I have now dealt with each appellant in this case separately; and as a result of the findings recorded above I hold that Beja No. 1, Jhanda, Moola, Kabiz, Kundan, Ajab, Majnun, Beja No. 2, Niadar No. 1, Sheo Chand, Ramji Lal and Bhagwana all belong to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing cattle theft; and I accordingly hold that they are all guilty under section 401, Indian Penal Code. I may note here that the learned Counsel for the appellants did not touch the evidence for the defence in his argument before me, nor did he urge that in the event of the appellants being held guilty under section 401 aforesaid the sentences passed upon them by the Magistrate were too severe. I think myself that such a contention on the part of the learned Counsel would not have been justified, as it is clear that in view of the great prevalence of the crime of cattle theft in the Karnal District and of the serious loss which has been suffered by the cattle owners by reason of the depredations of cattle thieves extending over a long time, persons who are found guilty under section 401 must receive deterrent sentences. I have, therefore, no hesitation in maintaining the sentences of the above-mentioned appellants whom I have held guilty under section 401, Indian Penal Code, and I dismiss the appeal so far as they are concerned. As regards the remaining appellants, Munnakka, Abdulla, Kanahaya and Niadar No. 2, I hold that it is not satisfactorily established that they are members of a gang of thieves within the meaning of section 401; and accordingly accepting their appeal, I set aside their convictions and sentences and acquit them.

Appeal partly accepted and partly dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 458 OF 1912.
TAKEN UP CASE No. 12 OF 1912.
November 26, 1912.
Present:—Justice Sir Ralph Benson, KT., and Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar.
In re S. SUPPAYA THARAGAN—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 476, 537 (b)—Order to prosecute—No order directing accused to be taken to nearest Magistrate—Irregularity in proceedings, effect of.

An order directing the prosecution of an accused, under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, is not illegal but irregular if it does not at once direct the accused to be taken before the nearest first Class Magistrate, and the irregularity is such as is expressly cured by section 537 (b), Criminal Procedure Code.

In the matter of the petition of Bhup Kunwar, 26 A. 249; A. W. N. (1904) 15; 1 Cr. L. J. 73, dissented from.

Case taken up under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1898), by the High Court to revise the judgment of the Acting District Judge, in Criminal Appeal No. 27 of 1912, preferred against that of the Joint Magistrate of Palghat Division, in Calendar Case No. 19 of 1912.

Mr. A. Sundaram, for the Accused.

Mr. C. F. Napier, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—We are unable to agree with the Sessions Judge that there was any illegality in the order of Thomas, the Magistrate, under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, on the 15th January 1912.

His omission to at once direct the accused to be taken before the nearest first Class Magistrate was at most an irregularity, which was set right by the subsequent order directing him to be taken before such Magistrate. Such irregularity is expressly cured by section 537 (b), Criminal Procedure Code. We are unable to agree with the view taken by Stanley, C. J., in In the matter of the petition of Bhup Kunwar (1) with refernce to the construction of that clause.

We set aside the order of acquittal made by the Sessions Judge and direct him to restore the appeal to his file and dispose of it according to law.

Order set aside.

(1) 26 A. 249; A. W. N. (1904) 15; 1 Cr. L. J. 73.

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 376B OF 1913.
January 30, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Twomey.
PWA ME—APPLICANT
versus
SAN HLA alias LEONG FOKE SHU—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488—Maintenance—Wife—Husband.

Under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, a woman cannot be granted a maintenance order against a man unless she proves herself to be his legal wife according to his personal law.

Mr. Wiltshire, for the Applicant.

Mr. Dawson, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this maintenance case under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the applicant Ma Pwa Me is a Burmese Buddhist and the respondent San Hla alias Leong Foke Shu is the son of a Chinese father by a Shan mother. The parties are proved to have cohabited for six or seven years and to have had two children, one of whom is living, but there was no marriage ceremony of any kind. The Magistrate has found that even if they were both Burmese Buddhists, the circumstances do not give rise to a presumption that there was a legal marriage. He has found further that the respondent, San Hla, was not a Burmese Buddhist and that there was no marriage according to the Chinese Customary Law applicable to the respondent.

As regards the latter finding, it is clear that a maintenance order could not be granted against the respondent unless it was proved that the applicant was his legal wife according to his own personal law. An attempt was made to prove that San Hla was converted to the Burmese form of Buddhism, but the evidence is not sufficient. He paid reverence to pongyis and listened to their sermons, and when one of his children died he took part in ceremonies which are usually performed by Burmese Buddhists. He also became a member of a society for promoting Buddhism, but it is admitted that several other Chinese belong to this Society without abandoning their own special form of worship. One witness states that when San Hla was a boy he was Shinpyu'd during the April holidays. But this is denied by his father and the allegation cannot be regarded as proved. The respondent produced several witnesses who state that he has always followed Chinese forms of worship. I agree with the following remarks of Mr. Justice Parlett in Maung Tun Tha alias Wong Kin v. Ma Pu (1): "The grounds on which the Magistrate considered applicant a Burmese Buddhist are that he is commonly known by a Burmese name; that he worships at pagodas, pays reverence to Buddhist monks and keeps fast days at Buddhist monasteries; and that he built a Buddhist monastery and dedicated it according to the ritual observed by Burmese Buddhists in such cases. It is a matter of common knowledge and experience that Chinamen long resident or born in this country adopt a Burmese name. As regards the other points, they indicate that he is a Buddhist, as he admits he is, but there is nothing to show that the practices he followed differ from those followed by all Chinese Buddhists, whether in Burma or elsewhere, much less that they are the peculiar characteristics of Burmese Buddhists." I think the Magistrate was right in deciding against San Hla's alleged conversion to the Burmese form of Buddhism. Even if this conversion had been proved, I doubt whether it would follow that San Hla should be held amenable to the customs by which the marriages of Burmese Buddhists are regulated. But as I find that San Hla is a Chinese Buddhist, it is clear that the validity of the marriage alleged in this case must depend on the Customary Law applicable to Chinese Buddhists. It is admitted that there was not even the semblance of a marriage according to Chinese custom. It is not alleged that any of the preliminary steps enumerated in Parker's work on Chinese Family Law were fulfilled.

As I find that the respondent is a Chinese Buddhist and that there was no marriage according to Chinese Customary Law, it is not necessary to deal with the further question whether the relationship of the parties would have amounted to a legal marriage if they had both been Burmese Buddhists.

The application is dismissed.

Application dismissed

(1) 8 Ind. Cas. 452; 3 Bur. L. T. 67; 11 Cr. L. J. 654.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 588 OF 1914.

August 8, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott.

FARZAND ALI—APPLICANT

versus

HAKIM ALI—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 133—Nomination of jurors—Principle to be observed by Magistrates.

It is not illegal for a Magistrate to address any inquiry to the person who first came forward to draw his attention to the existence of an alleged public nuisance, with a view to ascertaining the names of respectable and independent residents of the neighbourhood who would be willing to serve on the jury but it would be highly improper on his part to appoint to serve on the jury the friends or supporters of the person at whose instance the proceedings are being taken.

It is, however, expedient that in all proceedings, initiated under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate should bear in mind that he is supposed to be acting purely in the interest of the public and should be on his guard against any tendency to use the section as a substitute for litigation in Civil Courts in order to the settlement of a private dispute.

Upendra Nath Bhuttacharjee v. Khitish Chandra Bhuttacharjee, 23 C. 499; Kylash Chunder Sen v. Ram Lal Mittra, 26 C. 869, Mir Imam Abdul Aziz v. Queen-Empress, 4 P. R. 1897 Cr., referred to.

Criminal revision from an order of the Magistrate of Meerut.

Messrs. J. J. Simeon and Uma Shankar Bajpai, for the Applicant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision in respect of certain proceedings taken by a Magistrate under section 133 and the succeeding sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The matter appears to have been brought to the notice of the Magistrate by a petition presented by a person of the name of Hakim Ali. That petition stated in substance that Farzand Ali, who is the applicant now before me, had recently enlarged his dwellin-ghouse by making certain constructions which had the effect of obstructing a portion of a public way used by the residents of two villages, and that serious inconvenience was thereby being caused to the petitioner and other residents of the neighbourhood. After notice had issued to Farzand Ali, the latter applied in accordance with law for the appointment of a jury to try the question whether the conditional order issued by the Magistrate for the removal of the alleged obstruction was a reasonable and proper order. Farzand Ali, as he was entitled to do, nominated two jurymen. I note that he nominated two co-religionists of his own. The Magistrate appears to have inquired from Hakim Ali whether he could suggest the names of two other suitable persons to serve on the jury and thereupon Hakim Ali presented a petition suggesting the names of two Hindu residents of another village. The Magistrate then proceeded to nominate a foreman. It has been brought to my notice in the course of argument that the foreman originally nominated by the Magistrate declined to serve, that the Magistrate thereupon nominated another gentleman, a Muhammadan, and that this nomination was objected to on behalf of Farzand Ali. I have not pursued the history of this objection further because no plea is taken in the petition before me with regard to the appointment of the foreman. After the majority of the jury had decided the question referred to them in a sense unfavourable to Farzand Ali, the Magistrate proceeded to make his order absolute in accordance with law. Objection is now taken before this Court that the entire proceedings before the Magistrate, from the date of the order constituting the jury, are illegal and void by reason of the fact that two of the jurors were appointed on the suggestion of the petitioner, Hakim Ali.

There is authority for this proposition in the cases of Upendra Nath Bhuttachariee v. Khitish Chandra Bhuttacharjee (1) and Kylash Chunder Sen v. Ram Lal Mittra (2), in some older cases of the same Court referred to in the above decision, and I have also been referred to the case of Mir Imam Abdul Aziz v. Queen-Empress (3). Now it is certainly expedient that in all proceedings initiated under section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the Magistrate should bear in mind that he is supposed to be acting purely in the interests of the public, and should be on his guard against any tendency to use this section as a substitute for litigation in the Civil Courts in order to the settlement of a private dispute. In the present case the question before the Magistrate was whether there had been an obstruction to a public way, to the injury or inconvenience of members of the public entitled to use the same. Hakim Ali had no locus standi in the matter once he had performed what was perhaps his duty as a good citizen in calling the attention of the Magistrate to the existence of the nuisance. In so far, therefore, as the rulings to which I have been referred lay down the principle that it is expedient that Magistrates should be on their guard against allowing a proceeding of this sort to assume the character of a private litigation and allowing it to be treated as a dispute to which two private individuals representing opposite interests are the parties, I am in entire accord with the same. I still more emphatically approve of the principle laid down in the Punjab case above referred to, that it would be highly improper on the part of a Magistrate to appoint to serve on a jury of this sort the friends or supporters of the person at whose instance the proceedings under Chapter X of the Code of Criminal Procedure are being taken. At the same time it must be remembered that it is often not an easy matter for a Magistrate to secure the services of a foreman and two independent jurymen to undertake in the public interests an inquiry of this sort, it may be, in some village distant from headquarters. If the rulings to which I have been referred are supposed to lay down the principle that it is illegal for a Magistrate to address any inquiry to the person who first came forward to draw his attention to the existence of the alleged public nuisance, with a view to

(1) 23 C. 499.

(2) 26 C. 869.

(3) 4 P. R. 1897 Cr.

ascertaining the names of respectable and independent residents of the neighbourhood who would be willing to serve on the jury, then I am unable to concur in any such principle. It clearly goes beyond anything which is to be found in the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure itself, and it also goes beyond the requirements of the effective and impartial administration of justice. The criterion, therefore, which I would apply to a case of this sort, is whether the person at whose instance the proceedings were instituted was allowed to exercise rights not conferred upon him by law as if he were a party to the litigation, and whether as a matter of fact the jurors nominated by the Magistrate could rightly be described as friends or supporters of the aforesaid person. Even in the cases to which I have been referred, it is sufficiently clear that the underlying principle that the revisional jurisdiction of the Court should be exercised only to correct a manifest failure of justice, was clearly recognized. The record before me does not show that Farzand Ali at any time objected in the Court below to the two Hindu jurors who were nominated at the suggestion of Hakim Ali. Even in his petition to this Court he has not suggested, much less proved by affidavit, that these persons could be regarded as friends or supporters of Hakim Ali. I have, therefore, no materials before me which would justify the conclusion that these Hindu jurors were other than respectable and impartial residents of the neighbourhood and suitable persons to have been called upon to act as such; on the contrary the silence of the applicant in revision justifies the opposite presumption. So far, therefore, from being prepared to hold that the Magistrate's proceedings were illegal or void, I do not find them to be vitiated by any such impropriety or irregularity as would justify the interference of this Court.

The application is, therefore, dismissed.

Application dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 681 OF 1914.

June 5, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sharfuddin and Mr. Justice Teunon.

HARNARAIN SARDAR AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 147, 353—Charge of rioting—Common object wrongly stated, effect of—Acquittal—Conviction under another section, whether sustained—Proper course—Procedure.

Where in an appeal against conviction for rioting, a Sessions Judge acquits the accused finding that there has been an error or omission in the statement of the common object as set out in the charge, but convicts them of an offence under another section, which the accused were not called upon to answer, he commits a manifest error and the conviction cannot be sustained, as the accused are prejudiced thereby.

In such a case the order of acquittal made by the Sessions Judge should also be set aside and the accused should be ordered to be re-tried on charges properly framed.

Mr. Norton, Counsel, and Babus Jogendranath Mukerjee and Dharmodas Banerji, for the Petitioners.

Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterjee, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case it appears that on the 9th of December last, the day of the Mohurrum, there was a collision between two Mohurrum processions or between those processions or one or other of them and the Police Officers on duty at the time and place in question. Of the Mohurrum parties one was composed of the employees of the Budge-Budge Jute Mill and, one spoken of as the Katki Dol, of the employees of an oil depôt. In the occurrence it would seem that four of the Police Officers and three members of the Katki Dol were injured.

The nine petitioners before us and some others were, therefore, placed on their trial before the Joint Magistrate of Alipore. Having heard the witnesses for the prosecution the Joint Magistrate framed against the accused a charge of rioting and in the charge so framed, it was stated that the common object of the unlawful assembly which has culminated in the riot, was "to assault the Police." No charges were framed under section 353 or section 323 of the Code. Why this was not done does not appear from the record. It may be that the Joint Magistrate thought it unnecessary to ascertain which of the accused before him, if any, were responsible for specific injuries. In the result the Joint Magistrate convicted the nine petitioners (and one other accused with whom we are not now concerned) and sentenced them under section 147 of the Code to various terms of imprisonment.

On appeal the Additional Sessions Judge of Alipore came to the conclusion that the attack made by the mill employees was made, not upon the Police, but upon the members of the Katki Dol, and that the injuries suffered by some of the officers were sustained in their endeavour to separate the two Mohurrum parties.

Finding, therefore, that the petitioners were not actuated by any common design to assault "the Police," that the injuries caused represented the independent acts of individuals, and that in respect of any such injury only the person inflicting it could be made responsible, the Sessions Judge held that the charges framed by the Joint Magistrate failed and, therefore, acquitted the petitioners of the offence of rioting.

When from the evidence on the record the Sessions Judge deduced, as he appears to have deduced, that the common object of the petitioners and their companions was to assault the members of the Katki Dol, and when he also found that in the attack thus made upon that party some of its members were injured, whether upon these findings, if the Sessions Judge had been able further to hold that by the error or omission in the statement of the common object as set out in the charge the petitioners had been in no way prejudiced or misled, the Sessions Judge should or should not have affirmed the convictions, is a matter we need not now discuss.

Having acquitted the petitioners of the offence of rioting the Sessions Judge next proceeded to convict the petitioners of an offence under section 353 of the Code in respect of the assaults committed upon the several Police Officers. Here the Sessions Judge has fallen into manifest error. The petitioners had not been called upon to answer to any such charge and it cannot be said that they have not been prejudiced, for the judgment of the Joint Magistrate appears to show that in his opinion in the case of some, if not all of the petitioners, the evidence going to show that they had individually inflicted specific injuries, though sufficient to establish general activity in the riot, was not sufficient to prove the commission of the definite act alleged.

Moreover, in convicting the petitioners of an assault or assaults upon the Police the Sessions Judge has not found which Police Officer was assaulted by which petitioner, though in the view taken by him of the case such a finding was essential.

We, therefore, set aside the conviction of, and the sentences imposed upon, the petitioners under section 353 of the Code. But having regard to the finding arrived at by both Courts, and having heard learned Counsel for the petitioners on this point as on other points, we think that in this case our proper course is to set aside also the acquittal of the petitioners under section 147, and to direct that they be re-tried on charges properly framed under sections 147, 353, 323 and any other appropriate section of the Penal Code. We order accordingly.

Re-trial ordered.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE No. 767 OF 1914.

September 10, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott.

EMPEROR—APPLICANT

versus

GHASITE—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 439, 562—Revision—Power of High Court to set aside order under s. 562 and to pass sentence.

A High Court cannot set aside an order under section 562 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and of its own authority substitute for that order a sentence of whipping or of imprisonment.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge of Jhansi.

FACTS of the case appear from the following reference of the Sessions Judge:—"I have the honour to forward for favour of submission to the Hon'ble High Court the record of Emperor v. Ghasite, section 379 of the Indian Penal Code. The findings of the Court are that Ghasite was found in the railway goods-shed with three bags of gur in his possession. The evidence shows that he had two companions. The Court believing the evidence of Mr. Norton, a mail engine driver and master of the accused, was of opinion that Ghasite had been sent by his master on an errand to the loco-sheds to find if Mr. Norton would be wanted to drive an engine that night and being accosted by two thieves gave way to the sudden temptation to join them. He, therefore, ordered the accused to give security for good behaviour for six months by executing a bond for Rs. 30, with one surety in the same sum.

"Mr. Norton's evidence appears to me most unconvincing. As a mail driver he could only be put in charge of a mail train and all mail trains leave Jhansi between 1-50 P. M. and 4 P. M. The necessity for inquiries at 10 P. M. is not apparent.

"It is notorious that in Jhansi as elsewhere railway thieves are chiefly recruited from the lowest grades of railway employees and the servants of superior employees. The accused in this case appears to be a typical railway thief working in concert with two others. Thefts in railway goods-sheds are so persistent and shameless that deterrent sentences should always be passed on conviction. It is not right that the accused should get off practically scot-free because his previous good character is vouched for by his master, whose evidence does not appear to be worthy of credit.

"I, therefore, submit this case with the recommendation that the order under section 562, Criminal Procedure Code, should be cancelled and a more suitable sentence, either of whipping or imprisonment, should be awarded."

JUDGMENT.—I think there is good deal to be said for the view taken of this case by the District Magistrate, but I am inclined to doubt whether it is worth this Court's while to interfere. The District Magistrate seems to think that this Court in revision can set aside an order under section 562 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and of its own authority substitute for that order a sentence of whipping or of imprisonment. Under sections 439/423, Criminal Procedure Code, this Court certainly could not take the action suggested. The provisions of section 439 itself empower the High Court in revision to enhance a sentence, but it is clear that no sentence has been passed in the present case. The Court, instead of sentencing the accused, has ordered him to enter into a bond to appear and receive sentence when called upon. The point of law thus taken may appear a technical one, but it is closely connected with another question of considerable importance, viz., the question whether an appeal lies against an order under section 562 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I have recently followed the Punjab Chief Court in holding that an appeal does lie, and that question necessarily depends upon the soundness of the contention that in a case like the present no sentence has been passed. It follows, therefore, that if this Court interferes at all in this matter, it can only order the case to be re-tired. Under all the circumstances of the case I do not think it worth while to take this step. Let the record be returned.

Record returned.

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE No. 93 OF 1913.
February 3, 1914.
CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 979 OF 1913.
December 23, 1913.

Present:—Sir Henry Hartnoll, Offg. Chief Judge, and Mr. Justice Ormond.

PO MYA—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 234, 239—Charge—Joint trial of two persons for two distinct offences—Misjoinder—Re-trial of appellant.

To enable more persons than one to be charged and tried together for more offences than one, the offences must all form part of the same transaction.

Where there is a misjoinder of charges, the convictions and sentences must be set aside and a re-trial ordered in the case of the accused who appeals, whether he has been prejudiced by the misjoinder or not.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A BENCH.

TOWNEY, J.—The appellant, Nga Po Mya, was tried jointly at one trial with another accused, Tun Lin, for two distinct offences of house-breaking by night and theft under section 457, Indian Penal Code, the first offence having been committed at the house of one Maung Lwin on the 30th August 1913, and the second at the house of one Maung Saung in another village on the 30th September 1913.

The joint trial was, in my opinion, illegal. Under section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, the general rule is that there shall be a separate charge and a separate trial for every distinct offence. Sections 234, 235, 236 and 239 state certain exceptions to this general rule. Sections 235 and 236 are clearly not applicable to the present case. Section 234 permits the trial of an accused person at one trial for three offences of the same kind committed within twelve months, but this section does not apply to the case of two persons being tried together. The section which governs such a case is section 239, and it is an assential condition for the joint trial of two or more persons under that section that the offences with which they are charged should have been committed in the same transaction. It is not sufficient for this purpose to show that they were afterwards in joint possession of the proceeds of the several offences with which they are charged.

It might be argued from the concluding part of section 239—"and the provisions contained in the former part of this Chapter shall apply to all such charges"—that section 239 and section 234 may be read together and that when two or more persons within the space of 12 months have been engaged jointly in more than one criminal transaction, they may be tried jointly at one trial for any number of the joint offences not exceeding three. It does not appear to me that this is the true meaning of the concluding part of section 239; I think the words "the former part of the Chapter" refer only to the part headed "Form of charges", sections 221 to 232 inclusive.

In view of the decision of the Privy Council in Subramania Aiyar v. Emperor (1) the question is one of great importance, for if the misjoinder is contrary to the provisions of the Code the convictions and sentences must be set aside and re-trials must be ordered whether the accused persons have been prejudiced or not by the misjoinder. It is desirable that there should be an authoritative ruling on the matter.

(1) 25 M. 61; 11 M. L. J. 233; 3 Bom. L. R. 540; 5 C. W. N. 866; 28 I. A. 257 (P. C.); 2 Weir 271.

I, therefore, refer to a Bench of this Court the question whether the joint trial of the two accused persons in this case for two distinct offences was contrary to the provisions of section 239, Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. Eggar, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

The Bench gave the following

OPINION.

HARTNOLL, OFFG. C. J.—I can see no reason for differing from the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Twomey. The meaning and applicability of section 239 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was considered by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Budhai Sheik v. Emperor (2) and I am in accord with the reasoning of the learned Judges who decided it. To enable more persons than one to be charged and tried together for more offences than one, the offences must all form part of the same transaction. Section 233 of the Code of Criminal Procedure lays down the general rule that there shall be a separate charge for each accused and that such charge shall be tried separately. The following sections lay down exceptions to the general rule. Sections 234 to 238 apply to cases where one person may be dealt with at one trial for more than one offence. Section 239 applies to the trial of more persons than one jointly. The last words of section 239 do not, in my opinion, mean that section 239 and section 234 are to be read together. I am of opinion that they only refer to sections 221 to 232 inclusive. The charges in the present case were not, therefore, authorized by law, as they relate to distinct offences not committed in the same transaction. It was urged that if this view be taken, a new trial need not necessarily be ordered. As I read the decision in the case of Subramania Aiyar v. Emperor (1), there must necessarily be a re-trial in the case of Maung Po Mya, who has appealed. I notice, however, that Maung Tun Lin pleaded guilty and has not appealed and that his case was called for on revision by Mr. Justice Twomey. Our revisional powers under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are discretionary and in the case of Emperor v. Tha Byaw (3),

(2) 33 C. 292; 10 C. W. N. 32; 3 Cr. L. J. 126.

(3) 4 L. B. R. 315; 9 Cr. L. J. 15 (F. B.).

a Full Bench of this Court did not set aside a conviction where an accused pleaded guilty and had not personally applied for revision although there was a misjoinder of charges in his case. It will be open to the Assistant Government Advocate to bring this case to the notice of Mr. Justice Twomey when he finally deals with the case of Maung Tun Lin.

I would answer the question referred by saying that the joint trial of Mauug Po Mya and Maung Tun Lin in this case for two distinct offences was contrary to the provisions of section 239 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

ORMOND, J.—I concur.

Question answered accordingly.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION NO. 843 OF 1914.

October 14, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott.

BRIJNANDAN PRASAD AND OTHERS—APPLICANTS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 107—Breach of public peace—Magistrate should base his order on evidence on record and not on personal knowledge outside record—Findings to justify order—When object lawful, order improper.

The final decision in a case should be based simply and entirely upon evidence legally brought on to the record. Therefore, a Magistrate who possesses outside knowledge of matters which are not evidence in a case under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, should keep that knowledge out of his judgment and endeavour to base his decision entirely upon the relevant evidence in the case.

To justify an order under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate should find that even the person proceeded against is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity or to do any wrongful act that probably may occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity.

Queen-Empress v. Abdul Kadir, 9 A. 452; A. W. N. (1887) 111; Jagat Narain v. Emperor, 8 Ind. Cas. 818; 7 A. L. J. 1161; 11 Cr. L. J. 719, referred to.

The Hindu residents of a town whose object was to take the Daschra procession, or to cause it to be taken, down a particular route, not forcibly and in defiance of any prohibition which might be issued by the authorities, but with the sanction and under the protection of the authorities, cannot be rightly bound over under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, to keep the peace.

Criminal revision from on order of the District Magistrate of Bijnor.

Messrs. Satya Chandra Mukerji and Rama Kant Malaviya, for the Applicants.

Mr. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against an order passed by the learned District Magistrate of Bijnor, directing the twelve applicants to furnish security for keeping the peace under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. One of the original applicants has since died and the petition has been prosecuted on behalf of the remaining eleven. I may add that the District Magistrate's immediate object in taking the proceedings resulting in the present order was to provide for the preservation of the public peace in the town of Najibabad during the last Daschra festival. This has now passed off quietly, and from one point of view it might be said that, even though the period for which the applicants were required to furnish security has not yet expired, it has ceased to be a matter of serious importance whether the Magistrate's order is now affirmed by this Court or set aside. The question, however, is one of some public importance and, if I may judge from the account of the state of public feeling in the town of Najibabad given in the Magistrate's order, it is unfortunately probable that the matter may come up again in one form or another before the District Courts and eventually before this Court. I think it advisable, therefore, to deal with the application as it stands, that is to say, I propose to consider whether the order under the revision was or was not a good and proper order, on the materials on the record, at the time when it was passed by the Magistrate on the 8th of September last.

One point taken in the petition of revision before me is that the District Magistrate has imported into his judgment a number of facts personally known to him, of which there is no legal evidence on the record. The District Magistrate frankly admits that he was necessarily in possession, at the time when he instituted this inquiry, of a great deal of information of one kind or another bearing on the question of the propriety or otherwise of binding over these applicants to keep the peace. He suggests that the parties before him were fully aware of this fact, and that their acquiescence in his proceeding with the inquiry, instead of applying for a transfer of the case to some other Court, virtually licensed him to import his own personal knowledge into the decision of the case to such extent as he might think proper. I may say that I regard it as a very satisfactory feature of the case that these applicants, while fully aware that the Magistrate of their district had had occasion to make personal inquiries of various kinds into the question of the dispute pending between different classes of the community in their town, felt such complete confidence in his impartiality and his anxiety to do justice between all classes of the community, that they had no desire to get the inquiry into this particular matter transferred to any other Court. At the same time they were entitled to ask that the final decision should be based simply and entirely upon evidence legally brought on to the record. To some extent at any rate it seems to me that this has not been done. There are references in the Magistrate's judgment to confidential papers in his own possession and to other matters which cannot possibly have been in evidence in the case. It may, no doubt, have been inevitable under the circumstances that the District Magistrate should have possessed outside knowledge of these matters, but he would have exercised a sounder discretion if he had kept that knowledge out of the judgment and endeavoured to base his decision entirely upon the relevant evidence in the case.

Another and more important point raised by this application may be stated in this form, that the findings of facts arrived at, no matter how, by the District Magistrate are not such as to warrant the order which has been passed requiring those applicants to furnish security. The Magistrate's judgment is a long one and contains a most interesting exposition of the circumstances which led up to the institution of the present proceeding and of the existing state of parties and of public feeling in the town of Najibabad. I have found it a little difficult, however, to disentangle from this general exposition of the facts the precise findings on the strength of which the order requiring the applicants to furnish security has been passed. What the law requires to justify this order is a finding that these applicants were likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity, or to do any wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity. These provisions have been interpreted by this Court in a number of rulings, beginning with the elaborate exposition of the law to be found in the case of Queen-Empress v. Abdul Kadir (1). Of later cases the one most in point is, in my opinion, that of Jagat Narain v. Emperor (2). It is not enough for the District Magistrate to record his opinion that, unless these persons are bound over to keep the peace, there is likely to be a breach of the peace or disturbance of the public tranquillity. He has to find in respect of each and all of these persons that they are likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity, or that they are likely to do some wrongful act which may occasion such a disturbance.

The point essentially in issue admits of being briefly stated. The Hindus of the town of Najibabad had expressed a desire to take the Dasehra procession along a route which appeared to the local authorities a highly objectionable one. The District Magistrate has evidently come to the conclusion that this desire on the part of the Hindu community of Najibabad, or on the part of some members of that community, is perverse and provocative. To put the matter bluntly, he obviously thinks that no Hindu can have any desire to take the Dasehra procession along that particular route except for the purposes of irritating and provoking his Mahomedan fellow-citizens. He finds it proved as against all these applicants that they have been working in various ways in order to secure for the community of which they are members a recognition of their right to take the Dasehra procession along this particular route. He argues that they are, therefore, likely to do something which will occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity. The position taken up by the applicants in arguing their case before me seems to be substantially that which was taken up by them in the Magistrate's Court.

(1) 9 A. 452; A. W. N (1887) 111.
(2) 8 Ind. Cas. 818; 7 A. L. J. 1161; 11 Cr. L. J. 719

BRIJNANDAN PRASAD v. EMPEROR.

I am not satisfied that it has been properly appreciated or considered by the Magistrate. The applicants contend that they themselves and the members of their community are entitled, in the lawful exercise of their religion and of their rights as citizens of the town of Najibabad, to take the procession down this particular route. They desire to contend that, if any breach of the peace results from their doing so, the blame would not lie on them, but on any other residents of the town of Najibabad who may take it on themselves to use force in order to interfere with persons exercising their lawful rights. They desire to persuade the authorities responsible for keeping the peace in the town of Najibabad that this view is the correct one. However mistaken this view may prove to be, if it is held in good faith, the persons so holding it are entitled to combine together for the purpose of pressing it on the notice of the authorities. The question to my mind is whether the evidence on this record justifies the conclusion that the present applicants, either as members of the Hindu community of the town of Najibabad or as persons entitled by custom to take a particular part in the annual Dasehra procession, have done anything more than what has been suggested above. Is it correct to say that it is proved in respect of these persons that they are likely themselves to commit a breach of the peace, themselves to disturb the public tranquillity, or to do any wrongful act which may occasion such breach of the peace or disturbance? Indeed, I may put this point even more strongly, and ask myself whether, apart from any question as to the effect of the evidence on the record, there has been any finding by the District Magistrate himself which goes so far as this against the petitioners. The District Magistrate has discussed the proceedings of the Hindu committee in Najibabad to which the majority of these applicants belong. If that committee is a seditious or illegal association, it ought to be proceeded against under the ordinary law. The evidence on this record would not justify a finding that the mere fact of membership of that committee would be sufficient to render any person liable to be bound over to keep the peace, nor do I understand that the District Magistrate wishes to arrive at any such finding. The essential finding at which the District Magistrate has arrived seems to be embodied in the following words in his judgment:—"They (i.e., the petitioners) wish to get what they want for the future, and with this idea they have instituted a committee which collects funds in order to obtain the object they failed in last year. The attainment of this object would inevitably mean a breach of the peace between Hindus and Muhammadans." I think the District Magistrate might have paused to ask himself more definitely what the "object" above referred to was. It does not seem a sufficient answer to this question to say that the object was that the Dasehra procession might be taken down a particular route. Was the object of the petitioners to take the Dasehra procession, or to cause it to be taken, down that particular route, forcibly and in defiance of any prohibition which might be issued by authorities; or was it to obtain the recognition by the authorities of their claim to be entitled to follow that route, and so take the procession along the same with the sanction and under the protection of the authorities? In the former case the applicants have been rightly bound over to keep the peace, in the latter case they have not. Now it does not seem to me that the District Magistrate has come to a finding that, if these applicants were not restrained by an order binding them over to keep the peace, they would be likely to take the Dasehra procession, or to cause it to be taken, down this particular route without the permission of the authorities, or in defiance of any prohibition which the local authorities might issue. Indeed the expression about obtaining "the object failed in last year" suggests a contrary conclusion. What was the object in which the petitioners are alleged to have failed in the previous year? So far as I can gather, it was an attempt to persuade the authorities to permit them to use this route and to enforce, as against any person who might desire to contest the same, the petitioners' alleged right to do so. That the object in question at last year's Dasehra festival was not to take the procession by this route forcibly, and in defiance of the wishes of the authorities, seems to be a matter of fair inference from the fact that, when the local authorities refused such permission, no attempt was actually made to take the procession by the objectionable route. Those members of the Hindu community who were dissatisfied with the decision of the authorities in the matter no doubt protested against the same, and appealed to superior authority; but it does not seem that they made any attempt to override that decision by criminal force. There is, no doubt, another passage in the District Magistrate's judgment which, if it stood alone, might suggest a different conclusion and an intention on his part to hold that, if securities were not taken from these applicants, there might be an attempt, as he puts it, "to force the route which was refused last year." This expression, however, seems to me difficult to reconcile with other passages in the same judgment. Moreover, it is not as it stands a sufficient finding of fact to justify the order complained of. It is too vague. It only expresses an apprehension on the Magistrate's part that an attempt might be made by some person or persons unspecified. To justify the order which has been passed in this case I should require a clear finding, resting upon reasonable evidence, that these applicants, if not bound over to keep the peace, would have been likely to employ force, or to incite other persons to employ force, in order to take the Dasehra procession along the objectionable route without the permission of the local authorities, and in defiance of any prohibition which those authorities might see fit to issue. It does not seem to me that there has been any such clear finding against the applicants in the present case. For these reasons I accept this petition of revision. I set aside the order complained of and direct that the security bonds furnished by these applicants be discharged. If the applicants, or any of them, have failed to furnish the required security, they should be released from confinement.

Order set aside.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 541 OF 1914.

August 6, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott.

G. W. DICK—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code Act (XLV of 1860), ss. 23, 415, 428—Wrongful gain and wrongful loss—Acting fraudulently or dishonestly.

D who was a horse-dealer was entrusted by C with a mare to be disposed of at the best possible price. He received an offer from L which he did not accept. Subsequently D showed L a telegram which purported to have been sent by C, and thereby induced L to give a higher price for the mare. L stated that the price which he paid was the price which he would have paid even if the mare belonged to D:

Held, that no wrongful loss was caused to L within the meaning of section 23 of the Penal Code, by reason of the fact that he was induced to give a higher price of the horse and D could not, under the circumstances, be held to have acted fraudulently.

Criminal appeal against the decision of the District Magistrate of Lucknow, dated the 18th June 1914.

Mr. R. F. Bahadurji (with him Mr. G. W. Dillon), for the Appellant.

Mr. L. M. Banerji, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. G. W. Dick, a horse-dealer, has been convicted by the City Magistrate of Lucknow on a charge framed under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code, alleging against him, that he, by deceiving Captain Laing, R.A.M.C., dishonestly induced that gentleman to pay over to him a sum of Rs. 200. The essential facts of the case admit of being briefly stated. The appellant, G. W. Dick, is a horse-dealer and he was entrusted by Captain Castle with a racing mare of the name of Tigress, which animal he was directed to dispose of for the owner's benefit at the best possible price. He received from Captain Laing an offer of Rs. 800 which he did not accept. Captain Laing insisted that the offer should be communicated to Dick's principal, that is to say, Captain Castle, and subsequently the appellant showed Captain Laing a telegram received by him from Captain Castle which purported to be, and was understood by Captain Laing to be, a refusal on the part of Captain Castle of the aforesaid offer of Rs. 800. Thereupon Captain Laing raised his offer to Rs. 1,000, which was accepted, and he became the owner of the animal at that price. It may be noted at once that there was no misrepresentation of any sort, or any sharpe practice, towards Captain Laing with regard to the quality of the goods purchased by him, i. e., of the mare 'Tigress'. He was allowed every opportunity of examining the animal and he paid Rs. 1,000 because, after reasonable trial and examination, he was satisfied that the mare was worth that price to him. Nevertheless it is true that a deception was practised upon Captain Laing in the matter of the telegram. As regards the precise nature of that deception the record before me is, in my opinion, seriously defective. Captain Castle has not been examined as a witness in the case. Broadly speaking, the lines upon which the trial proceeded in the Court below may be stated thus. The accused, G. W. Dick, was examined at length and the City Magistrate purports to accept as correct the story told by the accused in his examination, except where he finds it to be clearly contradicted by reliable evidence. The practical result is that the statements made by Dick have been accepted as true wherever they tell against him, and have been rejected where he tried to justifiy his action. On his own showing, the appellant's conduct in connection with this affair certainly does him no credit nor has he been always consistent in his account of the matter. The position which I understand him to have finally taken up is somewhat as follows. As agent for Captain Castle he had full authority to dispose of the mare 'Tigress' to any purchaser, provided he could secure a certain minimum price. Whether he intended the Court to understand that this minimum price was Rs. 500 or Rs. 600, I am not quite clear, but it was not less than Rs. 600. He found that Captain Laing was prepared to give Rs. 800 for the mare and might possibly be induced to pay even more. Thereupon he purchased the mare himself for Rs. 600, and prepared to appropriate for his own benefit the difference between this price and any sum which he might induce Captain Laing to pay. When Captain Laing insisted that his offer of Rs. 800 should be communicated to Captain Castle, it is obvious that Dick was placed in a difficulty. If the story told by him in Court is true, it was useless communicating any such offer to Captain Castle, because he was at the time himself the owner of the mare; yet one can well understand that he might feel considerable difficulty about admitting this fact to Captain Laing, for reasons independent of his desire to force that gentleman up to the limit of the price he was prepared to offer. I cannot say that the statement made by the appellant when examined as an accused person, or any other evidence on the record, really explains to my mind how Captain Castle was induced to send the telegram which is on the record as Exhibit D. It is no part of the prosecution case that this telegram was a forgery, or was not in fact despatched from Meerut by Captain Castle. I have no doubt on the evidence that it was represented to Captain Laing as a refusal of his offer of Rs. 800, and that it was so understood by him.

DICK v. EMPEROR.

These, so far as I am able to state them, are the essential facts of the case. It must be remembered that the appellant's conduct towards Captain Castle has not been made the subject-matter of complaint by the latter, and has not been in issue at the present trial. Captain Laing's grievance appears essentially to be that, if the mare 'Tigress' was in fact the property of Captain Castle when he made his offer of Rs. 800 and if that offer had been communicated to Captain Castle, it would have been accepted by the latter; hence he feels that he was induced to raise his bid from Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,000 by unfair means. The prosecution, however, has proceeded on the assumption that the accused spoke the truth when he said that the ownership of the animal had passed from Captain Castle to himself. If so, it is difficult to see what grievance Captain Laing has in the fact that an offer of Rs. 800 was not communicated to a person who was no longer the owner of the animal. The real reasons why Captain Laing had to pay the additional Rs. 200 were, firstly, that he thought the animal worth Rs. 1,000 and secondly, that Mr. Dick, the owner of the said animal, was not prepared to accept an offer of Rs. 800 when he shrewdly suspected that the refusal of that offer would call forth a higher bid from Captain Laing.

I have hitherto considered the matter in its broad aspects. It may be worth while also to deal with it, so to speak, more technically, with reference to the actual terms of the charge and of the provisions of sections 415 and 420 of the Indian Penal Code. Practically speaking there are two points set forth in the charge with reference to which Captain Laing is alleged to have been deceived. One is that the appellant, G. W. Dick, concealed from him the fact that he had himself become the owner of the mare 'Tigress' and professed to be selling the animal as agent for Captain Castle. I am prepared to discuss this point for the sake of argument, on the assumption that the appellant was speaking the truth when he said that he had become the owner of the animal by purchasing it himself under his general authority as agent for Captain Castle; but I wish it to be distinctly understood that there is no evidence on the record which proves this to be true, but a certain amount of evidence calculated to throw doubt on the suggestion. I make these remarks in view of any action which Captain Castle may see fit to take in the matter hereafter. Assuming, however, that the appellant, G. W. Dick, in his dealings with Captain Laing falsely represented Captain Castle to be the owner of the mare 'Tigress' at a time when the true owner was G. W. Dick himself, this circumstance cannot be made the basis of a charge of cheating, in view of Captain Laing's express admission that it had no effect on the price offered or paid by him. He expressly deposed that he would have paid the same price if he had known that the animal belonged to G. W. Dick and not to Captain Castle. The other point in respect of which it is alleged that the deception was practised on Captain Laing is in connection with the telegram, Exhibit D, already referred to. No doubt, Captain Laing was induced to believe that his offer of Rs. 800 had been communicated to Captain Castle and had been refused by the latter. To my mind, something more than this would have to be proved before a conviction could be affirmed under section 415, to say nothing of the more aggravated section 420 of the Indian Penal Code. The definition in the former of these sections shows that in order to support a conviction the accused must be shown to have acted either fraudulently or dishonestly. In the absence of any evidence from Captain Castle, I am certainly not prepared to find that the accused acted fraudulently in laying before Captain Laing a telegram which, it would appear, Captain Castle had sent him for the express purpose that it might be shown to some intending purchaser, if not to Captain Laing himself. The definition of the word "fraudulently," contained in section 25 of the Indian Penal Code, does not carry one beyond the statement that "fraudulently" is equal to "with intent to defraud;" but in the present case, if Dick intended to defraud any one by his proceedings, it was Captain Castle and not Captain Laing. If the appellant had been acting in a straightforward manner as agent of Captain Castle in this matter, he would have been perfectly justified in informing his principal that he had an offer of Rs. 800, but believed that he could get a higher offer still if he could produce a telegram suggesting that his principal would not accept this price and was not anxious to sell at all. The definition of "dishonestly" in the Indian Penal Code refers one to the definition of the expressions "wrongful loss" and "wrongful gain" in section 23 of the same Code. Now I am certainly not prepared to hold that "wrongful loss" was caused to Captain Laing by reason of the fact that he was induced to bid up to what he considered the full value of the animal he desired to purchase; the only question, therefore, would be whether "wrongful gain" was caused to the appellant, G. W. Dick. Here again it becomes obvious that the essential criminality of the appellant's conduct, if there was criminality, lay in his dealings towards Captain Castle and not in his dealings towards Captain Laing. In the absence, therefore, of Captain Castle's evidence I am not prepared to hold it proved that the appellant acted either "fraudulently" or "dishonestly" in connection with his dealings with Captain Laing as set forth in the charge.

It has been matter for serious consideration with me since I heard arguments, whether I should not direct the Court below to record and certifiy Captain Castle's evidence in the case. The record before me does not explain why the evidence of this important witness was not obtained even, if necessary, by the issue of a commission. It is not always possible or convenient for an Appellate Court to use its powers under section 428 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to correct deficiencies in the inquiry conducted by the trial Court. The present is not a very convenient moment for insisting on the examination of an officer in the army, and I do not know what practical inconvenience I might cause by passing an order for Captain Castle's examination at this stage of the proceedings. If I were quite certain that the absence of his evidence has resulted in a failure of justice, I might perhaps have run this risk ; but I cannot go further than entertaining a suspicion that Captain Castle's evidence might have thrown such light on the proceedings of the appellant as to have justified his conviction even upon the charge framed in this case. I feel no great certainty on this point; the possibility of a conviction would depend upon a highly technical view of the provisions of section 415 of the Indian Penal Code. The matter, as a whole, was one in which the person who really had ground for complaint was Captain Castle rather than Captain Laing, and if the former of these gentlemen has been badly used by the appellant, there would be nothing in the result of the present proceedings to debar him from seeking his remedy in the proper Court.

KANDASAMI ASARI v. NARAYANA ASARI.

The result, therefore, is that the conviction is not, in my opinion, maintainable on the evidence as it stands, and that after considering the possible result of an order requiring further evidence to be taken under section 428 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, I am not satisfied that such an order is called for in the interests of justice. I accordingly accept this appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence in this case and acquit the appellant, G. W. Dick, of the offence charged. He appears to have been released on bail. His security will, therefore, be discharged and the fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Appeal allowed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 468 OF 1914.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 395 OF 1914.

December 10, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar.

KANDASAMI ASARI—PETITIONER

versus

NARAYANA ASARI AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Petitioner, possession of, on behalf of both parties—Jurisdiction to pass order.

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass an order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, when the possession of the applicant is neither exclusive nor superior to that of the opposite party but is on behalf of both the parties and the applicant merely wants a declaration to that effect.

Tarujan Bibee v. Asamuddi Bepuri, 4 C. W. N. 426, followed.

Bhaskaruni Kesavarayadu v. Bhaskaruni Chalapatirayudu, 31 M. 318; 18 M.L.J. 343; 8 Cr. L. J. 205; 4 M. L. T. 301; High Court Proceedings, 15th November 1880, No. 2301; 2 Weir 99, distinguished.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and section 13 of the Charter Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Divisional Magistrate of Tuticorin in Miscellaneous Case No. 5 of 1914.

Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Respondents.

The Acting Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

ORDER.—The respondents (2nd party) admit in their counter-petition that the Hukdars of the temple consist of members both of the petitioner's sub-caste and of the respondents' sub-caste (paragraph 2 of the counter-petition). They did not allege that their sub-caste Hukdars alone are entitled to the exclusive possession and management of the temple. On the other hand, they merely wanted a declaration that "the temple is the common property of all Asaries." (Paragraph 7 of the counter petition).

The ruling in Tarujan Bibee v. Asamuddi Bepuri (1) directly applies, and the learned Magistrate had no jurisdiction on the finding he arrived at to pass any order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, as the respondents' possession was on their own allegations not exclusive possession or superior possession but possession, on behalf of all the Hukdars. In the case of High Court Proceedings, 15*th November* 1880, No. 2301 (2), the successful party was in exclusive possession. In Bhaskaruni Kesavarayadu v. Bhaskaruni Chalapatirayudu (3) the possession of the manager of a Hindu family, which possession was in quality superior to that of the junior members, was protected. These two cases cited by Mr. Devadoss for respondents are, therefore, clearly distinguishable.

(1) 4 C. W. N. 426.

The learned Magistrate's order is, therefore, set aside.

Order set aside.

(2) 2 Weir 99.
(3) 31 M. 318; 18 M. L. J. 343; 8 Cr. L. J. 205; 4 M. L. T. 301.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 604 OF 1914.
CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 510 OF 1914.

December 9, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair and Mr. Justice Hannay.

In re ALI MAHOMED MUKRI AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED—PETITIONERS.

Madras Forest Act (V of 1882), s. 16—Private land wrongly included in notification regarding proposed reserve, but omitted in demarcation—Private party in possession with patta and paying assessment—Conviction of trespass, if legal.

Where, under a notification published under section 16 of the Madras Forest Act, V of 1882, certain land alleged to belong to the accused had been included in the tract proposed to be constituted a reserve forest but the same was excluded from the reserve at the time the latter was demarcated, and where the party alleging title continued in possession and enjoyment, a patta being issued to him and assessment received from him therefor, he cannot be convicted for trespass under the Forest Act.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Puttur, in Criminal Appeal No. 34 of 1914, preferred against that of the Stationary Second Class Magistrate of Uppanangadi Taluk, in Calendar Case No. 58 of 1914.

FACTS.—One Moideen Beari possessed some lands in the village of Kalingi, near which the Government wanted to reserve a forest, and a Gazette notification was accordingly published under section 6 of the Madras Forest Act of 1882. In this notification a portion of lands which Moideen Beari claimed to be his own were included. The latter preferred an appeal out of time and it was dismissed. A final notification was thereafter published under section 16 of the Madras Forest Act. But in demarcating the actual boundary of the reserve Moideen Beari's lands were excluded and the Revenue Authorities granted a patta and collected assessment from Moideen Beari for his lands, which continued to remain in his possession. Moideen Beari sold the lands to the accused in 1913 and when they tried to improve the land, they were prosecuted for the offence of trespass and of clearing the reserve and were convicted. Against this conviction they preferred this criminal revision petition to the High Court.

Mr. K. Sundara Rao, for the Accused:—The exclusion of the plot from the reserve and the granting of the patta clearly recognised the rights of the accused to these plots. The final notification was subject to correction by the actual demarcation and until then the rights of private parties remained unextinguished. There is no evidence that Moideen Beari's claims had been heard and decided as required by law, Queen-Empress v. Rami Reddi (1). Notice to the actual occupant was necessary and no rights could be extinguished without such notice, Reference under the Madras Forest Act (2).

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown, argued contra and laid stress upon the notification which had become final and conclusive.

ORDER.—Moideen Beari held the patta. He sold the land to the petitioners. Moideen Beari and after him the petitioners paid the assessment and remained in possession. There was a notification under section 16 of the Forest Act, 1882, reserving it as forest land, but boundary stones were afterwards fixed excluding the land in contravention of the notification. In these circumstances we are of opinion that the petitioners are not guilty of trespass. We set aside the conviction under the Forest Act, 1882, and direct the fine, if levied, to be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

(1) 12 M. 226; 1 Weir 761.
(2) 12 M. 203; 1 Weir 758 (F. B.).

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1086 OF 1914.

December 18, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Tudball.

BISHAN PRASAD—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 185—Bidding for right to sell drugs without intention of performing the obligation—Offence.

A person who bids at a sale held by a Collector of the right to sell drugs in a certain area, without any intention of performing the obligation under which he is laying himself at the time of bidding, and gives a false name, is guilty of an offence under section 185 of the Indian Penal Code.

Application in revision against an order of the Magistrate of Mainpuri.

Mr. R. Alston (with him Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji), for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, Bishan Prasad, has been convicted under section 185 of the Penal Code and has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 100. He made bids at a sale held by the Collector of the right to sell drugs in a certain Tahsil and gave a false name. When finally his last bid was sanctioned by the Board of Revenue. he denied that he had ever made any bid at all and he has accordingly been prosecuted under section 185 of the Code. The point raised on his behalf is that section 185 does not contemplate a sale of this description. The language of the section, however, is wide. The right to sell drugs, i. e., the monopoly granted for a certain area comes within the definition of property. It is impossible to hold that the word 'property' in section 185 is not used in its wide sense. The gist of the offence in the present case was the intention in the appellant's mind not to perform the obligation under which he was laying himself at the time of bidding. The facts having been found against him they clearly, in my opinion, come within the offence mentioned in the section. The case is similar to that of Queen v. Reazooddeen (1). There is no ground for interference. The application is, therefore, rejected.

Application rejected.

(1) 3 W. R. Cr. 33.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 218 OF 1914.

June 24, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott.

BHAWANI SINGH AND OTHERS—APPLICATNS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 122—Discretion—Opinion formed on Police report.

The discretion given to a Magistrate by section 122 of the Criminal Procedure Code is a wide one. There must, however, be some sort of independent inquiry by the Magistrate, showing that a judicial discretion has been exercised in rejecting a surety.

Therefore, a Magistrate's order rejecting a surety merely on the Police report and without any independent inquiry by himself is bad.

Emperor v. Balwant, 27 A. 293; A. W. N. (1904) 231; 1 Cr. L. J. 912; 1 A. L. J. 601, followed.

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate of Mainpuri.

Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision which raises two questions. The three applicants, Bhawani Singh, Gana Shankar, and Rustam Singh, have been ordered by a Magistrate of the first class to furnish security to be of good behaviour. That order has been confirmed by the District Magistrate in appeal. Its propriety is called in question by the first paragraph of the application to this Court. An examination of the record discloses to my mind no valid ground for interference with this order. In so far the application fails.

The other point taken has reference to an attempt made by the three applicants to comply with the order requiring them to furnish security. Each of them tendered his security bond signed by two sureties, and it has been ascertained that the sureties offered were men of sufficient substance, regard being had to the amount of the security required. The Magistrate has, however, rejected three sureties, one for each of the three applicants, on the ground that he believes them to be men of lawless character, who could not be trusted to control the proceedings of the applicants, so as to restrain them from the commission of offences during the period covered by the security bond. The discretion given to a Magistrate by section 122, Criminal Procedure Code, is a wide one, and if the facts in this case are as stated by the Magistrate, it cannot be said that he was wrong in treating each of the sureties as an "unfit" person within the meaning of that section. The record, however, discloses the fact that the Magistrate formed this opinion on the strength merely of a report received by him from a Police Officer. There is a concensus of authority in this Court, of which I am content to refer to the case of Emperor v. Balwant (1) and to the cases therein cited, that such a conclusion as has been arrived at by the Magistrate in this case is not warranted by a Police report in respect of which there has been no formal inquiry in Court. The persons called upon to furnish security have been given no opportunity of meeting the objection. The view taken by this Court appears to be that in recording an opinion that such and such surety is an unfit person, the Magistrate must show that he has exercised a judicial discretion. No attempt has been made to lay down the nature of the inquiry which should be had and, speaking for myself personally, I should desire to restrict the interference by this Court in such a matter within narrow limits. At the same time I am not prepared to dissent from the authorities of this Court which lay down that there must be some sort of independent inquiry by the Magistrate, showing that a judicial discretion has been exercised as to the question of the fitness of the proposed surety. I set aside the order rejecting each of the three sureties in question, and following the precedent of the reported case to which I have already referred, direct the Magistrate to take up the matter again and dispose of this question of the fitness of these three sureties after a satisfactory inquiry in accordance with law. There was another surety, namely the second surety tendered by the applicant, Rustam Singh, who was rejected by the Magistrate on the ground that he lived at so great a distance from Rustam Singh's place of residence that the Magistrate felt no confidence in his ability to exercise any control over Rustam Singh's proceedings during the period covered by the security bond. Here, again, I think that the reason given for rejecting the surety may be a valid one; but the Magistrate's procedure in the matter has been somewhat too summary. It is at least conceivable that the surety intended to make arrangements for Rustam Singh to take up his residence near him. At any rate I think that the Magistrate would have exercised a sounder discretion if, before definitely rejecting the surety, he had called the latter and made some further inquiry. It is possible that the surety might himself have admitted that he had no real hope of being able to control Rustam Singh's proceedings. As I am sending the case back, I think it advisible to set aside also the order rejecting this other surety tendered on behalf of Rustam Singh, and similarly direct proper inquiry to be made with regard to this man also. Let the record be returned.

Order set aside.

(1) 27 A. 293; A. W. N. (1904) 231; 1 Cr. L. J. 912; 1 A. L. J. 601.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 579 OF 1914.

July 17, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chamier.

GOBIND SAHAI AND ANOTHER—APPLICANTS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 526—Transfer of case—Power of District Magistrate to send case under s. 107 to second class Magistrate.

It is not competent to a District Magistrate to transfer a case under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code to a Magistrate of the second class, who is incompetent to conduct and complete the proceedings.

King-Emperor v. Munna, 24 A. 151, distinguished.

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate of Meerut.

Mr. G. P. Boys, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of the District Magistrate of Meerut, dismissing an appeal against an order of a Magistrate of the second class of the same district requiring the applicants to give security for their good behaviour for one year. The first point taken is that the second class Magistrate had no jurisdiction to hear the case. It appears that the proceedings against the applicants were instituted by a Magistrate of the first class, and that this Court, on application made to it, transferred the case from the Court of that Magistrate to the District Magistrate with instructions to make it over to some other Magistrate, subordinate to him, competent to try it. The District Magistrate then made over the case to Captain Noel, a Magistrate of the second class. Under section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure this Court had power to transfer the case to another Criminal Court of equal or superior jurisdiction. This Court, therefore, could not have transferred the case to Captain Noel and what this Court could not do the District Magistrate could not do. The selection of the Court was left to him, but the transfer was made by this Court. Further, it appears to me that Captain Noel is not one of the Magistrates who is competent to conduct proceedings under sections 107 to 119 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I was referred to the decision of Mr. Justice Aikman in the case of King-Emperor Munna (1), in which proceedings under section 107 (2) of the Code had been initiated by a District Magistrate who was competent to do so and had been transferred by him to a Magistrate of the first class subordinate to him in the District. Mr. Justice Aikman held that when the District Magistrate had in the exercise of his discretion directed the institution of the proceedings, there was nothing in the law to prevent him from transferring the case to another Magistrate otherwise qualified to complete the proceedings. There the transfer was to a Magistrate of the first class competent to conduct proceedings under section 107(1) of the Code. I do not think that Mr. Justice Aikman would have held that the District Magistrate was competent to transfer the case to a Magistrate of the third class. On both these grounds I hold that Captain Noel had no jurisdiction to pass an order requiring the applicants to give security for their good behaviour. I, therefore, set aside all the proceedings of Captain Noel and of the District Magistrate Let the record be returned.

Order set aside.

(1) 24 A 151.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS APPLICATION No. 31 OF 1914.

April 4, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Rafique.

JAFAR HUSAIN—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 526—Transfer of proceedings under s. 110, application for—Ground of transfer—Apprehension of not having fair and impartial trial.

The petitioner made an application under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code, praying that the proceedings taken against him under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code be transferred from one district to another, on the grounds that he was arrested without a warrant, that his medical certificates were not accepted, that he was not informed of the charge for some days, that his request to reserve cross-examination was disallowed, that his prayer as to the production of certain documents was rejected, and that the names of some of his witnesses were struck out while a sum of Rs. 100 was demanded from him before summons could be issued to the rest of his witnesses:

Held, that these facts alone did not in any way show bias or prejudice in the mind of the Magistrate against the petitioner but they, taken with the fact of the institution of several criminal proceedings against the petitioner prior to the proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, would likely give rise to an apprehension in his mind that he was not likely to have a fair and impartial trial in the Court before which security proceedings against him were pending and that, therefore, this was a fit case for transfer.

Criminal Miscellaneous application for transfer of case from the file of the Joint Magistrate of Meerut.

Messrs. W. Wallach and Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. E. Ryves, Government Advocate for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, praying that the proceedings pending against the applicant in the Court of the Joint Magistrate of Meerut be transferred to a Court in another district. In the affidavit filed on behalf of the applicant the grounds on which the transfer is sought are given. It appears from the said affidavit that the applicant, Jafar Husain, is in the service of Agha Saiyad Haidar Shah as Mukhtar and that there is a long standing feud between his master and one Raghunath Prasad, both of whom are zemindars of Barout. Ever since 1894 disputes have been going on between the servants of the two zemindars, which have led to legal proceedings in Court against them. On the 24th of January of this year the applicant was arrested by the Circle Inspector without any warrant and though two respectable sureties were offered the Police refused bail. Late at night about 9 P. M. on the 24th of January 1914 the applicant was put up before the learned Joint Magistrate, who was out in camp at the time. A sum of Rs. 500 was demanded for bail in cash and a personal bond of Rs. 200 and his case was fixed for the 3rd of February 1914. The money was at once tendered, but was not accepted as there were no means in the camp of the Joint Magistrate to keep the money. The applicant was directed to take steps to have the money deposited in the treasury. It was deposited the next day. But the applicant was not released till the 27th of January 1914. After his release on his way home that day a Police constable orally informed him that his case would be taken up next day. The applicant attended Court the next day, i. e., on the 28th of January 1914 and remained there the whole day, but his case was not taken up. He was informed that his case would be taken up on the 3rd of February 1914. Mr. Abdullah Shah appeared on behalf of the applicant and informed the Court that his client was too ill to attend Court, and in support of his statement tendered in evidence a medical certificate signed by the Assistant Civil Surgeon of the district. The learned Joint Magistrate would not accept the Assistant Surgeon's certificate and directed that a certificate of the Civil Surgeon should be tendered the next day in support of the statement that Jafar Husain was too ill to attend Court. On the 4th of February 1914, a medical certificate signed by an European officer of the Indian Medical Service, who was at the time serving in the 28th Pioneers at Meerut, was tendered in evidence. The certificate was to the effect that the applicant had been examined by the doctor and was found to be incapable of attending Court that day and for a week to come. It is said that no certificate could be obtained from the Civil Surgeon he was either not present in the station at day or could not be found. The learned Joint Magistrate did not accept the certificate produced on behalf of the applicant and issued a warrent of arrest against him at once and made it over for service to the Police. The applicant was accordingly brought to Court by the Police, and the Joint Magistrate and some of the Police Inspectors went to the carriage in which the applicant was brought and found him really ill. He was allowed to return home and was ordered to present himself in Court on the 9th of February 1914 and the hearing of the case was fixed for the 10th of February 1914. During this time nothing was said to the applicant about the charge on which he was arrested or about which he was going to be put on his trial. On the 10th of February 1914 the case was taken up by the learned Joint Magistrate and a notice, presumably under section 112, Criminal Procedure Code, was read out for the first time to the applicant. That notice was to the effect that information had been received through the Police that the applicant was a habitual extortioner and was, therefore, called upon to show cause why he should not furnish security. In reply to the notice the applicant said that he was not ready to proceed with the case and wanted an adjournment to engage Counsel and to prepare his defence. The request of the applicant was not acceded to and the evidence for the prosecution was begun at once. Fourteen witnesses for the prosecution were examined that day. The applicant was asked to cross-examine them. But he said that he could not do so and would like to reserve his cross-examination until he could engage a Counsel and again asked for an adjournment. The learned Joint Magistrate refused the request and ordered the applicant to put in a list of his witnesses. Jafar Husain produced a list of documents and witnesses the next day. The learned Joint Magistrate declined to send for the documents and struck out the names of some of the witnesses and asked the applicant to deposit a sum of Rs. 100 before any summons could be issued for the defence witnesses. When the proceedings against the applicant were at this stage, he came up to this Court and filed the present application. The learned Joint Magistrate has submitted an explanation of the facts alleged in the affidavit of the applicant. Some of the main allegations made in the applicant's affidavit are not denied. It is not denied that the applicant was arrested without a warrant, that his medical certificates were not accepted and a warrant was issued for his arrest and production in Court on the 4th of February 1914, that the applicant was not informed of the charge until the 10th of February 1914, that his request to reserve cross-examination was disallowed, and that his prayer as to the production of documents was rejected and the names of some of his witnesses were struck out and as to the rest a sum of Rs. 100 was demanded before summonses could be issued to them. These facts do not in any way show bias or prejudice in the mind of the learned Joint Magistrate against the applicant. But they, taken with the fact of the institution of several criminal proceedings against the applicant prior to the present proceedings, would be likely to give rise to an apprehension in his mind that he is not likely to have a fair and impartial trial in the Court below. I think that under the circumstances of this case it is advisable to make an order of transfer. I accordingly allow the application and order that the proceedings now pending against the applicant in the Court of the learned Joint Magistrate of Meerut be transferred to the Court of the District Magistrate of Muzaffarnagar, who will either try the case himself or make it over for trial to some other Magistrate subordinate to him.

In re KHADDAM VENKATA RAO.

Application allowed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 729 OF 1914.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 612 OF 1914.

November 30, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ayling and Mr. Justice Hannay.

In re KHADDAM VENKATA RAO—COMPLAINANT—PETITIONER.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 545—Compensation ordered payable out of fine—Full amount of fine not realised—Compensation, if payable.

It is quite competent to a Court, when ordering compensation to be paid out of the fine imposed, to provide by its order for the proportionate distribution of the amount realised. In the absence of any such direction, an order providing for payment of compensation out of the fine imposed ought not to be construed as meaning that nothing was payable until the full amount of fine was realised, but as meaning that compensation will have priority over the claims of revenue.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of Session of Kurnool, in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 30 of 1914 (Sessions Case No. 9 of 1914).

FACTS.—In a cheating case which had been tried by the Sessions Judge of Kurnool, the latter, after sentencing some of the accused to a fine of Rs. 4,000 in addition to substantial punishment, ordered that out of the said fine of Rs. 4,000, if recovered, the first prosecution witness (the petitioner) was to be paid Rs. 3,000 as compensation. The moveable properties of the accused, which were attached and sold, did not realise the full amount of Rs. 4,000. The petitioner then applied to the Sessions Judge of Kurnool for payment to him of the sum realised by the sale. On this application the Sessions Judge passed an order that the Government had a prior claim to the extent of Rs. 1,00^ and it was only in the event of there being a balance, that the petitioner would be entitled to be paid anything as compensation. The petitioner thereupon preferred this criminal revision petition to the High Court.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioner :—The learned Sessions Judge has misunderstood the provisions of section 545, Criminal Procedure Code. According to the English Common Law fine could not be inflicted in a case of felony. Even in the case of felony involving an injury to a private individual, the injured party had, until 1837, practically no redress on account of the doctrine of merger of tort in felony, according to which he could not maintain an action before conviction; and an action after conviction was utterly useless, as a conviction ipso jure worked a forfeiture of all the properties of the felon. In 1837, however, the law was altered, forfeiture being abolished and Courts being empowered to award compensation. Section 545 is founded upon the English Law as altered and so compensation has priority over the claims of the revenue.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown :—The order of the Sessions Judge was that if the fine of Rs. 4,000 was recovered, a compensation of Rs. 3,000 must be paid to the petitioner. The obvious meaning is that if Rs. 4,000 were not recovered in full, nothing was to be paid to the petitioner.

ORDER.—The order of the Sessions Judge passed under section 545 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in disposing of the criminal case, says :—

"Out of the fine, if recovered from the accused, I direct that Rs. 3,000 be paid to prosecution witness No. 1."

We think that this must be taken to mean that the amount realised, up to a limit of Rs. 3,000, should be devoted to compensating the prosecution witness No. 1 under section 545 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. We do not think it can have been the Judge's meaning that nothing should be payable to the prosecution witness No. 1 unless the full amount of fine (Rs. 4,000) was recovered. It was open to him to provide for the proportionate distribution of the amount realised, but he has not done so.

We set aside the order of the Acting Sessions Judge, dated 25th September 1914, and direct the amount realised to be applied as indicated above.

Order set aside.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL RULE No. 1020 OF 1914.

August 12, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sharfuddin and Mr. Justice Teunon.

Mahant MOHABIR DAS—PETITIONER

versus

GAYA MUNICIPALITY—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884), ss. 238, 240, 273, sub-s. (1)—Building of new masonry wall, whether erection of house—Erection without sanction, whether offence—"Building," meaning of

The building of a new and additional masonry wall which materially enlarges a courtyard constitutes the erecting of a house within the meaning of sections 238 and 240 of the Bengal Municipal Act, and its erection without the sanction of the Municipal Commissioners is an offence under section 273, sub-section (1) of the Act.

The word "building", in the absence of any specific definition in the Act, should be construed in its ordinary sense and as including erections, structures, or buildings such as masonry walls.

FACTS.—This was a Rule obtained by the petitioner, Mahant Mohabir Das, on the District Magistrate of Gaya and on the Gaya Municipality to show cause why an order directing the demolition of a wall passed by a Deputy Magistrate of Gaya under the provisions of the Bengal Municipal Act and an order of conviction and sentence under section 273 of the said Act should not be set aside.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad, Deputy Legal Remembrancer for Behar and Orissa showed cause.

Babu Lachmi Narain Singh, in support of the Rule.

Mr. Sultan Ahmed.—The whole question is whether the acts of the petitioner amounted to an "erection or re-erection" within the meaning of sections 237 and 238 of the Bengal Municipal Act.

The expression "erection or re-erection" has been defined in section 240, which is not exhaustive.

The case in Emperor v. Mathura Prasad (1) has been decided without reference to section 240 of the Act, and the case was not argued on both sides. That case was wrongly decided.

Building a wall would be sufficient; vide Dave Harishankar v. The Town Municipality of Umreth (2).

[SHARFUDDIN, J.—The Bombay case does not apply, as the Bombay Act does not contain any definition like that contained in the Bengal Act.]

If a wall is attached to a building then it would be a material alteration.

[SHARFUDDIN, J.—The question is whether by this alteration it enlarges any room or verandah.]

This is a part of the building and the whole building is enlarged.

[TEUNON, J.—Does not this wall enlarge the courtyard?]

Yes.

[TEUNON, J.—Has "building" been defined?]

(1) 29 C. 491.
(2) 19 B. 27.

MIHAN SINGH v. EMPEROR.

No. In a case in Hari Kishore Barna Sarma v. Baroda Kishore Acharja Chowdry (3) it has been held that a detached wall was not a masonry building.

[TEUNON, J.—A wall has to be built. So a wall must be a building.]

What the petitioner appears to have done is that he straightened a wall and built a new wall alongside an old wall and this new wall must have enlarged his courtyard?

Babu Lachmi Narain Singh, in reply.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner before us has been convicted under section 273, sub-section 1, of the Bengal Municipal Act of 1884. The Municipality referred to is the Municipality of Gaya. It has been found that without sanction from the Municipal Commissioners the petitioner has straightened the north, south and west walls of his temple by building against the pre-existing walls what may be called a secondary or double wall. It has also been found that similarly without sanction he has built a new masonry wall and thereby enlarged his courtyard. The question before us is, whether what he has done constitutes "the erecting or re-erecting a house not being a hut" within the meaning of sections 238 and 240 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884. Whether the building of the double wall, to which we have referred, thereby thickening and strengthening the pre-existing wall, is more than an act of repair or constitutes a material enlargement is possibly open to doubt. But we have no doubt that the building of the new and additional masonry wall, which the petitioner is found to have erected and by means of which he has materially enlarged his courtyard, does constitute the erecting of a house within the meaning of sections 238 and 240. In section 6 (4) of the Act 'house' has been defined as "including any hut, shop, warehouse or building." 'Building' has not been defined in this Act, and we think we ought not to construe the expression otherwise than in its ordinary sense and as including erections, structures, or buildings such as masonry walls.

In this view we affirm the conviction and sentence and discharge this Rule.

Rule discharged.

(3) 8 C. W. N. 754.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 584 OF 1914.

June 5, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Scott-Smith.

MIHAN SINGH AND OTHERS—CONVICTS—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 149- Assembly not unlawful—Offence committed by one—Liability of others.

Section 149 of the Penal Code does not operate to make all the members of an assembly which is not unlawful, equally guilty of an offence committed by one of them.

Petition for revision of the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 14th February 1914.

Mr. Gobind Ram, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—There are three petitioners in this case, Mihan Singh, Wir Singh and Nadir Singh. Mihan Singh has been convicted of culpable homicide under section 304, part II, Indian Penal Code, for causing the death of Bhola Singh by striking him on the head with a stick. The other two petitioners have been convicted of an offence under section 304, part II, read with section 149, Indian Penal Code.

I see no reason whatsoever to interfere with the findings on questions of fact of the learned Sessions Judge. His finding in regard to Mihan Singh is that he exceeded his right of private defence by striking Bhola Singh in the way he did.

I directed notice to issue only in regard to Wir Singh and Nadir Singh, for, accepting the findings of the learned Sessions Judge, it appeared to me that they could not legally be convicted of any offence.

The Sessions Judge found that Mihan Singh and his party were ploughing the disputed field when the members of the complainant's party came up to interfere with them and to turn them out.

In his judgment the Sessions Judge says that they, i.e., the complainant's party, were not justified in forcibly preventing the ploughing of Mihan Singh and others, on the other hand neither was Mihan Singh, appellant, justified in striking Bhola Singh on the head. Further on in the judgment he says: "The evidence clearly shows that all these six persons and Aror Singh, who has absconded, were gathered together with a common object: and though they may have been acting in the right of private defence of their possession of the disputed land, there can be no question but that Mihan Singh at least far exceeded that right of private defence. He and the others of the appellants are, therefore, guilty of whatever offence was committed by Mihan Singh."

Now, from these findings it does not appear that Mihan Singh and his party constituted an unlawful assembly. There is no finding that their common object was any of those specified in section 141 of the Indian Penal Code. On the contrary, the Sessions Judge finds that the members of deceased's party were the aggressors, their object being to forcibly dispossess the other party of certain land.

Mihan Singh and his party were, therefore, perfectly justified in exercising their right of private defence and if Mihan Singh exceeded that right, he, and he alone, is guilty of any offence.

Section 149 does not operate to make Mihan Singh's companions equally guilty with him, as they were not at the time members of an unlawful assembly.

Accepting, then, as I do, the findings of the learned Sessions Judge, I accept the revision so far as Wir Singh and Nadir Singh are concerned, and, setting aside their convictions and sentences, acquit them and discharge them from their bail.

The petition of Mihan Singh is rejected.

Revision partly accepted and partly rejected.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE NO. 357 OF 1914.
CASE REFERRED NO. 44 OF 1914.
August 14, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield.
In re SINNA KARUPPAN—ACCUSED.

Workmen's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859)

—Contract to be performed in foreign territory, whether can be enforced under the Act.

A contract, the performance of which is to take place in a foreign territory, cannot be enforced under the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859).

Gregory v. Vadakasi, 10 M. 21; 1 Weir 671, followed.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the Sessions Judge of Coimbatore.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

ORDER.—The learned Sessions Judge has referred this order on two grounds. I deal with the reference only on one of them that an order cannot be passed under Act XIII of 1859 to enforce the performance of a contract, if such performance is to take place in foreign territory That objection to the order is sustainable, vide Gregory v. Vadakasi (1). The order of the second class Magistrate is set aside and the complaint dismissed.

Order set aside.

(1) 10 M. 21; 1 Weir 671.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 653 OF 1914.
September 7, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott.
MUL CHAND—APPLICANT
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 117—Security ordered without any inquiry—Order, whether illegal.

An order under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, is bad in law if it is made without making an inquiry into the truth of the information upon which proceedings were initiated.

Criminal revision against an order of the Magistrate, Muttra.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

DAL v. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.—The order in this case requiring the applicant. Mul Chand, to furnish security to keep the peace was passed without any "inquiry as to the truth of the information upon which action had been taken," within the meaning of section 117 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Magistrate referred to the result of a case tried by him, in which certain persons were put on their trial on charges under sections 147 and 325 of the Indian Penal Code, as justifying the order passed by him in the present case against Mul Chand. I do not know whether Mul Chand was or was not an accused person in the riot case above referred to, and if he was or was not convicted in that case. However this may be, though the proceeding in the riot case might justify an order under section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against any person who may have been convicted at that trial, it had nothing to do with the proceeding now before me. The law required the Magistrate to hold an inquiry, and even though this requirement would have been substantially complied with by an inquiry such as is prescribed in Chapter XX of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the trial of summons cases, still I am unable to find on the record before me anything that shows that an inquiry was held at all. Mul Chand was apparently asked what cause he had to show, why he should not be bound over to keep the peace, and in so far the procedure observed was correct and in accordance with the provisions of section 117, clause 2, read with section 242 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Inasmuch, however, as Mul Chand did not admit that he was a person likely to commit a breach of the peace or was otherwise a proper subject for a proceeding under section 107 of the Code, the Magistrate was too hasty in binding him over, without further inquiry, on the strength of his own statement. I must set aside the order complained of and I do so accordingly. If security has been furnished by Mul Chand in accordance with the order, the security bonds in question are hereby discharged.

Order set aside.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 479 OF 1914.

December 2, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Lindsay, J. C.

DAL—ACCUSED—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—RESPONDENT.

First report, statement in, made by complainant—Admissibility in evidence—Chaukidars—Police Officers—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 25—Confession made to some person in presence of Police Officers, admissibility of—Admission of offence just after commission, effect of—Presumption.

Any statement made by a complainant in his first report at the Police station is not admissible as proof of the facts therein mentioned, and cannot be used as evidence against the accused in his trial.

Village chaukidars are Police Officers within the meaning of section 25 of the Evidence Act.

An accused's confession to some person, although made in the presence of a Police Officer, is nevertheless admissible in evidence.

Where it is satisfactorily proved that immediately after the commission of an offence the accused made a statement incriminating himself, the reasonable inference from such a statement, in the absence of any rebutting evidence, is that the statement is a true representation of the actual facts.

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Hardoi, dated 8th October 1914.

Mr. St. G. Jackson, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The accused appellant, Dal, has been convicted in the Court of the Sessions Judge of Hardoi on a charge of having murdered his mother-in-law, Musammat Shitabo, on the night of the 12th of August last. He has been sentenced to transportation for life. The facts of the case, as they appear from the evidence of two principal witnesses, namely Jitta and Balla chaukidars, are as follows. On the night of the 12th of August Sita Ram, who is the grandfather of the accused and who lives in the village of Shakurabad, came to the house of Jitta chaukidar, which is in a neighbouring village, and informed him that Musammat Shitabo had been murdered. This information was also communicated to Balla, another chaukidar, who lives in the same village as Jitta. Jitta and Balla accompanied Sita Ram back to Shakurabad, Jitta being the chaukidar of Shakurabad although he lives in another village. The chaukidars entered the house occupied by the accused and there they found the dead body of Musammat Shitabo on a charpoy. Evidently she had been attacked with some cutting instrument for her throat was cut. Both the chaukidars deposed at the Sessions trial that when they went into the house, Sita Ram asked the accused with what weapon he had killed Musammat Shitabo. The accused replied that he had killed her with a gandasa. After stating this he went and fetched a blood-stained gandasa from the barotha of the house and handed it over to Sita Ram. Dal was arrested by the chaukidars and taken to the thana, where a report was made in the early hours of the morning. This report, it is proved, was made by Sita Ram who told the Police that during the night he was roused by a cry from his grandson Dal, that he asked Dal what was the matter and that Dal said that he had just killed his old mother-in-law. Sita Ram further stated that when he asked Dal why he had done this, the answer was that the woman had tried to seduce him and that he got angry with her and slew her with the gandasa. The report went on to say how Sita Ram had gone off and called the two chaukidars, Balla and Jitta. It is also stated in the report that the gandasa had been given up by the accused. The gandasa, it may be noted, was brought to the thana. The chaukidars also made statements at the Police station in confirmation of the report made by Sita Ram and a statement was also made by the accused in the nature of a confession. This confession, however, having been made to a Police Officer, is not admissible in evidence. Since the time this report was made Sita Ram, the accused's grandfather, has gone back on the story which he told in the initial report. He has denied altogether ever having made any such report and his statement, both to the Committing Magistrate and at the Sessions trial, was intended to show that Dal had never made any incriminating statement, but had merely said that his mother-in-law had been murdered by some one. The only other people who appear to have been in Dal's house on that night were his young wife, Musammat Radhia, who is the daughter of the murdered woman and his mother, Musammat Deoka. Neither of these witnesses give any evidence to incriminate the accused and practically all we have against the prisoner is to be found in the statements of the two chaukidars. Sita Ram's statement before the Judge was contradicted by the statement which he had made to the Police at the time of laying the first information, but, of course, any statement made by Sita Ram in his first report is not admissible as proof of the facts therein mentioned and cannot be used as evidence against the accused in this trial. We have, therefore, to examine the statements of both these chaukidars. They both swear that after they reached the house in company with Sita Ram, the accused confessed to Sita Ram in their presence that he had murdered Musammat Shitabo with a gandasa. If those statements are to be accepted as true, then we have the fact that immediately after this murder had been committed the accused confessed that it had been done by him. It has been contended that the story told by Jitta chaukidar in the Sessions Court does not correspond exactly with the story he told before the Committing Magistrate. In the Sessions Court what Jitta said was this:—"Sita Ram asked Dal with what he had killed. He replied with a gandasa. Sita Ram asked what he had done with the gandasa. Then Dal produced the gandasa from the barotha and gave it up." According to the English record of the statement made before the Committing Magistrate Jitta's story runs as follows :—"Sita Ram asked Dal by what weapon she had been killed. Dal went and fetched a blood-stained gandasa." This English version, however, does not fit in with the deposition as recorded in the vernacular in the Court of the Magistrate. According to this latter record the statement made by Jitta was as follows:—"Sita Ram asked Dal what he had killed the woman with and he replied that he had killed her with a gandasa." Balla's statement before the Judge runs as follows:—"Sita Ram asked Dal with what weapon he had killed the woman. He answered that she (Shitabo) had suggested to him that he should have sexual intercourse with her and that he had killed her for this reason. Sita Ram again asked with what weapon he had killed the woman and Dal replied he had killed her with a gandasa." Balla's statement to the Magistrate was made in the same language. It is quite clear, therefore, that so far as Jitta's statement in the Sessions Court is concerned there is no contradiction between it and the statement which he made before the Committing Magistrate. Balla's statement in both the Courts is exactly the same. I can see no reason whatever for doubting the truth of the statements made by these two chaukidars. It is difficult to see why they should invent a story of this description. If their statements, therefore, are accepted as true, it follows that we have against the accused an admission made by him that he had killed his mother-in-law with a gandasa. Balla and Jitta are chaukidars and no doubt according to the various rulings on the interpretation of section 25 of the Evidence Act, they must be treated as Police Officers. The question, therefore, is whether this incriminating statement which was made by the accused can be used as evidence, regard being had to the provisions of section 25 of the Indian Evidence Act, which lays down that no confession made to a Police Officer shall be proved as against a person accused of any offence. In my opinion the confession does not come within the section, for on the evidence as it stands it seems to me quite clear that this statement in the nature of a confession was not made to the chaukidars at all but to Sita Ram. The fact that the chaukidars were present and heard the statement made does not, I think, bring it within the prohibition contained in section 25 of the Evidence Act. I am, therefore, of opinion that the confession is admissible in evidence and I think that having regard to other circumstances which are disclosed by the prosecution evidence, it must be taken to be a true statement. There appears to be no doubt that the deceased woman was a woman of bad character. She had bee a widow for some years and the witnesses stated that a long time after the decease of her husband she gave birth to an illegitimate child. There is also some evidence to show that she had been making some attempts to take away her daughter from the house of the accused. We have also the fact that on the night when Shitabo was murdered the only man about the house at the time was the accused, Dal. It is apparent, therefere, that there was a motive for the murder, Shitabo being a woman of bad character who was bringing disgrace upon the family into which her daughter had been married, and in these circumstances it is difficult to imagine who else could have perpetrated this crime except the prisoner himself. When we find, therefore, that immediately after the murder the accused made a statement admitting that the murder had been committed by him with a gandusa, it seems reasonable to infer that this statement is a true representation of what took place. It is not to be doubted that Sita Ram has been making attempts to save his grandson and that the two women who were inside the house at the time are withholding what they must necessarily know of what took place on the night in question. I hold, therefore, that this confession made to Sita Ram in the presence of the chaukidars is admissible in evidence and that it must be treated as a true statement. This being so, the conclusion necessarily follows that the murder was committed by the accused appellant and I find accordingly. I dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 703 OF 1914.
December 1, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Fletcher and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

SASHI RAJBANSHI AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 337, 339, 298 (1) (c), 215—Approver—Forfeiture of pardon—Approver to be committed for trial along with other accused if forfeiture proved—Plea of pardon may be decided by Magistrate—Plea may be re-opened in Sessions Court—Burden of proof—Forfeiture, question of fact—Judge—Jury.

Where an approver fails to act up to the condition of his pardon before the inquiring Magistrate, the Magistrate can re-commence the inquiry as against the approver and commit him to take his trial along with the other accused.

Under the old Code the act terminating a pardon was the withdrawal by the granting authority, under the present law, it is the forfeiture by the approver.

Per Beachcroft, J.—The requirement that an approver is to be examined as a witness in the case, is satisfied when he is examined as a witness in the Magistrate's Court. It is not compulsory either for the prosecution or for the defence to examine him in the Sessions Court if he has shown by his evidence in the Magistrate's Court that he is an untrustworthy witness.

When an approver is put on his trial he may plead his pardon. The plea should be taken at the commencement of the proceedings before the Magistrate, for it strikes at the jurisdiction to take any proceedings at all against the approver, and it would then be necessary for the Magistrate to consider whether the pardon had been forfeited. But if he decides against the approver, or even if the plea is not taken before the Magistrate, it can be pressed in the Sessions Court and that Court ought to try the question whether the pardon has been forfeited before trying the general issue. If, however, there is a possibility of the evidence on the two issues overlapping or being identical the Judge may use his discretion and order the approver to be tried separately from the other accused.

The onus of proving forfeiture of pardon is on the Crown.

The question of forfeiture of pardon is a question of fact, therefore, its decision rests with the Jury and not with the Judge.

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge of Murshidabad, dated 15th July 1914, convicting the accused under sestion 395, Indian Penal Code, and sentencing each of them to seven years' rigorous imprisonment.

Babus Hemendra Nath Sen and Santosh Coomar Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. Orr and Babu Jyotish Chundra Hazra, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The accused Ananta, Nani, Sashi, Gopal, Srikunta and Bolai were tried along with seven others who have been acquitted with having committed the offence of dacoity.

The trial took place before the learned Sessions Judge of Murshidabad and a Jury. The six appellants before us were convicted and each sentenced to undergo seven years' rigorous imprisonment. Against that conviction and sentence they have appealed to this Court. The principal point that has been argued on this appeal, is as to the legality of the trial before the learned Sessions Judge. It appears that the accused Sashi was tendered and accepted a pardon under section 337 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on the 21st of April 1914, whilst the proceedings were pending before the Committing Magistrate. The Magistrate subsequently forfeited the pardon granted to Sashi and the magisterial inquiry was re-commenced from the stage at which it was interrupted as against Sashi by the tender and acceptance of the pardon. The Magistrate committed all the accused for trial. Sashi having raised before the learned Judge a plea in bar on the ground that he had received a pardon the learned Judge took a special verdict from the Jury in the first instance as to whether Sashi had forfeited his pardon. The Jury having returned a verdict that he had done so the learned Judge then continued the trial against all the accused.

Against this procedure two points have been urged on the appeal before us (1) that the procedure of the Magistrate in re-commencing the magisterial inquiry against Sashi from the stage it was interrupted by the tender and acceptance of the pardon and the commitment of Sashi to take his trial with the other accused was illegal and (2) the taking of a special verdict of the Jury as to whether the pardon granted to Sashi had been forfeited was also illegal. On the first point authorities have been cited showing that when the approver deviates from the condition of his pardon in the Sessions Court, he cannot be removed from the witness-box and placed in the dock as an accused. I should have thought that such a proposition did not require any authority. It is obvious that the Court of Session could not try a person who had not been committed for trial.

The question, however, as to whether or not an approver whose pardon has been forfeited by the Committing Magistrate can be committed and tried along with the other accused, is a totally different question.

On behalf of the appellants the decision in the case of Queen-Empress v. Natu (1) is much relied on. No doubt the observations of the learned Judges (Rampini and Pratt, JJ.,) in that case do lend support to the argument on behalf of the appellants. In that case, however, a charge had been framed against the two approvers under section 194 of the Indian Penal Code without the sanction of the High Court. The remarks of the learned Judges that "a person to whom a tender of pardon has been made should not be tried for an alleged breach of the conditions upon which the pardon was tendered until the original case has been fully heard and determined" show clearly that what the learned Judges were considering was the charge under section 194 of the Indian Penal Code.

In my opinion that case cannot be taken as an authority for the proposition that where the approver fails to act up to the condition of his pardon before the inquiring Magistrate that the Magistrate cannot re-commence the inquiry as against the approver and commit him to take his trial along with the other accused.

As against the interpretation sought to be placed on the decision in the case of Queen-Empress v. Natu (1) by the learned Vakil for the appellants there is a considerable body of judicial authority in which a different view was taken. In the case of Queen-Empress v. Brij Narain Man (2) the learned Judges observed: "We are unable to find anything in the Code of Criminal Procedure which would render it necessary that an approver whose pardon has been withdrawn by the Magistrate and who has been committed by the Magistrate in time to stand his trial along with the other accused in the case should be tried separately from them." A similar view was taken in the case of Emperor v. Budhan (3) and also in the case of Sultan Khan v. Emperor (4) and in the case of Emperor v. Bala (5) a similar view seems to have been taken by Fulton, J.

I think that the opinions expressed in these cases are correct and that the case of Queen-Emperss v. Natu (1) is only an authority for what was actually decided in that case, namely, that "a person to whom a tender of pardon has been made should not be tried for an alleged breach of the conditions upon which the pardon was tendered until the original case has been fully heard and determined." These remarks appear to me to be only capable of referring to a charge under section 194, although perhaps the judgment is not very happily worded. In that view the opinions expressed in Queen-Empress v. Natu (1) are not in conflict with the judgments of the High Courts of Allahabad and Bombay which I have cited above. I think, therefore, that the commitment to and trial before the Sessions Court in the present case was not illegal.

The second question urged on this appeal is that the trial was illegal by reason of the learned Judge having taken a verdict from the Jury as to whether Sashi had forfeited his pardon or not. The only case cited in support of this argument is the decision of this Court in the case of Emperor v. Abani Bhushan Chuckerbutty (6). That case came before a special Bench of three Judges, consisting of Holmwood and Sharfuddin and D. Chatterjee, JJ., under the provisions of the Criminal Law Amendment Act: Holmwood, J., held that the Committing Magistrate was the sole authority to determine whether or not the pardon had been forfeited. The grounds on which Holmwood, J., formed this opinion are stated by him as follows: "As soon as a charge is drawn up, the accused is ipso facto put upon his defence.....The word 'withdrawal' has been left out of the present Code, and, as I have just said, the forfeiture appears now to operate ipso facto." In support of this view the learned Judge relies on the case of Queen-Empress v. Manick Chandra Sarkar (7), which lays down that the withdrawal or forfeiture of the pardon should be by the authority that granted it; but that case did not decide that the validity of the withdrawal or forfeiture could not be questioned at the

(1) 27 C. 137.
(2) 20 A. 529; A. W. N. (1898) 152.
(3) 29 A. 24; 3 A. L. J. 615; A. W. N. (1906) 258; 4 Cr. L. J. 142.
(4) 5 A. L. J. 695; A. W. N. (1908) 259; 8 Cr. L. J. 445.
(5) 25 B. 675; 3 Bom. L. R. 271.
(6) 8 Ind. Cas. 721; 37 C. 845; 11 Cr. L. J. 702.
(7) 24 C. 492.

trial. The other cases, Kullan v. Emperor (8), relied on by Holmwood, J., with all due respect to the learned Judge, decided exactly the opposite to what that learned Judge did. Towards the end of his judgment Holmwood, J., however, remarked that "It is open to the accused here to show that the statement he made on oath was not a false statement, or was a false statement induced by improper influence." D. Chatterjee, J., held that as the case came before the Court as a "special Tribunal" under the provisions of the Criminal Law Amendment Act the Court has no jurisdiction to inquire into the fact whether the pardon had been properly forfeited or not: D. Chatterjee, J., however, remarked that "it is perfectly open to the accused to show before us in this Court that the statements that are alleged to be false are true in fact, or were induced by improper influences." The tribunal before which that case came was not a "Special Tribunal" but the High Court though, no doubt the Bench, was specially constituted to hear a case committed to it under the provisions of the Criminal Law Amendment Act. The provisions of the law except so far as they have been varied by the Criminal Law Amendment Act apply to such trials.

I am unable to concur in the views expressed in the case of Emperor v. Abani Bhushan Chuckerbutty (6), which appears to me to be opposed to whole current of judicial decisions in India. Nor can I understand the remarks of the learned Judges that if the Committing Magistrate was the sole Judge as to whether or not the pardon had been forfeited the accused could be permitted to give evidence to show that his former statement was true or induced by improper influences. Such evidence would be irrelevant on the charge of dacoity against the accused but would be relevant on the issue as to whether the pardon had been validly forfeited. On the other hand there are a number of authorities in which a different view has been taken.

In the case of Kullan v. Emperor (8), the learned Judges remarked: "We think that where a pardon has been tendered and the approver is afterwards put on trial he should be asked if he relies on it and if he says 'yes', which is a plea of pardon, the issue as to the pardon should be tried first." Again, in the case of In re Aligirisami Naicken (9), it was held that the Judge at the trial at the Sessions must leave it to the Jury to decide whether the pardon had been actually forfeited and not decide the point himself.

The High Court of Bombay has adopted a similar view.

In the case of Emperor v. Bala (5) the following observations appear in the judgment of the learned Judges: "As the law now stands, the question is whether the accused has forfeited his pardon by some act of his own—not whether the Magistrate has validly withdrawn it. This question is one of fact on which it is clear that the Magistrate may hold one opinion and the Sessions Court another, just as may happen on any other question of fact at issue in the case. The Sessions Court has to determine for itself on the evidence before it whether the pardon has been forfeited: for if not, the accused, who has accepted such pardon cannot be tried." Again, in the case of Emperor v. Kothia (10), Aston, J., remarked: "It is, therefore, open to a pardoned accomplice, if placed on trial as an accomplice who has forfeited the pardon already accepted by him, to plead in bar of trial that he did comply with the condition on which the tender of pardon was made, and such plea in bar of trial would have to be gone into and decided before the accused is called on to enter his plea in defence to the charge of having committed the offence in respect of which the pardon was tendered." The same view was taken by the Chief Court of the Punjab as will appear from the following remarks in the judgment in the case of Emperor v. Kadu (11): "The word 'withdrawn' does not now appear at all. The word 'forfeited' has been substituted. Under the present Code, therefore, a pardon cannot be withdrawn, it can only be forfeited, and whether or not it has been forfeited will be a question of fact to be tried and decided by the Court acting under competent authority, which tries such person in res-

(8) 2 Ind. Cas. 343; 32 M. 173; 9 Cr. L. J. 571.

(9) 5 Ind. Cas 831; 33 M. 514; 11 Cr. L. J. 254; 7 M. L T. 121; (1910) M. W. N. 5.

(10) 30 B. 611; 4 Cr L. J. 346; 8 Bom L R. 740.

(11) 31 P. R. 1904 Cr.; 176 P. L. R. 1905; 1 Cr. L. J. 1082.

pect of the charge in regard to which a pardon was tendered to him." Against this large body of judicial authority there is only the decision in the case of Emperor v. Abani Bhushan Chuckerbutty (6). But when that case is closely looked at it cannot be taken as an authority the other way. For the Court admitted evidence to show that the statement of the accomplice whose pardon had been withdrawn was not false and that such statement was induced by improper means which was clearly irrelevant on the charge of dacoity but relevant on the plea as to whether the pardon had been validly withdrawn. In that view the judgments in the case of Emperor v. Abani Bhushan Chuckerbutty (6) can be reconciled with decision of the other cases I have referred to above although it may not have been strictly regular or in accordance with the weight of judicial opinion to have tried the plea in bar along with the charge on which the accused was committed for trial. The course adopted by the learned Judge in the present case in taking a verdict from the Jury in the first instance on the plea in bar, was manifestly correct.

Then a subsidiary point was raised that the fact that the learned Judge took the verdict of the Jury on the plea in bar raised by Sashi after recording some of the evidence on the charge vitiates the trial. But Sashi when called upon to plead raised his plea in bar in such an obscure manner that the learned Judge apparently in the first instance did not grasp what Sashi meant when he said he was a witness. As soon, however, as the learned Judge realised the plea that Sashi wished to place before the Court, he proceeded in a regular manner and any irregularity that there may have been, cannot have prejudiced the accused at the trial. Finally, it was argued that the learned Judge in his charge to the Jury on the charge upon which the accused had been committed for trial misdirected the Jury. I was and still am unable to appreciate what were the misdirections the learned Vakil for the appellants complains of. But even if the portions referred to amount to misdirections they are of such a trivial nature that they could not possibly have had any effect on the verdict of the Jury.

In the result I think the present appeal ought to be dismissed, BEACHCROFT, J.—The learned Pleader for the appellants bases his appeal on three grounds, (1) that the joint trial of the approver, Sashi, and the other accused was illegal, a branch of which argument is that it was incumbent on the prosecution to examine Sashi as a witness at the Sessions trial; (2) that the Judge adopted an extraordinary procedure in taking a verdict on the question whether Sashi had forfeited his pardon, after the examination of eleven only of the fifty-five prosecution witnesses, which seriously prejudiced the appellants; (3) that there were misdirections in the charge to the Jury.

Many cases are to be found in the reports in which the question of the joint trial of an approver with the other accused has arisen, and in approaching a consideration of these cases there is a broad dividing line between the two classes into which they naturally fall, a line which, I think, has not always been observed.

One class comprises those cases in which at the Sessions trial the approver has failed to observe the conditions of his pardon, and has then been transferred from the witness-box to the dock and tried with the other accused. Instances of such cases are those of Queen v. Petumber Dhoobee (12); Queen v. Bipro Dass (13); In re Joydee Paramanik (14); Queen-Empress v. Mulua (15); Queen-Empress v. Ram Tevan, (16) and Queen-Empress v. Jagat Chandra Mali (17). To the procedure adopted in such cases there has been a double objection, viz., that the trial of the approver was without jurisdiction, he never having been committed to the Sessions and that to take him straight from the witness-box to the dock and try him with the other accused prejudiced him in his defence.

The second class comprises those cases in which in the Magistrate's Court the approver has failed to observe the conditions of his pardon and, his pardon having been withdrawn the inquiry against him in respect of the offence has been continued along with the inquiry against the other

(12) 14 W. R. Cr. 10.
(13) 19 W. R. Cr. 43.
(14) 7 C. L. R. 66.
(15) 14 A. 502; A. W. N. (1892) 95.
(16) 15 M. 352; 2 Weir 364.
(17) 22 C. 50.

accused and they have jointly been committed to the Sessions. It is clear that remarks made in the first class of cases to the effect that the trial of the approver should await the termination of the trial of the other accused, can have no application to the totally different state of facts met with in the second class, when the approver comes before the Sessions Court as an accused and not as a witness but those remarks have been quoted in support of the view that when the pardon has been withdrawn before the case has come to the Sessions the joint trial is improper.

The current of decisions that the trial of the approver must await the trial of the other accused even in the second class of cases, was started by the case of Queen-Empress v. Sudra (18), decided by a single Judge. This case does not really fall within either of the classes to which I have referred, for the approver was committed to the Sessions, not on a charge of murder, which was the charge against the other accused, but in a separate proceedings on a charge of receiving stolen property belonging to the murdered man. The case turned on the meaning of the words "in the case" in section 337 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and Knox, J., remarked that the approver should not be tried till the original case had been fully heard and determined. That this dictum could not be universally correct was realised by the learned Judge, who mentioned one difficulty which might arise from its universal application, viz., what was to be done when some of the accused in the original case absconded, and hinted that in such a case the rule might be relaxed.

This case was subsequently dissented from by a Division Bench of the same Court, Queen-Empress v. Brij Narain Man (2); and the later decision was followed in Emperor v. Budhan (3).

Shortly after the decision in Queen-Empress v. Brij Narain Man (2) a Bench of the Bombay High Court in Queen-Empress v. Bhau (19) took the view that nothing could be done against an approver till the trial of the other accused at Sessions was finished. The learned Judges relied on the case of Queen-Empress v. Sudra (18) and five other cases, not one of which is an authority for the general proposition stated. This case was doubted by Fulton, J., in the later case of Emperor v. Bala (5) and the judgment of Candy, J., shows that at an earlier stage a view inconsistent with that expressed in Queen-Empress v. Bhau (19) had been adopted.

In this Court the only reported case is that of Queen-Empress v. Natu (1). In that case the commitment of the approver was criticised on three grounds, only two of which have any bearing on the present discussion. These are that it was obligatory that the approver should be available as a witness at the Sessions trial and that the commitment of the approver before the trial of the other accused had terminated was illegal. Logically, the second reason would appear to depend on the first, for if there is no obligation that the approver should be available as a witness at the Sessions there would appear to be no reason, as a general proposition of law, for delaying his trial till the termination of the trial of the other accused; though circumstances might exist, which would induce the Sessions Judge as a matter of discretion to direct a separate trial on the ground of inconvenience or possible prejudice to the other accused.

Section 337 (2), Criminal Procedare Code, provides that a person accepting a tender of pardon is to be examined as a witness in the case. That condition is fulfilled when the approver is examined as a witness in the Magistrate's Court. In my opinion that sub-section does not mean that it is compulsory to examine the approver in the Sessions Court if he has shown by his evidence in the Magistrate's Court that he is an untrustworthy witness. It is contrary to all principles that the Crown should be obliged to examine as a prosecution witness a person who has shown himself by his evidence in a previous stage of case to be untrustworthy. This view was taken in the csae of Queen-Empress v. Ramasami (20). Incidentally I may remark that the view expressed in the same case that beyond revoking the pardon nothing should be done against the approver until after the trial of the other accused is over, is obiter dictum and based on the case of Queen-Empress v. Bhau (19) and the cases therein quoted, which apply to an entirely different state of facts.

(18) 14 A. 336; A. W. N. (1892) 21.
(19) 23 B. 493.
(20) 24 M. 321; 2 Weir 396.

It is to be noticed that the learned Judges who decided the case of Queen-Empress v. Natu (1) though referring to sub-sections (2) and (3) of section 337 say that the intention of the law is that the approver shall be "available" as a witness in the Sessions Court. If section 337 (2) really applies his examination is compulsory. The language of the Code is imperative "he shall be examined." I have pointed out that there is no obligation on the prosecution to examine him at the Sessions trial, if he has previously shown himself untrustworthy. There is never any obligation on the accused to examine a witness, and with all respect to the learned Judges I see nothing in the section to lead to the supposition that no action is to be taken against him in order that he may be 'available' as a witness for the defence. In fact he will be available as such witness if at the Sessions trial he is able to successfully plead that he has not forfeited his pardon; though I do not wish to be understood as giving this contingency as a reason for differing from the view expressed in Queen-Empress v. Natu (1).

I am of opinion that where an approver has forfeited his pardon in the Magistrate's Court there is no illegality in proceeding with the inquiry against him and in committing him for trial jointly with the other accused.

The second argument advanced by the learned Pleader for the appellants was, as originally formulated that the procedure of the learned Sessions Judge was unintelligible, and it is quite clear that he did not realise what the object of the learned Judge was. It would have been better if the learned Sessions Judge has clearly stated in his order-sheet, what was the preliminary point on which he heard arguments on the 4th July. But an examination of the earlier proceedings leads to the conclusion that he was trying a preliminary issue in bar on a plea by Sashi that he had been granted a pardon. On the charge being read the following plea by Sashi was recorded, "that he is a witness, that he cannot be tried in this case and that he is not guilty." This may reasonably be read as, first, a plea of pardon, second, an objection to being tried jointly with the other accused, third, a plea of not guilty on the general issue.

It appears that an argument was then addressed to the learned Judge objecting to the Magistrate's procedure in "cancelling" the pardon and at once proceeding with the inquiry against the accused jointly. The learned Judge decided that he could do nothing in view of section 215 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Then on the 4th July, after the examination of 11 witnesses, the evidence of Sashi given before the Committing Magistrate was read. This was followed by arguments on the "preliminary point." The Judge then charged the Jury and took their verdict on the question whether Sashi had forfeited his pardon.

From this it is evident that the learned Judge was trying the preliminary issue raised by Sashi's plea of pardon as a bar to his being tried at all.

This raises the question whether the procedure adopted was correct. The learned Pleader for the appellants argues in the first place that the only person to decide whether the pardon was forfeited was the authority who granted the pardon, and in the second that if this was a question for the Court of Session it was one for the Judge to decide and not the Jury, and to support the second part of the argument he relies on section 298 (1) (c) of the Code of Criminal Proceedure.

In the case of Queen-Empress v. Manick Chandra Sarkar (7) it was decided that the authority which granted the pardon was the authority which had jurisdiction to revoke it. That case was decided under the old Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882). The decision has become obsolete for Act V of 1898 made radical alteration in the law. Under the existing Code there is no provision for withdrawing the pardon, but the first clause of section 339 shows in what circumstances the pardon is forfeited and the second clause provides that when forfeited the approver's statement may be given in evidence against him. Under the old law the pardon remained in force until it was withdrawn by the authority granting it in consequence of a failure by the approver to observe the condition under which it was granted, under the present law the result of a failure to observe the conditions is that the approver may be put on his trial without any formal order of withdrawal on cancellation. The act terminating the pardon was, under the old law, the withdrawal by the granting authority, under present law it is the forfeiture by the approver. It follows, as a matter of course, that when the approver is put on his trial he may plead his pardon and in such case it must be shown that his pardon has been forfeited.

Then arises the question what Court is to decide whether the pardon has been forfeited. The plea should, in my opinion, be taken at the commencement of the proceedings before the Magistrate, for it strikes at the jurisdiction to take any proceedings at all against the approver, and it would then be necessary for the Magistrate to consider whether the pardon had been forfeited. But if he decides against the approver or even if the plea is not taken before the Magistrate it does not follow that the plea cannot be pressed in the Sessions Court. That is the Court which has to decide on the guilt or innocence of the accused and I cannot conceive that the Court which has to adjudicate on that point has its hands tied in regard to what may be the strongest and perhaps the only point in the accused's defence. The position is exactly the same as in any ordinary Sessions trial e.g., on a charge of criminal breach of trust. The Committing Magistrate has to be satisfied both of the trust and of the breach before he can commit and the Sessions Court has to come to a finding on both points before it can convict. So if a pardon has been granted, the forfeiture must be proved.

When the case comes before the Sessions Court that Court ought to try the question whether the pardon has been forfeited before trying the general issue. It is possible that the evidence on the two issues may overlap and in some cases be practically identical and that seems to me to be the only argument against trying the question of forfeiture of pardon before calling on the accused to plead to the charge of the offence, and where such is the case it might be a reason for the Judge to use his discretion and order the approver to be tried separately from the other accused.

In expressing the above views as to the change made in the law by Act V of 1898 and as to the duty of the Sessions Court to try the question whether the pardon was forfeited or not, I have not failed to consider the judgment of Holmwood, J., in Emperor v. Abani Bhushan Chuckerbutty (6). It istrue that the learned Judge expresses the opinion that the inquiry as to forfeiture should not be re-opened at the trial, but in the concluding paragraph of his judgment he says, "it is open to the accused here to show that the statement he made on oath was not a false statement." which is only another way of saying that he may prove that the pardon was in fact not forfeited. The learned Judge thereby in effect says that the question may be re-opened. Chatterjee, J., in the same case says: "It was for the Committing Magistrate to decide this question (i.e., the question of forfeiture).....I say this with this qualification, that this is only for the purpose of the commitment, and it is perfectly open to the accused to show before us in this Court that the statements which are alleged to be false are true in fact," which I take to mean that the Magistrate must come to a finding on the question of forfeiture before he can commit to the Sessions, that his finding has no effect beyond the proceedings in his own Court, and that the question can be re-opened in the Sessions Court. I consider that not only may the question be re-opened but the onus is on the Crown to prove that the pardon has been forfeited.

Now, assuming that the procedure adopted was not quite correct, in that evidence should have beeen taken only as against Sashi in the first instance and only on preliminary plea, there is no reason to suppose that any of the accused has been in any way prejudiced.

The argument that it was for the Judge and not the Jury to decide whether the pardon was forfeited, is not supported by section 298 (1) (c) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. That clause refers only to a finding on a question of fact which it is necessary to prove to make other evidence admissible. Here the question of forfeiture of the pardon was important not for the purpose of making other evidence admissible, but for the purpose of determining whether the trial could at all continue as against Sashi. That was a question of fact for the Jury.

As regards the arguments that the learned Judge misdirected the Jury it is sufficient to say that no passage in the charge has been pointed out, which justifies the suggestion.

I agree that the appeals should be dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CRIMINAL APPLICATION No. 187 OF 1914.

September 21, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Lindsay, J. C.

RAGHU AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED—APPLICANTS

versus

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code Act XLV of 1860), s. 304*A*—Death by negligence—Boat, over-crowded, sinking of—Sinking due to strong wind and rough water and resulting in loss of life—Unseaworthy condition of boat not proved—Lessees of ferry not responsible—Accident.

Where owing to strong wind and rough water a ferry-boat overturns or sinks resulting in loss of life, the lessees of the ferry cannot be convicted of an offence under section 304A, Indian Penal Code, unless it is shown that the boat, although over-crowded, was in an unseaworthy condition at the time of the occurrence.

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Sitapur, dated 22nd July 1914, upholding that of the Magistrate Sitapur, dated 1st July 1914.

Mr. P. C. Bhattacharji, for the Applicants.

The Government Pleader, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed on appeal by the Sessions Judge of Sitapur. The order directed that an appeal filed by the accused applicants against their conviction in the Court of the Magistrate should be dismissed. The conviction was under section 304A of the Indian Penal Code. The applicants are the lessees of a ferry-boat which was plying in the river Chauka and the evidence goes to show that on the 21th May last a marriage party arrived on the banks of the river to be ferried across in the boat of which the applicants were the lessees. A number of the persons who joined this marriage party got across the river in one trip. The boat returned and was tied up to the bank and fastened to another boat which was already by the edge of the river. According to the Magistrate the boat was then boarded by no less than forty-two people and it was also stated in the judgment that an ekka (or a conveyance of some sort), and a palanquin were put on board as well. The witnesses for the prosecution admit that a strong wind was blowing at the time and the water was rough. So far as I can see the boat broke loose and the people, no doubt, got into a state of panic. One boat fell and sank and the other boat overturned, two men were reported to be missing and it may be presumed that they were drowned. The whole question in the case is whether or not these two lessees were rightly convicted of an offence under section 304A. Their conviction could only stand in case it were proved that the boat or boats which were used at this particular time were in an unseaworthy condition. It is very difficult to come to any definite conclusion on the evidence which is upon the record. The wretched passengers who must have been in a state of great fright are quite unable to give any coherent account of what took place. The most they can say is that the water came into the boat but whether it came in over the sides or through the bottom is not quite clear. The only direct evidence as to the conditions of the boats is to be found in the statements of the two Police Officers. Both these witnesses deposed that one of the boats was in an unseaworthy condition. It is to be remarked, however, with regard to this evidence that these Police Officers did not see the boats till the second or third day after the accident, and I gather from what they say that by that time one boat had been under water for some considerable period. Whether or not the state they were in when they were examined by the Police Officers is a fair criterion of their state at the time of the accident is a matter regarding which I entertain considerable doubt. It is not sufficient to find, as both the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge have found, that one of the boats had rag or cloth stuffed in to the seams. Everybody knows that wooden boats of this kind have to be plugged with hemp or some other such substance in order to keep out water. It is also a well-known fact that every boat of this kind always has little water in the bottom which percolates through the seams. Reading the evidence together, it appears to me that it is far more reasonable to suppose that this unhappy affair was in the nature of an accident. At any rate, whatever took place, it does not seem to me that these two accused applicants can be held responsible. It looks as if the boat was over-crowded. Forty-two passengers, an ekka and a palanquin seem to be a very considerable load, and with a strong east wind blowing and the water lashing up into waves it is small wonder that the boat went under. I do not think it is established that either of these boats was really unfit to ply as ferry boat. In fact we have it that just before this accident took place one of the boats had gone across and came back in perfect safety and in his judgment the Sessions Judge points out that had it not been for the high wind either of the boats would have made the passage without mishap. That finding of the learned Judge seems to me to dispose of the theory of negligence in the sense that the accused had been plying a boat which was not fit to travel across the water.

MOHAMMAD v. ALI RAZA.

I allow this application and set aside the convictions and sentences and direct these two accused be acquitted and released.

Application accepted.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1139 OF 1914.

December 18, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Tudball.

Syed MOHAMMAD—APPLICANT

versus

Mirza ALI RAZA—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Complaint dismissed by one Magistrate—Fresh complaint to another—Transfer of case—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 526, 437.

A complaint under sections 420, 409, Indian Penal Code, dismissed on the complainant's statement that he had come to terms with the accused and did not wish to offer any evidence, can be reinstituted in the Court of another Magistrate who has jurisdiction to entertain it.

Where in a case there is a good deal of evidence (both oral and documentary) in English and the Magistrate in whose Court the case is pending does not know English, it may be neccessary and perhaps advisable to transfer the case to some Magistrate who knows that language.

Application for revision filed by Syed Mohammad.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Applicant.

Mr. W. Wallach, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—Mirza Ali Raza, the opposite party to this application, on the 30th of June 1913, made a complaint against Syed Mohammad, the applicant in the Court of Qazi Ibrar Ahmad, a Magistrate of the first Class, charging him with offences under sections 420 and 409 of the Code. The complainant in the case brought about the transfer of the trial from the Court of that Magistrate to the Court of another Magistrate of the first Class, Rai Bahadur Radha Raman. The ground for the transfer was that a good deal of the evidence in the case was English correspondence and also the probability that English witnesses might be examined. It is not clear by whom the order of transfer was passed but presumably it was by the District Magistrate. On the 9th of September 1913, when the case was called in the Court of Rai Bahadur Radha Raman the complainant said that he had come to terms with the accused and did not wish to offer any evidence and so the Magistrate discharged the latter. A fresh complaint has now been made in the Court of Qazi Ibrar Ahmad and the Magistrate has taken cognizance of the complaint. The present application is directed against these proceedings and it is prayed that they may be quashed and the complaint dismissed on the ground that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to sit in judgment over the decision of the District Magistrate, as a Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction cannot re-open the case. There appears to have been an error in the application. There is nothing to show that Rai Bahadur Radha Raman was ever the District Magistrate of Moradabad, and the history of services shows that from the commencement of 1913 to the 18th of November 1913 he was a first Class Magistrate and not a District Magistrate. He is no longer attached to the District. So far as the facts are stated before me the only Magistrate who had jurisdiction in the matter or could now have jurisdiction therein is the one in whose Court the complaint has been laid afresh. The Court of Rai Bahadur Radha Raman merely had jurisdiction in this case by reason of the order of transfer and that case having come to an end in his Court and he having left the District there is no other Court except that of Qazi Ibrar Ahmad to take cognizance of the complaint. Therefore it is impossible for me to pass any order quashing the proceedings and dismissing the complaint; nor would it be right to put a stop to the proceedings. If, as the case appears to be, there be a good deal of evidence in English both oral and documentary and as the Magistrate in whose Court the case is pending does not know English, it may be necessary and perhaps would be advisable to transfer the case to the Court of some Magistrate who knows that language. But it is unnecessary for me to pass any order in respect thereof, as it is open to the parties, both of whom express their agreement to a transfer and to apply to the District Magistrate for an order in that respect. The present application is rejected.

Application rejected.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 1494 OF 1914.

September 2, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Johnstone.

ABDUL KARIM—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 514—Bond for appearance in Court—Liability of surety.

When a person stands surety for the appearance in Court, up to the conclusion of the case, of a man, who has been called upon under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, to furnish security for good behaviour, the liability of the surety does not cease until the culprit, if so ordered, appears with his sureties and executes his bond.

Petition for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Jhelum, dated the 9th May 1914.

Mr. Noor-ud-Din, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—There are no grounds for interference. The petitioner, Abdul Karim, stood surety for the appearance in the Court, up to the conclusion of the case, of a man who had been called upon under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, to furnish security for good behaviour. After some hearings the Court on 18th February 1914 found the case proved against that man and he was directed to produce his sureties, but he failed to appear.

I cannot accede to the contention that the petitioner's liability ceased when the Court held that the case was proved. The case was not complete, nor were the Magistrate's duties in connection therewith at an end, until the culprit had appeared with his sureties and executed his bond.

I dismiss the petition.

Petition dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 318 OF 1914.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 273 OF 1914.

November 27, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ayling.

A. K. SUNDARSANAM AIYANGAR—PETITIONER

versus

ELAYAVALLI SRINIVASACHARI—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 144 (4)—Order passed by acting District Magistrate—Petition for rescission, by whom to be disposed of.

An order passed under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, by a Joint Magistrate, while acting as a District Magistrate, can be rescinded or altered after his reversion, by the then District Magistrate himself and the latter cannot transfer an application for rescission or alteration to the former.

Petition, under section 15 of the Charter Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Headquarter Joint Magistrate of NADIR v. EMPEROR.

Tinnevelly, in his proceedings, dated 30th March 1914.

Messrs. T. Richmond and C. Narasimhachariar, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. E. R. Osborne and N. S. Rangaswami Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

ORDER.—The order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, was passed by Mr. Jackson as District Magistrate. A petition for its rescission under clause (4) of the same section was presented to his successor, after Mr. Jackson had handed over charge of the office of District Magistrate and reverted as Joint Magistrate. In such circumstances the power of rescinding or altering the order lay only with Mr. Jackson's successor and the latter was wrong in transferring the petition to Mr. Jackson, for disposal. Mr. Osborne contends that the clause authorises a Magistrate to rescind or alter an order, after vacating office but I do not think this is the proper interpretation.

Mr. Jackson after receiving the petition by transfer passed an order dealing with the case on its merits, and declining to modify or rescind his order as District Magistrate.

It is suggested that I should set aside the District Magistrate's order transferring the petition and that of the Joint Magistrate and direct the District Magistrate to restore the petition to his file and dispose of it himself. But in view of the discretionary nature of the matter and of the fact that the original order has long ago expired by lapse of time, no useful purpose would now be served by such a course.

I, therefore, decline to interfere.

Petition dismissed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL NOS. 13 AND 14 OF 1914.

March 3, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Johnstone and Mr. Justice Scott-Smith.

NADIR AND ANOTHER—CONVICTS—APPELLANTS

versus

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—RESPONDENT.

Practice—Witness improving on his former statement—Evidence—Colouring matter of blood on clothes and nail parings of accused—Murder.

It is very unsafe to rely upon a witness who materially improves on his former statement.

In the absence of reasonable proof of guilt, the presence of colouring matter of blood on certain articles of clothing of a person accused of murder or of mammalian blood on his nail parings is not of much consequence and can be explained in various ways.

Appeal from the order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Jhelum Division, at Rawalpindi, dated the 24th November 1913, convicting the appellant and sentencing him to death.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Saunders, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Nadir and Ram have been convicted of the murder of Musammat Bhari, a girl six years of age, and have been sentenced to death by the Additional Sessions Judge of Rawalpindi. Nadir has appealed through the Jail Authorities (Criminal Appeal No. 13) and Ram through an Advocate, (Criminal Appeal No. 14), and their appeals may be conveniently disposed of together. Their cases are also before us for confirmation of sentence under section 374, Criminal Procedure Code.

A third accused, by name Beli Ram, was acquitted by the Sessions Judge.

The girl Musammat Bhari disappeared on the afternoon of the 12th August after leaving the house of her aunt, Musammat Gauhar Bano, to read the Quran in the mosque. Her dead body was found on the succeeding night some time after midnight by Dulla, Chaukidar, P. W. No. 3; Tara, P. W. No. 4; and Mohkam Din, P. W. No. 5, in a manger in the unoccupied house of one Jahana under circumstances detailed in the judgment of the Sessions Judge which showed unmistakably that she had been murdered and robbed of the valuable ornaments which she used to wear.

Excluding the evidence of the child Musammat Bholi which has been rejected, and in our opinion rightly, by the Sessions Judge, the case against the appellants rests upon the evidence of Dulla coupled with the fact that colouring matter of blood was found upon the loin cloth and shoes of Ram, and upon the turban and shoes of Nadir, whilst mammalian blood was found in the paring of Nadir's nails.

The unsatisfactory character of Dulla's evidence is clear from the summary of it given in the Sessions Judge's judgment. It is clear that he has improved upon his first statement, which he made to the Sub-Inspector, and which was that he had seen the two appellants at midnight coming out of the courtyard of the house where Musammat Bhari's body was found shortly after. We gather that, when under cross-examination in the Sessions Court, his meaning was that he was in the lane outside Jahana's house and saw appellants coming out of the passage, into which the courtyard opens. When he was re-called and examined again two days after his first statement in the Sessions Court, he said he was at the spot marked No. 10 in the plan, Exhibit F, and actually saw appellants coming out of the room where the dead body was found. This was certainly a lie and when a witness improves on his original statement in this way it is very unsafe to rely upon him. We do not think he lied in saying that he saw appellants under suspicious circumstances late at night and that this led him to suspect them, but we think it is doubtful where exactly he did see them.

The point, however, which, in our opinion, is fatal to the case for the prosecution is, that appellants' foot-prints were not found in the house where the dead body was discovered. The theory of the prosecution is that they had gone back there for some purpose or other, but if they had done so we are of opinion that they would certainly have left some foot-prints. It is in evidence that there was mud all over the floor and the foot-prints of Dulla, Tara, Mohkam and the dead child's grandmother were found in the mud. The Sessions Judge says:—"The explanation may be that the accused took the precaution of effacing the tracks, or it may be that they left foot-prints which were indistinct." This explanation does not commend itself to us; it is clear from the evidence that a careful search was made for tracks and there is nothing on the record to show that there were any indistinct tracks or signs of foot-prints having been effaced.

Wherever the appellants had come from when Dulla saw them we do not think it possible that they had come from the room where the dead body was found. They may have come from Beli's house to which the same passage leads. Once it is admitted that appellants had not just come from Jahana's house, the evidence of Dulla loses all its force.

The presence of colouring matter of blood on certain articles of appellants' clothing and of mammalian blood on Nadir's nail parings is not at all conclusive and may be explained in various ways. No doubt taken with other evidence it would be a point against the appellants, but by itself it does not count for much.

For the above reasons we consider that the evidence is not sufficient for the conviction of either of the appellants. We accept the appeals and setting aside the convictions and sentences, acquit Nadir and Ram and direct that they be forthwith set at liberty.

Appeals accepted.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 335 OF 1914.

April 22, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Holmwood and Mr. Justice Sharfuddin.

KALI PRASAD BANERJEE—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR ON THE PROSECUTION OF BHARAT CHANDRA BANERJEE—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 465—Signing telegram in another's name—No intent to injure—Forgery—Denial of fact by accused—Defence inconsistent with denial.

The mere signing a telegram in another's name, where it is not shown to have been done with intent to injure him and where it does not actually injure him, does not constitute the offence of forgery, even though the signature may have been made without the authority of such person.

An accused is not bound by any statement denying any fact against him if he desires subsequently to take a further defence inconsistent with the denial.

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge of Faridpur on appeal dated 5th January 1914.

FACTS.—The accused, Kali Prasad Banerjee, was a student of the H. E. School at Madaripur. He was arrested as concerned in the Gopalpur dacoity case (District Faridpur), and released on bail. While this case was still under investigation another dacoity took place in village Kawakuri within the same Sub-Division, Madaripur, District Faridpur, in which Kali Prasad was again suspected to have been concerned and re-arrested. The two cases were investigated together as committed by the same gang and the inquiry was carried on through the months of June, July and August. At the end of July when the Sud-Divisional Officer of Madaripur was at Khalia, the village of Kali Prasad, certain information reached him in consequence of which he issued warrants to search the house of Kali Prasad and the dispensary of Ramani Mohan Das Gupta in connection with the Kawakuri case. Ramani had his dispensary at the house of Bharat Chandra Banerjee whose house and that of Kali Prasad were in the same premises.

In course of this search made on 4th August 1913 certain properties of Kali Prasad and Ramani were seized among which was a swordstick belonging to Ramani. Both were arrested and Ramani was sent up to take his trial under the Arms Act as holding an arm without license. Bharat Chandra Banerjee was one of the witnesses to this search.

While the Arms Act case against Ramani was pending, from information coming from District Magistrate of Barisal, the Sub-Divisional Officer of Madaripur asked the District Magistrate of Faridpur to call for the original of a telegram sent at Khalia Telegraph Office on the morning of the 5th August 1913 to the address of Lolit Kabiraj of Madaripur. This was received from the Telegraph Department and marked Exhibit I, and read

"To

Lolit Mohan Das Kabiraj, Madaripur.

Ramani arrested, take care, tell Kali too--- Bharat Chandra—Khalia."

This telegram was forwarded to the Police to assist them in their investigation of the Arms Act and dacoity cases. On 1st September 1913 Bharat Chandra Banerjee was sent to the Sub-Divisional Officer with a report by the Madaripur Inspector of Police to the effect that the telegram was never sent by Bharat Chandra but was forged and sent by Kali Prasad Banerjee, accordingly the complaint of Bharat Chandra Banerjee was recorded in which he alleged that he neither sent nor authorized the sending of the telegram in question and that it was sent by Kali Prasad Banerjee with intent to injure him. The accused was, therefore, prosecuted under section 465, Indian Penal Code, and the accused was convicted and sentenced on the 31st October 1913 to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six months, by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Madaripur. On appeal to the Sessions Judge of Faridpur the conviction was upheld and appeal dismissed on 5th January 1914. The accused then moved the High Court on 2nd March 1914 and obtained a Rule on five grounds viz., (1) meaning of telegram open to defence version, (2) Court ought to have examined Lolit Kabiraj, (3) if a warning it is not a forgery, (4) no intention (5), prejudiced for want of cross-examination of Bharat. The accused was granted bail.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri (with Babu Narendra Kumar Bose), for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sultan Ahmed for Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that this Rule must be made absolute on all the grounds upon which it was issued. A perusal of the 3rd paragraph of the trying Magistrate's judgment in which he speaks rather irregularly of facts to which he was able to depose of his own knowledge seems to clearly establish that Bharat Chandra Banerjee, Kali Prasad Banerjee and Ramani Mohan Das were all living together. Bharat Chandra Banerjee saw the search made and he saw Ramani arrested, and there is nothing to show that there was any necessity to warn Lolit Kabiraj, and if the telegram was intended as a warning Kali who is mentioned in it must be the accused himself, for the Mukhtear Kali Prasad whom it is suggested was referred to could not have been invoked in the case at all except for the purpose of exercising his legitimate function in defending the accused. The word "take care" is a very common wrong use among even educated Bengalees of the expression "take necessary steps," and there certainly appears to us to be nothing on the face of the telegram having regard to those facts which the learned Magistrate has set out as being within his own knowledge to enable us to say that the telegram must have been intended as a warning to Lolit Kabiraj and some Kali other than the accused.

Then on the second point it does not certainly fall within the meaning of forgery. The use of the name "Bharat Chandra" if it was intended to represent Bharat Chandra Banerjee which there is nothing to show would not be improbable considering that Ramani lived in Bharat Chandra's house and as the Magistrate finds under his protection, and the youth who sent the telegram may very well have thought that his friends would take more serious notice of it if it was in the name of Ramani's protector. But there is really nothing to show that the expression "Bharat Chandra" refers to Bharat Chandra Banerjee at all, and like everything else in this case it is based upon pure assumption. Then if it did refer to Bharat Chandra Banerjee there is nothing to show that it was done with intent to injure him. The learned District Magistrate in showing cause states that there is evidence that he was actually injured. The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer for Bihar and Orissa who appears in the absence of the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer of this Province frankly admits that he is unable to say that there is any such evidence, and certainly no injury was done to Bharat Chandra Banerjee and it does not seem easy to see how any injury could have been done to him, for as far as being an associate of the accused and of Ramani that was already patent to every body on the 4th August when the Magistrate himself says that he directed the Police to search his house.

As regards the 4th point the accused certainly was not tied and bound by any statement denying any fact against him if he desired subsequently to take the further defence that Bharat really authorized him to send the telegram, and we are of opinion that on that ground also Bharat ought to have been submitted to further cross-examination. The denial of a person in his position that he had nothing to do with the telegram is very natural, but it is not very trustworthy especially when he has not been subjected to any cross-examination.

For all these reasons the Rule must be made absolute. The conviction and sentence are set aside and the accused acquitted and released.

Rule made absolute.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 247 OF 1914.

May 7, 1914.

Present:—Justice Sir P. C. Banerji, Kt.

RAM NATH—APPLICANT

versus

MUNICIPAL BOARD OF MUTTRA—OPPOSITE PARTY.

U. P. Municipalities Act (I of 1900), ss. 87, 88, 147—Notice under s. 88—Prosecution under s. 87—Conviction whether legal—Daily fine, whether legal under s. 88—Evidence—Report of Municipal Overseer, admissibility of—Municipal Board neglecting to pass order within time despite receipt of written notice and written reminder, effect of.

Where a notice is issued by a Board under section 88 but the prosecution and conviction are under section 87, the order of conviction cannot stand.

A daily fine cannot be imposed for an offence under section 88.

The report of a Municipal Overseer as to when the construction of a chajja took place, is not admissible in evidence and no finding can be based on such a report.

Under section 87 of the Municipalities Act the applicant gave notice to the Board, on September 30th, 1912, of his intention to erect a building. The Municipal Board took no notice of it. On 28th November 1912 the applicant by written communication called the attention of the Board to its omission. But the reminder had no effect on the Board:

Held, that under section 87, clause (3), the Board must be deemed to have sanctioned the proposed building.

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate of Muttra.

Mr. Purushottam Das Tandon, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order convicting the applicant under section 147 of Act I of 1900, (the Municipalities Act). The Municipal Board on July 2nd, 1913, issued a notice to the applicant, Ram Nath, under section 88 of the Act, directing him to pull down a chajja. As he did not comply with the notice he was prosecuted and the prosecution resulted in his conviction. He was sentenced to a fine of Rs. 10, and to a daily fine of Rupee 1. The last portion of the order, about daily fine is clearly wrong and a reference has been made by the learned District Magistrate asking this Court to set aside this portion of the Magistrate's order.

As regards the conviction two points have been raised. It is first contended that a notice under section 88 could only be issued requiring a person "to remove or alter a projection or structure overhanging, projecting into or encroaching on any street ; and that there is no evidence in this case that the chajja built by the applicant projects into or overhangs any street or drain or sewer or aqueduct. This is so and the Magistrate did not try the case as a case of breach of an order lawfully issued upon notice under section 88. The case was tried as if a notice had been issued under sub-section (5) section 87. As no such notice was issued the case could not be tried as one under that sub-section. Even if it be assumed that the notice was one under that sub-section, I am of opinion that the conviction cannot be supported. It appears that on September 30th 1912, the applicant, Ram Nath, gave notice to the Municipal Board of Muttra under section 87 of the Act, of his intention to make the construction complained of. No notice of this was taken by the Municipal Board and on November 28th, 1912, Ram Nath by a written communication called the attention of the Board to its omission to make an order in respect of his previous application of September 30th, 1912. No order was passed by the Municipal Board within 15 days of the receipt of this reminder of the 28th November, 1912, and it was only on July 2nd, 1913, that the Board moved in the matter. Therefore, under sub-section (3) of section 87, the Municipal Board should be deemed to have sanctioned the construction which Ram Nath proposed to make. It is said in the judgment of the Magistrate that the construction of the chajja took place on November 3rd, 1912, that is befrore the expiry of the 15 days. But this finding is based only on a report of the Overseer made to the Municipal Board. This report was not admissible in evidence. The Overseer was not examined in this case and Ram Nath does not admit that he made the construction on November 3rd, as alleged. Therefore, there was nothing before the Magistrate to justify the conclusion that the construction had been made before the Municipal Board could be deemed under sub-section (3) of section 87, to have sanctioned the construction. On this ground also the conviction is untenable. I allow the application and set aside the order of the Magistrate both as regards the fine imposed on Ram Nath and the daily fine which he was ordered to pay. Any portion of the fines, if paid, must be refunded. This also disposes of the reference made by the District Magistrate No. 244 of 1914.

Application allowed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 137 OF 1914.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 118 OF 1914.

September 18, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar.

MUTHUKARUPPAN SERVAI AND ANOTHER—PETITIONERS.

versus

VELLAYYA KUDUMBAN—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 428—Remand by Appellate Court for additional evidence and finding, whether legal.

Section 428 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not empower an Appellate Magistrate to call for a fresh finding from a Subordinate Magistrate, nor can he act upon such finding if submitted by the Sub-Magistrate.

CHANDA v. RAMA MISARI.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Melur Division, in Calendar Appeal No. 50 of 1913, preferred against that of the second Class Magistrate of Madura Taluq, in Calendar Case No. 192 of 1912.

Mr. E. R. Osborne, for the Petitioners.

Mr. C. Madavan Nair, for the Accused.

Mr. N. Grant, for the Government.

JUDGMENT.—The Appellate Magistrate has fallen into three errors in his proceedings in the trial of the appeal.

One of the errors is that he seems to have asked the 2nd Class Magistrate not only to take further evidence but also to record a clear finding on the question whether the lane is a public or a private one. Section 428, Criminal Procedure Code, does not empower the Appellate Magistrate to call for a fresh finding from the Subordinate Magistrate.

The next error is that the Appellate Magistrate instead of disposing of the case himself, after considering the whole evidence including the additional evidence has purported to act upon the fresh finding of the Sub-Magistrate.

The last error is that he mistook the nature of the finding so submitted by the Sub-Magistrate.

However the whole case is trifling and as the Public Prosecutor does not wish to have the accused put again in peril, and as this petition is evidently the outcome of private malice, I decline to interfere.

Petition dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 378 OF 1914.
CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 310 OF 1914.

October 28, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Kumarasawmi Sastri

CHANDA alias RUKMANI BAI—PETITIONER

versus

RAMA MISARI—COUNTER-PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488 — Application for maintenance by wife—Presence of relations or friends to bear her costs, whether ground for dismissal of application.

A wife's application for maintenance against her husband should not be dismissed on the mere ground that she has relations or friends willing to maintain her or to bear the costs of the proceedings Kunnath Anjumma v. Veluth Ahmed, 2 Weir 616 Cr, followed.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Sub-Divisional first Class Magistrate of Ramnad, in Miscellaneous Case No. 11 of 1914, dated 30th May 1914.

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. Padmanabha Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The Joint Magistrate does not find that the petitioner was not the wife of the counter-petitioner. He stopped the case after three witnesses were examined. He does not find that the petitioner had sufficient means independent of the husband. The mere fact that she has relations or friends willing to maintain her or to bear the costs of the proceedings will be no ground for dismissing the application Kunnath Anjumma v. Veluth Ahmed (1).

I am of opinion that the order of the Magistrate cannot be supported. I set it aside and direct him to proceed with the inquiry and dispose of it according to law.

Order set asdie.

(1) 2 Weir 616 Cr.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE NO. 263 OF 1912.

December 16, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Holmwood and Mr. Justice Carnduff.

Mahant KISHEN DYAL GIR—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

Syed MAHOMED AMIRUL HUSSEIN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, r. 2, O. XLI, r. 2—All pleas of estoppel, whether barred, if not raised in written statement—Res judicata, plea of, not raised, whether can be raised in appeal—Mortgage suit—Subsequent mortgagee made party must set up even his prior mortgage—Prior mortgagee not necessary party and not bound to appear and plead—Parties—Pleadings.

By reason of Order VIII, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, all pleas of estoppel of whatever nature are not barred if they are not taken in the written statement.

Therefore, an objection which could have been taken by one of numerous defendants in a mortgage suit to show that his purchase right in the property could not be affected by the plaintiffs' suit by reason of the principle of res judicata, is not such a matter as could show that the plaintiffs' suit was not maintainable by reason of Order VIII, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code and can be raised in appeal with the leave of the Court under Order XLI, rule 2 of the Code.

A puisne mortgagee, who has also a prior mortgage, if made defendant as a puisne mortgagee, is bound to appear and set up both his prior and subsequent mortgages. But if he is only a prior mortgagee and not a subsequent mortgagee and is sought to be kept on the record as defendant simply because the authenticity of his mortgage is not admitted, it is not at all necessary for him to appear and defend his rights under his prior mortgage.

Mahomed Ibrahim Hossain Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh, 14 Ind. Cas. 496; 11 M. L. T. 265; (1912) M. W. N. 367; 9 A. L. J. 332; 22 M. L. J. 468; 14 Bom. L. R. 280; 16 C. W. N. 505; 15 C. L. J. 411; 39 C. 527, distinguished.

Appeal from original decree from a decision of the Subordnate Judge of Gaya, dated the 15th May 1912.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Atul Chandra Dutt, for the Appellant.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Chandra Sekhar Prosad Singh, for the Respondents.

Babu Shib Chandra Palit, for the Deputy Registrar.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs as assignees of a mortgage, dated the 28th April 1896, executed by one Mohammed Buksh in favour of a lady named Nawaba Hormuzi Begum.

The plaintiffs' case is that they took an assignment from this lady, who is their relative and about 80 years of age, and paid her Rs. 16,000 in silver at her own house before the registration of the instrument of assignment.

The bond was for Rs. 5,000 with Rs. 24 per cent. interest and compound interest with monthly rests. The mortage debt had mounted up, at the time of suit, to about Rs. 45,000. The bond is admittedly genuine and the plaintiffs have obtained a decree for the whole amount. Out of a large number of defendants, who were joined in the suit as having some interest in the properties mortgaged, the defendant No. 27, the Mahant of Budh Gaya, alone appeals. Property No. 5 in the schedule to the plaint is alone involved in this appeal.

The property consists of certain mokarari rights in Mauza Pesra Kumhari, otherwise called Pesra Nizamut, and Sunder Kumhari, asli mai dakhili appertaining to Mahal Azamghur, Perganna Sherghatty, District Gaya.

The plaintiffs claim that the mortgagor had 16-annas of this property in permanent mokarari interest, and one of the questions raised and decided in this suit is as to the share of the mortgagor. The Mahant had a subsequent mortgage on Pesra and Sunder Kumhari, described in his plaint as two separate villages in one touzi number, dated 22nd May 1896. He also claimed a prior lien on the properties as assignee of a mortgage to Baijnath Singh and his brothers, dated 16th March 1887, given by Mohammed Buksh in respect of certain shares in all the mauzas held by him in Mahal Azamghur.

Baijnath Singh's family sued on their mortgage in 1894 and got a decree on the 11th August 1896. This decree was assigned to the Mahant. In a suit brought by the Mahant in the year 1900 on his mortgage of 22nd May 1896 and a deed of further charge dated 3rd March 1897, Musammat Hormuzi Begum was made a party and the principal contention of the appellant before us is that the decree of the District Judge, dated 19th July 1900, operates as res judicata against her so that her assignees cannot now sue on her mortgage.

This plea was never put forward in the written statement nor in the lower Court nor is it taken in the grounds of appeal before us.

KISHEN DYAL GIR v. MAHOMED AMIRUL HUSSEIN.

It was strenuously urged before us by the learned Vakil for the respondents that by reason of Order VIII, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, all pleas of estoppel of whatever nature are barred unless they are taken in the written statement. It was pointed out that Order VIII, rule 2, corresponds in every respect to Order XIX, rule 15, of the English Judicature Acts and a note in this year's Annual Practice, citing the authority of Coppinger v Norton (1) for the proposition that all estoppels are included in that rule, was put before us. On referring to the report of that case, however, we do not find that any such rule is laid down in the judgment of any of the learned Judges, three of whom delivered separate judgments. We do not think that an objection which could have been taken by one of numerous defendants in the suit to show that his purchased right in the property could not be affected by the plaintiffs' suit by reason of the principle of res judicata, was a matter which could be said to show that the plaintiffs' suit was not maintainable. We think, therefore, that the question could be raised with the leave of the Court under Order XLI, rule 2.

We, therefore, though with some hesitation, allowed the point to be argued but we considered it our duty to put the strictest interpretation on the proceedings in the suit of 1900 which are alleged to create the bar of res judicata. What then are the facts as regards that litigation?

It appears that Nawaba Hormuzi Begum was defendant No. 13 in that suit. In paragraph 7 of the plaint, dated 27th July 1899, it was stated that "the plaintiff had come to know that the defendants Nos. 9 to 18 assert some connection with the properties mortgaged under the plaintiff's bond, therefore, they have been added as defendants to give them a chance of redemption of mortgage."

It is strenuously urged that this is impleading the defendant No. 13 as a puisne mortgagee. But it is to be noted that all the defendants Nos. 9 to 18 were impleaded under different interests. Numbers 9 to 11 were the family of Baijnath who admittedly had prior mortgage, and the decree, the Mahant obtained, directed that the sale-proceeds should be applied first to the payment of their mortgage. There is nothing in the pleading to show that these defendants had any subsequent mortgages and the judgment distinctly says they were admittedly prior mortgagees. The defendant No. 13 had a separate mortgage of her own and a petition of the 6th June 1900 put in by the Mahant gives the correct date of her mortgage 28th April 1896, thus admitting that it was a prior mortgage but asking that she should be kept on the record because the plaintiff did not admit the authenticity of her mortgage. Now whether the plaintiff admitted this or not, it was certainly not necessary for her to appear and defend her rights under her prior mortgage and although she was kept on the record, the preamble to the District Judge's judgment and decree of 19th July 1900 clearly says there were several prior mortgagees and other persons made defendants, but all have now been relinquished except defendants Nos. 1 to 8 and defendant No. 15. The decree gives in its heading the name of all 19 defendants and there is a note that defendants Nos. 9 to 11, 14 and 17 were struck off as per order dated June 4th, 1900, and the defendants Nos. 12, 16 and 18 were struck off as per order dated 6th June 1900. This is a statement of fact and the petition of June 6th shows why No. 13 was allowed to remain on but the fact that the District Judge unnecessarily apparently acceded to the prayer of the plaintiff to let him impugn the authenticity of her mortgage could not render it incumbent on her to appear, her mortgage being admittedly a prior mortgage, nor could this note in the decree make her bound by its terms any more than was the pro forma defendant No. 19, who was impleadeed by the plaintiff as his own benamidar and whose name was never expunged from the decree.

The test in all the cases we have had laid before us is, was the defendant impleaded as a puisne mortgagee and, therefore, a necessary party? If he was, he is bound to set up his prior mortgage as well as his subsequent mortgage. The decree itself is against defendant No. 1 alone and that being so, it must be taken to be in accordance with the express declaration in the judgment that at the time judgment was passed defendant No. 13 among others had been given up.

After all the cases bearing on the point

(1) (1902) 2 Ir. Rep. 241; 35 I. L. T. R. 250; 6 Irish Law Rep. 701.

had been cited before us, it was conceded that the view we take would be unanswerable but for the latest decision of the Judicial Committee in Mahomed Ibrahim Hossain Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh (2), where it was held that a lady who obtained a mortgage in 1874 with possession until 1887 (the due date of payment), was a necessary party in a suit brought by the mortgagees of three intermediate mortgages between 1874 and February 1888 and that the omission of her heirs to put her rights in issue in those suits barred her rights under her mortgage by reason of Explanation II of section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code.

We are unable to see that their Lordships of the Judicial Committee laid down any new rule embracing a simple prior mortgagee as such. It appears that Musammat Alfan had a subsequent mortgage in 1888 and that her heirs were interested in the three intermediate mortgages and were made defendants in the suits on these mortgages and not having set up in those suits such rights as they had under the mortgage of 17th February 1888 and the zurpeshgi-deed of 1874, section 13, Explanation II, applied.

But here we are dealing with an admitted prior mortgagee who had no interest whatever in any subsequent mortgages, and we are asked now for the first time in argument before the Court to hold on highly technical grounds that the lady was impleaded as a puisne mortgagee and that a decree was passed against her.

We find as a fact that neither of these assertions has any substance in it and as a matter of law that she must be treated as a prior mortgagee pure and simple, and that her rights were not affected by anything which took place in the litigation in 1900. That being so, we proceed to deal with certain minor points that were argued on the merits.

And first as to the share of Mohammed Buksh in the mokarari. It is admitted that he inherited 4-annas from his wife Umeda Bibi, and that according to the defendant-appellant's contention is all the plaintiffs can claim in this suit. But there is evidence that three of Mohammed Buksh's sons, who admittedly inherited $1\frac{1}{2}$-annas each from their mother, predeceased their father, and the only question is whether those sons died unmarried. The plaintiffs' contention that one of them was married and had two sons, is based on the evidence of witness No. 4 for defendants Nos. 50 and 74, but he was very much shaken in cross-examination and had to admit that he knew that Mohammed Buksh had 8-annas share as he had to deal with his documents.

On the other hand witness No. 1 for defendant No. 61 clearly says that the share of the three sons of Mohammed Buksh who died during his life-time devolved on him, as was held in the judgment of 1900. It is in vain to say that this is merely the expression of an opinion on a point of law, since he is dealing with the actual facts as to the shares and tells us he was in the service of Mohammed Buksh Khan and that he does not know what the legal share of the sons was. The defendant No. 61 elicited the statement from him and it was carried no further though it was against the plaintiffs' case as well as defendant No. 27's.

The learned Judge's decision in the Court below on this point is rather unsatisfactory. After stating that according to defendant No. 27 Mohammed Buksh inherited only 4-annas of mokarari, he says that three of the sons of the mortgagor died in his life-time. So that the mortgagor must have inherited something out of their shares. It is difficult, he says, to ascertain from the evidence on the record what that something is. He seems finally to hold that because the defendant No. 27 sued on his mortgage-bond making Hormuzi Begum a party and it was held in that suit that the mortgagor had $8\frac{1}{2}$-annas, and that $8\frac{1}{2}$-annas was available to satisfy defendant No. 27's decree and was ordered to be sold for the benefit of defendant No. 27, there is nothing on the record to show that more than $8\frac{1}{2}$-annas mokarari belonged to Mohammed Buksh. But it seems to us that on this finding defendant No. 27 is estopped from denying that the share of which he took the benefit in his decree of 1900 was $8\frac{1}{2}$-annas. Be that as it may, the matter must be decided on the evidence before us if there is no estoppel and that evidence, though meagre, is perfectly clear and is only open to doubt so far as one witness imposes a wife and two children on one of the sons of Mohammed Buksh, whose existence his cross examination goes to show was rather mythical.

(2) 14 Ind. Cas. 496; 11 M. L. T. 265; (1912) M. W. N. 367; 9 A. L. J. 332; 22 M. L. J. 468; 14 Bom. L. R. 280; 16 C. W. N. 505; 15 C. L. J. 411; 39 C. 527.

The learned Judge was evidently dealing with the plaintiffs' contention that Mohammed Buksh had 16-annas of the mokarari. This he seems to think cannot be by reason of the judgment of 1900: but there is evidence on the record coming from the defendants' side, that is from the witnesses of defendants other than No. 27, and we are inclined to the view that defendant No. 27 cannot now be heard to say that the share was less than the $8\frac{1}{2}$-annas which he brought to sale under his mortgage-decree of 1900.

We, therefore, uphold the Subordinate Judge's finding on this point. The next point urged was the priority of the defendant No. 27's claim under his assignment of Baijnath's mortgage.

This is clearly untenable as, Baijnath's mortgage did not include any mokarari whatever. It was of certain shares of milkiat registered under certain touzi numbers, which could not possibly refer to mokarari. That Mohammad Buksh had shares in the milkiat is clear from the evidence and is admitted by defendant No. 27's own witness No. 1, Ahmed Raza, page 124, paper-book, who says that the milkiat belonged to Mohammed Bul sh's mother. In this suit we are only concerned with the mokarrari. There is, therefore, nothing in this point.

Thirdly, it was sought to be argued somewhat faintly that the story of Rs. 16,000 in silver, being paid over to an old lady at her country house was too improbable to be believed.

The Judge who heard the witnesses has believed it and we see nothing inherently improbable in it, having regard to the customs of this country.

Notes or Government securities would not be of much use to an old lady in the Mofassil, and hard cash which she could hoard in her treasure house would be a much greater temptation to her than mere paper. Moreover, her servants, who must be presumed to have had an active hand in the negotiations, would obviously prefer money which could be handled for paying off local charges and debts as well as Government revenue. We are, therefore, quite prepared to hold that there was a perfectly valid assignment of the mortgage to the plaintiffs. We have thus dealt with all the points which were raised in this appeal, and the result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

October 21, 1914.

Present:—Lord Dunedin, Lord Atkinson, Lord Sumner, Sir John Edge and Mr. Ameer Ali.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Sri Raja KIRTIBAS BHUPATI HARICHANDAN MAHAPATRA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

AND

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT—

versus

Sri BIRBAR NARAYAN CHANDRA DHIR NARENDRA—DEFENDANT RESPONDENT.

Bengal Regulation (I of 1793), s. 8, cl. 4—Bengal Regulation (VIII of 1793), s. 41—Chowkidari chakran lands—Inclusion in zemindari—Parmanent sanad—Resumption, when permissible—Burden of proof—"Assigned," meaning of, in Village Chowkidari Act (VI of 1870).

Zemindars have a prima facie title to the full enjoyment of every parcel of land lying within the ambit of their estates for which they pay revenue to Government, and it rests on the Government to prove that when the zemindari was confirmed, land therein was subject to reservation empowering the Government to resume and assess it.

Rajah Sahib Perhlad Sein v. Maharajah Rajender Kishore Singh, 12 M. I. A. 292 at p. 331; 12 W. R. 6 (P. C.); 2 B. L. R. 111; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 225; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 430; 20 Eng. Rep. 349, followed.

Under section 8, clause 4, of Bengal Regulation I of 1793 and section 41 of Regulation VIII of 1793, the power or option of resumption was reserved only in respect of lands which had been appropriated by the zemindar with the permission or under the authority of Government for the purpose of remunerating the chowkidars for their services and which, although included in the mahal and annexed to the malguzari lands, were not taken into consideration for assessment of revenue.

The word 'assigned' in Bengal Act VI of 1870 means assigned by the Government or appropriated under its authority or with its permission.

The mere fact that some of the appointments of chowkidars were made with the approval of Government Officers cannot alter the nature of the grants.

SECRETARY OF STATE v. KIRTIBAS BHUPATI HARICHANDAN MAHAPATRA.

The history of the chakran grants in Orissa traced.

Joykishen Mookerjee v. The Collector of East Burdwan, 10 M. I. A. 16; 1 W. R. (P. C.) 26; 1 Suth. P C. J. 542; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 54; 19 Eng. Rep. 879, referred to.

Consolidated appeals from two decrees and judgments of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated 23rd March 1910, reversing those of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack, dated 11th September 1906 and 27th May 1907 respectively.

FACTS.—For a time long anterior to the acquisiton of Orissa by the British, the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs had been in possession of the estates respectively known as the zemindaris of Sukinda and Madhupur, of which the lands in dispute form a portion. These zemindaris lay within that portion of Orissa known as rajwara where, according to custom, the zemindars were allowed to exercise a feudals way over their jagir on payment of a fixed tribute to the Imperial Government. In the Settlement which took place on the occupation of this territory by the Company's troops in 1803, these zemindars were granted sanads entitling them to hold their estates at a fixed jama in perpetuity, and their estates were brought within the Mogulbandi (that is, that portion of Orissa, where according to custom the land revenue was a first charge upon the estate), the general Regulations in force in Bengal being made applicable to them. The sanads so issued were confirmed by section 33 of Regulation XII of 1805. These sanads imposed upon the zemindars the duty of preventing the commission of theft, robberies at night and highway robberies, and, in case of any such occurrence, of arresting the offenders and sending them for trial to the Huzur (Government Officers), but left to them (zemindars) a free hand as to the manner in which the duty was to be discharged. This necessitated the employment by the zemindars of chowkidars, who were paid by grants of lands in return for their services. These grants, however, do not appear to have been excluded from assessment fixed upon the zemindaris by the Government. By his orders dated 1st August 1902 and 28th November 1902 respectively, the Collector of Cuttack, purporting to act under the Village Chowkidari Act (VI of 1870), transferred the lands in suit to the plaintiffs, at the same time subjecting them to an assessment. The plaintiffs thereupon, sued for a declaration that the lands were not chowkidari chakaran lands within the meaning of the Act and that, therefore, the Government was not entitled to resume and assess them. The Secretary of State for India, who was the defendent in both the suits, contended that the suits were barred by Article 14 of the Indian Limitation Act, XV of 1877, and that the suit lands were chowkidari chakaran lands. The Subordios Judge of Cuttack upheld the contentionatefn the defendant and dismissed the suits. On appeal the High Court of Calcutta reversed the decrees of the Court below and decreed the suits. The defendant then appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Sir Earle Richards, K. C., and Mr. Dunne, for the Appellant:—The lands in suit are chowkidari chakaran lands. The word 'assigned' has not the restrictive meaning given to it by the High Court. The intention of the Legislature in framing the Act was to do away with jagirs assigned for the maintenance of Police Officers. There is evidence to show that Government officers had a hand in the appointment of, and had powers of supervision over, these chowkidars. The Collector was, therefore, justified in imposing the assessment which was really the chowkidari cess. There was no case of resumption at all.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., and Dunne, for the Respondents:—The onus of proving that the Government had, at the Permanent Settlement, reserved to itself the right to impose assessment, lay very heavily on the Government and it had failed to discharge the same. The evidence shows that the whole zemindari, including the lands in suit, was taken into considération and the revenue payable by the zemindars was fixed on that basis. There was no exclusion of any portion. The lands were the property of the plaintiffs and the Collector's order of transfer was meaningless. The Government had no right to resume the suit lands.

Sir Earle Richards, K. C., briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.

MR. AMEER ALI.—The plaintiffs in the two actions which have given rise to the present appeals are respectively the zemindars of Sukinda and Madhupur in the Province of Orissa, and the question for determination relates to certain lands included in their estates in respect of which the defendant, the Secretary of State for India in Council, claims to exercise the right of resumption and assessment by virtue of the provisions of Act VI of 1870 of the Bengal Council.

The facts of the two cases are set out with great clearness in the judgment of the High Court of Bengal, and do not, therefore, require a detailed statement. Their Lordships propose to give only a brief sketch of the circumstances wich have culminated in the present litigation.

It appears that the predecessors of the two plaintiffs had been in possession of their estates from a time long anterior to the establishment of British power in that part of the country. The origin of their title under British rule is intimately connected with the political history of the Province. Orissa consists of three well-defined tracts. In the middle lies a level open country inhabited by a settled population. Here the Moguls in the reign of Akbar introduced their revenue system with its regular assessment of public dues. These territories were consequently designated the Mogulbandi, which is defined in Regulation XII of 1805 as being that "part of the District of the Zillah of Cuttack in which, according to established usage as in Bengal, the land itself is responsible for the payment of the public revenue and in which every landholder holds his land subject to the conditions of that usage."

The wild and hilly tract on the west and the low marshy lands along the seashore to the east were held by a number of chiefs who, under the designation of Rajas, zemindars and Khandaits were allowed to exercise a feudal sway in their respective jagirs on payment of a fixed tribute to the Imperial Government. These outlying parts of the Province were usually called the Rajwara.

The zemindaris of Sukinda and Madhupur lay within the Rajwara and outside the Mogulbandi territories.

Shortly before the acquisition of the Dewanny by the East India Company, the Mahrattas had obtained possession of a large tract to the south of the Suvarnarekha river, including the Rajwara, and thus, when the Company obtained the virtual Government of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, under Shah Allam's grant, the de facto British possession of the latter Province did not extend beyond the Suvarnarekha to the south of Midnapore.

In 1803 the Mahratta Raghoji Bhonslay, who held southern Orissa, came into collision with the forces of the East India Company, and in the October of that year the country south of the Suvarnarekha river was occupied by British forces. The Settlement of the newly acquired territories was entrusted to Colonel Harcourt, who commanded the Company's troops, and a civil Officer of the name of Mr. Melville. They were designated Commissioners, and they appear to have done their work with great thoroughness. In this Settlement were included the zemindars of Sukinda and Madhupur, to whom sanads were granted entitling them to hold their estates at a fixed jama in perpetuity. These two zemindaris were then brought within the Mogulbandi and subjected to the general Regulations in force in Bengal.

Later in the year came the Treaty of Deogaun, by which Bhonslay ceded a considerable tract of country belonging to the hill Chiefs. With these, agreements or kaulnamas were entered into guaranteeing the perpetual enjoyment by them of their properties on definite terms. The zemindar of Sukinda alleged in his suit that he also held under a kaulnama, but he failed to establish his allegation, which was evidently made under some misapprehension.

There is no doubt, however, that a Settlement was made with, and a sanad granted to him by the Commissioners, the terms of which will be referred to in the course of this judgment.

By section 33 of Regulation XII of 1805 statutory confirmation was given to the sanads of the two plaintiffs' ancestors.

The lands in dispute admittedly form part of the estates settled with the plaintiffs' ancestors in 1803 and in respect of which the revenue was fixed in perpetuity. The plaintiffs accordingly urge that the Collector representing the defendant has no right to exercise in respect of these lands the powers he claims under Act VI of 1870, B. C. The basis of his contentions will appear clearly when the course of legislation which led up to this enactment has been shortly explained.

From time immemorial it has been customary in India to remunerate officers charged with certain public or quasi-public duties by grants of lands to be held either rent-free or at a reduced rent.

One of the best known examples of these service-tenures is the grant of lands in lieu of wages to individuals who were charged with the performance of Police duties in rural areas, and is commonly known as chowkidari chakran lands, from the word chowkidar, which means "a watchman" and chakran, "service."

The history of these chowkidari grants is set out with considerable lucidity in Lord Kingsdown's judgment in the case of Joykishen Mookerjee v. Collector of East Burdwan (1). The following passage explains the origin of the system and the shape it assumed after the Decennial Settlement of 1789 and the Permanent Settlement of 1793:

"It appears that these zemindars were entrusted, previously to the British possession of India, as well with the defence of the territory against foreign enemies as with the administration of law and the maintenance of peace and order within their district; that for this purpose they were accustomed to employ not only armed retainers to guard against hostile inroads, but also a large force of tannahdars, or a general Police force, and other officers in great numbers, under the name of chowkidars, pykes, and other descriptions, as well for the maintenance of order in particular villages and districts as for the protection of the property of the zemindar, the collection of his revenue, and other services personal to the zemindar.

"All these different officers were at that time the servants of the zemindar, appointed by him and removeable by him, and they were remunerated in many cases by the enjoyment of land rent-free or at a low rent in consideration of their services.

"The lands so enjoyed were called chakaran or service lands. These lands were of great extent in Bengal at the time of the Decennial Settlement, and the effect of that Settlement was to divide them into two classes:—

"First. Tannahdary lands, which by Bengal Regulation I of 1793, section 8, clause 4, were made resumable by the Government, the Government taking upon itself the maintenance of the general Police force and relieving the zemindar from that expense.

"Second. All other chakran lands, which by Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793, section 41, were, whether held by public officers or private servants in lieu of wages, to be annexed to the malguzari lands, and declared responsible for the public revenue assessed on the zemindar's independent Talooks or other estates, in which they were included in common with all other malguzari lands therein."

Later on Lord Kingsdown explains the nature of the lands that were held by chowkidars in lieu of wages. Paraphrasing clause 1, section 8, of Regulation I of 1793 and section 11 of Regulation VIII of 1793, he says:—

"They were not to be included in the malguzari lands for the purpose of increasing the jama, because the zemindars had not the full benefit of them; but they were to be included in the malguzari lands for the purpose of securing the assessment, because in the event of a sale upon default of payment of the assessment, it would be important that they should be transferred to the purchasers under the Government, with whom the appointment of the person whose duty would in part be to attend to public interests would vest."

It is clear from the language of clause 4, section 8, of Regulation I of 1793 and of section 41 of Regulation VIII of the same year, that the power or "option" of resumption was reserved in respect of those lands that had been appropriated by the zemindar with the permission or under the authority of Government for the purpose of remunerating the chowkidars for their services, lands which, although included in the mahal and "annexed" to the malguzari lands, were not taken into consideration for the assessment of revenue because in reality they formed no part of his assets.

Here it becomes necessary to notice the sanad that was granted to the zemindar of Sukinda in 1804, an attested copy of which is in the record. A sanad was also granted to the zemindar of Madhupur; it apparently has been lost, but it may be assumed that it was to the same effect as the zemindar of Sukinda's sanad, the attested copy of which is, so far as is material, as follows:—

"As the duties of the zemindars of the said killa have from before been entrusted to Dhrubjoy Bhupati Harichandan, the zemindar, the zemindari of the said killa has been bestowed upon and given to the siad zemindar by the Government of the East India Company; you shall regard the said person as the permanent zemindar of the said killa, and shall not act against his orders, instructions, and advice, and shall not conceal and keep secret any matter whatsoever from him. The said zemindar shall discharge the duties attached to the said zemindari in proper manner, and collect rent from the said zemindari in the best way according to the laws of the Government, and he shall without any objection pay into the Government Treasury 5, 500 kahan cowris, the fixed annual amount payable to the Government, in proper time and according to proper instalments. He shall keep the tenants and the people in general satisfied and pleased by good treatment and shall make such exertions and attempts as to make the zemindari improve and prosper, and he shall be so careful and vigilant that swords, guns, and other war weapons and ammunition may not be manufactured in the said zemindari and that theft, robberies at night, and highway robberies may not be committed at any place and in case such occurrence takes place, he shall arrest the thieves with stolen property and send them up to the Huzur (Government Officers) for trial."

(1) 10 M. I. A. 16; 1 W. R. (P. C.) 26; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 542; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 51; 19 E. R. 879.

It will be observed that the sanad imposes on the zemindar the duty of preventing the commission of theft, robberies at night, and highway robberies, "and in case of any such occurrence, of arresting the offenders and sending them for trial." But it makes no provision regarding the machinery he was to employ for the purpose. The evident inference is that the Government was content with leaving to the zemindar the manner in which he was to discharge the duty of maintaining peace and order in his zemindari. The Government obviously made no provision therefor. Regulation XIII of 1805, which was enacted "for the maintenance of the peace and for the support and administration of the Police in the Zillah of Cuttack," did not, as appears to be clear from the preamble and from the provisions of section 5, relate to the zemindaris of Sukinda and Madhupur, the Settlement of which, as already stated, had been made by special sanads.

The subsequent enactments before the Act of 1870 passed with the object of regularising or improving the rural Police are not material to this judgment. It is sufficient to say that the system under which the village chowkidars, as a part of the Police machinery, held parcels of land as remuneration for their services, wherever in vogue, remained practically untouched until 1870. It was then that the necessity was felt of bringing the rural Police or village chowkidars under the direct control of the State.

The preamble to the Act states the object with which it was enacted.

Section 1 defines chowkidari chakran lands. It says:—

"The words 'choukidari chakran lands' shall mean lands which may have been assigned, otherwise than under a Temporary Settlement, for the maintenance of the officer who may have been bound to keep watch in any village and report crime to the Police, and in respect to which such officer may be at the time of the passing of this Act liable to render service to a zemindar."

The Act then lays down rules for the constitution of village punchayets or committees, whose powers and duties are defined in considerable detail. In Part II it proceeds to deal with the chowkidari chakran lands.

Sections 48, 49, and 50 form the most material provisions of the Statute for the purpose of the present discussion.

They run as follows :—

"XLVIII. All chowkidari chakran lands before the passing of this Act, assigned for the benefit of any village in which a punchayet shall be appointed, shall be transferred in manner and subject as hereinafter mentioned to the zemindar of the estate or tenure within which may be situate such lands.

"XLIX. All lands so transferred shall be subject to an assessment which shall be fixed at one-half of the annual value of such land, according to the average rates of letting land similar in quality in the neighbourhood of such land, and such assessment shall be made by the punchayet of the village.

"L. Such assessment, when made by the punchayet, shall be submitted to the Collector of the district, and he or any other officer exercising the powers of a Collector by him thereunto appointed may approve, or revise and approve, the same, (provided that it shall be lawful for the zemindar to contest the assessment before it is so approved), and after such approval the Collector of the district shall, by an order under his hand in the form in Schedule C, transfer to such zemindar such land subject to the assessment so approved."

Section 51 declares that the order of transfer made under section 50 shall operate to transfer the land to such zemindar, subject to the assessment and subject to the rights of third parties.

Section 52 declares that the amount of the assessment shall be a permanent charge on the land; and the subsequent sections provide how it is to be realised in case of default of payment.

Section 58 empowers the Lieutenant-Governor to appoint commissions "to ascertain and determine"—

"the chowkidari chakran lands and other lands before the passing of this Act assigned for the maintenance of an officer to keep watch in any village and to report crime to the Police in such district."

But for the contentions, to which their Lordships will advert later, that have been advanced on behalf of the appellant, the Secretary of State for India, it would not have been necessary to give in extenso the above sections.

Act VI of 1870 (B. C.) was, when enacted, not introduced into Orissa; its operation was confined to Bengal where the category of lands referred to in Lord Kingsdown's judgment largely existed.

In 1899 the Act was, by a resolution of the Government of Bengal, dated the 9th of February 1897, extented to Orissa.

It appears that the plaintiffs, the zemindars of Sukinda and Madhupur respectively, in discharge of the duties imposed on them by their sanads to maintain peace and order within their estates, retained in their service a large number of chowkidars whom, according to the custom of the country, in lieu of wages they remunerated by grants of land. A register of these chowkidars was kept in the zemindari office, and it would appear that in the appointment of the chowkidars in more than one instance the Government Police Officer had a voice. But the records show that the zemindar often changed the lands held by these men, and resumed what he considered to be in excess of their requirements.

Such was the condition of affairs in these two zemindaris when the Act was made applicable to Orissa.

Shortly after its extension, the Collector of the Cuttack District proceeded to apply its provisions to the lands held by the chowkidars of Sukinda and Madhupur respectively, on the ground that they were chowkidari chakran lands within the meaning of the Act. The plaintiffs protested strongly against his proceedings: whilst expressing their willingness to submit to any reasonable contribution that might be required of them for the payment of the chowkidars who were to be appointed under the new system, they took exception to the Collector's attempts to resume and assess or re-assess their lands, and to transfer the same to them. Their objections were rejected, and the lands were then attached and put up to sale under the provisions of sections 54 and 55 of the Act.

The plaintiffs thereupon brought these actions in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack, in substance, for a declaration that the Act did not apply to the lands in suit, and for an injunction restraining the defendant-appellant from interfering with them.

The two suits were tried by two different Subordinate Judges, who, affirming the contention of the Collector that the lands in dispute were chowkidari chakran lands, dismissed the actions. On appeal the High Court of Bengal, after an exhaustive examination of the subject, reversed the decisions of the first Court and granted the plaintiffs the relief they sought.

The Secretary of State for India in Council has appealed in both actions; and it has been contended on his behalf that the learned Judges of the High Court were in error in referring to the previous legislation in order to construe Act VI of 1870 (B. C.); that the Act was applicable to all lands whether "assigned" by Government or by the zemindar for the maintenance of chowkidars and that the onus was on the plaintiffs to show that they were not chowkidari chakran lands.

Their Lordships think that this argument proceeds on a manifest fallacy. The lands in dispute admittedly lie within the ambit of the estates settled with the plaintiffs' ancestors.

The plaintiffs are the zemindars and "as such they have the prima facie title," to use the language of this Board in the well-known case of Rajah Sahib Perhlad Sein v. Maharajah Rajender Kishore Singh (2), to the full enjoyment of every parcel of land within their zemindaris for which they pay revenue to Government.

It rests on the defendant to show that when the zemindaris were confirmed to the plaintiffs' ancestors, it was subject to reservations in respect of any land which gave Government the power of resuming and assessing it. That onus the defendant has not discharged; in fact it is not now contended for him that there was any such reservation. The power of resumption was, as already remarked, reserved by Government by the old Regulations in respect of lands which had been set apart by the zemindars with its permission or under its authority.

In Regulation I of 1793 the word used is "appropriated;" in Regulation XIII of 1805 the expression "assigned" is employed; but in both Statutes the characteristics of the grants under which the lands were held depend on the implied authorisation of the Government, which excluded them from consideration in the adjustment of the jama of the mahal. In the present case the defendant has failed to show that any parcel of land was not taken into account in fixing the rent respectively payable by the plaintiffs, nor that there was any obligation on the part of the plaintiffs to make such grants. The only obligation on them was to maintain peace and order within their zemindaris. They entertained the services of chowkidars for whose maintenance they allotted from time to time certain lands of their own free will. The mere fact that some appointments were made with the approval of a Government Officer cannot alter the nature of the grants.

In their Lordships' opinion the word "assigned" in the definition section of Act VI of 1870 (B. C.) means lands assigned by Government or appropriated under its authority or with its permission. Not only does the form of the "Transferring Order" in Schedule C of the Act clearly show that the expression "assigned" is applied to lands assigned by Government, as explained above for the maintenance of the chowkidars and in respect of which they reserved the right to resume and transfer to the zemindar subject to an additional assessment; but the resolution by which the Act was extended to Orissa leaves no possibility for doubt what the Government understood the Act to mean. Their Lordships do not propose to burden their judgment with long quotations from this interesting document; they only wish to refer to two passages which appear to them to place the matter beyond doubt. In one place the Lieutenant-Governor after reviewing the whole subject says:—

"As already remarked, the chowkidari jagirs are State grants. They are excluded in the temporarily-settled estates from the settlements made with the zemindars, while in the permanently settled estates they cannot be legally interfered with by the zemindars. The latter have thus in both classes of estates no connection with the jagir lands, and the Lieutenant-Governor accepts the view that they are under no obligation to furnish lands or otherwise specially provide for the maintenance of the chowkidars. Their liability is to contribute to any funds raised in the same manner as other residents of the villages. Nor it is binding on the Government to continue the jagir grants for all time."

In the orders that are passed, a distinction is made with regard to the chowkidari holdings in the temporarily settled tracts, and those situated in "permanently settled estates."

With regard to these it is declared that on resumption "the holdings should be included in the estate within which they lie, and form part of its assets in the future."

Nothing can be clearer in their Lordships' view than that the Act was designed to deal with lands which, although lying within a mahal, did not form a part of its assets, which is not the case with the zemindaris of Sukinda and Madhupur.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the judgments and decrees of the High Court should be affirmed and these appeals dismissed with costs. And they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeals dismissed.

(2) 12 M. I. A. 292 at p. 331; 12 W. R. 6 (P. C.); 2 B. L. R. 111; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 225; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 430; 20 Eng. Rep. 319.

Solicitors for the Appellants: India Office.

Solicitors for the Respondents: Messrs. Barrow Rogers and Nevill.

COURT OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE, UNITED PROVINCES.

REVENUE PETITION NO. 45 OF 1912-13 OF PARTABGARH DISTRICT.

May 5, 1914.

Present:—Sir Duncan Colvin Baillie, S. M., and Mr. Tweedy, J. M.

Musammat RAGHUNATH KUAR—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

THE COURT OF WARDS, Patti SAIFABAD, Hissa IX, DISTRICT PARTABGARH—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Presumption—Pattidari body, persons related through males to member of, status of—Ejectment, notice of, contested—Under-proprietary rights claimed—Tenant to make out prima facie case only—Settlement Court deciding status of person applies to all members of his family.

Hindu Law allows of a strong presumption that persons related through males to a member of a pattidari body are also themselves pattidars.

A tenant contesting a notice of ejectment on the ground that he has got under-proprietary rights in the holding, has simply to make out a prima facie case before the Revenue Court.

The judgment of the Settlement Court deciding the status of a person applies to anyone belonging to that person's family.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 27th March 1913, upholding the order of the Assistant Collector, Partabgarh, dated 28th June 1912.

Babu Rudra Dat Sinha, for the Appellant.

Babu Balraj Sahai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M. (April 9th, 1914.)—Appellants are persons who have been recorded as holding the land in question as ordinary tenants at the first Settlement and since. They contest a notice of ejectment on the ground that they have under-proprietary rights. The claim made was that at Settlement under-proprietary rights had been decreed to Farman Singh, a member of the same family, in his sir land. They produce evidence to substantiate a pedigree showing their descent from an ancestor of Farman Singh. The Court of first instance found that the pedigree was vouched for by tutored witnesses and that the fact that Farman Singh was a zemindar was no reason to believe that the other members of his family were zemindars. He gives as an analogous illustration of the absurdity of the claim made that one person may be a king but that does not make his relations kings. The Assistant Collector must be well aware that this so-called analogy is absurd. Hindu Law would allow of a strong presumption that persons related through males to a member of a pattidari body are also themselves pattidars. The fact appears to me to have been overlooked that in the Revenue Court a prima facie case only is required. The inquiry appears to me to have been a very unsatisfactory one. The claim made by the appellant is not in itself in any way improbable and a local inquiry well made would, no doubt, have made it possible to ascertain a reliable pedigree of the appellant's predecessors-in-interest and their relationship to Farman Singh. The judgment in Farman Singh's case at Settlement would apply to any person who was a member of his family. It was held that he belonged to the family of the old zemindars and had held the land continuously as sir. I think that before this appeal is decided, a local inquiry should be ordered to ascertain the exact relationship of the appellant to Farman Singh and to ascertain the exact position of the appellant and her relatives in the village as regards their rights in groves and other uncultivated areas, their wells and in general any facts bearing on their position, including the incidence of the rents as compared with the rents of other tenants. There appears to have been at Settlement two classes of claimants, in the first instance to pukhtadari rights and in the second to under-proprietary rights in sir. Of these Farman Singh and others who claimed a 12-anna share in the pukhtadari were held to be of the family of the old zemindars and Zabar Singh and others who claimed a 4-anna share were held to have been mere tenants. In the local inquiry this distinction should not be lost sight of. If appellants are connected with Zabar Singh, they cannot be held to have any rights: if they belong to the same family as Farman Singh, they may have rights.

HLA DUN v. M. L. R. M. CHETTY FIRM.

TWEEDY, J. M. (April 20th, 1914.)—I concur. The points on which findings are desired should be clearly specified and the case remitted under rule 25.

BAILLIE, S. M.—The points on which local inquiry and report are called for are:—

1st. Did appellant's father belong to the same family as Farman Singh ?

2nd. Is there in appellant's position in the village, her rights in groves, wells, etc., and the rate of rent paid by her, any reason to consider that she has occupied the position of a privileged person?

3rd. Are there any other facts bearing on the question whether appellant enjoys under proprietary rights ?

Issues remitted.

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 100 OF 1913.
July 17, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Twomey.
HLA DUN AND OTHERS—PPAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
versus
M. L. R. M. CHETTY FIRM, BY THEIR DULY CONSTITUTED AGENT AND ATTORNEY CHINA TAMBI PILLAY, AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act (II of 1876), ss. 55 and 56 Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 60—Standing crops, inquiry into ownership of—Use or enjoyment of land—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.

A claim to the ownership of crops is not the same thing as a claim to the use or enjoyment of the land on which the crops are grown. It is a claim to the use or enjoyment of something yielded by the land. The Civil Courts have jurisdiction to determine claims and objections in respect of the attachments of standing crops.

When a Civil Court inquires as to possession of land incidentally and collaterally and only for the purpose of deciding who is entitled to the crop standing on the land, it does not exercise any jurisdiction as to the use or enjoyment of the land within the meaning of section 56 of the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act.

Mr. Clifton, for the Appellants.

Mr. Chari, for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. Mya Bu, for Respondents No. 2 and 4.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant, Maung Pu, sued for a declaratinn of title to the paddy crop reaped on certain land which he worked in the rains of 1911. The defendant-respondent No. 4, Maung Ba Cho, was in possession of the land the previous season, but as he failed to pay the land revenue for that agricultural year, the land (in respect of which landholder's rights had not been attained) was resumed by Government, and the village headman afterwards allotted it for cultivation to Maung Pu in May. Maung Pu's case is that he thereupon ploughed the land and sowed paddy broadcast and that the crop belonged to him. But after the land had been resumed, Ba Cho went and paid up the revenue arrears and the order of resumption was withdrawn by the Deputy Commissioner, who was apparently not aware that the land had in the meantime been allotted to a fresh occupier, Maung Pu. Ba Cho went to the land and built a hut on it during the rains and claims to have ploughed it and sown paddy after Maung Pu's ploughing. In the course of the rainy season of 1911 the defendant-respondent No. 1, a Chetty Firm, in one case and defendants-respondents Nos. 2 and 3 in another case obtained money-decrees against Ba Cho, and when the crop on the land came to maturity, these decree-holders attached the crop in execution as if it belonged to Ba Cho. The crop was harvested and sold under the orders of the Civil Court and the sale-proceeds are now in deposit.

In the Sub-Divisional Court Maung Pu's suit for a declaration of title was unsuccessful. Maung Pu and Ba Cho each produced evidence as to the working of the land in the 1911 rains. The Sub-Divisional Judge appears to have based his decision less on the evidence as to ploughing and sowing than on the fact, which he held proved, that "Ba Cho is the owner of the land in question or is entitled to possession."

Maung Pu appealed to the Divisional Court where it was held that though Maung Pu had ploughed the land and sown the crop, the Civil Courts are debarred from granting him a declaratory decree because of the provisions of the Land and Revenue Act excluding the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. The learned Judge held that "a claim to the title of paddy produced on such land (i.e., land in respect of which landholder's rights have not been attained) is a claim to the use and enjoyment of the land" as contemplated in section 55 (b), Land and Revenue Act. The Judge goes on to say:

"Were I to decide to the contrary effect, it would mean that I decided that, although Ba Cho was allowed to pay the revenue for the land for 1910-11 and, therefore, according to ordinary usage recognized as the possessor as against other individuals by the Deputy Commissioner, Maung Pu should be recognized as the possessor for 1911-12."

I am unable to concur in these views. A claim to the ownership of crops is not the same thing as a claim to the use or enjoyment of the land on which the crops are grown. It is a claim to the use or enjoyment of something yielded by the land. If the use or enjoyment of the land includes the use or enjoyment of what the land yields, then the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts would be ousted even when the crop has been harvested and the grain transported to another locality, and such a result would be manifestly absurd. It might be argued that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is ousted at any rate as long as the crops are standing. But, in my opinion, even this would involve an unjustifiable extension of the words "use or enjoyment of such land" in section 55. For "standing crops" are moveable property under the Code of Civil Procedure, and are liable to attachment under section 60. The person who grows the crop may be a mere licensee with no permanent, heritable and transferable rights of use or occupancy and the land is in that case not liable to attachment under section 60. But he has complete disposing power over the crop which he has grown, and may exercise this power even before the crop is reaped. The standing crop being liable to attachment by the Civil Courts in execution, I think it follows of necessity that the Civil Courts may exercise their ordinary powers of determining claims and objections in respect of the attachment. It is objected by Counsel for the respondents that a suit for a declaration of title to the crops may involve, as this does, an inquiry as to who was in lawful possession of the land when the crop was planted or sown, and that the Civil Courts are prohibited from making such an inquiry by section 56, Land and Revenue Act. But section 56 merely lays down that no Civil Court shall "exercise jurisdiction as to (inter alia) disputes as to the use or enjoyment of such lands." A Court does not exercise jurisdiction in such a dispute by inquiring as to possession incidentally and collaterally and only for the purpose of deciding who is entitled to the crop. To exercise jurisdiction in a dispute means to adjudicate and determine it. The Civil Court may have to form an opinion as to who was in lawful possession of the land as a relevant fact in determining the rightful ownership of the crop, but that is not exercising jurisdiction in respect of disputed possession.

Turning to the evidence in this case, I think there can be no doubt that Maung Pu was in lawful possession under the permission given to him by the village headman, and that the land was ploughed and the crop sown by Maung Pu, as indeed the Divisional Judge has found. It was not till the 20th June that the orders for resumption of the land were cancelled and Maung Pu had then been in possession under the village headman's permit for a month. During that time he worked the land with four pairs of bullocks and four labourers. There is no reason to distrust the evidence of the neighbouring cultivators, Ko Maung and Tun E, on this point, and it is corroborated by the evidence of Maung Pu's coolies, one of whom is related to Ba Cho. Ba Cho's witnesses Tun Aung and Tun Baw are related to him; Parayachi is an inaccurate witness who is unable to say definitely whether Ba Cho ploughed or sowed; Ko Tun gives definite evidence in favour of Ba Cho, but his cross-examination shows that he is at enmity with Maung Pu's father-in-law. The probabilities and the weight of evidence are both in favour of Maung Pu.

I, therefore, set aside the decrees of the lower Courts and grant a decree to the plaintiff as prayed with costs against the defendants-respondents in all Courts. The Advocate's fee in this Court is fixed at 5 gold mohurs.

Decrees set aside.

COURT OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE, UNITED PROVINCES.

(REVENUE PETITION No. 18 OF 1913-14 OF SITAPUR DISTRICT.

March 27, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Tweedy, J. M.

NARPAT SINGH—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

GUR BAKHSH SINGH AND OTHER—PLAINTIFFS AND BAL BHADRA SINGH AND OTHER DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 107H—Under-proprietary rights, claim for—Gift, deed of, muafi held under—Maintenance, grant for—Proprietary rights, full, not gifted—Government revenue to be paid by grantor—Vested right in grantee, loss or surrender of, to be proved.

The second paragraph of section 107H of the Oudh Rent Act does not apply to a case where there is no gift of full proprietary rights and the grantor binds himself to pay the Government revenue for the land given by him as muafi for the purpose of maintenance, unless it is proved that the land is given in consideration of the loss or surrender of a vested right in the grantee.

Appeal from the decree of the Officiating Commissioner, Lucknow, dated 4th September 1913, upholding the order of the Deputy Commissioner, Sitapur, dated 18th April 1913, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Sitapur, dated 28th January 1913.

FACTS.—The grantee held certain lands as muafi for the purpose of maintenance under a deed of gift dated 3rd February 1870. The deed provided that the land was to be held bila lagan by the grantee while the Government revenue was to be paid by the grantor, the only question for determination being whether the grantee could be declared, as he contended, an under-propietor of the muafi lands, under the provisions of the second paragraph of section 107H of the Oudh Rent Act.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Pandit Gaya Prasad, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Rai Sri Ram Bahadur and Babu Krishna Kumar, for the Plaintiffs-Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This case is typical of the heirships to which the resumption law in Oudh gives rise, but the case for the appellant is a very weak one. The attempt to show that the case comes under the second paragraph of section 107H hopelessly breaks down. There is no evidence of any 'vested right", nor is there any proof that the grant was given in consideration of the loss or surrender of a right of any kind. That being the case, the grant falls under paragraph (1) of section 107G and rent must be assessed. It is perfectly clear, and is indeed admitted by the appellant, that there was no gift of full proprietary rights because the payment of the Government revenue was specially reserved to the grantor. The appeal is dismissed with costs. This order will govern No. 19. *

Appeal dismissed.

---

* i. e. Petition No. 19 of 1913-14 of Sitapur District.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 265 OF 1912.

October 22, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shah Din and Mr. Justice Scott-Smith.

Musammat ISHAR DEVI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

BINDRABAN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom or Personal Law—High class Hindus—Presumption—Sobti Khatris of Gujrat District—Onus.

In the case of high class Hindus, the presumption is that they are governed by their personal law and the onus lies on the party setting up custom to prove that they are governed by custom.

The Sobti Khatris of the Gujrat District are governed in matters of succession by the customs prevailing amongst agriculturists.

Ganpat Rai v. Kesho Ram, 1 Ind. Cas. 691; 34 P. R. 1909; 181 P. L. R. 1908; 169 P. W. R. 1908 and Lachman Das v. Pahla Mal, 59 P. R. 1908; 12 P. W. R. 1908, distinguisxed.

Attar Singh v. Prem Singh, 12 P. R. 1906; 108 P. L. R. 1906; Dalo v. Mohlu, 3 Ind. Cas. 593; 87 P. R. 1909; 131 P. L. R. 1909; 105 P. W. R. 1909, referred to.

Devi Ditta Singh v. Dropti, 2 Ind. Cas. 940; 56 P. R. 1909; 129 P. L. R. 1909; 96 P. W. R. 1909, followed.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Jhelum Division, at Sialkot, dated the 19th July 1911, affirming that of the Munsif, first Class, Gujrat, dated the 14th October 1910, decreeing plaintiffs' claim.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Shev Narain and Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Appellants.

ISHAR DEVI v. BINDRABAN.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., and Mr. Santanam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has been admitted under section 70 (1) (b) of the unamended Punjab Courts Act upon the question whether the parties, who are Sobti Khatris of the village of Alimgarh in the Gujrat District, are governed by their personal law or follow the custom of agriculturists in matters of inheritance to ancestral property. A pedigree-table is given in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The property of Ram Saran deceased is in dispute and the question is whether the plaintiffs, who are his nephews, are excluded from succession by his daughter, Musammat Ishar Devi, defendant No. 2. The lower Courts have concurrently found, for reasons fully stated by them, that the parties are governed by custom and have, therefore, decreed the plaintiffs' suit, and the defendants, Musammat Ishar Devi and her mother, Musammat Hukam Devi, appeal.

As the parties are high class Hindus, the initial presumption, of course, is that they are governed by their personal law and the onus was upon the plaintiffs to show that they were governed by custom. The present village of Alimgarh is made up of the original village of that name and of seven other small villages, all eight being now known as the pattis of the whole mouza. The original village of Alimgarh, which is now represented by the patti of that name, was founded in the time of the Emperor Akbar by Brahm Das, Sobti Khatri, and he and his descendants have continued in occupation thereof ever since without any interruption. The lambardar of the patti is a Sobti Khatri and Sobti Khatris own 412 out of 1592 ghumaons of land of the whole village. Of this 412 ghumaons, 171 are shown in the revenue papers as cultivated by the owners, 161 ghumaons are cultivated by tenants-at-will and 79 ghumaons by occupancy-tenants. It is clear that the Alimgarh patti is really a compact community of agriculturists and has been so far about 300 years. It is no doubt in evidence that a few of the Sobti Khatris of Alimgarh supplement their incomes from agriculture by money-lending and by service, but it appears that the main source of their livelihood is agriculture, and the fact that a few of them supplement their incomes in other ways does not, in the opinion of the lower Courts, take them out of the category of agriculturists.

Pandit Sheo Narain points out that there are some other proprietors in the patti besides Khatris. There are, however, only a few such and they are recorded as malikan-i-kabza without any share in the shamilat of the patti. This fact does not, in our opinion, show that the common land has been broken by the introduction of strangers into the patti; nor do we think that the fact that some of the land is cultivated by tenants, is against the theory that these Khatris constitute an agricultural community, for the presence of tenants is a common feature in every village. The lower Appellate Court says that the founders of the original village of Alimgarh got it recorded as their custom in the Wajib-ul-arz that collaterals excluded daughters. Pandit Sheo Narain points out that the extract from the Wajib-ul-arz which is on the record does not support this. We think it probable that the lower Appellate Court meant to refer to the Riwaj-i-am of the district in section No. 10 of which it is stated as regards Brahmins and Khatris that the daughter's line succeeds only in case of an adoption and otherwise does not succeed in any case. No instances are given in the Riwaj-i-am and, therefore, the entry is not of itself of very much value.

Pandit Sheo Narain next referred to the instances cited by the plaintiffs' witnesses. These are instances where a daughter has been excluded by collaterals of the deceased proprietor and Pandit Sheo Narain points out that in a good many of them the exclusion is by persons who were joint with the deceased, and that according to Hindu Law even such persons would exclude a daughter in accordance with the rule of survivorship. There is force in this argument, but besides these instances there are others in which daughters have been excluded by persons who were not joint with the deceased. One of these is that of Kashi deceased, whose daughter was excluded by his collaterals. This instance is cited by Gobind Sahai, witness. Ralla Ram witness of the neighbouring village of Ranghanwala cites two instances which are directly in point, where daughters were excluded by collaterals who were separate from the deceased. There is also one instance from the parties' own family, where the daughter's son of Dittu Mal was excluded from Dittu Mal's property. Thus there are certainly several instances in support of the parties being governed by custom, whereas the appellants have failed to adduce a single instance, either from this or from the other villages, of Sobti Khatris, in which a daughter has succeeded to the exclusion of collaterals.

We shall now refer briefly to certain authorities cited by Counsel for each side. Pandit Sheo Narain on behalf of the appellants referred to the following:—

Ganpat Rai v. Kesho Ram (1). This was a case in which parties were Khatris of Satgharra in the Montgomery District and it was held that the plaintiffs upon whom the onus lay, had failed to establish that in matters of succession the Khatris of Satgharra were governed by custom and not by Hindu Law.

In our opinion that case is clearly distinguished from the present one, firstly, because Satgharra is really a town and secondly, because it was found on the evidence that none of the parties were in any sense agriculturists.

The next case referred to by him was Lachman Das v. Pahla Mal (2). That was a case of Brahmins of Gopalpur in the Amritsar District and it was held that in matters of alienation they were governed by Hindu Law and not by agricultural custom. The weight of evidence appears to have been that the parties were not wholly dependent on agriculture but followed other professions, such as trade, money-lending and service, and it was held that the evidence was insufficient to affirmatively establish the contention of the plaintiff that his family was governed by agricultural custom. Attar Singh v. Prem Singh (3), also referred to by Pandit Sheo Narain, was a case decided by a single Judge and related to Khatris of a village in the Chakwal Tahsil of the Jhelum District. It was held on the evidence that the family of the parties had been engaged in money-lending and other business and that, therefore, they were governed by Hindu Law.

For the respondents Mr. Shafi has referred us to Bhag Singh v. Narain Singh (4), wherein it was held that the parties who were Khatris of a village in the Ambala District, being in the main agriculturists, must be presumed to be governed by agricultural custom, but the fact that they indulged in money-lending would not be of any significance. Devi Ditta Singh v. Dropti (5) was also cited by him and is clearly in point. In that case it was held that the parties, who were Brahmins of Rawal in the Rawalpindi District, were governed by the general rules of agricultural custom and not by Hindu Law, and consequently daughters were excluded by near agnates of the last male proprietor. This case is, in our opinion, nearly on all fours with the present one, for the village was owned by Brahmin agriculturists though some of the proprietors eked out their living by taking service. In the present case the patti of Alimgarh is owned by Khatri agriculturists though a few of them eke out their living by money-lending or by service. Mr. Shafi also refers us to Dalo v. Mohlu (6), which was a case of Brahmins of the Kangra District who, it was held, were governed by custom, chiefly on the ground that the parties were agriculturists who had owned land for six generations. Uttam Singh v. Jhanda Singh (7), a case of Bedis of the Hoshiarpur District, was decided on the same general principles. It was held that the parties were governed by custom, because the whole village belonged to a community of Bedis whose ancestors founded it some generations previously. They formed a compact body and their main profession was that of agriculture though, as in the present case, some of them had adopted professions and supplemented their income by trading. So far then as the authorities go, we consider that they are distinctly in favour of the view that the parties to the present case are governed in matters of succession by the customs prevailing amongst agriculturists.

Mr. Shafi has also pointed out three matters in which he urges that these parties

(1) 1 Ind. Cas. 691; 34 P. R. 1909; 181 P. L. R. 1908; 169 P. W. R. 1908.
(2) 59 P. R. 1908; 121 P. W. R. 1908.
(3) 12 P. R. 1906; 108 P. L. R. 1906.
(5) 11 Ind. Cas. 406; 87 P. W. R. 1911.
(5) 2 Ind. Cas. 940; 56 P. R. 1909; 129 P. L. R. 1909; 96 P. W. R. 1909.
(6) 3 Ind. Cas 593; 87 P. R. 1909; 131 P. L. R. 1909; 105 P. W. R. 1909.
(7) 21 P. R. 1896.

have adopted the customs of agriculturists. These are :—

(1) They have adopted chadar andazi marriages;

(2) they recognise customary divorce ;

(3) they allow the adoption of a daughter's son.

There is no doubt that according to the strict Hindu Law chadar andazi marriages and divorce in any form are not allowed, and we think that his argument has force as regards these two points. As regards the third point, the validity of the adoption of a daughter's son is a moot point. It is allowed in some parts of India and is not allowed in others. Mr. Shafi lays great stress on the fact that the appellants have not been able to cite a single instance of exclusion of the agnates of a deceased proprietor by his daughter. We agree with him that the appellants' inability to cite any such instance is a strong point against them. We also think it as important that the two Courts, who have concurred in holding that these Khatris are governed by agricultural custom, were presided over by Hindu Judges who were not likely to hold lightly that the parties did not follow their personal law.

We have carefully considered the case and having regard to the evidence on the record and the authorities referred to by us, we have no hesitation in upholding the concurrent finding of the Courts below and we, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

EXECUTION FIRST APPEAL NO. 6 OF 1914.

December 3, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chamier and Mr. Justice Piggott.

PARBHU DYAL—OBJECTOR—APPELLANT

versus

HARCHARAN AND OTHERS—DECREE-HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Will—Gift—Devisees or donees, some members of joint Hindu family—Joint or separate—Interest of donees or devisees—Presumption.

Where the devisees or donees are only some of the members of a joint Hindu family, and there is a clear intention to exclude the remaining members of the family and to confer on the devisees or donees interests to be held separate from any property which the joint family may happen to possess there is no ground for assuming that the devisees or donees were intended to hold the property as co-parceners in the sense of the Hindu Law, though it may well be otherwise when the devisees or donees are all the members or heads of a joint family.

Kishori Dubain v. Mundra Dubain, 10 Ind. Cas. 565; 33 A. 665; 8 A. L. J. 757, referred to.

Execution first appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Muttra, dated the 27th of November 1913.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sunder Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor (with him Mr. L. M. Banerjee), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, J.—The firm, of which the respondents to this appeal are the present proprietors, brougut a suit for Rs. 19,000 odd in the Bombay High Court against the appellant, Parbhu Dyal, and his father, Ajudhia Prasad. The suit was dismissed against the appellant but was decreed against Ajudhia Prasad. In execution of their decree the respondents attached a 15-biswas share in Mouzah Badhar in the Muttra District, alleging that it was the property of Ajudhia Prasad. The appellant objected to the attachment, asserting that the whole of the share was his property and that his father had no interest whatever in it.

The Court below has held that Ajudhia Prasad has an interest in the property as a member of a joint family consisting of himself and his sons, and that that interest is liable to attachment and sale in execution of the respondents' decree. It, therefore, allowed the objection in part. Parbhu Dyal has appealed and the decree-holders-respondents have filed cross-objections. Ajudhia Prasad is the adopted son of one Narain Das, a well-to-do Banya who carried on business in Muttra, Delhi, Hathras and elsewhere. In 1878 Narain Das bought a 10-biswas share in the village now in question. A few years later he built a temple in the village and dedicated half of the share to the upkeep of the same. He died in January 1884 and in September 1885 the remaining 10 biswas of the village were taken over by his representatives in lieu of a debt of Rs. 13,000 due to the deceased. A few days before he died, he made a Will which has been the subject of much discussion before us. After revoking previous Wills, he says that he has adopted Ajudhia Prasad but thinks that he is unfit to carry on the business, therefore, he makes the following arrangement:—

1. Five men named are to be managers of the business of the different kothis and are to act under the instructions and supervision of his widow, Musammat Raj Koer, who is to be owner and executrix (malik-o-wasi).

2. The five men named are to carry on the business under the general orders of the widow. In case of loss, actual or anticipated, the widow with the concurrence of the five men is authorised to close the whole or any part of the business.

3. The widow is authorised to dismiss, suspend, or transfer servants.

4. Each of the managers is to be moved on every year to another branch and accounts between the branches are to be settled every year. The widow may dismiss any of the managers for good cause, but only with the concurrence of the rest.

5. Ajudhia Prasad is to have Rs. 25 per mensem, but the allowance may be increased by the widow with the concurrence of the managers. On the occasion of a birth or death in his family something extra may be paid to him.

6. Certain allowances are provided for his daughters.

7. Certain sums are to be paid annually to the managers and the widow is authorised to increase the amounts in case of good service.

8. Provision is made for the temple.

9. The stock of the different kothis is said to be entered in the books. All the gold and silver ornaments are to be enjoyed by the widow. After her death the ornaments and all the property, moveable and immoveable, are to be disposed of as the widow may direct by Will made with the concurrence of the managers

10. All expenses of management, etc., are to be arranged for by the managers under the direction and with the concurrence of the widow.

11. Suits are to be brought in the name of the widow or any of the managers nominated by her.

12. If any manager dies, the widow and the surviving managers are to appoint another. After the death of the widow the managers are to carry on the business. In the last resort the Government may arrange to carry on the business and give effect to the Will, but only if the widow and all the managers are dead or have declined to carry on.

13. All the property specified at the foot of the Will, except houses Nos. 1 and 5, and all property not entered in the list are declared to be the testator's own acquisitions. Ajudhia Prasad and his wife have no right to it and if they lay any claim it is to be registered.

In the description of the first house in the list, it is said that the house is ancestral property but a kotha and a dalan in it are said to be self-acquired by Narain Das.

There is nothing to show that there was in the hands of Narain Das any ancestral property except the two houses. It was suggested that these houses should be regarded as the nucleus of the property amassed by Narain Das and, therefore, that the whole should be treated as the joint property of Narain Das, his son and grandsons. Nothing of the kind seems to have been suggested in the Court below, and we have no evidence that either of the houses brought in any rent. In the circumstances all the property left by Narain Das with the exception of the two houses must be regarded as his self-acquired property.

The appellant's case is that the widow, Musammat Raj Koer, became under the Will of her husband full proprietor of all the self-acquired property, that on December 11th, 1897, she made a Will whereby she passed over Ajudhia Prasad and left all the property to his three sons, Parbhu Dyal (the appellant), Damodar Das and Nityanand, as joint owners, that Damodar Das died in the life-time of Raj Koer and the disposition, therefore, took effect in favour of Parbhu Dyal and Nityanand, and that on the death of the latter in March 1900 Parbhu Dyal, the appellant, became by survivorship sole owner of the property and, therefore, no part of it can be attached in execution of a decree against his father.

The respondents' case is that the Will of Narain Das does not confer on Musammat Raj Koer more than an estate for life at the most and that on her death, the whole property devolved upon Ajudhia Prasad. They also contend that the alleged Will of Raj Koer has not been proved.

The Court below has accepted the respondents' contentions regarding the two Wills, but has held that the property devolved upon Ajudhia Prasad and his sons. The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have been under the impression that at least two sons of Ajudhia Prasad are living, but it is common ground that Parbhu Dyal alone is now living. According to the findings of the Court below the interest of Ajudhia Prasad in the village is an undivided half of 15 biswas, the remaining five biswas being the property of the temple.

At the hearing the respondents' learned Vakil said that he would be satisfied with a finding that only an undivided half of 15 biswas was liable to attachment in execution of the respondents' decree.

The Will of Narain Das is a most curious document and gives rise to a difficult question, whether he really intended to give Raj Koer full proprietary rights in his estate. Some of the provisions are hardly compatible with the view that he intended to give her full proprietary rights. The truth appears to be that in his desire to arrange for the proper conduct of the business which had been his idol, he overlooked the necessity for carefully defining the interest of the widow. On the whole, however, I incline to the view that the Will confers upon the widow a full proprietary estate and that the provisions which appear to make her dependent upon the five managers are not intended to cut down her estate. But in the view which I take of some other questions in the case, the result appears to be practically the same whether the widow of Narain Das took a full proprietary estate or only a life-interest.

The Court below finds that the alleged Will of Raj Koer has not been proved. The Subordinate Judge thinks it suspicious that the Will was not registered and that it was not mentioned till 1902. He also thinks that it bears internal evidence of having been prepared to meet events which did not happen till after Raj Koer's death and could not have been foreseen. I think that sufficient reason has not been given for rejecting this Will. It was mentioned and the date and purport of it were given in the written statement filed in the Bombay High Court in 1900 on behalf of Parbhu Dyal, and we find that less than a month after Raj Koer's death a petition was presented to the Revenue Authorities by Ajudhia Prasad's wife, Ram Koer, on behalf of her minor sons, Parbhu Dyal and Nityanand, in which it was stated that the two boys were the heirs of Raj Koer. A report to the same effect was made by the Patwari of the village and on April 25th, 1899, mutation of names was effected in their favour (see the copy of the order of that date and of the extract from the Khewat for 1306 Fasli, which should be read with the extract from the Khewat for 1305 Fasli. It is true that on that occasion the Will of Raj Koer is not actually mentioned, but in the absence of such a Will there was no reason for describing the two boys as heirs of Raj Koer. The Subordinate Judge does not refer at all to the evidence of the Patwari, Chitar Mal, who swears that the Will was executed in his presence, nor to the evidence of Sita Ram taken on commission in the case in Bombay, nor to the evidence of Sita Ram's son, Ram Nath, who swears that the Will is in the handwriting of his father and is signed by him at the foot. I see no reason for rejecting the evidence of those witnesses. Nor do I think that the Will bears internal evidence of having been fabricated. It is not a matter for surprise that Raj Koer should wish to disinherit Ajudhia Prasad, considering that his adoptive father had declined to leave any property to him and Ajudhia Prasad had failed to keep the business going. All Wills are not registered and in face of the evidence referred to, I am unable to reject the Will merely because it was not registered.

As Damodar Das died in the life-time of Raj Koer the Will took effect in favour of the two surviving sons of Ajudhia Prasad, namely, Parbhu Dyal and Nityanand (the latter's name is badly written in some of the documents and was actually read as Baldeo Dat by the Court Reader, but the name appears to be Nityanand). The question is whether on the death of Nityanand in March 1900 his interest passed to his father Ajudhia Prasad or to his brother Parbhu Dyal. It is clear that the devise to Parbhu Dyal and his brother was not intended to take effect in favour of them and their father, who was presumably joint with them; but was it intended to confer upon them a joint interest with rights of survivorship inter se. A similar question arose in Kishori Dubain v. Mundra Dubain (1) and it was held that the fact that two devisees or donees of property were living in union as members of a joint Hindu family, was not necessarily a sufficient reason for holding that they took a joint estate with rights of survivorship inter se. It appears to me that when the devisees or donees are only some of the members of a joint family and there is a clear intention, as in this case, to exclude the remaining member of the family and to confer on the devisees or donees interests to be held separate from any property which the joint family may happen to possess, there is no ground for assuming that the devisees or donees were intended to hold the property as co-parceners in the sense of the Hindu Law. It may well be otherwise when the devisees or donees are all the members or even the heads of a joint family. Having regard to the circumstances in which the Will of Raj Koer was made, I am of opinion that the two brothers, Parbhu Dyal and Nityanand, took separate interests. Accordingly when the latter died, his share passed to his father, Ajudhia Prasad, that share amounted to $7\frac{1}{2}$ biswas in the village and can, in my opinion, be attached and brought to sale by the respondents-decree-holders.

In practical purposes the same result follows if Raj Koer took only a life-interest in the 15-biswas share. On her death it would have passed to Ajudhia Prasad and his sons and the interest of Ajudhia Prasad would now be an undivided half of the 15 biswas.

For the above reasons I am of opinion that the appellant's objection should have been allowed as regards a $7\frac{1}{2}$-biswas share in the village and I would modify the order of the Court below accordingly.

PIGGOTT, J.—I concur.

BY THE COURT.—The decree of the Court below is modified. The appellant's objection is allowed as regards $7\frac{1}{2}$ biswas in the village. Parties will pay and receive proportionate costs throughout and costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

The cross-objections are also dismissed.

Decree modified.

(1) 10 Ind. Cas. 565; 33 A. 665; 8 A. L. J. 757.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 2, 22 AND 23 OF 1912 AND APPEALS NOS. 309 AND 310 OF 1914.

October 23, 1914.

Present: —Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair and Mr. Justice Spencer.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, REPRESENTED BY THE COLLECTOR OF VIZAGAPATAM, AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

Sri Raja VATSAVYA VENKATA SIMHADRI JAGHAPATHIRAJU BAHADUR GARU, HAVING DIED SUBSEQUENT TO THE JUDGMENT, HIS WIFE, Sri Raja VATSAVYA VENKATA SUBHADRAYAMMA JAGHAPATHI BAHADUR GARU, AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Madras Irrigation Cess Act (VII of 1865), s. 1—'Engagement', meaning of—Madras Revenue Recovery Act (II of 1864), s. 59—Madras Land Encroachment Act (III of 1905), s. 1.

The decree of a Court passed after the Inam Settlement and entitling a mokhasadar to irrigate free of water-cess more area than was exempted from water-cess at the Inam Settlement, may be treated as sufficient to establish an engagement of the kind referred to in section 1 of Act VII of 1865.

Appasami Aiyar v. Secretary of State for India, 6 Ind. Cas. 265; (1910) M. W. N. 107; 7 M. L. T. 349; Kesari Venkatasubbiah v. Secretary of State for India, 20 Ind. Cas. 804; 14 M. L. T. 131; Nuttall v. Bracewell, 2 Ex. 1 at p. 11; 4 H. & C. 714; 36 L. J. Ex. 1; 12 Jur. (N. S.) 989; 15 L. T. 313; Holker v. Porritt, 10 Ex. 59; 44 L. J. Ex. 52; 33 L. T. 125; 23 W. R. 400; Marai Sussai Mudaliar v. Secretary of State for India, 14 M. L. J. 350; Watts v. Kelson, 6 Ch. App. 166; 43 L. J. Ch. 126; 24 L. T. 209; 19 W. R. 338, followed.

Where a right to take water is proved, even though no express agreement on behalf of Government not to levy any charge is proved, an engagement under Act VII of 1865, section 1, will be implied and no cess can be levied.

Lutchimee Doss v. Secretary of State, 3 Ind. Cas. 456; 32 M. 456 at p. 468; 6 M. L. T. 242; 19 M. L. J. 470; Secretary of State for India in Council v. Perumal Pillai, 24 M. 279; 11 M. L. J. 117; Ritraj Koer v. Sarfraz Koer, 15 M. L. J. 349 at p. 351; 27 A. 655; 2 C. L. J. 185; 2 A. L. J. 623; 7 Bom. L. R. 872; 9 C. W. N. 889; 8 O. C. 293 (P. C.); 32 I. A. 165, followed.

SECRETARY OF STATE v. SIMHADRI JAGHAPATHIRAJU.

The effect of Act III of 1905 (Madras Land Encroachment Act) is not to take away rights which existed prior to the Act, and Government is not, by reason of that Act, coupled with Act VII of 1865, entitled to impose a cess upon those land-holders who before that Act were not liable to pay cess for using the water.

Kandukuri Mahalakshmana Garu Chetty v. Secretary of State for India, 8 Ind. Cas. 67; 34 M. 295 at p. 300; 8 M. L T. 389; (1910) M. W. N. 595; 20 M. L. J. 823; Secretary of State v. Kamapalli, 15 Ind. Cas. 594; 37 M. 364 at p. 366 note; 23 M. L. J. 109; (1912) M. W. N. 771, followed

Where a river belongs to Government, it is open to it to construct sluices without prejudice to the rights of the mokhasadars, but their previously existing right to receive water free of water-cess will not be affected by construction of sluices. A suit to recover back water-cess paid under protest and after attachment should be brought within six months from the date on which the amount was paid, and the period of limitation applicable is that prescribed by section 59 of Act II of 1864.

Appeals against the decrees of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam, in Original Suits Nos. 19, 16 of 1910 and 10 and 11 of 1911, respectively.

The Government Pleader for the 1st Appellant:—The Settlement Statement, Exhibit H, shows that only ten acres and odd are registered as wet. This indicates that the Item Commissioner allowed that extent alone, overruling the claim of the mokhasadars to one-third of the water. The Government is, therefore, entitled to levy cess upon the extent irrigated in excess of the wet area so registered. There is no ownership in water in a stream [Per Sundara Iyer, J., in Chockalingam Pillai v. Emperor (1) and Secretary of State v. Kannapalli Janakiramayya(2)]. The claim for refund of cess is clearly barred by limitation.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma and Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondents:—The Government had no right to levy a cess. The right of the respondents to one-third water of the stream had been established in Original Suit No. 545 of 1885. The bed of the stream also belongs to the mokhasadars. Appasami Aiyar v. Secretary of State (3); Kesari Venkatasubbiah v. Secretary of State for India (4); Secretary of State for India v. Kannapalli Janakiramayya (2); Kandukuri Mahalakshmana Garu Chetty v. Secretary of State for India (5); Secretary of State for India v. Swami Nautheswarar (6); Secretary of State for India v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (7) and Papachar Sethumathava Chariar v. The Secretary of State (8). The respondents have an absolute right to dispose of their one-third water in any way they pleased. See observations of Bramwell, B., in Nuttall v. Bracewell (9). See also Holker v. Porritt (10) and Maria Susai Mudaliar v. Secretary of State for India in Council (11), following Watts v. Kelson (12). The claim for refund of cess paid under protest is not barred.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—The simple question in these appeals is whether the respondents are liable to pay water-cess to Government for irrigating lands in excess of the area classed as wet at the Inam Settlement with the water of the Eti Koppaka Channel. Similar questions arose in Appasami Aiyar v. Secretary of State for India in Council (3) and in Kesari Venkatasubbiah v. Secretary of State for India in Council (4), the latter decision having been published after the filing of these appeals; and if those cases were rightly decided, as I think they were, these appeals must be dismissed.

Prior to the present suit, there has been litigation between the parties. In Original Suit No. 545 of 1885 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Ellamanchilli, it was decided that two sluices should be constructed at the entrance of the Koppaka Channel, two feet in height, one being $1\frac{1}{2}$ yards wide for the use of the Koppaka

(1) 13 Ind. Cas. 819; (1912) M. W. N. 119; 11 M. L T. 162; 13 Cr. L. J. 131.

(2) 18 Ind. Cas. 770; 37 M. 322; 24 M. L. J. 365; 13 M. L. T. 235; (1913) M. W. N. 225.

(3) 6 Ind. Cas. 265; (1910) M. W. N. 107; 7 M. L. T. 349.

(4) 20 Ind. Cas. 804; 14 M. L. T. 131.

(5) 8 Ind. Cas 67; 34 M. 295 at p. 300; 8 M. L. T. 389; (1910) M. W. N. 595; 20 M. L. J. 823.

(6) 6 Ind. Cas. 199; 34 M. 21; 7 M. L. T. 407; 20 M. L. J. 766; (1910) M. W. N. 495.

(7) 8 Ind. Cas. 357; 34 M. 366; 9 M. L. T. 47; (1910) 2 M. W. N. 119.

(8) 26 Ind. Cas. 187; 1 L. W. 941.

(9) 2 Ex. 1 at p. 11; 4 H. & C. 714; 36 L. J. Ex. 1 12 Jur. (N. S) 989; 15 L. T. 313.

(10) 10 Ex. 59; 44 L. J. Ex. 52; 33 L. T. 125; 23 W. R. 400.

(11) 14 M. L. J. 350.

(12) 6 Ch. App. 166; 43 L. J. Ch. 126; 24 L. T. 269; 19 W. R. 338.

mokhasadars, and the other, three yards in width, for the use of the Government ryots and the ryots of the Darlapudi proprietor. The right of Koppaka mokhasadars was thereby recognised by arresting the whole water of the river, giving two-thirds of it to Government and taking one-third of it for themselves; and thus their title to one-third of the water of the river was established. But in the Settlement Statement, Exhibit H, only 10 acres 12 cents of land were registered as wet in this mokhasa. It is contended on behalf of the Government that the Inam Commissioner only allowed the above said area to be registered as wet land in spite of the mokhasdars' claim in that Settlement to one-third of the water. Exhibit G is a letter from the Tahsildar of Sarvasiddhi, dated 1st October 1848, recognising the mokhasadars' rights for a flow of water in one turn through the Etti Koppaka Channel as against two turns through the Pulaparthi Channel, and this letter is referred to as one of the documents mentioned in Exhibit H as being in the possession of the mokhasadars. It is, therefore, argued that, though the mokhasadars are entitled to take one-third of the water, the Government is nevertheless entitled to impose a cess on the extent irrigated in excess of the registered wet area, as the arrangement come to at the Inam Settlement was a condition precedent.

The proviso to section 1 of Act VII of 1865 declares that, where an inamdar is by virtue of engagements with the Government entitled to irrigation free of separate charge, no cess will be imposed under this Act for water supplied to the extent of such right. The question for our decision, therefore, resolves itself into the further question, what is the scope of the judgment in Original Suit No. 545 of 1885 which undoubtedly binds the parties? Is the right recognised in that suit limited by the prior Settlement which fixed a definite area of land as entitled to water free of charge? And does the decree operate as an 'engagement' within the meaning of the Act?

In Papachar Sethumathava Chariar v. Secretary of State for India (8) it was recently held by Wallis, C. J., and Seshagiri Aiyar, J., that the Inam Settlement did not override a previous arrangement with the Government by which an inamdar was entitled to water free of separate charge. If the arrangement is one subsequent to the Settlement, I should be inclined to hold that it governed the relations between the parties even more decidedly than an engagement prior to the Settlement. In Kesari Venkatasubbiah v. Secretary of State for India in Council (4) a decree of Court passed after the Inam Settlement was treated as sufficient to establish an engagement of the kind referred to in the proviso to section 1 of Act VII of 1865.

If the Government had a right by virtue of the Inam Settlement to restrict the respondents to the area of irrigated land allotted to them under the Settlement, a demand might have been made, when Original Suit No. 545 of 1885 was decided, to have inserted in the decree a stipulation that the taking of one-third of the whole water of the river should be subject to the payment of assessment on the portion irrigated in excess of the registered area. But not only did Government recognise the mokhasadars' unrestricted right to one-third of the water in this suit, but from time to time Government officials made similar unqualified admissions in Exhibits G, L, M, P and O. I am, therefore, of opinion that the Subordinate Judge was right in his view that the plaintiffs are not liable to pay water-cess so long as they do not take more than their one-third share of the water in the stream.

The respondents' Pleader has attempted to base his claim also on the position that the bed of the stream belongs to the mokhasadars. It is unnecessary for us to deal with this question, as there was no finding in the lower Court as to the ownership of the entire bed of the stream. The Subordinate Judge has found that the river belongs to the Government and is under its control and I find no evidence to lead me to a different conclusion. In Original Suit No. 545 it was only found that the dam itself was situated in that part of the bed of the river which belonged to the mokhasadars. Such being the findings of fact in the present case, a very few words are necessary to distinguish the decisions cited in support of the respondents' contentions. Secre- tary of State v. Kannepalli Janakiramayya (2) and Kandukuri Mahalakshmana Garu Chetty v. Secretary of State for India (5) turned on a question whether the ownership of the bed of channels which take off water from the Vamsathara river, claimed by Government to belong to them, carried with it a right to use the water of the channels free of charge. Secretary of State for India v. Swami Nautheswarar (6) and Secretary of State for India v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (7) are cases depending on the question whether the main source of supply was a Government source, a question which it is unnecessary to consider in detail in the present appeals, as the attention of the parties was not directed to it in the lower Court. In Kesari Venkatasubbiah v. Secretary of State for India (4) Sadasiva Aiyar, J., has distinguished the case in Secretary of State for India v. Swami Nautheswarar (6) from the facts of the case before him and the same reasons may be used against applying that decision to the facts of the case before us.

In Appeals Nos. 22 and 23, the respondents have filed objection petitions in which they seek to have it further declared that they have a right to dispose of the one-third share for any purpose and in any manner they think fit, subject to any rights that any other riparian owners, except the Government, may have; in other words, they claim an absolute right over the one-third of the water, that they appropriate and keep in their control, to utilise it in any way they may choose; and in support of this they rely on certain expressions in the judgment of Bramwell, B., in Nuttall v. Bracewell (9) and on the observations in Holker v. Porritt (10), where it was stated as regards the diversion of a portion of a certain stream into a separate course, "the water which came down to him at the farm was his own to use it as he pleased. There was no one entitled to share with him in its use, and no one who could call him to account for any use which he chose to make of it there. In this respect his position was different from that of a riparian owner, who only shares the use of the water in common with other riparian owners." In Maria Susai Mudaliar v. Secretary of State for India in Council (11) there is a similar observation, following the remarks of Sir G. Mellish, L. J., in Watts v. Kelson (12), that when the water arrived in the plaintiff's tanks "he could do what he liked with it."

The question of ownership in running water, never a single one, is here beset with such uncertainty about the source and course of the stream owing to the want of full evidence on these points that it would be dangerous to make a wide pronouncement about the mokhasadars' right to exercise absolute ownership over the water. On the point whether water in a stream can be owned, in Chockalingam Pillai v. Emperor (1) Sundara Aiyer, J., observed: "In England, water flowing in a river is regarded as not owned by any person. The right of the riparian proprietor is to use it. He is not the owner of the water which he is entitled to use." Again in Secretary of State for India v. Kannepalli Janakiramayya (2) my learned brother observed that the ownership of water ceased when the water left the land. In the present case, the rights that the respondents claimed in paragraph III of their plaint were rights based on ownership of the bed of the river where the regulating sluices were constructed, and the natural rights appertaining to riparian owners. This at least may be said. The respondents have, in addition to their rights as riparian owners, the rights accruing to them by virtue of the decree in Original Suit No. 545 and by certain admissions made by the Government. They have been given such a declaration as they are entitled to by reason of their right to a one-third share of the water. I would not give them any declaration defining more exactly what the rights of riparian owners are than what has been already declared in their favour in this suit.

In Appeal No. 310, there is an objection petition that Rs. 705 collected by the Government as water-cess for Fasli 1305 and disallowed by the lower Court as barred by limitation, should have been allowed to be recovered. It is conceded that there was an order for attachment and that the suit was brought more than six months after the date of payment. Section 59 of Act II of 1864 prescribes a limitation period of six months for applying to the Civil Courts for redress to parties aggrieved by proceedings under that Act.

As the cause of action is stated in the plaint as being the payment of this sum of money made under protest and under threat of attachment, I think that an application for redress of the plaintiffs' grievance should have been made within six months and that the lower Court, therefore, rightly decided that the claim was time-barred.

These appeals must, therefore, be dismissed with costs. The objection petitions will also be dismissed with costs.

SANKARAN NAIR, J.—I concur in dismissing the appeals and memorandum of objections with costs, and propose to add a few words on the question of law. Disregarding those instances in which a person could not have got his water but for some work constructed by Government, in all other cases the decisions are uniform that where a right to take water is proved, even though no express agreement on behalf of Government not to levy any charge is proved, an engagement under Act VII of 1865 will be implied and no cess can be levied, Lutchimee Doss v. Secretary of State for India (13), the Chief Justice and Miller, J.; Appasami Aiyer v. Secretary of State for India in Council (3), Benson and Krishnaswami Aiyar, JJ.; and Kesari Venkata Subbiah v. The Secretary of State for India (4), Sundara Aiyar and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ.; Secretary of State for India v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (14), Abdur Rahim, J., and myself, subsequently followed by Miller and Abdur Rahim, JJ.; Secretary of State for India in Council v. Perumal Pillai (15); Ritraj Koer v. Sarfaraz Koer (16). In the cases of zemindars and inamdars some of the decision put it on the ground that when the zemindari or inam was granted, an agreement will be implied against the Government to allow the natural facilities for rights of irrigation which the land-holder then had, Secretary of State for India v. Swami Nautheswarar (6). Others put it also on the ground that as the owner of the bed of the river, the zemindar had a right to use the water.

(13) 3 Ind. Cas. 456; 32 M. 456 at p. 468; 6 M. L. T. 242; 19 M. L. J. 470.
(14) 18 Ind. Cas. 294; 37 M. 369 note.
(15) 24 M. 279; 11 M. L. J 117.
(16) 15 M. L. J. 349 at p. 351; 27 A. 655; 2 C. L. J. 185 (P. C.); 2 A. L. J. 623; 7 Bom. L. R. 872; 9 C. W. N. 889; 8 O. C. 293; 32 I. A. 165.

There is a conflict of judicial opinion on the effect of Act III of 1905. I am of opinion that it did not take away any rights which existed at the time the Act was passed and the Government were not by reason of that Act, coupled with Act VII of 1865, entitled to impose a cess upon those land-holders who were before that Act not liable to pay cess for their using the water. See Kandukuri Mahalakshmana Garu Chetty v. Secretary of State for India (5) (Uralam judgment). Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., also, before whom this Act was pressed, declined to hold the land-holder liable, Secretary of State v. Kamapalli (17). On the other hand Miller and Munro, JJ., in the Uralam judgment approved by the Chief Justice and Ayling, J., in Secretary of State for India v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (7) held that the Act makes the river Government property and entitles the Government to apply Act VII of 1865. In this case it is true the river is found to belong to Government and under its control. The Government may, therefore, possibly regulate the supply of water without prejudice to the respondents by constructing sluices, etc. But as the right to the supply of water without liability to pay any charge existed already, it is not dependent on the works constructed by Government, and no cess under Act VII of 1865 may be levied. The respondent's right to the water has been declared by a judicial decision. No cess is, therefore, leviable. He cannot get anything more.

Appeals dismissed.

(17) 15 Ind. Cas. 594; 37 M. 364 at p. 366 note; 23 M. L. J. 109; (1912) M. W. N. 771.

DINABANDHU JANA v. CHINTAMONI JANA.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
APPEAL FROM ORDER NO. 410 OF 1912.
December 22, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Justice Holmwood and Mr. Justice Carnduff.
DINABANDHU JANA AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS
versus
CHINTAMONI JANA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, paras. 14, 15, 20, 21—Mistake of law by arbitrator—Award on private reference, when cannot be filed.

A mistake of law on a legal point specifically referrred to an arbitrator, does not vitiate his award, but if the point was not specifically referred and the decision is patently contrary to law, the Court will not file the award.

Where any of the grounds mentioned in paragraphs 14 or 15 of Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code is proved, a Court cannot proceed to file an award where the matter has been referred to arbitration without the intervention of the Court. Even if the invalid portion of the award is separable, it would still not be enforceable by the summary procedure of rule 20.

Mana Vikrama v Mallichery, 3 M. 68, referred to.

Appeal against a decree of the Sub-Judge of Cuttack, dated the 30th April 1912.

Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar and Chandra Sekhar Banerjee, for the Appellants.

Babus Provash Chandra Mitter and Suresh Chandra Chakrabarty, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order allowing an award to be filed under rule 20, Schedule II, of the Civil Procedure Code.

It appears that there were four brothers, named Chintamoni, Dinabandhu, Jogabandhu and Keshari, who were joint in mess and property. Chintamoni had three sons, Dasarathi, Panchanidi and Brohmanand.

Keshari had a son who died in his father's life-time and Keshari is said to have adopted Brohmanand. Keshari died before 1909. At the beginning of December 1909, the three surviving brothers separated in mess and on the 25th December 1909 an agreement was signed by the three brothers and on behalf of Brohmanand by his natural father and guardian, Chintamoni, to submit their affairs to arbitration with a view to partition their properties according to shares and to settle certain disputes among them as regards the property in certain businesses, religious endowments, liability to debts, etc. On the 26th December 1909, the arbitrators made a draft award as to the shares and as to properties standing in the names of persons outside the arbitration and as to properties standing separately in the names of Chintamoni, Panchanidi and Chintamoni's wife. They also decided the question of the shebaitship of the Thakurs. No stamp was forthcoming until the 20th April 1911 and so the final award, which had undoubtedly been accepted by all the parties in draft, was written out on the 21st April 1911 and the persent applicatian to file the award was made on the 5th June 1911. Dinabandhu and Jogabandhu then objected to its being filed, on the ground that they had never agreed to submit the matter to arbitration at all and had been induced to sign a blank paper on which the alleged agreement was fraudulently drafted. They further contended that the alleged arbitrators never took any evidence and that the arbitrators exceeded the powers given in the said ikrarnama. The major portion of this defence is wholly dishonest.

It is proved beyond all manner of doubt that the objectors did agree to arbitration, in terms of the ikrarnama, that the arbitrators who are gentlemen entirely above suspicion, did meet and did take the statements of all the parties and that the objectors agreed to the specification of shares and asked the arbitrators to proceed to a division of the dwelling houses and moveable properties, which was done, and the parties acquiesced and took possession accordingly. There was nothing outside the scope of the reference in all this. Then came the question of the dispute about the two Thakurs, brought by Chintamoni from another place and established at his sole expense. Also about the family Bhagabat whose worship, the arbitrators found Chintamoni had performed alone ever since the separation in mess, all the others being unwilling to perform the Seba. This question was, in our opinion, clearly before the arbitrators on the reference and they had no course open to them under the circumstances, but to place the Thakurs and the Bhagabatgadi in charge of Chintamoni as Sebait. Unfortunately, they went further and declared the order of succession to the shebaitship by primogeniture in Chintamoni's family. This was not only in excess of their powers but was clearly contrary to Hindu Law. A mistake of law on a legal point specifically referred to them would not, on the authorities, have vitiated the award, but a decision affecting the succession that was not referred to them and a decision that is patently contrary to law, could not be accepted by the Court and is a bar to the filing of the award in Court, though it may not affect the contract between the parties on the other points.

JAIRAM v. SUNDERLAL.

Having regard to the extreme dishonesty of the defence throughout and the separable character of the award as to succession, we have anxiously considered whether having regard to the provisions of rule 14 (a) this portion of the award could not be struck out, but on a true interpretation of rule 21 it would appear that where any of the grounds mentioned in paragraph 14 or 15 is proved the Court cannot proceed to file the award where the matter has been referred to arbitration without the intervention of the Court. Even if it could be held that the invalid portion of the award was separable, it would still not be enforceable by the summary procedure of rule 20, as was pointed out in Mana Vikrama v. Mallichery (1).

But in the present case there is an illegality apparent upon the face of this portion of the award though apart from this there is no objection to the legality of the award in general apparent on the face of it.

It is a pity that the arbitrators unnecessarily went out of their way to render an otherwise excellant award incapable of being filed, but the mere fact that it cannot be filed will not affect its usefulness as a contract between the parties in all matters other than the succession to the shebaitship. In view of the extreme dishonesty of the main defence and the very technical nature of the only objection on which the appellants can succeed, which in itself has no pecuniary value, we must direct that the respondents do get their full costs from the appellants in both Courts.

The question of the properties standing in the names of persons other than those who made the reference was rightly excluded by the arbitrators from the scope of the award. We mention this since it has been urged by the appellants that on this point also the arbitrators exceeded their powers under the reference. The appeal must be decreed and the application to file the award must be refused, but the appellants will bear all the costs in both Courts for the reasons we have stated above. We fix the hearing fee at four gold mohurs.

Appeal decreed.

(1) 3 M. 68.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 98 OF 1913.

June 29, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Hallifax, A. J. C.

JAIRAM—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

SUNDERLAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Occupancy-holding, transfer of, without landlord's consent or ratification—Transfer voidable—Rule affirmed in Central Provinces Tenancy Act (IX of 1883).

A transfer of an occupancy-holding is voidable at the instance of the landlord unless he consented to the transfer at the time it was made or subsequently. This rule was merely affirmed in the Central Provinces Tenancy Act IX of 1883.

Appeal against the decree of the Divisional Judge, Nerbudda Division, dated the 4th November 1912, confirming that of the District Judge, Betul, dated the 30th April 1912.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Sir B. K. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant was plaintiff in the first Court and the respondents were the only contesting defendants. The former respresents in this case Nandram and Gopiram Sunars as the mortgagees of a half share in an occupancy-holding in the village of Kamath. The mortgage was executed in 1878 The respondents represent one Gulab Khan who held a mortgage of the entire holding executed in 1875. In 1906 he obtained a decree for foreclosure on this mortgage in a suit to which the subsequent mortgagees were not parties. This decree he transferred to the respondents, who obtained possession of the holding. The respondents are also now proprietors of the whole village of Kamath. (The contention put forward in the fifth ground of appeal that there were other sharers was withdrawn.) The appellant sued to redeem the respondents' prior mortgage and to enforce his own. The reply of the respondents, or so much of it as concerns us now, was that the malguzar of the village in 1878 and his successors never consented to the appellant's mortgage, which cannot be enforced against them as they are now the malguzars. The mortgage of 1875 which they hold they can themselves, of course, ratify now, even if they had not done so when they bought the decree based on it.

In both the Courts below it has been found that the appellant's mortgage of 1878 never received the landlord's consent or ratification. In the first Court, that of the District Judge of Betul, it seems to have been tacitly admitted that a mortgage of an occupancy-holding executed before the 1st of January 1884, when Act IX of 1883 (the Central Provinces Tenancy Act) came into force, could not be enforced against the landlord and was voidable at his option, unless it had been executed with his consent or subsequently ratified by him. In appeal the plaintiff withdrew his tacit admission and contended that mortgages of occupancy holdings did not before 1884 require the consent of the malguzar to make them good against him. The learned Divisional Judge held that "all such transfers effected before Act IX of 1883 came into force are governed by the Wajib-ul-arz", quoting as authority Nathu Lalla v. Vithoba (1); Dallu Patel v. Madho Patel (2) and a third case wrongly entered as reported in 1 C. P. L. R. 152 of which the names of the parties are not given. He further held on the authority of Nathu Lalla v. Vithoba (1) that in this case "the occupancy right was not transferable without the landlord's consent according to the Wajib-ul-arz."

The plaintiff contends now that his mortgage is valid against the malguzar though it was without his consent, and further that in finding that the consent of the former malguzar, Gadi Patel, has not been proved, the Divisional Judge has examined only one of the two pieces of evidence on the record and has left the other and more important item out of consideration entirely. I take the second point first. The learned Divisional Judge points out that the only witness on the question of consent, Ganpat Rao (P. W. No. 2), the son of Gadi Patel alias Vithal Rao, does not try to prove more than that his father accepted rent from the plaintiff in the capacity of mortgagee in possession, but no receipts were produced showing that the rent was accepted from the mortgagee in that capacity. He has certainly overlooked the deposition of Gadi Patel himself made on the 17th of September 1906, of which copies were filed by both parties (Exhibits P-4 and D-9). He said: "I have seen Gulab Khan cultivate the entire fields for the ten years about twenty years ago. For the last twenty years he has not been cultivating any part of the field." In cross-examination he said: "I realized entire rents from the plaintiff, Gulab Khan, for those ten years. (Shown 10 receipts P-5 to P-15). These are receipts granted by me. They are for half the land. The receipts for the other half may be in Gopiram's name." It would be more than absurd to suggest that this last sentence was evidence tending to show that Gadi Patel ever treated Gopiram as mortgagee in possession and accepted the rent from him in that capacity. The whole of the evidence bearing on the question of the ratification by Gadi Patel of the mortgage has, therefore, been examined in the lower Appellate Court and the finding of that Court that he never ratified it, is conclusive.

The rulings of this Court in Nathu Lalla v. Vithoba (1) and Dallu Patel v. Madho Patel (2) refer only to absolute occupancy-holdings. The absolute occupancy right was a creation of the first Settlement, as was explained by Bose, A. J. C., in Ragho v. Sadoo (3), and the incidents of that right are regulated by the provisions of the Wajib-ul-arz. But that a transfer of an occupancy right is not governed by the Wajib-ul-arz is distinctly laid down in the first of the two rulings mentioned in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court as authority for the contrary view. And if the Wajib-ul-arz did govern this case, it would be impossible for the ruling in Nathu Lalla v. Vithoba (1), the report of which does not say from what district the case came, to lay down that in this case from the Betul

(1) 1 C. P. L. R. 9.
(2) 3 C. P. L. R. 158.
(3) 5 Ind Cas. 428; 6 N. L. R. 6.

District "the occupancy right was not transferable without the landlord's consent according to the Wajib-ul-arz." In the absence of all evidence to the contrary, we must presume that there is no record in the Wajib-ul-arz of the District with which we are concerned of any such limitation of the right of transfer, and I have ascertained that this is the case by reference to the officially published translations of specimen forms of Wajib-ul-arz adopted at the Settlement of 1863-76.

The rights of an occupancy tenant are to be found in custom and the Statutes, which will between them show what the essential nature of that tenure is. Of custom we have no record in the Wajib-ul-arz or elsewhere in this case. The law on the subject is to be found in section 6 of Act X of 1859. There is a long series of rulings of the Calcutta High Court on the question whether the tenure conferred and defined by this section could or could not be transferred without the consent of the landlord. The majority of them favours the view that a transfer under that section would not be valid against the landlord unless it had consent or subsequent ratification, and this view was finally adopted by a Full Bench of the Court consisting of Couch, C. J., Jackson, Phear, Ainslie and Morris, J.J., in 1874 in Narendra Narayan Roy v. Ishan Chundra Sen (4). Their Lordships ruled, on reasoning which is absolutely convincing, that the right of an occupancy tenant in his holding is what was subsequently described in the Transfer of Property Act of 1882 as "an interest in property restricted in its enjoyment to the owner personally," which would make it an exception to the rule of common law that all forms of property may be transferred by the holder. This view of the matter was consistently taken by this Court in the cases mentioned in the Columnar Digest of Rulings bearing the numbers 107 (decided in 1876) and 186, 196, 198, 199, 200, 201 and 202 (decided in 1877).

I agree, therefore, in holding that even before 1884 an occupancy tenant had no right in his holding which he was authorised to transfer. If he made such a transfer he himself would not be allowed in equity to avoid it, and if the landlord consented to it or subsequently ratified it he would be under the same estoppel. What the rule comes to then is that a transfer of an occupancy-holding is voidable at the instance of the landlord, unless he consented to the transfer at the time it was made or subsequently, and this rule was merely affirmed in the Tenancy Act of 1883. The appeal is dismissed and the appellant must pay all the costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(4) 22 W. R. 22; 13 B. L. R. 274 (F. B.).

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS APPEAL No. 134 OF 1913.

December 2, 1914.

Present:—Sir Charles Fox, KT., Chief Judge.

MAUNG YIN AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS

versus

MA SAW MYAING AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Burmese Buddhists—One of the parents changing religion, effect of, on legitimacy of subsequently born child—Minors' Act (XL of 1858), person holding property by virtue of certificate under—Trustee—Limitation.

If after marrying according to the Burmese Buddhist custom of marriage, the father becomes a Christian and the mother remains a Buddhist, the marriage does not become thereby dissolved and the legitimacy of the child born after the father's change of religion is not thereby affected.

A person who holds property by virtue of a certificate granted under Act XL of 1858 holds it as an express trustee for the children of the deceased, who are as such entitled to the property, and limitation does not run against them.

Mr. May Oung, for the Appellants.

Mr. R. N. Burjorjee, for 1st and 3rd Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Ma Saw Myaing's parents were originally Burmese Buddhists. They were married according to the Burmese customary form of marriage. Her father subsequently became a Christian: her mother remained a Buddhist. Their marriage was not thereby dissolved. Ma Saw Myaing, who was born after her father's change of religion, was born in lawful wedlock, and there can be no question about her legitimacy. The Judge's decision on the 1st issue was correct.

The decision on the 2nd issue, however, appears to be erroneous. Whether the certificate under Act XL of 1858 was rightly granted is immaterial. Maung Yin has held the property by virtue of that certificate as an express trustee for the three children. Limitation does not run against any of them. They were each entitled to a third share. If Ma The Hmya and Maung San Ye have received anything towards their shares, the amounts must, of course, be taken into consideration in the final adjustment of the estate, and of the shares of the three children.

BALKISHAN v. ATMARAM.

The case will be returned to the District Court to be proceeded with.

Maung Yin will be allowed his costs of this appeal out of the estate. Advocate's fee 2 gold mohurs.

Case returned.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 281-B OF 1913.

July 22, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Stanyon, A. J. C.

BALKISHAN—DECREE-HOLDER—APPELLANT

versus

ATMARAM AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Foreclosure decree—Extension of time for payment of money—Good cause—Appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 105 (1), 99, O. XXXIV, r. 3, O. XLIII, r. 1 (o),—Preliminary order incorporated in decree may be questioned in appeal—Redemption decree passed by implication—Preliminary decree—Foreclosure—Redemption decree must be drawn up.

No appeal lies against an order extending time for the payment of mortgage-money.

Where a non-appealable order is incorporated, or results, in a decree, section 105 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code allows the order to be questioned in an appeal from the decree.

Where the order of a Court amounts impliedly, though not expressly, to a redemption decree, it may be treated as such under section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Though no extension of time for payment of money in satisfaction of a foreclosure decree can be granted without "good cause," those words should be liberally interpreted with leniency towards the debtor in the case of a first enlargement.

The "good cause" is not to be assumed either from non-payment or delayed payment. Order XXXIV, rule 3, requires that it should be shown to the satisfaction of the Court.

For each extension of time, subsequent to the first, a stronger case must be made out.

Every preliminary decree in a mortgage suit must lead to a final decree, either of foreclosure or of redemption; and when a preliminary decree is followed by redemption, a final decree for redemption should always be drawn up. An order extending time merely opens the way to payment, and when the payment is duly made, a final decree for redemption is as necessary as is a final decree for foreclosure. Where payment is not made, one or the other is consequential of the terms of the preliminary decree.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, dated the 15th March 1913, confirming that of the Junior Munsif, Akola, dated the 18th November 1911.

Messrs. F. W. Dillon and P. S. Kotwal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. J. Mittra and M. Chuckerbutty, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts material to this appeal are not in dispute. On the 3rd May 1909, the appellant obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure, the dies datus in which was the 3rd November 1909. This decree was made by the District Court, reversing the decree of the first Court, dated the 9th December 1908, which had dismissed the mortgage suit. Against the above preliminary decree the defendants—who are the respondents now before me—appealed to this Court. That appeal was dismissed on the 29th June 1910. On the 10th February 1911 the decree-holder applied for a final decree, on the ground that the decretal debt had not been paid on the 3rd November 1909, as ordered by the preliminary decree—a date which was not extended by this Court. Notice of the application for a final decree was issued to the judgment-debtors, calling upon them to appear on the 6th May 1911, and show cause why the decree should not be made absolute. On the 4th April 1911 one Ratan Bobde, professing to act on behalf of one of the judgment-debtors, Devidas, deposited the full decretal debt, namely, Rs. 236-6-11, in Court. Devidas had so far been a minor, but on the 6th May 1911 he appeared, and, stating that he had attained majority, asked for an amendment of the record so as to show him sui juris. The decree-holder also appeared and refused to receive the money deposited, pressing for the final decree claimed by him. Devidas asked the Court to extend the time and allow redemption. The case went to the 22nd July 1911, on which date a written statement was filed on behalf of Devidas of the reasons why time should be extended from the 3rd November 1909 to the 4th April 1911, when the money was paid into Court. The substance of the reasons given was this :—

(1) Devidas was a minor when the preliminary decree was passed, and he paid as soon as he attained majority.

(2) The money had been offered to the decree-holder out of Court and refused.

(3) The Court had accepted the money before any final decree was passed.

(4) The parties had awaited the result of the final appeal, and it was the practice in Berar to pay the decretal sum after notice of an application for a final decree had been received by the judgment-debtor.

The first Court held these reasons to be sufficient for an extension of time, but made a somewhat confused order in these terms :—

"The defendant No. 4 having taken proper steps to satisfy the plaintiff's claim by depositing in Court on the 4th April 1911, the plaintiff should accept the same in payment of his claim in full. And in case he would decline to do so, the defendant No. 4 is permitted to withdraw the money and pay it to the plaintiff within a week with interest at Rs. 6 per cent. per annum from the 3rd November 1909 to the date of payment."

It is difficult to put any common sense into the second part of this order. The decree-holder appealed to the District Court, but the appeal was dismissed on the 15th March 1913. The decree-holder has, therefore, made this second appeal. The appeal is stated to be against the order extending time and allowing redemption. The grounds of appeal are substantially as follows :—

(1) The Courts below have failed to realize that they were bound to make the foreclosure decree final in the absence of proof of "good cause" for non-payment on the dies datus.

(2) The reasons stated for such non-payment did not constitute "good cause."

(3) Payment was wrongly allowed to be made by a third party who had no interest in the suit.

Though the point was not argued before me, it seems necessary to decide whether an appeal lies in this case. The order of the first Court extending time was an order made under Order XXXIV, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, as applied to Berar. It is clear from the language of Order XLIII, rule 1 (o), read with section 105 (1) of the same Code, that no appeal lies against an order extending time for the payment of mortgage-money, but only where there is an order refusing such extension. The present appeal is based only on the ground that time was wrongly extended, and in effect it is an appeal against the order of extension. When a non-appealable order is incorporated, or results, in a decree, then section 105 (1) aforesaid allows the order to be questioned in an appeal from the decree : Pandhari v. Mahadeo (1). As pointed out in Laxmi Bai Naikin v. Ramchandra Malhar (2), every preliminary decree in a mortgage suit leads to final decree, either of foreclosure or of redemption. In the present case (owing to a prevailing laxity of procedure), the first Court only impliedly made an order extending time. By that order it directed

(1) that the plaintiff should receive the sum of Rs. 236-6-11 deposited in Court, in full satisfaction of his decree ; but if he refused, then

(2) that the defendant Devidas should withdraw it from the Court and pay it to the plaintiff within one week, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the 3rd November 1909 to the date of payment made. It will be seen that here there is no order—

(1) expressly extending time ;

(2) expressly dismissing the application for a final decree for foreclosure ; or

(3) expressly ordering the issue of a final decree for redemption.

I need hardly add that no formal redemption decree has ever been drawn up : and yet that alone could be the foundation for a legal appeal in this case. It goes without saying that the lower Appellate Court took no notice of the above defects. Contrary to the provisions of the Code of Civil Porcedure, it accepted and decided an appeal against an order impliedly extending time and directing a payment in future which, when made, would have been the foundation for a final decree for redemption in favour of Devidas.

Technically, the present appeal is not maintainable, because there exists no formal decree of the first Court, out of which could arise a legal first appeal on which this second appeal could be founded. But it is here that section 99 of the said Code comes to the rescue, and allows me to treat the order of the first Court as what that Court intended and what the parties and the lower Appellate Court interpreted it to be, namely, a redemption decree: and I, therefore, entertain this appeal, and will use it for the purpose of amending the form of the first Court's orders.

(1) 12 Ind. Cas. 795; 7 N. L. R. 162.
(2) 3 N. L. R. 146 at p. 154.

I now come to the merits of the appeal. The decisions of this Court in Nand Lal v. Ram Ratan Lodhi (3); Seth Bagwandas v. Shridhar (4) and Laxmi Bai Naikin v. Ramchandra Malhar (2) have been strongly pressed upon me, and it seems to me that those rulings have conveyed an impression that the dictum in Govinda v. Gangaram (5) has been entirely overruled. That is not the case. It must be conceded that in the first of the above cases the remark at page 143 that "the mere fact that the money is lodged cannot by itself explain failure to pay punctually" seems to be in conflict with the dictum in Govinda v. Gangaram (5) that "where a few days after the fixed time the mortgagor pays down the whole of the mortgage-money he should not ferfeit his estate." But the conflict is apparent rather than real. A judgment-debtor who negligently fails to pay on or before the due date is in a very different position from one who, with the exercise of due diligence, succeeds in raising the money, but only after the due date is past. Under both the rulings in question time would not be given to the former and would be given to the latter. The later rulings merely draw attention to the law that time is not to be extended unless for sufficient cause. They do not lay down any measure or standard of sufficient cause. That is necessarily a question of fact to be decided according to the circumstances of each particular case and the discretion of the Court in dealing with the same. In Seth Bagwandas v. Shridhar (4) it was said that Nand Lal Lodhi v. Ram Ratan (3) "should go far to disperse the erroneous practice which has grown up of allowing redemption as a matter of course on payment being made at any time in the course of proceedings for an order absolute." That was the object of these later rulings, and it was not their purpose to fetter the discretion of the Courts in granting extensions of time within legal limits. The dicta of Crosthwaite, J. C., in Govinda v. Gangaram (5) that (1) the Court may, on proper grounds being shown, enlarge the time for payment, and (2) a very strong reason is not necessary for a first enlargement, stand as good law at the present day and have been in no way modified by any later reported ruling of this Court.

It must be remembered that the primary object of a mortgage is to secure the payment of a debt, usually much below the market-value of the property mortgaged. It is not intended, at least by the mortgagor and ostensibly also by the mortgagee, to work as a forfeiture of estate. Therefore a mortgagee who gets back his money, with compensation for any delay which the mortgagor could not reasonably avoid, suffers no hardship. Before a decree of Court takes the place of the contract, the right of redemption is unaffected, except as to the amount payable, by failure to pay on the due date. The deed of mortgage usually provides, expressly or impliedly, for post diem interest as compensation for delay. It is the necessity of finality and early disposal in litigation and the growth of the incumbrance beyond the capacity of the mortgaged property to sustain it which demand that the transaction shall come to an end by payment or foreclosure as soon as may be equitably possible. Therefore, though no extension of time can be granted without "good cause," those words will be liberally interpreted, with leniency towards the debtor, in the case of a first enlargement. In matters of judicial discretion the Courts in India habitually follow the practice of the English Courts of Equity. This was done in Gobinda v. Gangaram (5) and Nand Lal Lodhi v. Ram Ratan (3). The following extracts from Chapter V, section III, paragraphs 1955 et seq. of Fisher's Law of Mortgage, 6th Edition, will sufficiently show the English practice :—

"The enforcement of the strict terms of that part of the judgment in a foreclosure suit which directs absolute foreclosure upon non-payment of the redemp-

(3) 2 N. L. R. 137.
(4) 3 N. L. R. 55.
(5) 2 C. P. L. R. 29.

tion money on a certain day, is in the discretion of the Court, which may relieve against it either by a postponement of that day, or by an actual opening of the foreclosure, after the day has been suffered to pass without payment. * * * * It is only in a foreclosure action, as a general rule, and not in an action for redemption, that this indulgence is granted; because, in the latter case, the mortgagor comes to the Court for the relief, professing that his money is ready; but, in a foreclosure suit, he redeems by compulsion. * * * But, under special circumstances, the time for payment has been enlarged even in a suit for redemption. * * * * * * Upon good cause shown, the Court does not stop at a single enlargement in a foreclosure suit. Relief has been given three, and even four, times in succession. * * * * * But the time is not enlarged as of course even upon the first application. Some reason (though a very strong one is not necessary) must be given; as that the defendant has used his best endeavours to find an assignee without success, but that if time be granted there is a reasonble prospect of getting the money, or that negotiations for that purpose are actually pending. And the magnitude of the sum involved, and of the arrears of interest, are circumstances to which weight will be given. * * * * But something more than the above excuses seems necessary upon subsequent applications; such as evidence that some steps have been actually taken, as the result of which the money is likely to be forthcoming. And a strong case of unexpected delay or difficulty must be made out to support a third or fourth application. * * * The period granted upon the first application is usually six months, and it does not appear that any longer time has been granted at once. The like period has also been given on a subsequent application, but the period has then varied from five to three months according to the circumstances. The order commonly directs * * payment * * * of interest and costs. * * * * * The general condition of payment of interest will not be relaxed by reason of the infancy of the person entitled to redeem. * * * * * The condition for payment of interest and costs will not be imposed where the foreclosure is opened by reason of the mortgagee's own acts. * * * * * * * * * * * The occasions upon which the Court will give * * * relief, and the terms upon which it will give it, depend upon the circumstances of each case. The expectation that the money will be ready, founded upon a treaty already commenced with a proposed assignee; * * * * * ignorance or mistake as to the state of the proceedings or the day fixed for payment; irregularity in the proceedings before the order absolute; the illness, or accidental inability to travel, of the person charged with payment of the money; * * poverty which could be shown to be but temporary; * * * that the property has a special value for the mortgagor, may * * * be taken into consideration."

The English cases bearing on the above statement of the law are very numerous, and it is only necessary to cite Campbell v. Holyland (6); Novosielski v. Wakefield (7); Edwards v. Cunliffe (8); Nanny v. Edwards (9); Eyre v. Hanson (10); Quarles v. Knight (11); Campbell v. Moxhay (12); Geldard v. Hornby (13); Coombe v. Stewart (14); Buchanan v. Greenway (15); Collinson v. Jeffery (16); Joachim v. M'Donall (17); Ford v. Wastell (18); Blackburn v. Caine (19); Kingsford v. Poile (20); Cocker v. Bevis (21); Ismoord v. Claypool (22);

(6) 7 Ch. D. 166; 47 L. J. Ch. 145; 38 L. T. 128; 26 W. R. 109.
(7) 34 Eng. Rep. 161; 17 Ves. 417.
(8) 56 Eng. Rep. 106; 1 Madd. 287.
(9) 38 Eng. Rep. 752; 4 Russ. 124; 6 L. J. (o. s.) Ch. 20; 28 R. R. 24.
(10) 48 Eng. Rep. 1266; 2 Beav. 478; 9 L. J., Ch. 302; 50 R. R 253.
(11) 8 Price 630.
(12) 18 Jur. 641.
(13) 66 Eng. Rep. 1026; 1 Hare 251; 6 Jur. 78; 58 R. R. 60
(14) 51 Eng. Rep. 44; 13 Beav. 111.
(15) 50 Eng Rep. 1097; 12 Beav. 355; 85 R. R 117.
(16) (1896) 1 Ch. 644; 65 L. J. Ch. 375; 74 L. T. 78; 44 W. R. 311.
(17) 59 Eng. Rep. 379; 9 Sim. 314.
(18) 67 Eng. Rep. 1151; 2 Ph. 591; 17 L. J. Ch. 368; 12 Jur. 404.
(19) 52 Eng. Rep. 1245; 22 Beav. 614; 111 R.R. 506.
(20) 8 W. R. 110.
(21) 22 Eng. Rep. 695; 1 Ch. Cas. 61
(22) 59 E. R. 389; 9 Sim. 316n.

Nanfan v. Perkins (23); Jones v. Creswicke (24).

The cases in which time has been extended upon one ground or another, whether in England or India, must not be taken as exhaustive. They are merely illustrative of an equitable practice. In every case the Court has to be satisfied, in the exercise of a reasonable discretion, that there is good cause for extending time. This good cause is not to be assumed either from non-payment or delayed payment. Order XXXIV, rule 3, requires that it should be shown. That is to say, it must be conveyed to the knowledge of the Court by judicial procedure. For a first enlargement the affidavit of the applicant, or of some person on his behalf, e. g., an intending assignee, should ordinarily be sufficient, unless there is a counter-affidavit, and the Court sees reason to doubt the truth of the applicant's statement, in which case evidence will be necessary. For each extension of time subsuquent to the first a stronger case must be made out. The case of Karsondas v. Bai Gungabai (25) was cited on behalf of the appellant as applicable in principle. It might so apply to a case where, after a final decree for foreclosure has been made, the judgment-debtor applies to re-open it so as to allow of redemption. But I do not think that any safe analogy can be drawn from the case of admitting a time-barred appeal for the purpose of deciding whether or not time shall be extended in a foreclosure decree. The policy of the law is diametrically opposed in the two cases. It is against a time-barred appeal and in favour of redemption of an unforeclosed mortgage

In the present case the learned Counsel for the appellant objects that the Courts below have not proceeded judicially in deciding that there was sufficient cause: that there has been no inquiry and there is no record on which the fact of good cause can be decided. To a certain extent this is a just criticism. Nevertheless, there is upon the record sufficient material to justify me in sustaining the order of the Court below with some modification. As a Judge of the High Court for Berar for the last ten years, it is within my judicial knowledge that the established practice in that territory, until very recently, was to allow redemption as a matter of right, upon payment made before an order absolute for foreclosure was actually passed. The defendant, Devidas, and his friends were obviously under the impression that a payment made before a final decree was passed, would satisfy the decree; and, under that impression, arrangements to pay were deferred until notice was given to show cause why the decree should not be made final. No doubt this mistake will receive less consideration as time goes on and the public generally become disabused of the error created by the above procedure. But at present the application of the Transfer of Property Act and the Central Provinces view of the matter before me is still sufficiently an innovation to excuse the above mistake. The minority of Devidas during the period fixed for payment is an admitted fact, and his payment of the debt as soon as he attained majority is another circumstance to be taken into consideration in making an equitable order. I think these facts afford good cause for a first enlargement. But it must be made in a legal form. For that purpose I allow the appeal, fixing Rs. 15 as Pleader's fees in this Court, and, reversing the informal decrees of the Courts below, I direct that a decree be drawn up ordering as follows:—

(1) that sufficient cause having been shown, time for redemption of the mortgage is extended from the 3rd November 1909 to the 4th April 1911, subject to the payment of simple interest on the decretal sum of Rs. 236-6 11 at 6 per cent. per annum for that period ;

(2) that the appellant do pay to the respondents and bear all the costs of these proceedings in the two Appellate Courts, and that such costs be set off against the price of redemption, but that the respondents do pay and bear the costs of the proceedings in the first Court;

(3) that inasmuch as the costs payable by the appellant to the respondents exceed the sum payable for interest during the period of extension, and the respondent, Devidas, paid the full decretal sum into

(23) 59 Eng. Rep. 376; 9 Sim. 308.

(24) 59 Eng. Rep. 374; 9 Sim. 304; 9 L. J., Ch. 113; 4 Jur. 2 6; 47 R. R. 249.

(25) 30 B. 329; 7 Bom. L. R. 965.

Court on the 4th April 1911, it is hereby declared that the mortgaged property has been duly redeemed and the respondents are entitled to recover by execution any surpluss due to them for costs.

In conclusion I would point out for the guidance of the Courts below that when a preliminary decree is followed by redemption, a final decree for redemption should always be drawn up. This will avoid confusion. An order extending time merely opens the way to payment, and the payment being duly made, a final decree for redemption is as necessary as is a final decree for foreclosure where payment is not made. One or the other is consequential of the terms of the preliminary decree.

Appeal allowed.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 347 OF 1914.

August 10, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C.

BALDEO PRASAD AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

CHET RAM AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Document, construction of—Intention of parties to instrument—Contents of document and evidence of surrounding circumstances to be considered—Payment of debt, right to enforce, not necessary in mortgage by conditional sale—Sale-deed providing for vendee to return property and cancel sale if consideration money paid within certain period—Mortgage by conditional sale—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58 (c)—Redemption.

The intention of the parties to an instrument is to be gathered, not from the name given to it, but from its contents and the relations sought to be created by its terms, as also from such extrinsic evidence of surrounding circumstances as may be required to show in what manner the language of the instrument was related to existing facts.

Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din, 12 A. 387 at p. 391; 17 I. A. 98; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 557 and Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge, 22 A. 149; 27 I. A. 58; 4 C. W. N. 153; 2 Bom. L. R. 523; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 601 referred to.

A right to enforce payment of the debt is not a necessary corrolary to a mortgage by conditional sale.

Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge, 22 A. 149; 27 I. A. 58; 4 C. W. N. 153; 2 Bom. L. R. 523; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 601, referred to.

Where a sale-deed provides that if the vendor pays back the consideration money with interest within a certain period the vendee shall return the property conveyed and cancel the sale, the transaction evidenced by the sale-deed is not an absolute sale but a mortgage by conditional sale within the meaning of section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, and a suit for its redemption can lie.

Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din, 12 A. 387 at p. 391; 17 I. A. 98; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 557, Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge, 22 A. 149; 27 I. A. 58; 4 C. W. N. 153; 2 Bom. L. R. 523; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 601, Ali Ahmad v. Rahmatullah, 14 A. 195; A. W. N. (1892) 42 and Kalka Prasad v. Bhuiyan Din, 2 Ind. Cas. 180; 31 A. 300; 6 A. L. J. 222, referred to.

Rama Kanta Sarma v. Kalijoy Sarma, 11 Ind. Cas. 124, Ghulam Nabi Khan v. Niaz-un-nissa, 9 Ind. Cas. 140; 33 A. 337; 8 A. L. J. 119 and Vasudeo Bhikaji Joshi v. Bhau Lakshman Ravut, 21 B. 528, distinguished from.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Kheri, dated 14th May 1913, upholding that of the Munsif, Kheri, dated 23rd November 1912.

Syed Nabi Ullah, for the Appellants.

Babu Basdeo Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Ghori Ram, the father of the plaintiffs-respondents, sold certain property to Baldeo Prasad, one of the defendants-appellants, in lieu of Rs. 300 on the 4th September 1896. The sale-deed provided that, if the vendor paid back the consideration money with the interest within two years from the date of the sale, the vendee shall return the property conveyed and cancel the sale (iqala bai).

The question for consideration in this case is whether the above terms operate to create a mortgage, capable of redemption under Article 148 of Act IX of 1908, or effect an absolute sale with an independent covenant for re-purchase within a specified period. The Courts below found that the transfer in question operated as a mortgage by conditional sale and gave the plaintiffs a decree for redemption.

Section 58, clause (c), of Act IV of 1882 states that where a mortgagor ostensibly sells the mortgaged property on condition that on default of payment of the mortgage money on a certain date the sale shall become absolute, or on condition that on such payment being made the buyer shall transfer the property to the seller, the transaction is called a mortgage by conditional sale. The intention of the parties to an instrument is to be gathered, as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1), not from the name given to it, but from its contents and the relations sought to be created by its terms. A document purporting to be one of sale, though accompanied by a contract reserving to the vendor a right to re-purchase the property sold on re-paying the purchase-money within a certain time, is not on that account to be construed as if it were a mortgage,—Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1). But where a sale is made subject to the condition that the sale shall become void if the consideration money is re-paid within a certain period, the transaction is a mortgage by conditional sale within the meaning of section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act and a suit for its redemption can lie. In Ali Ahmad v. Rahmat-ullah (2), where a sale-deed provided that if the vendor or his heirs re-paid the entire consideration money on a certain date specified therein, the vendee without any objection or hesitation would receive the money and, returning the property sold, revoke the sale, it was held by Edge, C. J., and Tyrrell, J., that the deed was a bai-bil wafa or mortgage by conditional sale. There was a covenent for "iqala bai" or revocation of the sale in that case as in the present, and the effect of a payment in such a case is to render the conditional sale abortive and to restore the property to the transferor without necessity for a re-conveyance. In Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (3) their Lordships of the Privy Council, in dealing with a case in which a deed of sale of land for value was accompanied by a deed of agreement between the parties for re-purchase by the vendor of the land on payment of the consideration to the vendee on a date fixed, observed:—"Mortgages by conditional sale under various names are a common form of mortgage in India and have come before this Board in several reported cases. It has been stated that this form of mortgage was introduced to enable Muhammadans, contrary to the precepts of their religion, to lend money at interest and obtain security for principal and interest. If so, one would expect to find that the transaction would, as far as possible, be made to assume the appearance of a sale. It is not necessary in a mortgage by conditional sale, 'kutkubala' or 'bai-bil-wafa' that the mortgagor should make himself personally liable for the re-payment of the loan." They pointed out that the case must be decided on a consideration of the contents of the documents themselves with such extrinsic evidence of surrounding circumstances as might be required to show in what manner the language of the document was related to existing facts, and found that the two deeds taken together were intended to effect a mortgage by conditional sale. In Kalka Prasad v. Bhuiyan Din (4), a sale-deed of certain property accompanied by a simultaneous agreement to re-convey the same if the vendor re-paid the consideration money within a period of seven years was similarly held to amount to a mortgage by conditional sale.

(1) 12 A. 387 at p. 391; 17 I. A. 98; 5 Sar. P. C. J 557.

The learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants relies on the decisions in Rama Kanta Sarma v. Kalijoy Sarma(5) and Ghulam Nabi Khan v. Niaz-un-nissa (6). But in the former case, though the sale-deed and the agreement were written on the same date, the parties to the sale and the agreement were not identical. In the latter case there was an express covenant that the sale had become absolute and final, that the vendor had no right left to any share in the property sold and that the contracting parties had no right to cancel the sale or to demand the restitution of the consideration money.

It has been argued on the strength of the decision in Vasudeo Bhikaji Joshi v. Bhau Lakshman Raut (7), that a mortgage implies the existence of a debt and that if there is a right to redeem property from a debt, there must also be a correlative right to enforce its payment. But it is not disputed that the sale in this case was made in lieu of certain pre-existing debts and a right to enforce payment of debt is not, as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (3), a necessary corrolary to a mortgage by conditional sale. The absence of any covenant for re-conveyance and the existence of an agreement to cancel the sale and return the property indicate that the sale was not

(2) 14 A. 149; A. W. N. (1892) 42.
(3) 22 A. 149; 27 I. A. 58; 4 C. W. N. 153; 2 Bom. L. R. 523; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 601.
(4) 2 Ind. Cas. 180; 31 A. 300; 6 A. L. J. 222.
(5) 11 Ind. Cas. 124.
(6) 9 Ind. Cas. 149; 33 A. 337; 8 A. L. J. 119.
(7) 21 B. 528.

VISHWANATH v. SITARAM.

absolute and that mortgage by conditional sale was intended.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 239 OF 1913.

June 29, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Batten, Offg. J. C.

VISHWANATH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

SITARAM—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Central Provinces Tenancy Act (IX of 1883), ss. 47, 48, 60, 71, 72—Sub-lease for more than a year—Sub-tenant cannot resist eviction after one year.

A sub-tenant, under an occupancy-tenant, cannot, after the expiry of a year from its commencement, plead as a ground for resisting a suit for eviction, a sub-lease for a period exceeding one year. The remedies provided by sections 47 and 48 and 71 and 72 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act are for the protection of the tenant's heirs and of his landlords.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Wardha, dated the 30th January 1913, reversing that of the Munsif, Arvi, dated the 20th July 1912.

Messrs. M. R. Dixit and W. V. Gharpure, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. V. Deshmukh and T. R. Jabade, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant brought this suit to recover possession of a holding consisting of occupancy and ordinary fields, which have been in possession of the defendant since 1914. The plaintiff has only recently attained his majority, and the plaintiff, who claims to be the adopted son of Pandurang who was admittedly the original tenant, alleges that Pandurang's two widows sub-let the fields to the defendant from year to year. The case for the defendant is that the widows are the owners of the tenancy right and that the plaintiff has no title to the fields, and that the widows sub-let the fields to the defendant for ten years, which period had not expired at the date of the institution of the suit. The learned Additional District Judge has not decided the question of the plaintiff's title, but has dismissed the suit on the ground that the sub-lease for ten years is proved and that the period is not yet expired. The main ground of appeal is that a sub-lease for ten years is invalid and cannot be given effect to by the Courts. The appeal must, in my opinion, succeed.

According to section 60 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, "a lease granted to a sub-tenant by an occupancy or an ordinary tenant shall not be valid for a period exceeding one year." It appears to me that this provision can bear only one interpretation, namely, that a sub-tenant cannot, after the expiry of a year from its commencement, plead as a ground for resisting a suit for eviction, a sub-lease for a period exceeding one year. The learned Counsel for the respondent-defendant argues that the sole manner in which a sub-lease for over one year can be set aside is according to the provisions of sections 47 and 48, or 71 and 72, of the Tenancy Act, and reliance is placed on the ruling of Stanyon, A. J. C., in Ganeshdas v. Shankar (1). But in that case it has been held that no suit can be maintained in the Civil Court to avoid the transfer of an occupancy or ordinary tenant-right, if such transfer would be valid but for the prohibitions contained in section 46 or section 70. In the present case the sub-lease for over one year is declared invalid by section 60, so that it is not invalid only by reason of sections 46 and 70. Sections 46 and 70 and the remedies provided by sections 47 and 48, and by sections 71 and 72, appear to me to be for the protection of the tenant's heirs and of his landlord. Those sections do not enable a tenant himself to avoid a transfer effected by himself, though sections 48 and 72 contain a proviso by which a tenant can in certain circumstances step in and secure for himself the advantages of a sub-lease being set aside at the instance of his heir or of the landlord. Section 60 is a totally separate provision of law, which can be used directly as between the tenant and sub-tenant. I do not consider sections 46 to 48 or sections 70 to 72 are any bar to a tenant pleading the proviso to section 60 in a Civil suit.

On these grounds the reason for which the suit has been dismissed by the Additional District Judge is not, in my opinion, a good reason. I remand the appeal for decision on the other points at issue. Costs will be costs in the suit.

(1) 13 Ind. Cas. 909; 8 N. L. R. 22.

Appeal accepted; Case remanded.

COURT OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE, UNITED PROVINCES.

REVENUE PETITION No. 42 OF 1912-13 OF BARA BANKI DISTRICT.

April 15, 1914.

Present:—Sir Duncan Colvin Baillie, S. M.

Raja BHAGWAN BAKHSH SINGH—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

Chaudhri SHAFIQ-UZ-ZAMAN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Oudh Rent Act XXII of 1886), s. 127—Ejectment by notice—Adverse proprietary possession pleaded—Prima facie case made out—Possession, actual, with tenants.

Where a person claims as against the landlord adverse proprietary possession of a land cultivated by his tenants, and that claim appears to be probable, that person cannot be treated as a tenant under section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act, and a notice of ejectment issued against him as such ought to be cancelled. The matter is for the Civil Courts to decide.

Nisar Ali v. Meghi, Selected Decision No. 4 of 1913, followed.

Appeal from the decree of the Officiating Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 27th June 1913, upholding that of the Assistant Collector, Bara Banki, dated 26th July 1912.

Pandit Sarjoo Prasad Misra, for the Appellant.

Babu Puttoo Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The case is essentially one between rival claimants to proprietary right. Appellant is the recorded proprietor. Respondent alleges that he is in adverse proprietary possession, that certain of the land is occued by or appurtenant to houses in his possession. Respondent's possession is without doubt of some standing and in all probability a question of adverse proprietary right will arise. The land which is cultivated is not cultivated by the respondent himself but by the respondent's tenants. The principles laid down in Nisar Ali v. Meghi (1) apply in their entirety to this case, which is one which should have been brought in the Civil Courts. The Commissioner rightly cancelled the notice and allowed the plaintiff's claim, inasmuch as section 127 cannot be considered to be applicable.

The appeal is dismissed with costs on appellant.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) Selected Decision No. 4 of 1913.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 333-B OF 1913.

January 6, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Mittra, Offg. A. J. C.

BAPU—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

BHIWAJI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Hyderabad Assigned Districts Courts Law of 1889, ss. 7 (2) (b), 9 (1) (a)—Assistant Commissioner invested with powers of Deputy Commissioner for trying original suits only whether can appoint a guardian—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 52, 53—Court of Justice—Ultra vires—Majority Act (IX of 1875), s. 3.

An Assistant Commissioner invested with the powers of the Court of a Deputy Commissioner for the trial of original suits exceeding five thousand rupees in value, without limit as regards the value, is invested only with some of the powers of a Deputy Commissioner, viz., the power to try original suits, and is not the District Court for any other purpose. Therefere, if acting as the District Court, under the Guardians and Wards Act he appoints a guardian, his order is ultra vires and does not require to be set aside

Although the words "Court of Justice" in the Indian Majority Act are not qualified in express terms by the words "competent in this behalf", on general principles of law the act of a Court without jurisdiction is a nullity.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, East Berar, dated the 3rd October 1912, confirming that of the Munssf, Morsi, dated the 20th December 1911.

The Hon'ble Sir B. K. Bose and Messrs. F. W. Dillon and J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. V. Deshmukh and D. N. Khare for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sues to recover possession of his share in a field sold by himself on the 29th July 1898 to one Panjaubrao. The defendant is a transferee of Panjaubrao under a sale-deed dated the 23rd August 1899. It is not disputed that the plaintiff was born in January 1878. On the 29th April 1893 one Gangaram was appointed the guardian of the plaintiff's person and property by Mr. Banduji Janardan, a Civil Judge. Again on the 16th June 1896, on the death of Gangaram, one Zingooji was appointed the plaintiff's guardian by the same Officer. The question for decision is whether the plaintiff attained his majority at the age of eighteen or at the age of twenty-one. If he attained majority at the age of twenty-one, as contended for by him, he was a minor at the date of the sale, otherwise he was major.

The Guardians and Wards Act (Act VIII of 1890) was applied to Berar, "so far as its provisions may be suitable," with effect from the 1st January 1891 (Foreign Department Notification No. 4284-1, dated Fort William, the 17th December 1890, published in Hyderabad Residency Orders, January 15th, 1891, Part I, page 10). This notification cancelled Foreign Department Notification No. 212-J, dated the 24th October 1873, in so far as it relates to Act XL of 1858 (Minors) and also Home Department Notification No. 618 (Judicial), dated the 15th May 1878, relating to Act IX of 1861 (Minors). The Guardians and Wards Act was then the sole statutory provision in force in Berar from 1st June 1891 in regard to the appointment of guardians for minors.

By Notification No. 93, dated the 4th April 1892 (published in Residency Order, 16th April 1892, Part I, page 86), in exercise of the powers conferred by section 9 (1) (a) of the Hyderabad Assigned Districts Courts Law of 1889, the Resident was pleased to invest Mr. Banduji Janardan with the powers of the Court of a Deputy Commissioner for the trial of original suits exceeding Rs. 5,000 in value without limit as regards the value, and to declare that the powers shall be exercised within the area of the district to which he may be attached.

By Notification No. 307, dated the 3rd October 1893 (Residency Orders, dated 16th October 1893, Part 1, page 195), Mr. Banduji Janardan, Civil Judge at Amraoti, was invested with the powers of the Court of a Deputy Commissioner under section 7 (2) (b) of the Hyderabad Assigned Districts Courts Law in respect of (amongst other Acts) Act XL of 1858. At this date the Act XL of 1858 had been repealed by the Guardians and Wards Act as introduced into Berar.

By notification No. 53, dated the 27th February 1896 (Residency Order, dated 2nd March 1896, Part 1, page 45), the Notification No. 307 mentioned in the preceding paragraph was cancelled.

For the defendant-appellant it has been argued that the action of the Resident in investing Mr. Banduji Janardan with the powers of the Deputy Commissioner under Act XL of 1858 or Act VIII of 1890 was ultra vires. In support of this argument reliance is placed on an opinion expressed by Stevens, J. C., in Kauhoji Ran v. Gangabai (1) and the circular referred to in that case at page 21. For the respondent it is contended that too narrow a construction has been placed in that ruling on the power of the Local Government to invest Officers with the powers of a Deputy Commissioner other than powers to try original civil suits. It is, however, unnecessary for me to express any definite opinion in this case on the point raised. The appointment of Gangaram by Mr. Banduji Janardan was made before the Notification No. 307 investing him with powers of a Deputy Commissioner under the Minors Act. The second appointement of Zingoo also took place after Notification No. 307 was cancelled.

The question now for decision is narrowed down to this. Was the Court of Mr. Banduji Janardan the District Court within the meaning of the Guardians and Wards Act? He was an Assistant Commissioner of the first Class invested by Notification No. 93 (supra, paragraph 3) with the powers of the Court of a Deputy Commissioner for the trial of original suits exceeding five thousand rupees in value without limit as regards the value.

There can be no doubt that the Court of the Deputy Commissioner is the District Court or principal Civil Court of original jurisdication in the district [section 7 (2) (b) of the Hyderabad Assigned Districts Courts Law, 1889].

The Resident may, by order in writing, invest any person with all or any of the powers of the Court of the Deputy Commissioner under the Hyderabad Assigned Districts Courts Law, 1889. A person so invested with the powers of a Deputy Commissioner is designated Civil Judge.

(1) 9 C. P. L. R. 19.

Under section 9 (3) of the Hyderabad Assigned Districts Courts Law, 1889, the Court of a Civil Judge shall, for all purposes connected with the exercise of the powers with which the Civil Judge has been invested, be deemed to be the Court of a Deputy Commissioner.

In the view taken by Stevens, J. C., in the case cited above, Mr. Banduji Janardan would have been incompetent to try applications under the Gurdians and Wards Act even if he had been invested with "all" the powers of a Deputy Commissioner under the Hyderabad Assigned Districts Courts Law, 1889, the wording of the latter Act being almost the same as that of the Central Provinces Courts Act (XVI of 1885). As a matter of fact, that Officer was only invested with some of the powers of a Deputy Commissioner, viz., the power to try original suits. In Miscellaneous Appeal No. 162 of 1902, Mr. Hare, Officiating Judicial Commissioner, Berar, accordingly held that Mr. Banduji Janardan in 1902 had no powers to hear applications under the Guardians and Wards Act. This ruling of Mr. Hare appears to me to be perfectly sound. The Court of Mr. Banduji was the District Court only so far as the trial of original suits is concerned. It was not the District Court for any other purpose—not the District Court for the purposes of the Guardians and Wards Act.

It is unnecessary for me to express any opinion in this appeal as to the powers of Mr. Banduji so long as Notification No. 307, mentioned in paragraph 4 of this judgment, was in force.

This is not a case where long and uninterrupted contemporaneous usage can be relied on to justify a particular construction of a Statute on which its usage proceeded. The illegality of the practice of Civil Judges trying cases under the Guardians and Wards Act was pointed out by Mr. Hare in 1902, and I ought to follow Mr. Hare's judgment especially as my own opinion coincides with his.

The result is that the two appointments were made by a Court not competent to make such appointments under the only statutory provisions then in force—the Guardians and Wards Act as applied to Berar "so far as its provisions may be suitable." I do not see how the last words relied on by the respondent can affect the decision of the question before me. There is nothing in the laws of Berar which makes the exercise of exclusive jurisdiction by the District Judge or Deputy Commissioner under that Act unsuitable.

The lower Appellate Court has held that although the appointment of the guardian was ultra vires in this case, yet as there was in fact a guardian appointed by a Court of Justice, the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of the extended period of minority. In the argument for the respondent, it is suggested that the Legislature meant to draw a distinction between the case where a guardian is appointed by a Court of Justice and one where the appointment is by any other authority. Reference is made to section 52 and section 53 of the Guardians and Wards Act. As regards a Court of Justice, it is contended that the appointment is good unless set aside, even if made by a Court not competent in this behalf, but competency, it is argued, is expressly required of any other authority making an appointment. I am, however, unable to agree with this contention. If the act of the Civil Judge was ultra vires, it did not require to be set aside. There was no appointment of a guardian in the eye of the law, the proceedings being null and void. Although the words "Court of Justice" in the Indian Majority Act are not qualified in express terms by the words "competent in this behalf," it follows from general principles of law that the act of a Court without jurisdiction is a nullity.

The plaintiff, therefore, attained his majority at the age of eighteen, and the sale sought to be impeached is, therefore, binding on the plaintiff as he was not a minor at the date of the sale.

The decrees of the lower Courts are set aside and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Suit dismissed.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CIVIL APPLICATION No. 90 OF 1914.

October 23, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Lindsay, J. C., and Mr. Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C.

LAL HANWANT RAM—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT

versus

Raja MUHAMMAD ABUL HASAN KHAN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Ex parte proceeding—Minor defendants—Guardians ad litem not informed—Service, insufficient, of notice—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, rr. 3, 4.

A case cannot be heard ex parte against minor defendants where their guardians ad litem were appointed without notices having been sent to the proposed guardians or to the minors as required by Order XXXII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, and on this irregularity being brought to light, notices were issued against them but were not sufficiently served.

Application against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated 26th May 1914.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Applicant.

Mr. Muhammad Wasim, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Gonda, directing a suit to be heard ex parte. It appears that certain persons were appointed guardians ad litem of certain minor defendants in this case without notices having been sent to the proposed guardians of the minors and to the minors concerned, as required by Order XXXII, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure. When the irregularity was subsequently brought to the notice of the Subordinate Judge, he directed the said notices to issue. The process-server was not, however, able to find the persons concerned, and affixed the notices on their houses, reporting at the same time that he was informed that they had gone elsewhere. The service was clearly insufficient, but the learned Subordinate Judge treated it as sufficient and directed the case to be heard ex parte against the minors concerned. His order is, under the circumstances, unsustainable.

We allow the application and, setting aside the order of the Subordinate Judge, direct that he should not proceed to hear the case against the minors without complying with the provisions of Order XXXII, rules 3 and 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

No order is made as to the costs.

Application accepted.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 500 OF 1913.

June 29, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Hallifax, A. J. C.

RAJARAM—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

VITHAL RAO AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 63, 72 (b)—Improvement by mortgagee—Construction of well—Compensation.

If a mortgagee in possession of agricultural land, without the express or implied consent of the mortgagor, constructs on the land a well the separate possession or enjoyment of which is not possible apart from the land and the construction of which is not necessary to preserve the property from destruction or even deterioration, the well must be delivered with the land to the mortgagor at redemption.

Ringayya Chettiar v. Parthasarathi Naicker, 20 M. 120; Krishna Patter v. Srinivasa Patter, 20 M. 124, distinguished Arunachella Chetti v. Sithayi Ammal, 19 M. 327, followed.

Sandon v. Hooper, 49 Eng.Rep. 820; 6 Beav. 246; 12 L. J. Ch. 309; affirmed on appeal 14 L. J. Ch. 120; 63 R. R. 72; Shepard v. Jones, 21 Ch. D. 469; 47 L. T. 604; 31 W. R. 308, referred to.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Betul, dated the 23rd June 1913, modifying that of the Munsif, Betul, dated the 26th February 1913.

Mr Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Both plaintiffs and defendant have appealed against the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The appeal of the former is Second Appeal No. 513 of 1913, and both appeals will be governed by this judgment. The plaintiffs sued to redeem certain absolute occupancy fields mortgaged in 1884 by their deceased father with the defendant and his deceased father as security for a loan of Rs. 200. The property was placed in the possession of the mortgagees who were to enjoy the usufruct in lieu of interest. The defendant resisted redemption on the ground that about a month after the execution of the mortgage-deed, the mortgagor executed a simple bond for Rs. 331 in favour of the mortgagees, in which he agreed that that amount should be charged on the property along with the amount already secured by the mortgage. There is a concurrent finding of both the Courts below based on a full consideration of all the evidence given by the defendant, that he has failed to prove execution of this bond by the father of the plaintiffs, which the plaintiffs denied. The whole of the defendant's second appeal is based upon this bond, and as we are now bound by the finding of fact that it was never executed by the plaintiffs' father, that appeal must be dismissed. I may say that if I had the power to interfere with that finding, I could find no reason for doing so.

The plaintiffs' appeal has reference to the question of addition to the price of redemption of the cost of a permanent improvement to the mortgaged property by the mortgagee in possession. The defendant constructed on the property a brick well at a cost of Rs. 300, which is still in existence, without obtaining the consent, express or implied, of the plaintiffs or their father. In the first Court the defendant's claim to recover the cost of this well was disallowed, on the ground that "there is nothing in section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act under which he can claim the value of any such improvements." In appeal the learned Distrcit Judge added the Rs. 300 to the amount decreed as the price of redemption, and it is on this point that the plaintiffs are now appealing.

The learned Judge first refers to the two Madras cases of Rangayya Chettiar v. Parthasarathi Naicker (1) and that immediately following it in the reports, Krishna Patter v. Srinivasa Patter (2). In the first of these, he says, "the Madras High Court has emphatically denied the right of the mortgagee to any allowance for improvements," but in the second he finds the principle enunciated that compensation is payable, provided the improvement is permanent and existent in reasonably good condition at the time of redemption. "This too," he writes, "has been the view taken in Rashidunissa v. Bhup Singh (3), where allowance was made for a pacca well which had been made, but not for mud houses for tenants or the cost of manure distributed to the tenants."

All three cases have been misunderstood. In the first Madras case the person held not to be entitled to compensation for improvements was not the mortgagee but the purchaser of the equity of redemption. As it happened, the same person was first mortgagee of the property, but he did not figure in the suit nor was he in possession of the property in that capacity. All that the judgment says on the matter under discussion is this: "The claim for alleged improvements said to have been effected by the first mortgagee since his purchase cannot, we think, be allowed. In this respect he is in no better position than the mortgagor himself who may choose to spend money on his property. We cannot accede to the view that the improvements were made by the purchaser in the character of mortgagee, for in that capacity he is not shown to have been entitled to possession."

In the second case, Krishna Patter v. Srinivasa Patter (2), their Lordships were dealing, not with a claim for compensation for improvements, but with a decree which had already allowed that claim, and that not under the ordinary law but under an implied covenant arising out of local custom in reference to mortgages by way of kanom in Malabar. The matter before the High Court was one of the diminution in the value of improvements that took place between the decree and the redemption, and it was held that the mortgagor could not be called upon to pay for improvements not in existence at the time of redemption, even though they had existed when the decree for redemption was passed.

The reference to the third case seems to be wrongly stated. In Gour's Law of Transfer in British India it is given as 2 A. L. J. 24 (s. n.) indicating, I understand, the "Short Notes" of other cases attached to the full reports of more important cases in the Allahabad Law Journal. I have been unable to find the reports in the Short Notes,* but if, as is probable, the learned Judge got his report of the case from Dr. Gour's Treatise, where it is mentioned, he has mis quoted it. He speaks of a well being made Dr. Gour's account of the case speaks of a

(1) 20 M. 120.
(2) 20 M. 124.
(3) 3 A. L. J. 24 s. n.

* The Short Note in question is given in 3 A. L. J. 24.—Ed.

well being re-constructed. Clause (b) of section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act leaves no doubt of the right of the mortgagee in possession to re-construct a well on agricultural land at a reasonable cost.

The case, as it appears to me, is governed by section 63 of the Transfer of Property Act. The leading cases of Sandon v. Hooper (4) and Shepard v. Jones (5) are not under that Act. None the less the former enunciates exactly the principle of section 63 and the latter was not a redemption suit but a suit by the mortgagor for an account of the proceeds of a sale effected by the mortgagee under his power of sale. The only case directly in point seems to be Arunachella Chetti v. Sithayi Ammal(6), where the liability of the mortgagor to pay for any improvements except such as are mentioned in clause (b) of section 72 was emphatically denied, unless the improvements were made with his consent given in circumstances making it equivalent to a promise to re-imburse the mortgagees. This restriction of the kind of assent necessary to bind the mortgagor may be, as Dr. Rash Behary Ghose suggests on page 556 of his work on Mortgages, too narrow, but the ruling is otherwise merely an affirmation of section 63 of the Transfer of Property Act.

It was argued here that the word "accession" in section 63 does not include improvements or additions of the kind with which we are now concerned. That this is entirely untenable is clear from the words of the last three of the four paragraphs of the section, and still more so from the second instance of an "accession" appended as an illustration to section 70 of the same Act. It is clear that separate possession or enjoyment of the well apart from the land is not possible. It must, therefore, be delivered with the property. This has been the case of both parties all along. It is also clear that its construction was not necessary to preserve the property from destruction or even deterioration, nor did the mortgagor ever consent to its construction in any way. He is, therefore, not bound to pay its cost to the mortgagee.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court will, therefore, be modified by the substitution of Rs. 200 for Rs. 500 as the amount payable for redemption. The amount of Rs. 200 was deposited in Court before the institution of this suit which was made necessary by the defendant's refusal to accept it as sufficent. The defendant must, therefore, pay the whole of the costs of this litigation in all three Courts.

Decree modified.

(4) 49 Eng. Rep. 820; 6 Beav. 246; 12 L. J. Ch. 309; Affirmed on Appeal 14 L. J. Ch. 120; 63 R. R. 72.
(5) 21 Ch. D. 469; 47 L. T. 604; 31 W. R. 308.
(6) 19 M. 327.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CIVIL APPLICATION No. 133 OF 1914.
November 16, 1914.
Present:—Mr. Lindsay, J. C., and Mr. Stuart, A. J. C.

FARZAND ALI KHAN—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT
versus
Mir AMIR HAIDER—DEFENDANT—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Forma pauperis, leave to sue in, application for—Personal right—Death of applicant before leave granted—Legal representative not entitled to continue application—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 3.

The right to make an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis is a personal right, and if the applicant dies before the leave is granted and the suit is pending in Court, his legal representative cannot be allowed to continue the application, although he may present a like application fresh and independent.

Lalit Mohan Mandal v. Satish Chandra Das, 4 C. L. J. 234; 33 C. 1163, followed.

Application against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Rai Bareli, dated 29th June 1914.

Mr. Muhammad Siddique, for the Applicant.

Babu Aditya Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of the Subordinate Judge of Rai Bareli passed in the following circumstances.

One Dalel Khan made an application to the Subordinate Judge for permission to sue in forma pauperis for the recovery of possession of a talukdari estate. While his application for such permission was pending Dalel Khan died on the 22nd March 1914, and on the 15th of April 1914 an application was presented to the Court by one Farzand Ali Khan, who described himself as the son of Dalel Khan. The application purported to be under the provisions of Order XXII, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The petitioner asked that in the proceedings connected with the application for permission to sue in forma pauperis his name might be substituted in place of the name of his father. He alleged himself to be the legal representative of his deceased father. The application was refused by the learned Subordinate Judge on the ground that the terms of Order XXII, rule 3, did not apply to the case. In support of his order the learned Judge relied upon the case reported as Lalit Mohan Mandal v. Satish Chandra Das (1). In that case it was held that where there is only an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis but no suit pending in Court and the applicant dies before the leave is granted, the right cannot survive in the legal representative of the deceased applicant. At page 1168 the learned Judges observed:—"The right to make such an application (that is, an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis) is obviously a personal right, and cannot survive in the legal representative, who may or may not be a pauper himself." It appears to us that the law on the subject is perfectly clear and has been correctly laid down in the judgment of their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court just referred to. The applicant here was not entitled to go to the lower Court and ask that he should be allowed to continue the application presented by his father, merely on the ground that he had become the legal representative of his father after the latter's decease. It was open to the applicant to present a fresh and independent application asking for leave to sue in forma pauperis. He did not, however, take that course because, as would appear from the admission made by the applicant's Counsel here, that any suit brought by the present applicant now would be beyond time. We agree with the view of the law taken by the lower Court. This application fails and is dismissed with costs.

Application rejected.

(1) 33 C. 1163; 4 C. L. J. 234.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 280-B OF 1912.

September 17, 1913.

Present:—Mr. Mittra, Offg. A. J. C.

JAMNA DAS—DEFENDANT No. 2—APPELLANT

versus

PAIKU—DEFENDANT No. 1 AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENTS.

Waste Land Rules, 1876—Izaradar—Mortgage by occupancy-tenant—Expiry of izardar's term—Subsequent mortgage in favour of third party—Priority.

In order to secure the premium of a permanent lease, defendant No. 1 executed in favour of the plaintiff, a registered mortgage-deed of his right in a field, and an izaradar on the village becoming khalsa on the expiry of the mortgagee-izaradar's term, the defendant-mortgagor was recorded as the occupant of a survey number. Subsequently he mortgaged his right to defendant No. 2:

Held, that the mortgagor's title as a permanent tenant under the plaintiff did not come to an end on the village becoming khalsa and that as he did not acquire a new, independent title unconnected with his title under the plaintiff, the plaintiff's mortgage was enforceable as against the subsequent mortgagee.

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, dated the 5th March 1912, confirming that of the Munsif, first class, Yeotmal, dated the 8th July 1911.

Mr. G. V. Deshmukh, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. R. Dixit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Jagoba was an izaradar of Mouza Khorad Khurd in the District of Yeotmal under the Waste Land Rules of 1876. Paiku, the first defendant in this suit, entered into a transaction which has been described as a sale of field No. 15. This is obviously a misdescription, for Paiku appears to have agreed to pay rupees six as the annual rent for the field. The sale-deed is not on the record. The consideration for this transaction was rupees two hundred and fifty. If the transaction were a sale, it would be the price, but if, as I hold it to be, a permanent lease, it was only a permium. To secure payment of this sum of Rs. 250 an unregistered mortgage-deed of Paiku's right in the field was executed. Subsequently, on the 27th August 1904, a registered mortgage was given in favour of the plaintiff. The izaradar had only a limited term of years which expired, it seems, on the 31st March 1905. Under the rules Jagoba became a Patel of the village. Paiku was recorded as the occupant of a survey number on the village becoming khalsa. On the 30th March 1907, Paiku mortgaged his rights to the defendant No. 2, now appellant before me. The sole question raised before me is whether the mortgage in favour of Jagoba, the plaintiff, is enforceable as against the subsequent mortgagee. Ordinarily this would be the case. The point for decision is whether the title of Paiku as a permanent tenant under Jagoba came to an end and whether on the village becoming khalsa, Paiku acquired a new and independent title unconnected with his original title under Jagoba.

The Transfer of Property Act was not applicable to Berar in 1904. The lower Appellate Court has rightly pointed out that section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act has, therefore, no application to this case. It does not by any means follow that the principle of law underlying the section cannot be applied as a rule of equity, justice and good conscience. I am not able to agree with the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court that section 18 of the Specific Relief Act has any bearing on the case. That section obviously refers to contracts to be specifically enforced. This is not a case for specific performance of a contract. We are dealing here with a conveyance under a registered instrument by way of a mortgage. Cases have been cited in the lower Courts without a clear comprehension of the principles laid down therein. For example, the case of Jaggannath v. Dibbo (1) is merely an illustration of the well-known principle that a mere spes successionis is not the subject-matter of a transfer operating in præsenti, whatever equities may arise out of such a transaction. The case of Gangabai v. Baswant (2) is one of sale of property inalienable at the time of the sale. In this case, the izaradar had a fixed term of years, but he was to be made at least Patel of the village on the expiry of the term. But it seems to me that the tenancy which he created during his term could not be altogether ignored by the Government. Rule V of the Waste Land Rules of 1876 says "that the lessee will make his own arrangements with his tenants during the period of his lease. * * * His tenants will hold on terms mutually agreed on and will enjoy such rights and privileges as they may be entitled to under the laws and rules in force." The arrangements to be made are not stated to be for the period of the lease, but during the period of the lease. The rules do not contemplate ejectment of existing tenants who have brought waste land under cultivation, provided they are willing to pay the Government assessment. This liability to pay a possibly higher rent does not make Paiku's tenure a new and independent tenure not arising out of his original tenure. In the absence of an express rule declaring the determination of all existing tenancies, it must be held that Paiku had a legal right to be recognised as an occupant of a survey number on the expiry of Jagoba's lease, provided he accepted the Government assessment to be fixed by competent authority. During the izara period, the izaradar represented the Government, just as a thekadar represents the malguzar in the Central Provinces. The power to create a tenancy is presumed. in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, in the lease or theka. This power is expressly given by rule V above-quoted to the izaradar. On the termination of the theka the malguzar cannot treat a tenant put into possession by the thekadar as a trespasser, if it was within the scope of his authority to create a tenancy. When the Government steps back into the shoes of the izaradar on the expiry of the izara, the Government is not empowered by the rules to treat the existing tenants as trespassers. The possibility of enlargement or curtailment of existing rights does not make the tenancy a new tenancy so as to extinguish all incumbrances on it. The Bombay case quoted has no application as Paiku's rights during the izara, as granted to him by the izaradar, were alienable. The case of Gaya Din v. Kashi Gir (3) is one where the property was not vested in the transferor at the time of the transfer. The present case is analogous to that of renewable lease-holds, and in such cases it has been held that "if the mortgagor renew, although not in accordance with the covenant to renew, the new lease will be held to be a graft on the old one, and subject in equity to the same mortgage as affected the old lease." (Robbin's Law of Mortgage, edition 1897, page 165.)

(1) 1 Ind. Cas. 818; 31 A. 53; 6 A. L. J. 49; A.W. N. (1908) 284.

(2) 5 Ind. Cas. 866; 34 B. 175; 12 Bom. L. R. 143.

(3) 29 A. 163; 4 A. L. J. 57; A. W. N. (1907) 7.

Applying the above principle to this case, the mortgage was valid in its inception. It did not come to an end in 1905. It fastened itself on Paiku's right as an occupant of a survey number. It is, therefore, enforceable against the appellant.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 102 OF 1913.

July 1, 1914.

Present: Mr. Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C.

ABDUL BASIT AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

KHODA BAKHSH—PLAINTIFF AND ABDUS SALAM AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Evidence, extrinsic, admissibility of—Transaction, real nature of, can be proved by oral evidence—Conduct and acts, subsequent, of parties to transaction—Sale really mortgage.

Extrinsic evidence as to acts and conduct of parties to a transaction is admissible to show the real nature of the transaction (e. g., to show that a sale-deed is really a mortgage-deed), not by what they intended to do, but by what they did or have been doing.

Khankar Abdur Rahman v. Ali Hafez, 28 C. 256; 4 C. W. N. 351; Mahomed Ali Hossein v. Nazar Ali, 28 C. 289; 5 C. W. N. 326; Preonath Shaha v. Madhu Sudan Bhuiya, 25 C. 603; 2 C. W. N. 562; Kashi Nath Dass v. Hurrihur Mookerjee, 9 C. 898; 3 C. L. R. 11; 5 Shome L. R. 75; 8 Ind. Jur. 89 and Baksu Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji, 4 B. 594, referred to.

Achutaramaraju v. Subbaraju, 25 M. 7; 11 M. L. J. 370, dissented from.

Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge, 22 A. 149; 27 I. A. 58, 4 C. W. N. 153; 2 Bom. L. R. 523; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 601; explained.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated 31st January 1913, reversing that of the Munsif, Sanehighat, dated 21st September 1912.

Mirza Sami Ullah Beg, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought this suit for redemption of a mortgage of 21st September 1880, on the basis of a deed of sale, on the allegation that, the Muhammadan Law forbidding the taking of interest, the document of title was prepared in the form of a sale-deed, and not in that of a deed of mortgage. The defendants denied that any mortgage was effected, but insisted that the transaction was one of sale. They denied any oral agreement as to redemption of property and they relied upon section 92 of the Evidence Act to protect them. The Court of first instance in a very elaborate judgment dismissed the claim, finding that the deed was a deed of sale, that probably oral evidence varrying its contents should not have been allowed, but that, if the evidence recorded were properly admitted, it failed to prove the oral agreement relied upon.

The lower Appellate Court followed the rulings in Khankar Abdur Rahman v. Ali Hafez (1) and Mahomed Ali Hossein v. Nazar Ali (2) and dissented from the ruling in Achutaramaraju v. Subbaraju (3). It ruled that evidence of the acts and conduct of the parties could be admitted. It proceeded to consider the evidence as to the acts and conduct of the parties, and came to the unhesitating conclusion that the transaction in reality was, and was intended to be, a mortgage.

Appeal is laid on the grounds that no oral evidence is admissible to prove that the transaction is a mortgage-deed and not a sale-deed.

In Achutaramaraju v. Subbaraju (3) the plaintiff brought a redemption suit against the defendant on what purported to be, on the face of it, an unconditional deed of sale and contended that he was entitled to adduce evidence of subsequent conduct of himself and the defendant to show that the transaction was in fact not a sale but a mortgage. The learned Judges dissented from the two rulings reported as Khankar Abdur Rahman v Ali Hafez (1) and Mahomed Ali Hossein v. Nazar Ali (2), and refused to allow the evidence. Their argument was that evidence which consisted of the acts and conduct of the parties, was evidence from which an inference might be drawn that there was an oral agreement to vary the terms of the contract; and that, therefore, such evidence could not be allowed. I have no hesitation in agreeing with the view which has been taken by the Calcutta

(1) 28 C. 256; 4 C. W. N. 351.
(2) 28 C. 289; 5 C. W. N. 326.
(3) 25 M. 7; 11 M. L. J. 370.

DIWAN SINGH v. RANDHERA.

High Court and in disagreeing with the Madras view. In Kashi Nath Dass v. Hurrihur Mookerjee (4) it was held that subsequent conduct and surrounding circumstances can be given in evidence to show in certain circumstances the real nature of the transaction. This was followed in Preonath Shaha v. Madhu Sudan Bhuiya (5) and in the two instances in Khankar Abdur Rahman v. Ali Hafez (1) and Mahomed Ali Hossein v. Nazar Ali (2). In the case reported as Baksu Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji (6), Melvill, J., delivered a judgment, which was cited with much approval by several Courts subsequently, in which he put the matter in a nutshell: "If it appear clearly and unmistakeably, from the conduct of the parties, that the transaction has been treated by them as a mortgage, the Court will give effect to it as a mortgage." This principle is not at variance with the provisions of section 92, if they are carefully considered. The appellant relies upon the well-known Privy Council ruling in Balkishen Dass v. W.F. Fegge (7), where their Lordships refused to admit oral evidence of intention for the purposes of construing a deed or ascertaining the intention of the parties. No evidence is offered of any oral agreement or of any statement.

In Ameer Ali's Evidence Act, Second Edition, page 620, reference is made to an unreported ruling of the Calcutta High Court (Second Civil Appeal No. 696 of 1899) in which it is said that evidence of intention is obviously inadmissible, but, in conformity with the established principles, the Courts may always, in order to judge of the nature of a transaction, have recourse to the acts and conduct of the parties and to the circumstances, as for example, where it is sought to show that an apparent sale was really only a mortgage, to the circumstance that property which was worth Rs. 250 was apparently sold for Rs. 35. Evidence in short is admissible in order to show the true nature of the transaction, not by what the parties intended to do, but by what the parties did or have been doing.

(4) 9 C. 898; 13 C. L. R. 11; 5 Shome L. R. 75; 8 Ind. Jur. 89.
(5) 25 C. 603; 2 C. W. N. 562.
(6) 4 B. 594.
(7) 22 A. 149 (P. C.); 27 I. A. 58; 4 C. W. N. 153; 2 Bom. L. R. 523; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 601.

In the present instance the evidence is remarkably clear that the parties acted upon, and treated this document as a mortgage from its very inception.

Mutation was applied for by the defendant as mortgagee; and he is so recorded in the Government papers; and it is further proved that he had executed several other ostensible deeds of sale between 1876 and 1879 which were in reality deeds of mortgage, in which the consideration money was re-paid, the property restored, and the deeds returned to the so-called vendors from whose custody they were produced.

For the above reasons the appeal is dismissed. The respondents may have their costs.

Appeal dismissed.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 470 OF 1913.
November 11, 1914.
Present:—Justice Sir George Knox, KT.
DIWAN SINGH AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
versus
RANDHERA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 95—Jurisdiction—Suit for declaration that plaintiff is an occupancy tenant—Jurisdiction of Civil or Revenue Court.

A suit for a declaration that the plaintiffs are occupancy tenants of a certain land and that the defendant is not joint with them in such holding is cognizable by a Revenue and not by a Civil Court.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Aligarh, dated 14th January 1913.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sawhny, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit brought by the plaintiffs who are appellants in this Court. The relief which they ask for is that the fact may be declared that they, the plaintiffs, are the occupancy tenants of 10 bighas 19 biswas pukhta of land entered in the schedule to the plaint and that the defendant is not joint with them in the said holding. Both the Courts below have dismissed the claim. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed it on the following ground. It declines to go into the question at all whether the respondent has or has not occupancy rights of his own in the land. That is, it says, not the question for a Civil Court and it declines to touch it. But it goes on to say that in its opinion, upon the facts which have been found to be admitted and proved, the respondent is a sharer with the plaintiffs and that he was really a partner with the plaintiffs. One of the partners cannot get rid of the other summarily as he could have a labourer. A partner cannot be ejected unless he has contravened the terms of partnership. There is no suggestion that this has been done and it does not appear that the respondent has ever denied the title of the plaintiffs-appellants. On these grounds also it is not proper to make the declaration asked for. In this Court the pleas taken in appeal are that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree on these findings, that it is inconcievable that occupancy rights should accrue in favour of one only of two partners, and that the fact found that occupancy rights accrued in favour of Ram Kuar, the predecessor of the appellants, only shows that she was the only tenant. Now the matter in dispute between the parties is really whether Randhera is or is not an occupancy tenant of the holding in dispute. The appellants could have made an application to determine this matter by action taken in accordance with section 95 of the Agra Tenancy Act of 1901. The objection raised that the zemindas are no parties to this suit is, in my opinion, entitled to no weight. Granted that the appellants wanted to have this matter decided, it is open to them to join the land-holder or land-holders and Randhera in a suit under section 95 of that Act. This being so, no Court other than a Revenue Court shall take cognizance of any dispute or matter in respect of which a suit might be brought under section 95 of the said Act. I dismiss this appeal with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

COURT OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE, UNITED PROVINCES.

REVNUE PETITION NO. 5 OF 1913-14 OF BARA BANKI DISTRICT.

April 16, 1914.

Present:—Sir Duncan Colvin Baillie, S. M.

Raja UDIT NARAIN SINGH—DEFENDANT —APPELLANT

versus

GUR CHARAN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS —RESPONDENTS.

Heirs of tenant, occupation by—Notice of ejectment, delay in issue of, effect of—Landlord's conduct—Acquiescence—Unstamped notice—Statutory period, fresh, commencement of.

Where the heirs of a deceased tenant continued to hold for three years after their right to hold as such had ceased, and the landlord received no rent for that period but took measures for that purpose and eventually issued an unstamped notice of ejectment;

Held, that the landlord must under the above circumstances be taken to have acquiesced in the heirs' holding, so as to give them a fresh statutory period, and that thus the unstamped notice was insufficient.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 14th July 1913, reversing that of the Assistant Collector Bara Banki, dated 1st March 1913.

FACTS.—An ordinary tenant whose term of tenancy was to expire in 1318 Fasli, died in 1313 Fasli, and after his death his sons, the plaintiffs, began to cultivate the land. The defendant landlord did not realise any rent from the plaintiffs for 1318 Fasli, but distrained their crops in 1319 Fasli, appointed a receiver for the purpose, but subsequently released the distraint and did not put the crops to auction; he did nothing in 1320 Fasli, but issued against the plaintiffs an unstamped notice of ejectment for 1321 Fasli.

Now, the plaintiffs' possession of the land up to 1318 Fasli being one authorised under section 48 of the Oudh Rent Act, the points to decide were,—firstly, whether the defendant could under the circumstances be said to have acquiesced in the plaintiffs' holding the land, so as to give them a fresh statutory period from 1318 Fasli, and thus, secondly, whether the unstamped notice was insufficient.

The Court of first instance decided both the points in the negative, while the Commissioner on appeal recorded findings in the affirmative on those points.

Babu Ram Chandra, for the Appellant.

Babu Hem Chandra Sen, for the Respondents.

NARAYAN v. MAHADEO.

JUDGMENT.—I see no reason to differ from the Commisioner's finding. There was a delay of three years in issuing the notice and I think that the Commissioner has correctly held that an unstamped notice could not in these circumstances issue and that a new statutory period has begun.

The appeal is dismissed with costs on appellant.

Appeal dismissed.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 103 OF 1912.

February 14, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Hallifax, A. J. C.

NARAYAN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

MAHADEO—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage—Foreclosure suit—Subsequent mortgagor made party at his own request—Suit barred as against him—Whether he can plead limitation—Suit, whether to be dismissed—Proper order to pass.

Where in a suit for foreclosure a subsequent mortgagee was made a co-defendant at his own request and with the consent of the plaintiff but after the period of limitation as against him had expired:

Held, (1) that the suit against him was barred;

(2) but that, inasmuch as he was made a defendant at his own request, he could not raise the plea of limitation;

(3) that the suit against him ought not to be dismissed, but that the order making him a defendant should be set aside.

First appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 23rd July 1912.

Mr. S. C. Dutt Chaudhari, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued on a mortgage executed in 1893. The plaint was signed on 30th of July and presented on the 5th of August 1910, so that it was only just within time. The defendant Lakhmichand holds a mortgage over a portion of the property, which is dated the 13th of July 1910. He was not impleaded in the suit at its institution, but applied himself to be made a defendant in July 1911. The plaintiffs asked for time to consider the matter and on the 7th Augnst 1911 their Pleader stated that they had no objection to his being made a defendant. This was accordingly done and Lakhmichand was called upon to plead. His main plea was as follows: "The defendant No. 5 has been joined as a co-defendant to this suit after the limitation for filing the suit as against him had expired. The plaintiffs are not, therefore, entitled to have any foreclosure decree passed as against him. The plaintiffs' suit is barred by time and should be dismissed with costs and the defendant's costs certified against them." He then went on, in the alternative, to deny execution and attestation and receipt of consideration, and to plead satisfaction, estoppel by conduct, absence of any agreement to pay the interest claimed, collusion between the plaintiffs and the mortgagors and failure to join several necessary parties both as plaintiffs and defendants.

The plaintiffs replied that they had never heard of the fifth defendant's mortgage before, which seems highly probable when we consider the date of its execution, a fortnight before the plaint was signed, three weeks before it was presented and less than a month before the period of limitation for the claim, and all other such claims between twelve and sixty years old, ran out. They went on to plead that limitation was no bar to their getting a decree against Lakhmichand because he had come into the suit at his own request, with what was practically an offer to redeem if the mortgage should be found to be valid, and his right of redemption was not barred by time. They further traversed all his pleas of fact, which they described as inconsistent with considerable truth. The first issue framed was: "Is the claim barred against defendant No. 5 because he was joined after the period of limitation for filing the suit had expired?" It was, of course, held that the suit against Lakhmichand was barred by time. So much of the suit was accordingly dismissed, but Lakhmichand was ordered to pay his own costs because he had been made a defendant at his own request.

It will be convenient to confine the discussson to this portion of the case for the present. In their petition of appeal the plaintiffs pray that their claim shall be decreed against Lakhmichand as well. Their learned Pleader has, however, retired in argument from this obviously untenable position and urges now that Lakhmichand should only be discharged from the suit as an unnecessary party and that the suit against him should not be dismissed. That no decree for foreclosure could be passed against Lakhmichand is very clear from the ruling of the Allahabad High Court in Sanwale Singh v. Ganeshi Lal (1), and the ruling of a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Ramkinkar Biswas v. Akhil Chandra Chaudhuri (2). The case now put forward is that Lakhmichand in effect pleaded a paramount title and was, therefore, not a necessary party to the suit, and he should, therefore, have been discharged from it: Sanwal Singh v. Ganeshi (1) and Jaggeswar Dutt v. Bhuban Mohan Mitra (3). This is practically what is urged in the petition of appeal, though the relief asked is overstated.

The respondent Lakhmichand's reply is that as the plaintiffs agreed to his being made a party to the suit and accepted his challenge to try out the question of limitation and went to trial on that issue, they cannot be allowed to urge in appeal for the first time that he was not a necessary party to the suit. The rulings quoted in support are the latter part of the same Calcutta case of Jaggeswar Dutt v. Bhuban Mohan Mitra (3) and the ruling of this Court in Kasham Khan v. Musammat Savitri (4). This argument is based on a misconception of the facts. The plaintiffs never accepted any challenge to have the question of limitation tried out, nor did any such issue arise from the pleadings. They admitted that their suit for foreclosure was barred by limitation against Lakhmichand, as it very obviously was, but pleaded that, as he had come in at his own request, the suit ought to be treated as a redemption suit filed by him, which was not so barred.

The defendant came in with an offer which the plaintiffs were quite justified in regarding as an offer to waive the question of limitation and to redeem their mortgage if it were found to be valid, in order to save himself the trouble and expense of a redemption suit. It was to all appearance a challenge to have the suit tried out on the merits. That they did regard it in this light is clear from their reply to the defendant when he put in his plea of limitation after being made a party, and from their petition of appeal. It was obviously on that understanding that they agreed to his being made a party. The Calcutta ruling and that of this Court which have been quoted on behalf of Lakhmichand seem to me, therefore, to operate much more against him than against the plaintiffs, and to debar him from asking that the suit against him should be dismissed. On the other hand, there is nothing in the principles laid down in them to prevent the plaintiffs asking that the order making Lakhmichand a party, to which they had agreed under a misapprehension raised and encouraged by him, should be cancelled and that his name should be removed from the list of defendants. This is what they mean when they speak of his being discharged, though the Civil Procedure Code contains no mention of the discharge of a defendant.

I am bound to admit that I am still unable to see what difference it makes to either party whether the defendant is "discharged," or the suit against him is dismissed. If the suit is dismissed the plaintiffs cannot foreclose against Lakhmichand, but their right to do that and so to compel him to redeem them was dead long before he asked to be made a party to the suit. If Lakhmichand or the mortgagors should choose to redeem the plaintiffs' mortgage within the time allowed by the decree in this suit, no question between Lakhmichand and the plaintiffs will ever arise. But if that mortgage is not redeemed and they get possession of the property they will then be able to redeem Lakhmichand as they will then stand in the shoes of the mortgagors. No plea of res judicata can be raised against them out of the result of the decision of this suit, which is apparently what both they and Lakhmichand anticipate, because their right to redeem will only come into existence when they get possession of the property on foreclosure. Both parties have, however, contested this appeal very strenuously, and their advisers seem to be convinced that each of them has a lot to gain or lose by i.

(1) 20 Ind. Cas. 41; 35 A. 44; 11 A. L. J. 630.
(2) 35 C. 519; 11 C. W. N. 350 (F.B.); 5 C. L. J. 242; 2 M. L. T. 137.
(3) 33 C. 425; 3 C. L. J. 205.
(4) 19 Ind. Cas. 547; 9 N. L. R. 38.

I am not prepared to say that there is no possibility of future advantage or disadvantage to either party from the decision of this point though I am unable to imagine any such possibility. I order, therefore, that the name of Lakhmichand be removed from the list of defendants, and that the words in the decree dismissing the suit as against him be expunged therefrom.

COURT OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE, UNITED PROVINCES.

REVENUE PETITION No. 92 OF 1912-13 OF GONDA DISTRICT.

April 7, 1914.

Present:—Sir Duncan Colvin Baillie, S. M.

NAGESHAR—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

RAM TAHAL—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Ejectment—Ex-proprietary tenant, out of possession—Possession with vendee—Vendee occupying as sub-tenant, no proof as to—Sub-tenant, vendee not to be treated as.

A person in whose favour ex-proprietary rights accrued but who has been out of possession, cannot assert them twelve years after the sale by virtue of which those rights accrued, and cannot, in the absence of any proof to the effect that the person now in possession occupied the land as his sub-tenant, eject that person as such.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 4th July 1913, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Gonda, dated 14th March 1913.

FACTS.—The defendant was formerly a zemindar and held certain land as sir. In 1902 he sold away his proprietary rights and the plaintiff purchased them and took possession of the sir land, which from that time began to be recorded as his khudkasht. About twelve years after the sale the defendant treating the plaintiff as his sub-tenant, issued a notice of ejectment against the latter who contested it on the ground that the relation of tenant and sub-tenant did not exist between the parties. The defendant failed to prove that he had been declared to be an ex-proprietary tenant of the land in suit or that when ex-proprietary right had accrued to him the plaintiff occupied the ex-proprietary holding as his sub-tenant. On the contrary it was shown that the defendant's claim under section 36 (4) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901) had been dismissed on the ground that he was not in possession of the sir land. It was, therefore, found by the Commissioner that even assuming that ex-proprietary rights had accrued to the defendant, he voluntarily relinquished those rights in ignorance or intentionally, and was not now entitled to treat the plaintiff as his sub-tenant. The matter was further contested in appeal before the Board.

Babu Rudra Dat Singh, for the Appellant.

Babu Aditya Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—There can be no doubt that the Commissioner's decision is correct. It seems clear that the appellant has been out of possession since his proprietary rights were sold in 1902 and even if it be assumed that ex-proprietary rights accrued in his favour at that time he certainly cannot assert them now. The respondent is his landholder and if the respondent's possession was wrongful, the appellant's only remedy was a suit under section 108, clause (10), to be re-placed in possession. He certainly cannot proceed twelve years later by issue of a notice of ejectment.

The appeal is dismissed with costs on the appellant.

Appeal dismissed.

COURT OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE, UNITED PROVINCES.

REVENUE PETITION No. 34 OF 1912-13 OF BARA BANKI DISTRICT.

April 14, 1914.

Present:—Sir Duncan Colvin Baillie, S. M.

Chaudharain SHAIBUNNISSA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

KARAMAT ALI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 107B—"Judicial decision," interpretation of—Settlement Court decree declaring muafidar to hold muafi heritably—Resumption.

A Settlement Court decree declaring a person as entitled to hold certain land rent-free so long as there are heirs to succeed to him, is a "judicial decision" as contemplated by section 107B of the Oudh Rent Act.

Appeal from the decree of the Officiating Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 2nd May 1913, upholding that of the Deputy Commissioner, Bara Banki, dated 16th July 1912, upholding the order of the Assistant Collector, Bara Banki, dated 27th April 1912.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hakimuddin and Babu Rajeshwari Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for decision is whether the respondent holds under a judicial decree within the meaning of section 107B. The decision on which the respondent relies is that of a Settlement Officer at the first Regular Settlement. An application had been filed by the predecessor-in-interest of the respondent asking that he might be declared to be the holder of a muafi tenure of which the numbers were specified and in which the numbers now in suit are included. In reply, the predecessor-in-interest of the appellant admitted the right of the respondent's predecessor to hold rent-free so long as there were heirs to succeed to him and a declaration was made accordingly. This, in my opinion, is a judicial decision as contemplated by section 107B. It is a decision by a Court empowered to resume or to assess rent, holding that the respondent and his successors were entitled to remain in rent-free possession so long as there was a succession by legal heirs. In my opinion, the Commissioner correctly held that the land was held under a judicial decision and dismissed the suit. The remarks made by the Deputy Commissioner as to whether the land is or is not an under-proprietary holding are obiter dictum and need not be referred to except to put upon record that they are of no value.

The appeal is dismissed with costs on appellant.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 747 AND 748 OF 1913.

November 24, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

NAGARAJA PILLAI AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

IN S. A. NO. 747 OF 1913.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, REPRESENTED BY THE COLLECTOR OF TANJORE—DEFENDANT NO. 10—RESPONDENT

IN S. A. NO. 748 OF 1913.

JAGANNATHA PILLAI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS NOS. 2, 3, 4, 6 AND 8—RESPONDENTS.

Easements Act (V of 1882), ss. 4, 15—Easement against Government—Period of user—User for sufficiently large number of years—Burden of proof, shifting of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 124, 126—"Communication in official confidence," meaning of—Report by one officer to another, admissibility of—Detrimental to public interest—Sufficient cause—Public officer in charge of record, opinion of, whether final—Presumption—Finding of fact—Second appeal.

A plaintiff who claims a right of easement by prescription against Government must prove sixty years' open peaceful and uninterrupted user under section 15 of the Easements Act.

The rule of law that where a plaintiff in a suit against the Government has proved his possession for a sufficiently large number of years, the burden of proof is shifted on to the Government, applies to suits for possession and if applied to suits for easement as well the plaintiff will have no right to claim the privilege where he has not even completed the period of prescription necessary against a private individual.

Secretary of State for India v. Kota Bapanmma Garu, 19 M. 165; Sri Raja Chetikani Rama Rau v. Secretary of State for India, 5 Ind. Cas. 882; 33 M. 1; 7 M. L. T. 128; 20 M. L. J. 66; Krishna Iyer v. Secretary of State for India, 5 Ind. Cas. 121; 33 M. 173; 6 M. L. T. 306; 20 M. L. J. 71; Venkatarama Iyer v. Secretary of State for India, 5 Ind Cas. 118; 33 M. 362; 7 M. L. T. 139; 20 M. L. J. 71 distinguished.

The words "communication in official confidence" used in section 124 of the Indian Evidence Act import no special degree of secrecy and no pledge or direction for its maintenance but include generally all matters communicated by one officer to another in the performance of duties. These words have the same meaning as "professional confidence" used in section 126 of the Evidence Act.

Where, therefore, the document that was sought to be put in evidence was a report made by one officer to another, after inspection of a spot in person, and where that was objected to on the ground that its production would be detrimental to public interest, that is a sufficient cause for a Court to refuse to compel its production. The public officer in charge of the record is the sole Judge of the detrimental character of the document, and his assertion as to its character is final and binds the Court.

Venkatachella Chettiar v. Sampathu Chettiar, 1 Ind. Cas. 705; 32 M. 62; 4 M. L. T. 317; 19 M. L. J. 263, distinguished.

Goodall v. Little, (1851) 20 L.J Ch. 132; 1 Sim.(N.S.) 155; 15 Jur. 309; 61 E. R. 60; 89 R. R. 56; Ex parte Campbell, In re Cathcart, 5 Ch. 703; 23 L. T. 289; 18 W. R. 1056; Framji Bhicaji v. Mahansingh Dhansingh, 18 B. 263; Stace v. Griffith, 1867) 2 P. C. 420; 6 Moore P. C. (N. S.) 18; 20 L T. 197; 16 E. R. 633; Beatson v. Skene, 5 H. & N. 838; 29 L. J. Ex. 430; 6 Jur. (N. S.) 780; 2 L. T. 378; 8 W. R. 544; 120 R. R. 839; Hughes v. Vargas, (1893) 9 T. L. R. 551, followed.

Where the presumption which a Court ought to raise to shift the burden of proof on facts proved before it, is fixed by no rule of law, the privilege of raising that presumption is entirely with the Court of fact; and it is not open to the High Court sitting in second appeal to direct what presumption the Court should have raised, and how to vary the burden of proof in the progress of the trial of a case.

Hall v. Venkatakrishna, 13 M. 394; Folkestone Corporation v. Brockman, (1914) A. C. 338 at p. 349; 83 L. J. K. B. 745, followed.

Obiter dictum. In English Law, the privilege as to production of public documents before Courts of law extends even to those which pass from hand to hand, in a public office, in the usual course of business with no special mark of secrecy upon them and the ground upon which the privilege rests is that it would be detrimental to the public interests to produce it.

Second appeals respectively against the decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram, in Appeal Suits Nos. 39 and 40 of 1912, preferred against those of the Court of the District Munsif of Mayavaram in Original Suit No. 112 of 1909.

S. A. No. 747 of 1913.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Respondents.

S. A. No. 748 of 1913.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The plaintiffs, the appellants, hold survey fields Nos. 46, 63 and 64 of Tirumananjeri village. Of the defendants the respondents in the two second appeals, the 1st to 9th and 11th defendants are ryots, whose alleged interest in the irrigation, the subject of dispute, the Secretary of State, the 10th defendant, has protected by the issue of orders in the Revenue Department. It is admitted that the channel immediately adjacent to the plaintiffs' lands in the Mylam channel, belongs to the Cauvery system. But, as the plan, Exhibit H, shows there is at a short distance to the west the Mangudi channel in the Vikramaneri system. The plaintiffs contended that they were entitled to take water by a kanni or subsidiary channel running east from Mangudi to Mylam and so to their fields, though they would obviously affect the supply from the former on which 1st to 9th and 11th defendants depend, by doing so. The channels are artificial and there is, therefore, no question of natural right; nor is any grant relied on by plaintiff. Their case, in favour of which the District Munsif found, was based on prescription, that is, on section 15 of the Indian Easements Act. The lower Appellate Court has held that no prescription was established.

I reserve two objections based on exclusion of evidence and, subject to them, consider what the lower Appellate Court has found on the facts and what questions are open for argument in second appeal. The points for decision are set out clearly and, it is not disputed, comprehensively in the judgment before us, and the findings on them are that (1) the Mylam channel was plaintiffs' recognised source of irrigation, (2) the kanni is not shown to have been in existence before 1888, (3) plaintiffs have since then taken water by it, and (4) such taking created no prescriptive right, because it was not proved to have been open, peaceful or uninterrupted. No objection has been made to the first of these findings. Against the others, it is urged generally that they are vitiated, because they are based on an adoption of the District Munsif's treatment of the oral evidence, which has been misunderstood, inasmuch as one sentence of his judgment has been extracted and regarded as conclusive, though a conclusion in the opposite sense was eventually reached. This is not sustainable. For in fact, the District Munsif, after disparaging plaintiffs' oral evidence in the sentence extracted and others, reached his finding with the aid of the documents; and the lower Appellate Court has not professed to adopt that finding or more than the sentence referred to, but, has reached its conclusions independently. Those conclusions so far as they are of fact, must, therefore, be accepted. It is with reference only to the fourth that further argument in second appeal is legitimate. In short, the result is that the burden of proof of such a user as section 15 of the Indian Easements Act contemplates being on plaintiffs, they have adduced evidence calling for consideration with reference only to their user from 1888 until 1907, when the Revenue Authorities first forbade it. The decision must, therefore, turn on the nature of the acts of user found proved by the lower Appellate Court, as fulfilling the requirements of the law, and the sufficiency of the period over which they extend.

